

HAMLET

Ophelia. Act IV. Scene vii.

FROM THE PAINTING IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF BRITISH ART BY SIR J. E.
MILLAIS, P.R.A.

PAINTED 1852

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

EDITED BY

SIR HENRY IRVING &
FRANK A. MARSHALL

WITH INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES BY VARIOUS SHAKESPEAREAN SCHOLARS

AND

AN ACCOUNT OF RECENT SHAKESPEAREAN INVESTIGATIONS
BY PROFESSOR C. H. HERFORD, LITT.D.

Illustrated by Gordon Browne and others

VOLUME IX-X

THE GRESHAM PUBLISHING COMPANY LTD.
66 Chandos Street, Covent Garden, London

Printed in Great Britain

1922

CONTENTS

VOLUME IX-X

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE	Vol. IX	Page
INTRODUCTION. By F. A. Marshall	"	1
Literary History	"	3
Stage History	"	3
Critical Remarks	"	8
OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE	"	13
NOTES. By A. Wilson Verity and F. A. Marshall	"	19
Words occurring only in "Othello"	"	76
		108
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK	Vol. IX
INTRODUCTION. By F. A. Marshall	"	111
Literary History	"	113
Stage History	"	113
Critical Remarks	"	120
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK	"	127
NOTES. By F. A. Marshall and Arthur Symons	"	137
Words occurring only in "Hamlet"	"	201
		262
MEASURE FOR MEASURE	Vol. X
INTRODUCTION. By Arthur Symons	"	1
Literary History	"	3
Stage History	"	3
Critical Remarks	"	5
MEASURE FOR MEASURE	"	10
NOTES. By Arthur Symons	"	13
Words occurring only in "Measure for Measure"	"	60
		80

		Page
KING LEAR - - - - -	Vol. X	83
INTRODUCTION. By Oscar F. Adams and A. Wilson Verity -	„	85
Literary History - - - - -	„	85
Stage History - - - - -	„	89
Critical Remarks - - - - -	„	96
KING LEAR - - - - -	„	101
NOTES. By Oscar F. Adams and A. Wilson Verity - - -	„	161
Words occurring only in "King Lear" - - - - -	„	193
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE - - - - -	Vol. X	195
INTRODUCTION. By P. Z. Round - - - - -	„	197
Literary History - - - - -	„	197
Stage History - - - - -	„	199
Critical Remarks - - - - -	„	203
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE - - - - -	„	205
NOTES. By P. Z. Round - - - - -	„	246
Words occurring only in "Pericles" - - - - -	„	276

The Henry Irving Shakespeare

:: Volume IX-X ::

LIST OF PLATES

HAMLET, Ophelia, Act IV, Scene 7 (Coloured)	- - - -	Frontispiece
From the Painting in the National Gallery of British Art by Sir J. E. Millais, P.R.A. Painted 1852.
OTHELLO, Act V, Scene 2	- - - - -	Vol. IX Page 70
HAMLET, Act I, Scene 3	- - - - -	„ 146
MEASURE FOR MEASURE, Act II, Scene 1	- - - - -	Vol. X 22
KING LEAR, Act III, Scene 2 (Coloured)	- - - - -	„ 128
From a Painting by Professor Albert W. Holden
KING LEAR, Act III, Scene 2	- - - - -	„ 130
PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE, Act III, Scene 2	- - - - -	„ 226

OTHELLO
THE MOOR OF VENICE

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

DUKE OF VENICE.

BRABANTIO, a Senator.

Other Senators.

GRATIANO, brother to Brabantio.

LODOVICO, kinsman to Brabantio.

OTHELLO, a noble Moor in the service of the Venetian state

CASSIO, his lieutenant.

IAGO, his ancient.

RODERIGO, a Venetian gentleman.

MONTANO, Othello's predecessor in the government of Cyprus.

Clown, servant to Othello.

DESDEMONA, daughter to Brabantio and wife to Othello.

EMILIA, wife to Iago.

BIANCA, mistress to Cassio.

Sailor, Messenger, Herald, Officers, Gentlemen, Musicians, and Attendants.

SCENE—The first act in Venice; during the rest of the play, at a seaport in Cyprus.

HISTORIC PERIOD: May, 1570.

TIME OF ACTION.

Mr. P. A. Daniel gives the following time-analysis: three days, with one interval.

Day 1: Act I. in Venice.—Interval: voyage to Cyprus.

Day 2: Act II.

Day 3: Acts III. IV. and V. } in Cyprus.

Bra. Here is the man, this Moor.—(Act 1. 3. 71.)

WEEKEND 1988

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Venice. A street.

Enter RODERIGO and IAGO.

Rod. Tush, never tell me; I take it much unkindly
That thou, Iago,—who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine,—shouldst know of this,—

Iago. 'S blood, but you will not hear me:
If ever I did dream of such a matter,
Abhor me.

Rod. Thou told'st me thou didst hold him in thy hate.

Iago. Despise me, if I do not. Three great ones of the city, s n personal suit to make me his lieutenant,
off-capp'd to him;—and, by the faith of man,
know my price, I'm worth no worse a place:
it he, as loving his own pride and purposes,
rades them, with a bombast circumstance orribly stuff'd with epithets of war;
id, in conclusion,
nsuits my mediators; for, "Certes," says he,
have already chose my officer."

And what was he?

Forsooth, a great arithmetician,
One Michael Cassio, a Florentine, 20

[A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife;]

That never set a squadron in the field,

Nor the division of a battle¹ knows

More than a spinster; [unless the bookish

theoric,

Wherein the toged consuls can propose

As masterly as he: mere prattle, without practice,

Is all his soldiership. But he, sir, had th'
election:

And I—of whom his eyes had seen the proof

At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on other grounds

Christian and heathen—must be be-lee'd² and calm'd

By debtor-and-creditor,³ this counter-caster;]

He, in good time, must his lieutenant be,

¹ Battle = army.

² Be-lee'd, i.e. put on the lee-side of, and so dependent on.

³ Debtor-and-creditor, referring to the system of double entry, which we owe to Italy.

And I—God bless the mark!—his Moorship's ancient.¹ 33

Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hangman.

Iago. Why, there's no remedy; 't is the curse of service,
Preferment goes by letter² and affection,
And not by old gradation, where each second Stood heir to the first. Now, sir, be judge yourself,

Whether I in any just term am affin'd 3
To love the Moor.

Rod. I would not follow him, then

Iago. O, sir, content you;

I follow him to serve my turn upon him:
We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass

Iago. O, sir, content you;
I follow him to serve my turn upon him.—(Act i. 1. 41, 42)

For naught but provender; and, when he's old, cashier'd:

Whipme such honest knaves. Others thereare,
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves;
And, throwing but shows of service on their lords, 52

Do well thrive by them, and, when they've lin'd their coats,³

Do themselves homage: these fellows have some soul;

And such a one do I profess myself.

{[For, sir,

{It is as sure as you are Roderigo,

Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but myself;
Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end:] 60
For when my outward action doth demonstrate

The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 't is not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at: I am not what I am.

Rod. What a full⁴ fortune does the thick-lips owe,⁵

If he can carry 't thus!

Iago. Call up her father,
Rouse him:—make⁶ after him, poison his delight,

¹ Ancient (F. enseigne) = ensign or standard-bearer.

² Letter, i.e. recommendation.

³ Lin'd their coats = "feathered their nests," in the modern phrase

⁴ Full = rich.

⁵ Owe, own.

⁶ Make = go.

{ Proclaim him in the streets; [incense her kinsmen:

{ And though he in a fertile climate dwell, 70
{ Plague him with flies; } though that his joy be joy,

Yet throw such changes of vexation on't,
As it may lose some colour.

Rod. Here is her father's house; I'll call aloud.

Iago. Do; with like timorous accent and dire yell

As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spied in populous cities.

Rod. What, ho, Brabantio! Signior Brabantio, ho!

Iago. Awake! what, ho, Brabantio! thieves! thieves! thieves!

Look to your house, your daughter, and your bags! 80

Thieves! thieves!

BRABANTIO appears above, at a window.

Bra. What is the reason of this terrible summons?

What is the matter there?

Rod. Signior, is all your family within?

Iago. Are your doors lock'd?

Bra. Why, wherefore ask you this?

{ Iago. Zounds, sir, you're robb'd; [for shame, put on your gown;

{ Your heart is burst,¹ you have lost half your soul;

{ Even now, now, very now, an old black ram
Is tupping your white ewe.] Arise, arise;

Awake the snorting citizens with the bell, 90

Or else the devil will make a grandsire of you:

Arise, I say.

Bra. What, have you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reverend signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I: what are you?

Rod. My name is Roderigo.

Bra. The worsè welcome:

I've charg'd thee not to haunt about my doors:

In honest plainness thou hast heard me say

My daughter is not for thee; and now, in madness,

Being full of supper and distempering draughts,

Upon malicious bravery, dost thou come 100
To start my quiet;—

Rod. Sir, sir, sir,—

Bra. But thou must needs be sure
My spirit and my place have in them power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience, good sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of robbing? this is Venice;

My house is not a grange.

Rod. Most grave Brabantio,
In simple and pure soul I come to you. 107

Iago. Zounds, sir, you are one of those that will not serve God, if the devil bid you. [Because we come to do you service, and you think we are ruffians, you'll have your daughter cover'd with a Barbary horse;] you'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins, and gennets for Germans.

Bra. What profane wretch art thou?

Iago. [Impudently] I am one, sir, that comes to tell you your daughter and the Moor are [now making the beast with two backs].

Bra. Thou art a villain.

Iago. You are—a senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer: I know thee, Roderigo. 120

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. [But, I beseech you,

If't be your pleasure and most wise consent,
As partly I find it is, that your fair daughter,
At this odd-even and dull watch o' the night,
Transported, with no worse nor better guard
But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier,
To the gross clasps of a lascivious Moor,—

If this be known to you, and your allowance,²
We then have done you bold and saucy wrongs;
But, if you know not this, my manners tell me
We have your wrong rebuke. Do not believe
That, from³ the sense of all civility, 132

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence:
Your daughter,—if you have not given her leave,—

I say again, hath made a gross revolt;
Tying her duty, beauty, wit, and fortunes,
In an extravagant and wheeling stranger
Of here and every where.] Straight satisfy yourself:

¹ Burst, broken into.

² Allowance, approval.

³ From, contrary to.

If she be in her chamber or your house,
Let loose on me the justice of the state 140
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the tinder, ho!
Give me a taper!—call up all my people!—
This accident is not unlike my dream:
Belief of it oppresses me already.—
Light, I say! light! [Exit above.

Iago. Farewell; for I must leave you:
It seems not meet, nor wholesome to my place,
To be produc'd—as, if I stay, I shall—
Against the Moor: for, I do know, the state—
However this may gall him with some check—Cannot with safety cast¹ him; for he's embark'd 150

With such loud reason to the Cyprus wars, Which even now stand in act, that, for their souls,

Another of his fathom they have none
To lead their business: in which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell-pains,
Yet, for necessity of present life,
I must show out a flag and sign of love,
Which is indeed but sign. That you shall surely find him,

Lead to the Sagittary the raised search; 159
And there will I be with him. So, farewell.

[Exit.

Enter, below, BRABANTIO, and Servants with torches.

Bra. It is too true an evil: gone she is;
And what's to come of my despised time
Is naught but bitterness.—Now, Roderigo,
Where didst thou see her?—O unhappy girl!—
With the Moor, say'st thou?—Who would be a father!—

How didst thou know 'twas she?—O, she deceives me

Past thought!—What said she to you?—Get more tapers;

Raise all my kindred.—Are they married,
think you?

Rod. Truly, I think they are.

Bra. O heaven!—How got she out!—O treason of the blood!— 170

Fathers, from hence trust not your daughters' minds

By what you see them act.—Is there not charms 172

By which the property² of youth and maidhood
May be abus'd? Have you not read, Roderigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes, sir, I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother.—O, would you had had her!—

Some one way, some another.—Do you know
Where we may apprehend her and the Moor?

Rod. I think I can discover him, if you please 179

To get good guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you, lead on. At every house
I'll call;

I may command at most.—Get weapons, ho!
And raise some special officers of night.³—

On, good Roderigo;—I'll deserve your pains.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The same. Another street.

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and Attendants with torches.

Iago. Though in the trade of war I have slain men,

Yet do I hold it very stuff o' the conscience
To do no contriv'd murder: I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I had thought t' have jerk'd him⁴ here under the ribs.

Oth. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay, but he prated,

And spoke such scurvy and provoking terms
Against your honour,

That, with the little godliness I have,
I did full hard⁵ forbear him. But, I pray

you, sir, 10

Are you fast married? Be assur'd of this,
That the magnifico is much below'd;

And hath, in his effect, a voice potential
As double as the duke's: he will divorce you;

Or put upon you what restraint and grievance
The law—with all his might t' enforce it on—

Will give him cable.⁶

Oth. Let him do his spite:
My services which I have done the signiory

² Property, natural inclinations.

³ Officers of night, i.e. the watch. ⁴ Him, i.e. Roderigo.

⁵ Full hard, with difficulty. ⁶ Cable, i.e. scope.

¹ Cast = cast off, dismiss.

Shall out-tongue his complaints. 'Tis yet to know,—
Which, when I know that boasting is an honour, 20
I shall promulgate,—I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege;¹ and my demerits²
May speak, unbonneted, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd: for know, Iago,

But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhousted³ free condition
Put into circumscription and confine
For the sea's worth. But, look! what lights come yond?
Iago. Those are the raised father and his friends: 29
You were best go in.

Rod. your fair daughter,
At this odd-even and dull watch o' the night,

Transported, with no worse nor better guard
But with a knave of common hire, a gondolier—(Act i. 1. 123-126.)

Oth. Not I; I must be found:
My parts, my title, and my perfect soul 31
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?
Iago. By Janus, I think no.

Enter CASSIO, and certain Officers with torches.

Oth. The servants of the duke, and my lieutenant.—
The goodness of the night upon you, friends!
What is the news?

Cas. The duke does greet you, general;

And he requires your haste-post-haste appearance

Even on the instant.

Oth. What is the matter, think you?

Cas. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine:

[It is a business of some heat: the galleys 40
Have sent a dozen sequent messengers
This very night at one another's heels;
And many of the consuls, rais'd and met,
Are at the duke's already:] you have been hotly call'd for;

¹ Siege (F. siège), rank, station.

² Demerits, deserts.

³ Unhousted, i.e. free, unmarried.

When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent about three several quests
To search you out.

Oth. 'Tis well I am found by you.
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And go with you. [Exit.]

Cas. Ancient, what makes he here?

Iago. Faith, he to-night hath boarded a land carrack:¹ 50

If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever.

Cas. I do not understand.

Iago. He's married.

Cas. To who?

Re-enter OTHELLO.

Iago. Marry, to—Come, captain, will you go?

Oth. Have with you.

Cas. Here comes another troop to seek for
you.

Iago. It is Brabantio:—general, be advis'd;
He comes to bad intent.

Enter BRABANTIO, RODERIGO, and Officers with torches and weapons.

Oth. Holla! stand there!

Rod. Signior, it is the Moor.

Bra. Down with him, thief!

[They draw on both sides.]

Iago. You, Roderigo! come, sir, I am for
you.

Oth. Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them.—

Good signior, you shall more command with years 60

Than with your weapons.

Bra. O thou foul thief, where hast thou stow'd my daughter?

Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her;
For I'll refer me to all things of sense,
If she in chains of magic were not bound,
Whether a maid so tender, fair, and happy,
So opposite to marriage that she shunn'd
The wealthy curled darlings of our nation,
Would ever have, to incur a general mock,
Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou,—to fear,² not to delight. 71

¹ Carrack, a large merchant vessel.

² To fear, i.e. [a thing] to cause fear.

[Judge me the world, if 't is not gross in sense]
That thou hast practis'd on her with foul
charms; 73

Abus'd her delicate youth with drugs or minerals

That waken motion:—I'll have 't disputed
on;

'T is probable, and palpable to thinking.]

I therefore apprehend and do attach³ thee

For an abuser of the world, a practiser

Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.—

Lay hold upon him: if he do resist, 80

Subdue him at his peril.

Oth. Hold your hands,

Both you of my inclining, and the rest:

Were it my cue to fight, I should have known
it.

Without a prompter.—Where will you that I go

To answer this your charge?

Bra. To prison; till fit time

Of law, and course of direct session,

Call thee to answer.

Oth. What if I do obey?

How may the duke be therewith satisfied,

Whose messengers are here about my side,

Upon some present business of the state

To bring me to him?

First Off. 'T is true, most worthy signior;

The duke's in council, and your noble self,

I'm sure, is sent for.

Bra. How! the duke in council!

In this time of the night!—Bring him away;

Mine's not an idle cause: the duke himself,

Or any of my brothers of the state,

Cannot but feel this wrong as 'twere their own; 97

For if such actions may have passage free,

Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A council-chamber.

The DUKE and Senators sitting at a table;

Officers attending.

Duke. There is no composition⁴ in these news

That gives them credit.

³ Attach, arrest.

⁴ Composition, i.e. consistency.

[First Sen. Indeed, they're disproportion'd;
My letters say a hundred and seven galleys.

Duke. And mine, a hundred and forty.

Sec. Sen. And mine, two hundred:

But though they jump not¹ on a just account,—
As in these cases, where the aim² reports,
'Tis oft with difference,—yet do they all confirm

A Turkish fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to judgment:

I do not so secure³ me in the error, 10
But the main article I do approve
In fearful sense.

Sailor. [Within] What, ho! what, ho! what,
ho!

First Off. A messenger from the galleys.

Enter a Sailor.

Duke. Now,—what's the business?

Sail. The Turkish preparation makes for Rhodes;

So was I bid report here to the state
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

First Sen. This cannot be,

By no assay of reason: 't is a pageant,
To keep us in false gaze. When we consider
Th' importancy of Cyprus to the Turk; 20
And let ourselves again but understand,
That as it more concerns the Turk than
Rhodes,

So may he with more facile question bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,⁴
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in:—if we make thought of this,

We must not think the Turk is so unskilful
To leave that latest which concerns him
first,

Neglecting an attempt of ease and gain,
To wake and wage a danger profitless. 30

Duke. Nay, in all confidence, he's not for Rhodes.

First Off. Here is more news.]

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomites, reverend and gracious, Steering with due course toward the isle of Rhodes,

Have there injoined them with an after fleet.

First Sen. Ay, so I thought.—How many,
as you guess?

Mess. Of thirty sail: and now they do re-stem Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance

Their purposes toward Cyprus.—Signior Mon-tano,

Your trusty and most valiant servitor, 40
With his free duty recommends⁵ you thus,
And prays you to believe him.

[Duke. 'T is certain, then, for Cyprus.—
Marcus Luccicos, is not he in town?

First Sen. He's now in Florence.

Duke. Write from us to him; post-post-haste dispatch.]

First Sen. Here comes Brabantio and the valiant Moor.

[Enter BRABANTIO, OTHELLO, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you

Against the general enemy Ottoman.—

[To Brabantio] I did not see you; welcome, gentle signior; 50

We lack'd your counsel and your help to-night.

Bra. So did I yours. Good your grace,
pardon me;

Neither my place, nor aught I heard of business,

Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general care

Take hold on me; for my particular grief

Is of so flood-gate and o'erbearing nature

That it engulfs and swallows other sorrows,

And it is still itself.⁶

Duke. Why, what's the matter?

Bra. My daughter! O, my daughter!

Duke and Sen. Dead?

Bra. Ay, to me;

She is abus'd, stol'n from me, and corrupted

¹ Jump not, i.e. do not agree.

² Aim, conjecture.

³ Secure me in, &c., i.e. "I do not rely so much on the mistake (with regard to their numbers) as not to . . ." &c.

⁴ Brace, preparation.

⁵ Recommends, commends himself to you.

⁶ Still itself, i.e. never changes.

By spells and medicines bought of mountebanks; 61

For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not.

Duke. Whoe'er he be that, in this foul proceeding,

Hath thus beguild your daughter of herself,
And you of her, the bloody book of law
You shall yourself read in the bitter letter
After your own sense; yea, though our proper son 69

Stood in your action.

Bra. Humbly I thank your grace.
Here is the man, this Moor; whom now, it seems,

Your special mandate, for the state-affairs,
Hath hither brought.

Duke and Sen. We're very sorry for't.

Duke. [To Othello] What, in your own part, can you say to this?

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.

Oth. Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,

My very noble and approv'd good masters,—
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
[It is most true; true, I have married her:
The very head and front of my offending 80 Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,

And little bless'd with the soft phrase of peace;
For since these arms of mine had seven years' pith,

Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd

Their dearest¹ action in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause
In speaking for myself. Yet, by your gracious patience,

I will a round² unvarnish'd tale deliver 90
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what
charms,

What conjuration, and what mighty magic,—
For such proceeding I am charg'd withal,— won his daughter.

Bra. A maiden never bold;

Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at herself; and she—in spite of nature,
Of years, of country, credit, every thing—
To fall in love with what she fear'd to look on!
It is a judgment main'd and most imperfect,
That will confess perfection so could err 100
Against all rules of nature; [and must be driven
To find out practices of cunning hell,
Why this should be.] I therefore vouch again,
That with some mixtures powerful o'er the blood,

Or with some dram conjur'd to this effect,
He wrought upon her.

Duke. To vouch this, is no proof,
[Without more wider and more overt test
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods
Of modern³ seeming do prefer against him.]

First Sen. But, Othello, speak: 110
Did you by indirect and forced courses Subdue and poison this young maid's affections?

Or came it by request, and such fair question
As soul to soul affordeth?

Oth. I do beseech you,
Send for the lady to the Sagittary,
And let her speak of me before her father:
If you do find me foul in her report,
The trust, the office, I do hold of you,
Not only take away, but let your sentence
Even fall upon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.

Oth. Ancient, conduct them, you best know the place.— 121

[Exeunt Iago and Attendants.

And, till she come, as truly as to heaven
I do confess the vices of my blood,
So justly to your grave ears I'll present
How I did thrive in this fair lady's love,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it, Othello.

Oth. Her father lov'd me; oft invited me;
Still question'd me the story of my life,
From year to year,—the battles, sieges, fortunes,
That I have pass'd. 131

I ran it through, even from my boyish days
To the very moment that he bade me tell it:
Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;

¹ Dearest=chief

² Round, plain.

³ Modern=trivial.

Of hair-breadth scapes i' th' imminent deadly breach;
Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence,
And portance¹ in my travels' history: 139
Wherein of antres² vast and deserts idle,³ Rough quarries, rocks, and hills whose heads touch heaven,

It was my hint to speak, [—such was the process;
And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthropophagi,⁴ and men whose heads
Dogrow beneath their shoulders.] This to hear
Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house-affairs would draw her thence;
Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,

Oth. she thank'd me;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,

I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her —(Act i. 3 163-166.)

She'd come again, and with a greedy ear 149
Devour up my discourse:—which I observing,
Took once a pliant hour; and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels⁵ she had something heard,
But not intently:⁶ I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke

That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore,—in faith, 't was strange, 't was passing strange; 160
'T was pitiful, 't was wondrous pitiful:
She wish'd she had not heard it; yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd me;
And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I spake:

She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd;
And I lov'd her that she did pity them.

¹ Portance, demeanour, bearing

² Antres, caverns.

³ Idle = untilled.

⁴ Anthropophagi, i.e. man-eaters.

⁵ By parcels, i.e. by pieces.

⁶ Intently = consecutively.

This only is the witchcraft I have us'd:—
Here comes the lady; let her witness it. 170

Enter DESDEMONA with IAGO and Attendants.

Duke. I think this tale would win my daughter too.—

Good Brabantio,
Take up¹ this mangled matter at the best:
Men do their broken weapons rather use
Than their bare hands.

Bra. I pray you, hear her speak:
If she confess that she was half the wooer,
Destruction on my head, if my bad blame
Light on the man!—Come hither, gentle mistress:

Do you perceive in all this noble company
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My noble father,
I do perceive here a divided duty: 181
To you I'm bound for life and education;
My life and education both do learn me
How to respect you; you're the lord of duty,—
I am hitherto your daughter: but here's my husband;

And so much duty as my mother show'd
To you, preferring you before her father,
So much I challenge that I may profess
Due to the Moor my lord.

Bra. God b' wi' you!—I have done.—
Please it your grace, on to the state-affairs:
I had rather to adopt a child than get it.—
Come hither, Moor: 192

I here do give thee that with all my heart
Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keep from thee.—[For your sake, jewel,
I am glad at soul I have no other child;
For thy escape would teach me tyranny,
To hang clogs on them.]—I have done, my lord.

[Duke. Let me speak like yourself; and lay a sentence,²

Which, as a grise³ or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. 201

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depend.

To mourn a mischief that is past and gone
Is the next way to draw new mischief on.

What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
Patience her⁴ injury a mockery makes.

The robb'd that smiles steals something from the thief;

He robs himself that spends a bootless grief.

Bra. So let the Turk of Cyprus us beguile;
We lose it not, so long as we can smile. 211
He bears the sentence well that nothing bears
But the free comfort which from thence he hears;

But he bears both the sentence and the sorrow
That to pay grief must of poor patience borrow.
These sentences, to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal:⁵
But words are words; I never yet did hear
That the bruis'd heart was pierced through the ear.—

I humbly beseech you, proceed to the affairs of state.] 220

Duke. The Turk with a most mighty preparation makes for Cyprus:—Othello, the fortitude of the place is best known to you;
[and though we have there a substitute of most allowed sufficiency, yet opinion, a sovereign mistress of effects,⁶ throws a more safer voice on you:] you must therefore be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition.

Oth. The tyrant custom, most grave senators,
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down: I do agnize⁷
A natural and prompt alacrity 233
I find in hardness; and do undertake
This present war against the Ottomites.
Most humbly, therefore, bending to your state,
I crave fit disposition for my wife;
Due reference⁸ of place and exhibition;
With such accommodation and besort⁹ 239
As levels with her breeding.

Duke. If you please,
Be't at her father's.

Bra. I'll not have it so.

Oth. Nor I.

Des. Nor I; I would not there reside,
To put my father in impatient thoughts

⁴ Her, i.e. fortune's.

⁵ Are equivocal, i.e. tell both ways.

⁶ Mistress of effects—which produces great results.

⁷ Agnize, recognize. ⁸ Reference, i.e. assignment.

⁹ Accommodation and besort=suitable accommodation.

¹ Take up, &c.,=make the best of a bad business.

² Sentence, maxim.

³ Grise (L. gressus), step.

By being in his eye. Most gracious duke,
To my unfolding lend your prosperous ear;
And let me find a charter in your voice,
To assist my simpleness.

Duke. What would you, Desdemona?

Des. That I did love the Moor to live with
him,
My downright violence and storm of fortunes
May trumpet to the world: my heart's sub-du'd 251

Even to the very quality of my lord:
I saw Othello's visage in his mind;
And to his honours and his valiant parts
Did I my soul and fortunes consecrate.
So that, dear lords, if I be left behind,
A moth of peace, and he go to the war,
The rites for which I love him are bereft me,
And I a heavy interim shall support
By his dear absence. Let me go with him.

Oth. Your voices, lords: beseech you, let her will 261

Have a free way.

[Vouch with me, heaven, I therefore beg it not,
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat—the young affects
In me defunct—and proper satisfaction;
But to be free and bounteous to her mind:
And heaven defend your good souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant
For she is with me: no, when light-wing'd toys 269
Of feather'd Cupid seel¹ with wanton dullness
My speculative and offic'd instruments,
That my disports corrupt and taint my business,

Let housewives make a skillet² of my helm,
And all indign and base adversities
Make head against my estimation!]

Duke. Be it as you shall privately determine, Either for her stay or going: th' affair cries
haste,

And speed must answer it.

First Sen. You must away to-night.

Oth. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i' the morning here we'll meet again.— 280

Othello, leave some officer behind,

And he shall our commission bring to you;
With such things else of quality and respect
As doth import³ you.

Oth. So please your grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty and trust:
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good grace shall think

To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.—

Good night to every one.—[To Brabantio] And,
noble signior,

If virtue no delighted⁴ beauty lack, 290
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

First Sen. Adieu, brave Moor; use Desdemona well.

Bra. Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see :

She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.

[Exeunt Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.]

Oth. My life upon her faith!—Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee:

I prithee, let thy wife attend on her;
And bring them after in the best advantage.—
Come, Desdemona; I have but an hour 299
Of love, of worldly matters and direction,
To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.]

Rod. Iago,—

Iago. What say'st thou, noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, thinkest thou?

Iago. Why, go to bed, and sleep.

Rod. I will incontinently drown myself.

Iago. If thou dost, I shall never love thee after. Why, thou silly gentleman!

Rod. It is silliness to live when to live is torment; and then have we a prescription to die when death is our physician. 311

Iago. O villanous! I have look'd upon the world for four times seven years; and since I could distinguish betwixt a benefit and an injury, I never found man that knew how to love himself. Ere I would say, I would drown myself for the love of a guinea-hen, I would change my humanity with a baboon.

Rod. What should I do? I confess it is my shame to be so fond; but it is not in my virtue to amend it. 321

¹ Seel = blind.

² Skillet, a cooking-pan.

³ Import, concern.

⁴ Delighted, i.e. which delights.

Iago. Virtue! a fig! 't is in ourselves that we are thus or thus. [Our bodies are gardens; to the which our wills are gardeners: so that if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce; set hyssop, and weed-up thyme; supply it with one gender of herbs, or distract¹ it with many; either to have it steril with idleness, or manured with industry; why, the power and corrigible² authority of this lies in our wills. If the balance of our lives had not one scale of reason to poise another of sensuality, the blood and baseness of our natures would conduct us to most preposterous conclusions: but we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this that you call love to be a sect³ or scion.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is merely a lust of the blood and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: drown thyself! drown cats and blind puppies. I have profess'd me thy friend, and [I confess me knit to thy deserving with cables of perdurable toughness;] I could never better stead thee than now. Put money in thy purse; follow thou the wars; defeat thy favour⁴ with an usurp'd beard; I say, put money in thy purse. It cannot be that Desdemona should long continue her love to the Moor,—put money in thy purse,—nor he his to her: it was a violent commencement, and thou shalt see an answerable sequestration;⁵—put but money in thy purse.—These Moors are changeable in their wills:—fill thy purse with money: [—the food that to him now is as luscious as locusts shall be to him shortly as bitter as coloquintida.⁶ She must change for youth: when she is sated with his body, she will find the error of her choice:] she must have change, she must: therefore put money in thy purse.—If thou wilt needs damn thyself, do it a more delicate way than drowning. Make all the money thou canst: if sanctimony and a frail vow betwixt an erring barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her; therefore make money. A pox of drowning thyself! it is clean out of the way: seek thou rather to be hang'd in compassing thy joy than to be drown'd and go without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue? 370

Iago. Thou art sure of me:—go, make money:—I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee again and again, I hate the Moor: my cause is hearted;⁷ thine hath no less reason. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge against him: if thou canst cuckold him, thou dost thyself a pleasure, me a sport. [There are many events in the womb of time, which will be delivered.] Traverse;⁸ go; provide thy money. We will have more of this to-morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where shall we meet i' the morning?

Iago. At my lodging. 382

Rod. I'll be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go to; farewell. Do you hear, Roderigo?

Rod. What say you?

Iago. No more of drowning, do you hear?

Rod. I am chang'd: I'll go sell all my land. [Exit.]

Iago. Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;

For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,

If I would time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. I hate the Moor;
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets

'Has done my office: I know not if 't be true;
But I, for mere suspicion in that kind,
Will do as if for surety. He holds me well;⁹
The better shall my purpose work on him.
Cassio's a proper man: let me see now; 398
To get his place, and to plume up¹⁰ my will
In double knavery—How, how?—Let's see:—
After some time, t' abuse Othello's ear
That he is too familiar with his wife:—
He hath a person, and a smooth dispose,¹¹

¹ Distract, diversify. ² Corrigible, which can correct.

³ Sect, cutting: a gardener's term.

⁴ Defeat thy favour, i.e. change thy looks.

⁵ Answerable sequestration, i.e. corresponding withdrawal from her present attitude.

⁶ Coloquintida, colocynth or bitter-apple.

⁷ Hearted=rooted in the heart.

⁸ Traverse, a military term=march.

⁹ Holds me well, has a good opinion of me.

¹⁰ Plume up=make to triumph.

¹¹ Dispose, bearing, demeanour.

To be suspected; fram'd to make women false.
The Moor is of a free and open nature,
That thinks men honest that but seem to be so;
And will as tenderly be led by the nose

As asses are. 408
I have't;—it is engender'd;—hell and night Must bring this monstrous birth to the world's light. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A seaport town in Cyprus.
A platform.

Enter MONTANO and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the cape can you discern at sea?

First Gent. Nothing at all: it is a high-wrought flood;

I cannot 'twixt the heaven and the main
Descry a sail.

Mon. Methinks the wind hath spoke aloud
at land;

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on
them,
Can hold the mortise?¹ What shall we hear
of this?

Sec. Gent. A segregation² of the Turkish fleet:
For do not stand upon the foaming shore, 11
The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds;
The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous mane,

Seems to cast water on the burning Bear,
And quench the guards³ of th' ever-fixed pole:
I never did like molestation⁴ view
On the enchafed flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish fleet
Be not enselter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd;
It is impossible they bear it out.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Third Gent. News, lads! our wars are done.
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks, 21
That their designment halts: a noble ship of Venice

Hath seen a grievous wreck and sufferance
On most part of their fleet. 24

Mon. How! is this true?

Third Gent. The ship is here put in,
A Veronesa; Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor Othello,
Is come on shore: the Moor himself at sea,
And is in full commission here for Cyprus.

Mon. I'm glad on 't; 't is a worthy governor.

Third Gent. But this same Cassio,—though he speak of comfort 31
Touching the Turkish loss, yet he looks sadly,
And prays the Moor be safe; for they were parted

With foul and violent tempest.

Mon. Pray heavens he be;
For I have serv'd him, and the man commands
Like a full soldier. Let's to the seaside, ho!
As well to see the vessel that's come in
As to throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard.

Third Gent. Come, let's do so; 40
For every minute is expectancy
Of more arrivance.

Enter CASSIO.

Cas. Thanks to the valiant of this warlike isle,
That so approve the Moor! O, let the heavens
Give him defence against the elements,
For I have lost him on a dangerous sea!

Mon. Is he well shipp'd?

Cas. His bark is stoutly timber'd, and his pilot
Of very éxpert and approv'd allowance; 49
Therefore my hopes, not surfeited to death,
Stand in bold cure.⁵

[Within] A sail, a sail, a sail!

¹ Mortise, a term in carpentry—the joint of two timbers.

² Segregation, dispersion. ³ Guards=stars. See note 74.

⁴ Molestation, disturbance.

⁵ In bold cure, in a good way of being cured.

Enter a fourth Gentleman.

Cas. What noise? 52

Fourth Gent. The town is empty; on the brow o' the sea

Stand ranks of people, and they cry "A sail!"

Cas. My hopes do shape him for the governor. [Guns within.

Sec. Gent. They do discharge their shot of courtesy:

Our friends at least.

Cas. I pray you, sir, go forth, And give us truth who 't is that is arriv'd.

Sec. Gent. I shall. [Exit.

Mon. But, good lieutenant, is your general wiv'd? 60

Third Gent. News, lads! our wars are done.
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts.—(Act II. 1. 20-22.)

Cas. Most fortunately: he hath achiev'd a maid

That paragon's description and wild fame;
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens,
And in th' essential¹ vesture of creation
Does tire the ingener.²

Re-enter second Gentleman.

How now! who has put in?

Sec. Gent. 'T is one Iago, ancient to the general.

Cas. 'Has had most favourable and happy speed:

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,—
Traitors ensteep'd³ to clog the guiltless keel,—
As having sense of beauty, do omit 71
Their mortal natures, letting go safely by
The divine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cas. She that I spake of, our great captain's captain,

Left in the conduct of the bold Iago;
Whose footing here anticipates our thoughts
A se'nnight's speed.—Great Jove, Othello guard,

And swell his sail with thine own powerful breath, 78

That he may bless this bay with his tall ship,

¹ Essential, i.e. true, unadorned.

² Ingener, artist.

³ Ensteep'd, sunk under the water, submerged.

Make love's quick pants in Desdemona's arms,
Give renew'd fire to our extincted spirits,
And bring all Cyprus comfort!—O, behold,

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA, IAGO, RODERIGO, and Attendants.

The riches of the ship is come on shore!
Ye men of Cyprus, let her have your knees.—
Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heaven,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand,
Enwheel¹ thee round!

Des. I thank you, valiant Cassio.
What tidings can you tell me of my lord?

Cas. He is not yet arriv'd: nor know I aught 89

But that he's well, and will be shortly here.

Des. O, but I fear—How lost you company?

Cas. The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship:—but, hark! a sail.

[Within] A sail, a sail! [Guns within.

Sec. Gent. They give their greeting to the citadel:

This likewise is a friend.

Cas. See for the news.—
[Exit Gentleman.

Good ancient, you are welcome:—[To Emilia] welcome, mistress:—

Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners;² 't is my breeding
That gives me this bold show of courtesies.

[Kissing her.

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lips 101

As of her tongue she oft bestows on me,
You'd have enough.

Des. Alas, she has no speech.

Iago. In faith, too much;

I find it still, when I have list to sleep:

Marry, before your ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.³

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on; you're pictures out of doors, 110

Bells in your parlours, wild-cats in your kitchens,

Saints in your injuries, devils being offended, [Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.]

Des. O, fie upon thee, slanderer!

Iago. Nay, it is true, or else I am a Turk:
[You rise to play, and go to bed to work.]

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Des. What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?

Iago. O gentle lady, do not put me to't;
For I am nothing, if not critical. 120

Des. Come on, assay.—There's one gone to the harbour?

Iago. Ay, madam.

Des. I am not merry; but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.—
Come, how wouldst thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it; but, indeed, my invention

Comes from my pate as birdlime does from frize,—

It plucks out brains and all: but my Muse labours,

And thus she is deliver'd.

If she be fair and wise,—fairness and wit,

The one's for use, the other useth it. 131

Des. Well prais'd! [How if she be black and witty?]

Iago. If she be black, and thereto have a wit,
She'll find a white that shall her blackness fit.

Des. Worse and worse.

Emil. How if fair and foolish?

Iago. She never yet was foolish that was fair;
For even her folly help'd her to an heir.

Des. These are old fond paradoxes to make fools laugh i' the alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's foul and foolish?

Iago. There's none so foul, and foolish thereunto, 142

But does foul pranks which fair and wise ones do.

Des. O heavy ignorance!—thou praisest the worst best. [But what praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed,—one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on⁴ the vouch of very malice itself?]

Iago. She that was ever fair, and never proud; 149

¹ Enwheel, compass.

² Extend my manners, i.e. not merely salute, but go so far as to kiss.

³ With thinking, i.e. in thought, not aloud.

⁴ Put on, challenge.

Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud;
Never lack'd gold, and yet went never gay;
Fled from her wish, and yet said "Now I may;"
She that, being anger'd, her revenge being nigh,

Bade her wrong stay, and her displeasure fly;
She that in wisdom never was so frail
To change¹ the cod's head for the salmon's tail;
She that could think, and ne'er disclose her mind;

See suitors following, and not look behind;
She was a wight, if ever such wight were,—

Des. To do what? 160

Iago. To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.²

Des. O most lame and impotent conclusion!
—Do not learn of him, Emilia, though he be thy husband.—How say you, Cassio? is he not a most profane and liberal counsellor?

Cas. He speaks home, madam: you may relish him more in the soldier than in the scholar.

Iago. [Aside] He takes her by the palm: ay, well said, whisper: with as little a web as this will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio.
Ay, smile upon her, do; I will gyve thee in thine own courtship.³ You say true; 't is so, indeed: if such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantry, it had been better you had not kiss'd your three fingers so oft, [which now again you are most apt to play the sir⁴ in. Very good; well kiss'd! an excellent courtesy! 't is so, indeed. Yet again your fingers to your lips? would they were clyster-pipes for your sake!] [Trumpet within.]

—The Moor! I know his trumpet. 180

Cas. 'T is truly so.

Des. Let's meet him, and receive him.

Cas. Lo, where he comes!

Enter OTHELLO and Attendants.

Oth. O my fair warrior!

Des. My dear Othello!

Oth. It gives me wonder great as my content

¹ To change, &c., the whole line means, to make a bad exchange. See note 84.

² Chronicle small beer, literally, make out tavern reck-onings=keep accounts.

³ Courtship, courtesy.

⁴ The sir, the gallant.

To see you here before me. O my soul's joy!
If after every tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd
death!

And let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus-high, and duck again as low 190
As hell's from heaven! If it were now to die,
'T were now to be most happy; for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate.

Des. The heavens forbid
But that our loves and comforts should increase,

Even as our days do grow!

Oth. Amen to that, sweet powers!—
I cannot speak enough of this content:
It stops me here; it is too much of joy: 199
And this, and this, the greatest discords be

[Kissing her.]

That e'er our hearts shall make!

Iago. [Aside] O, you are well tun'd now!
But I'll set down the pegs that make this music,

As honest as I am.⁵

Oth. Come, let us to the castle.—
News, friends; our wars are done, the Turks are drown'd.

How does my old acquaintance of this isle?—
Honey, you shall be well-desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. O my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
In mine own comforts.—I prithee, good Iago,
Go to the bay and disembark my coffers:

Bring thou the master to the citadel; 211
He is a good one, and his worthiness
Does challenge much respect.—Come, Desdemona,

Once more well met at Cyprus.

[Exeunt Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants.]

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the harbour. Come hither. [If thou be'st valiant, —as, they say, base men being in love have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them,]—list me. The lieutenant to-night watches on the court-of-guard:—first,

⁵ As honest, &c., a mild oath=by my honesty.

I must tell thee this—Desdemona is directly in love with him. 221

Rod. With him! why, 't is not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus,¹ and let thy soul be instructed. Mark me with what violence she first lov'd the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical lies: and will she love him still for prating? let not thy discreet heart think it. Her eye must be fed; and what delight shall she have to look on the devil? [When the blood is made dull with the act of sport, there should be—again to inflame it, and to give satiety a fresh appetite—loveliness in favour, sympathy in years, manners, and beauties; all which the Moor is defective in: now, for want of these requir'd conveniences, her delicate tenderness will find itself abus'd, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor; very nature will instruct her in it, and compel her to some second choice. Now, sir, this granted,—as it is a most pregnant² and unforc'd position,—who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio does? a knave very voluble; no further conscionable than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection? why, none; why, none: a slipper³ and subtle knave; a finder of occasions; that has an eye can stamp and counterfeit advantages, though true advantage never present itself: a devilish knave! Besides, the knave is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him that folly and green minds look after: a pestilent-complete knave; and the woman hath found him⁴ already.]

Rod. I cannot believe that in her; she's full of most bless'd condition.⁵

Iago. Bless'd fig's-end! the wine she drinks is made of grapes: if she had been blessing'd, she would never have lov'd the Moor: blessing'd pudding! Didst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand? didst not mark that?

Rod. Yes, that I did; but that was but courtesy. 261

Iago. Lechery, by this hand; an index and obscure prologue to the history of lust and foul thoughts. [They met so near with their lips, that their breaths embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts. Roderigo! when these mutualities so marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion: pish!]⁶—But, sir, be you ruled by me: I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to-night; for the command, I'll lay 't upon you: Cassio knows you not:—I'll not be far from you: do you find some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting⁶ his discipline; or from what other course you please, which the time shall more favourably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he is rash, and very sudden in choler, and haply may strike at you: provoke him, that he may; for even out of that will I cause these of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification⁷ shall come into no true taste again but by the displanting of Cassio. [So shall you have a shorter journey to your desires, by the means I shall then have to prefer them; and the impediment most profitably removed, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperity.]

Rod. I will do this, if I can bring it to any opportunity. 290

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the citadel: I must fetch his necessaries ashore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu.

[Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loves her, I do well believe it;
That she loves him, 't is apt, and of great credit:
The Moor—howbeit that I endure him not—
Is of a constant-loving noble nature;
And I dare think he'll prove to Desdemona
A most dear husband. Now, I do love her too; 300

Not out of absolute lust,—though peradventure
I stand accountant for as great a sin,—
But partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the lusty Moor
Hath leap'd into my seat: the thought whereof Doth, like a poisonous mineral, gnaw my inwards;

¹ Thus, on thy lips, for secrecy.

² Pregnant, natural.

³ Slipper, slippery.

⁴ Found him, i. e. has found him out.

⁵ Condition, character, disposition.

⁶ Tainting = discrediting.

⁷ Qualification, pacification. See note 91.

And nothing can or shall content my soul
 Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife;
 Or failing so, yet that I put the Moor
 At least into a jealousy so strong 310
 That judgment cannot cure. Which thing to do,
 If this poor trash of Venice,¹ whom I trash²
 For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,³
 I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip;
 Abuse him to the Moor in the rank garb,—
 For I fear Cassio with my night-cap too;
 Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,
 For making him egregiously an ass, 318
 And practising upon his peace and quiet
 Even to madness. 'T is here, but yet confus'd:
 Knavery's plain face is never seen till us'd.

[Exit.]

[SCENE II. A street.]

Enter a Herald with a proclamation; People following.

Her. It is Othello's pleasure, our noble and valiant general, that, upon certain tidings now arrived, importing the mere⁴ perdition of the Turkish fleet, every man put himself into triumph; some to dance, some to make bonfires, each man to what sport and revels his addiction⁵ leads him: for, besides these beneficial news, it is the celebration of his nuptial:
 —so much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices⁶ are open; and there is full liberty of feasting from this present hour of five till the bell have told eleven. Heaven bless the isle of Cyprus and our noble general Othello!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A hall in the castle.

Enter OTHELLO, DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and Attendants.

Oth. Good Michael, look you to the guard
 to-night:
 Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
 Not to outsport discretion.

Cas. Iago hath direction what to do;
 But, notwithstanding, with my personal eye

¹ This, &c., i.e. Roderigo. ² Trash, i.e. restrain, hold in.³ Putting on = instigation.⁴ Mere, utter.⁵ Addition, natural inclination.⁶ Offices, i.e. the servants' offices or rooms.

Will I look to't.

Oth.Iago is most honest.

Michael, good night: to-morrow with your earliest

Let me have speech with you.—[To Desdemona] [Come, my dear love,— 8]

The purchase made, the fruits are to ensue;
 That profit's yet to come 'tween me and you.—]
 Good night.

[Exeunt Othello, Desdemona, and Attendants.]

Enter IAGO.

Cas. Welcome, Iago; we must to the watch.

Iago. Not this hour, lieutenant; 't is not yet ten o' the clock. Our general cast us thus early for the love of his Desdemona; who let us not therefore blame: [he hath not yet made] wanton the night with her; and she is sport for Jove.]

Cas. She's a most exquisite lady.

[Iago. And, I'll warrant her, full of game.]

Cas. Indeed, she's a most fresh and delicate creature.] 21

Iago. What an eye she has! methinks it sounds a parley to provocation.

Cas. An inviting eye; and yet methinks right modest.

Iago. And when she speaks, is it not an alarum to love?

Cas. She is, indeed, perfection.

Iago. Well, happiness to their sheets! Come, lieutenant, I have a stoop of wine; and here without are a brace of Cyprus gallants that would fain have a measure to the health of black Othello.

Cas. Not to-night, good Iago: I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking: I could well wish courtesy would invent some other custom of entertainment.

Iago. O, they are our friends; but one cup:
 I'll drink for you. 39

Cas. I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified⁷ too, and, behold, what innovation it makes here: I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and dare not task my weakness with any more.

Iago. What, man! 't is a night of revels:
 the gallants desire it.

⁷ Qualified, diluted with water.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Here at the door; I pray you, call them in. 48

Cas. I'll do't; but it dislikes me. [Exit.]

Iago. If I can fasten but one cup upon him, With that which he hath drunk to-night already,

He'll be as full of quarrel and offence
As my young mistress' dog. Now, my sick fool Roderigo,
Whom love hath turn'd almost the wrong side
out,
To Desdemona hath to-night carous'd

Iago [Sings] And let me the canakin clink, clink;
And let me the canakin clink:
A soldier's a man;
A life's but a span;
Why, then, let a soldier drink.—(Act ii. 3. 71-75.)

Potations pottle-deep; and he's to watch:
Three lads of Cyprus—noble swelling spirits,
That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements¹ of this warlike isle— 59
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Now, 'mongst this flock of drunkards,
Am I to put our Cassio in some action
That may offend the isle:—but here they come:
If consequence² do but approve my dream,
My boat sails freely, both with wind and stream.

¹ The very elements, i.e. the quintessence; or, as others explain it,—"as quarrelsome as the elements (fire and water)"

² Consequence, i.e. what follows.

Re-enter CASSIO, followed by MONTANO, Gentlemen, and Servant with wine.

Cas. 'Fore God, they have given me a rouse³ already.

Mon. Good faith, a little one; not past a pint, as I am a soldier.

Iago. Some wine, ho! 70

[Sings] And let me the canakin clink, clink;
And let me the canakin clink:

A soldier's a man;

A life's but a span;

Why, then, let a soldier drink.

Some wine, boys!

³ Rouse, a large glass=(as we say), "enough to drink."

Cas. 'Fore God, an excellent song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England, where, indeed, they are most potent in potting: your Dane, your German, and your swag-belli'd Hollander,—Drink, ho!—are nothing to your English. 81

Cas. Is your Englishman so expert in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinks you, with facility, your Dane dead drunk; he sweats not to overthrow your Almain; he gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next pottle can be fill'd.

Cas. To the health of our general!

Mon. I am for it, lieutenant; and I'll do you justice.¹ 90

Iago. O sweet England!

[Sings] King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown;
He held them sixpence all too dear,
With that he call'd the tailor lown.
He was a wight of high renown,
And thou art but of low degree:
'Tis pride that pulls the country down;
Then take thine auld cloak about thee.

Some wine, ho! 100

Cas. Why, this is a more exquisite song than the other.

Iago. Will you hear't again?

Cas. No; for I hold him to be unworthy of his place that does those things.—Well,—God's above all; and there be souls must be saved; and there be souls must not be saved.

Iago. It's true, good lieutenant.

Cas. For mine own part,—no offence to the general, nor any man of quality,—I hope to be saved. 111

Iago. And so do I too, lieutenant.

Cas. Ay, but, by your leave, not before me; the lieutenant is to be saved before the ancient. Let's have no more of this; let's to our affairs. [Drops his handkerchief; in trying to pick it up, falls on his knees.]—Forgive us our sins!—Gentlemen, let's look to our business. Do not think, gentlemen, I am drunk: this is my ancient;—this is my right hand, and this is my left:—I am not drunk now; I can stand well enough, and speak well enough. 120

All. Excellent well.

Cas. Why, very well, then; you must not think, then, that I am drunk. [Exit.]

Mon. To the platform, masters; come, let's set the watch.

Iago. You see this fellow that is gone before;—

He is a soldier fit to stand by Cæsar
And give direction: and do but see his vice;
'T is to his virtue a just equinox,²
The one as long as th' other: 't is pity of him.
I fear the trust Othello puts him in, 181
On some odd time of his infirmity,
Will shake this island.

Mon. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep:

He'll watch the horologe a double set,³
If drink rock not his cradle.

Mon. It were well

The general were put in mind of it.
Perhaps he sees it not; or his good nature
Prizes the virtue that appears in Cassio, 189
And looks not on his evils: is not this true?

Enter RODERIGO.

Iago. [Aside to Roderigo] How now, Roderigo! I pray you, after the lieutenant; go.

[Exit Roderigo.]

Mon. And 't is great pity that the noble Moor
Should hazard such a place as his own second
With one of an ingraft⁴ infirmity:
It were an honest action to say
So to the Moor.

Iago. Not I, for this fair island:
I do love Cassio well; and would do much
To cure him of this evil—But, hark! what noise? [Cry within,—"Help! help!"

Re-enter CASSIO, driving in RODERIGO.

Cas. You rogue! you rascal!

Mon. What's the matter, lieutenant?

Cas. A knave to teach me my duty! 151
I'll beat the knave into a twiggen⁵ bottle.

Rod. Beat me!

Cas. Dost thou prate, rogue?

[Striking Roderigo.]

² Equinox, i.e. equal, counterpart

³ "He will lie awake for two rounds of the clock," i.e. twenty-four hours.

⁴ Ingraft, rooted.

⁵ Twiggen, wicker.

¹ I'll do you justice, i.e. I'll pledge you.

Mon. Nay, good lieutenant;
[Staying him.]

I pray you, sir, hold your hand.

Cas. Let me go, sir,

Or I'll knock you o'er the mazzard.¹

Mon. Come, come, you're drunk.

Cas. Drunk! [They fight.]

Iago. [Aside to Roderigo] Away, I say; go out, and cry a mutiny! [Exit Roderigo.]

Nay, good lieutenant,—alas, gentlemen;—

Help, ho!—Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—sir;—

Help, masters!—Here's a goodly watch indeed! [Bell rings.]

Who's that which rings the bell?—Diablo,² ho!

The town will rise: God's will, lieutenant, hold; You will be sham'd for ever.

Re-enter OTHELLO and Attendants.

[Oth. What is the matter here?

Mon. Zounds, I bleed still; I am hurt to the death. [Faints.]

Oth. Hold, for your lives!

Iago. Hold, ho! Lieutenant,—sir,—Montano,—gentlemen,—

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty? Hold! the general speaks to you; hold, for shame!]

Oth. Why, how now, ho! from whence ariseth this? 169

Are we turn'd Turks, and to ourselves do that Which heaven hath forbid the Ottomites?

For Christian shame, put by this barbarous brawl:

He that stirs next to carve for³ his own rage Holds his soul light; he dies upon his motion.— Silence that dreadful bell! it frights the isle From her propriety.⁴—What is the matter, masters?—

Honest Iago, that look'st dead with grieving, Speak, who began this? on thy love, I charge thee.

Iago. I do not know:—friends all but now, even now, 179

In quarter,⁵ and in terms⁶ like bride and groom

Devesting them for bed; and then, but now— As if some planet had unwitting men— 182

Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast, In opposition bloody. I cannot speak

Any beginning to this peevish odds;⁷

And would in action glorious I had lost

Those legs that brought me to a part of it!

Oth. How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?

Cas. I pray you, pardon me:—I cannot speak.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont be civil;⁸ 190

The gravity and stillness of your youth

The world hath noted, and your name is great

In mouths of wisest censure:⁹ what's the matter,

That you unlance your reputation thus,

And spend your rich opinion¹⁰ for the name

Of a night-brawler? give me answer to it.

Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger: Your officer, Iago, can inform you—

While I spare speech, which something now offends me— 199

Of all that I do know: nor know I aught

By me that's said or done amiss this night;

Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,

And to defend ourselves it be a sin

When violence assails us.

Oth. Now, by heaven,

My blood begins my safer guides to rule;

And passion, having my best judgment collied,

Assays to lead the way:—if I once stir,

Or do but lift this arm, the best of you

Shall sink in my rebuke. Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on; 210

And he that is approv'd¹¹ in this offence,

Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,

Shall lose me.—What! in a town of war,

Yet wild, the people's hearts brimful of fear,

To manage¹² private and domestic quarrel,

In night, and on the court and guard of safety!

'T is monstrous.¹³—Iago, who began 't? 217

Mon. If partially affin'd,¹⁴ or leagu'd in office, Thou dost deliver more or less than truth, Thou art no soldier.

¹ Peevish odds, foolish quarrel.

⁸ Civil = well-ordered.

⁹ Censure, judgment.

¹⁰ Spend your rich opinion, i.e. waste your great reputation. ¹¹ Approv'd, i.e. convicted by proof.

¹² Manage = to bring about, to originate.

¹³ Monstrous, pronounced as a trisyllable.

¹⁴ Partially affin'd = taking sides from interested motives.

Iago. Touch me not so near:
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth
Than it should do offence to Michael Cassio;
Yet, I persuade myself, to speak the truth
Shall nothing wrong him.—Thus it is, general.
Montano and myself being in speech,
There comes a fellow crying out for help;
And Cassio following him with determin'd sword
To execute upon him. Sir, this gentleman

Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant?—(Act ii. 3. 259.)

Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause:
Myself the crying fellow did pursue, 230
Lest by his clamour—as it so fell out—
The town might fall in fright: he, swift of foot, Outran my purpose; and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clink and fall of swords,
And Cassio high in oath; which till to-night
I ne'er might say before. When I came back,—
For this was brief,—I found them close together,
At blow and thrust; even as again they were
When you yourself did part them.
More of this matter cannot I report:— 240
But men are men; the best sometimes forget:—
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,—
As men in rage strike those that wish them best,—
Yet, surely, Cassio, I believe, receiv'd

From him that fled some strange indignity,
Which patience could not pass.

Oth. I know, Iago,
Thy honesty and love doth mince¹ this matter,
Making it light to Cassio.—Cassio, I love thee;
But never more be officer of mine.— 249

Re-enter DESDEMONA, attended.

Look, if my gentle love be not rais'd up!—
I'll make thee an example.

Des. [What's the matter?] }
Oth. All's well now, sweeting; [come away } to bed.]— }

Sir, for your hurts, myself will be your surgeon:
Lead him off. [To Montano, who is led off.
Iago, look with care about the town,
And silence those whom this vile brawl distracted.—

Come, Desdemona: 't is the soldiers' life
To have their balmy slumbers wak'd with strife. [Exeunt all except Iago and Cassio.

Iago. What, are you hurt, lieutenant?

Cas. Ay, past all surgery. 250

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!

Cas. Reputation, reputation, reputation!
O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial.—My reputation, Iago, my reputation!

Iago. As I am an honest man, I thought you had received some bodily wound; there is more sense in that than in reputation. Reputation is an idle and most false imposition; oft got without merit, and lost without deserving:
you have lost no reputation at all, unless you repute yourself such a loser. What, man!
there are ways to recover the general again:
[you are but now cast in his mood,² a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offenceless dog to af-fright an imperious lion:] sue to him again, and he's yours. 277

Cas. I will rather sue to be despis'd than to deceive so good a commander with so slight,
so drunken, and so indiscreet an officer.
Drunk? [and speak parrot?³ and squabble?
swagger? swear? and discourse fustian⁴ with

¹ Mince, lessen.

² Cast in his mood, i. e. dismissed from office in his anger.

³ Speak parrot, i. e. talk foolishly.

⁴ Discourse fustian, i. e. talk bombastically.

one's own shadow?—O thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee devil!

Iago. What was he that you follow'd with your sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is't possible? 288

Cas. I remember a mass of things, but nothing distinctly; a quarrel, but nothing wherefore.—O God, that men should put an enemy in their mouths to steal away their brains! [that we should, with joy, pleasance, revel, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts!]

Iago. Why, but you are now well enough: how came you thus recovered?

Cas. It hath pleased the devil drunkenness to give place to the devil wrath: one perfectness shows me another, to make me frankly despise myself. 300

Iago. Come, you are too severe a moralist: as the time, the place, and the condition of this country stands, I could heartily wish this had not befallen; but, since it is as it is, mend it for your own good.

Cas. I will ask him for my place again,—he shall tell me I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast! O strange!—Every inordinate cup is unbless'd, and the ingredient¹ is a devil.

Iago. Come, come, good wine is a good familiar creature, if it be well used: exclaim no more against it. And, good lieutenant, I think you think I love you.

Cas. I have well approved it, sir.—I drunk!

Iago. You or any man living may be drunk at a time, man. I'll tell you what you shall do. Our general's wife is now the general;—[I may say so in this respect, for that he hath devoted and given up himself to the contemplation, mark, and denotement of her parts and graces:—] confess yourself freely to her; importune her help to put you in your place again: she is of so free, so kind, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodness not to do more than she is requested:

[this broken joint between you and her husband entreat her to splinter; and, my fortunes against any lay² worth naming, this crack of³ your love shall grow stronger than it was before.] 331

Cas. You advise me well.

Iago. I protest, in the sincerity of love and honest kindness.

Cas. I think it freely; and betimes in the morning I will beseech the virtuous Desdemona to undertake⁴ for me: I am desperate of my fortunes if they check me here.

Iago. You are in the right. Good night, lieutenant; I must to the watch. 340

Cas. Good night, honest Iago. [Exit.]

Iago. And what's he, then, that says I play the villain?

When this advice is free I give and honest, Probab⁵ to thinking, and, indeed, the course To win the Moor again? [For 't is most easy Th' inclining Desdemona to subdue In any honest suit: she's fram'd as fruitful As the free elements. And then for her To win the Moor,—were't to renounce his baptism,

All seals and symbols of redeemed sin, 350 His soul is so enfetter'd to her love, That she may make, unmake, do what she list, Even as her appetite shall play the god With his weak function.⁶] How am I, then, a villain

To counsel Cassio to this parallel course, Directly to his good? Divinity of hell! When devils will the blackest sins put on,⁷ They do suggest⁸ at first with heavenly shows, As I do now: for whiles this honest fool Plies Desdemona to repair his fortunes, 360 And she for him pleads strongly to the Moor, I'll pour this pestilence into his ear,— That she repeals⁹ him for her body's lust; And by how much she strives to do him good, She shall undo her credit with the Moor. So will I turn her virtue into pitch; And out of her own goodness make the net That shall enmesh them all.

² Lay, wager.

³ Crack of = flaw in.

⁴ To undertake (my cause), = assume the office of mediator.

⁵ Probab, another form of probable.

⁶ Function, power of action.

⁷ Put on, i.e. encourage.

⁸ Suggest, tempt.

⁹ Repeals, recalls, as it were, from banishment.

¹ Ingredient, i.e. that which is mixed in the cup; the ingredients.

Re-enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo!

Rod. I do follow here in the chase, not like a hound that hunts, but one that fills up the cry.¹ My money is almost spent; I have been to-night exceedingly well cudgell'd; and I think the issue will be—I shall have so much experience for my pains; and so, with no money at all, and a little more wit, return again to Venice.

Iago. How poor are they that have not patience!

What wound did ever heal but by degrees?
Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;

And wit depends on dilatory time.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,

And thou, by that small hurt, hath cashier'd Cassio: 381

[Though other things grow fair against the sun,

Yet fruits that blossom first will first be ripe:]

Content thyself awhile.—By the mass, 't is morning;

Pleasure and action make the hours seem short.—

Retire thee; go where thou art billeted:

Away, I say; thou shalt know more hereafter:

Nay, get thee gone. [Exit Roderigo.] Two things are to be done,—

My wife must move for Cassio to her mistress; I'll set her on; 390

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,

And bring him jump when he may Cassio find

Soliciting his wife:—ay, that's the way;

Dull not device by coldness and delay. [Exit.]

ACT III.

[SCENE I. Cyprus. Before the castle.

Enter CASSIO and some Musicians.

Cas. Masters, play here,—I will content your pains,—

Something that's brief; and bid "Good morrow, general." [Music.]

Enter Clown.

Clow. Why, masters, have your instruments been in Naples, that they speak i' the nose thus?

First Mus. How, sir, how!

Clow. Are these, I pray you, wind-instruments?

First Mus. Ay, marry, are they, sir.

Clow. O, thereby hangs a tail.

First Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir? 9

Clow. Marry, sir, by many a wind-instrument that I know. But, masters, here's money for you: and the general so likes your music, that he desires you, of all loves,² to make no more noise with it.

First Mus. Well, sir, we will not.

Clow. If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again: but, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care.

First Mus. We have none such, sir.

Clow. Then put up your pipes in your bag; for I'll away: go; vanish into air; away! 21

[Exeunt Musicians.]

Cas. Dost thou hear, my honest friend?

Clow. No, I hear not your honest friend; I hear you.

Cas. Prithee, keep up thy quilllets.³ There's a poor piece of gold for thee: if the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Cassio entreats her a little favour of speech: wilt thou do this?

Clow. She is stirring, sir: if she will stir hither, I shall seem to notify unto her. 31

Cas. Do, good my friend. [Exit Clown.]

Enter IAGO.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not been a-bed, then?

Cas. Why, no; the day had broke

¹ Cry=the pack; cf. the phrase, "in full cry."

² Of all loves=by all that is lovable; or, by all your love for him.

³ Quilllets, nice distinctions, subtleties.

Before we parted. I have made bold, Iago,
To send in to your wife: my suit to her
Is, that she will to virtuous Desdemona
Procure me some access.

Iago. I'll send her to you presently;
And I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. 41

Cas. I humbly thank you for't. [Exit Iago.]
I never knew
A Florentine more kind and honest.

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. Good morrow, good lieutenant: I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
The general and his wife are talking of it;
And she speaks for you stoutly: the Moor replies,
That he you hurt is of great fame in Cyprus
And great affinity,¹ and that in wholesome wisdom
He might not but refuse you; but he protests
he loves you, 50
And needs no other suitor but his likings
To take the safest occasion by the front
To bring you in again.

Cas. Yet, I beseech you,—
If you think fit, or that it may be done,—
Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you, come in:
I will bestow you where you shall have time
To speak your bosom freely.

Cas. I am much bound to you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A room in the castle.

Enter OTHELLO, IAGO, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These letters give, Iago, to the pilot;
And, by him, do my duties to the senate:
That done, I will be walking on the works;
Repair there to me.

Iago. Well, my good lord, I'll do't.

Oth. This fortification, gentlemen,—shall we see't?

Gent. We'll wait upon your lordship.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The garden of the castle.

Enter DESDEMONA, CASSIO, and EMILIA.

Des. Be thou assur'd, good Cassio, I will do
All my abilities in thy behalf.

Emil. Good madam, do: I warrant it grieves my husband,
As if the case were his.

Des. O, that's an honest fellow.—Do not doubt, Cassio,
But I will have my lord and you again
As friendly as you were.

Cas. Bounteous madam,
Whatever shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's never any thing but your true servant.

Des. I know't,—I thank you. You do love
my lord: 10
You've known him long; and be you well
assur'd

He shall in strangeness² stand no further off
Than in a politic distance.

Cas. Ay, but, lady,
That policy may either last so long,
Or feed upon such nice and waterish diet,
Or breed itself so out of circumstance,
That, I being absent, and my place supplied,
My general will forget my love and service.

Des. Do not doubt that; before Emilia
here

I give thee warrant of thy place: assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll perform it 21
To the last article: my lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame,³ and talk him out of
patience;

His bed shall seem a school, his board a shrift;⁴

I'll intermingle every thing he does
With Cassio's suit: therefore be merry, Cassio;
For thy solicitor shall rather die
Than give thy cause away.

Emil. Madam, here comes my lord.

Cas. Madam, I'll take my leave. 30

Des. Why, stay, and hear me speak.

Cas. Madam, not now: I'm very ill at ease,
Unfit for mine own purposes.

Des. Well, do your discretion. [Exit Cassio.]

² Strangeness, unfriendly behaviour, estrangement.

³ I'll watch him tame, i.e. "I'll tame him by keeping him awake."

⁴ Shrift, confessional.

¹ Affinity, i.e. connections.

Enter OTHELLO, with papers in his hand, and IAGO.

Iago. Ha! I like not that.

Oth. [Turning suddenly to him] What dost thou say?

Iago. Nothing, my lord: or if—I know not what.

Oth. [Looks at papers—pause] Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

Iago. Cassio, my lord! No, sure, I cannot think it,

That hé would steal away so guilty-like,
Seeing you coming.

Oth. I do believe 't was he.

[Goes to table, and seems in deep thought.

Des. How now, my lord! 41

[Othello starts, then kisses her on the forehead.

I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is 't you mean?

Des. Why, your lieutenant, Cassio. Good my lord,

If I have any grace or power to move you,
His present reconciliation take;¹
For if he be not one that truly loves you,
That errs in ignorance, and not in cunning,²
I have no judgment in an honest face: 50
I prithee, call him back.

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. Ay, sooth; so humbled,
That he hath left part of his grief with me,
To suffer with him. Good love, call him back.

Oth. Not now, sweet Desdemona; some other time.

Des. But shall 't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner, sweet, for you.

Des. Shall 't be to-night at supper?

Oth. No, not to-night.

Des. To-morrow dinner, then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home;

I meet the captains at the citadel.

Des. Why, then, to-morrow night; or Tuesday morn; 60

On Tuesday noon, or night; on Wednesday morn:—

I prithee, name the time; but let it not Exceed three days: [in faith, he's penitent;

And yet his trespass, in our common reason,— Save that, they say, the wars must make examples

Out of their best,—is not almost a fault
T' incur a private check. When shall he come?
Tell me, Othello:] I wonder in my soul,
What you would ask me, that I should deny,
Or stand so mammering³ on. What! Michael
Cassio, 70

That came a-wooing with you; and so many a
time,

When I have spoke of you disparagingly,
Hath ta'en your part; to have so much to do
To bring him in! Trust me, I could do much,—

Oth. Prithee, no more: let him come when he will;

I will deny thee nothing.

[Des. Why, this is not a boon;
'T is as I should entreat you wear your gloves,
Or feed on nourishing dishes, or keep you warm,

Or sue to you to do peculiar profit 79
To your own person: nay, when I have a suit
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poise and difficult weight,
And fearful to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing:]
Whereon, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to myself.

Des. Shall I deny you? no: farewell, my lord.

Oth. Farewell, my Desdemona: I'll come to thee straight.

Des. Emilia, come.—Be as your fancies teach you;

Whate'er you be, I am obedient.

[Exit, with Emilia.

Oth. Excellent wretch! Perdition catch my soul, 90
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio, when you woo'd
my lady,

Know of your love?

Oth. He did, from first to last: why dost thou ask?

¹ i.e. "accept the submission or atonement that he now makes."

² Cunning, design, or perhaps = knowledge.

³ Mammering, hesitating; see note 138.

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my thought;
No further harm.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not think he had been acquainted with her.

Oth. O, yes; and went between us very oft.

Iago. Indeed! 101

Oth. Indeed! ay, indeed:—discern'st thou aught in that?

Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my lord!

Oth. Honest! ay, honest.

Iago. My lord, for aught I know.

Oth. What dost thou think?

Iago. Think, my lord!

Oth. Think, my lord!

By heaven, he echoes me,

As if there were some monster in his thought
Too hideous to be shown. Thou dost mean something:

I heard thee say even now, thou lik'dst not that, 109

When Cassio left my wife: what didst not like?
And when I told thee he was of my counsel
In my whole course of wooing, thou criedst
"Indeed!"

And didst contract and purse thy brow
together,

As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit: if thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost;
And, for I know thou'rt full of love and honesty,

And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st
them breath,

Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more: 120

For such things in a false disloyal knave
Are tricks of custom; but in a man that's just They're close delations,² working from the heart,

That passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,

I dare be sworn I think that he is honest.

Oth. I think so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seem;

Or those that be not, would they might seem none!

Oth. Certain, men should be what they seem.

Iago. Why, then, I think Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this: 130
I prithee, speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate; and give thy worst of thoughts

The worst of words.

Iago. Good my lord, pardon me:
Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.
Utter my thoughts? Why, say they're vile and false,—

As where's that palace whereinto foul things
Sometimes intrude not? who has a breast so pure,

But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets² and law-days, and in session sit
With meditations lawful? 141

Oth. Thou dost conspire against thy friend,
Iago,

If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st
his ear

A stranger to thy thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you—
Though I perchance am vicious in my guess,
As, I confess, it is my nature's plague
To spy into abuses, and oft my jealousy
Shapes faults that are not—that your wisdom yet,

From one that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice; nor build yourself a trouble 150

Out of his scattering³ and unsure observance:—
It were not for your quiet nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, or wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou mean?

Iago. Good name in man and woman, dear my lord,

Is the immediate jewel of their souls:

Who steals my purse steals trash; 't is something, nothing;

'T was mine, 't is his, and has been slave to thousands;

² Leets = days for trial in courts leet.

³ Scattering, careless, flighty.

¹ Delations, informations; see note 142.

But he that filches from me my good name
 Robs me of that which not enriches him,
 And makes me poor indeed. 161

Oth. By heaven, I'll know thy thoughts!

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand;

Nor shall not, whilst 't is in my custody.

Oth. Ha!

Iago. O, beware, my lord, of jealousy;
 It is the green-ey'd monster, which doth mock
 The meat it feeds on: that cuckold lives in bliss
 Who, certain of his fate,¹ loves not his wronger;
 But, O, what damned minutes tells he o'er
 Who dotes, yet doubts, suspects, yet strongly loves! 170

Oth. O misery!

Iago. Poor and content is rich, and rich enough;

But riches fineless² is as poor as winter
 To him that ever fears he shall be poor:—
 Good heaven, the souls of all my tribe defend
 From jealousy!

Oth. Why, why is this?

Think'st thou I'd make a life of jealousy,
 To follow still the changes of the moon 178
 With fresh suspicions? No; to be once in doubt
 Is once to be resolv'd: exchange me for a goat,
 When I shall turn the business of my soul
 To such exsufficate³ and blown surmises, Matching thy inference. 'T is not to make me jealous

Tosay my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
 Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well;
 Where virtue is, these are more virtuous:
 Not from mine own weak merits will I draw
 The smallest fear or doubt of her revolt;
 For she had eyes, and chose me. No, Iago;
 I'll see before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
 And, on the proof, there is no more but this,—
 Away at once with love or jealousy! 193

Iago. I'm glad of it; for now I shall have reason

To show the love and duty that I bear you
 With franker spirit: therefore, as I am bound,
 Receive it from me:—I speak not yet of proof.
 Look to your wife; observe her well with Cassio;
 Wear your eye thus, not jealous nor secure:

I would not have your free and noble nature,
 Out of self-bounty, be abus'd; look to 't: 200
 I know our country disposition well;
 In Venice they do let heaven see the pranks
 They dare not show their husbands; their best conscience

Is—not to leave undone, but keep unknown.

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceive her father, marrying you;

And when she seem'd to shake and fear your looks,

She lov'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why, go to, then;
 She that, so young, could give out such a seeming, 209

To seel⁴ her father's eyes up close as oak—
 He thought 't was witchcraft:—but I'm much to blame;

I humbly do beseech you of your pardon
 For too much loving you.

Oth. I'm bound to thee for ever.

Iago. I see this hath a little dash'd your spirits.

Oth. Not a jot, not a jot.

Iago. I' faith, I fear it has.

I hope you will consider what is spoke Comes from my love;—but I do see you're mov'd:—

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
 To grosser issues nor to larger reach
 Than to suspicion. 220

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so, my lord,
 My speech should fall into such vile success
 As my thoughts aim not at. Cassio's my worthy friend:—

My lord, I see you're mov'd.

Oth. No, not much mov'd:—

I do not think but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long live she so! and long live you to think so!

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,—

Iago. Ay, there's the point: as—to be bold with you—

Not to affect many proposed matches 229

¹ Certain of his fate, i.e. who knows the worst.

² Fineless, without limit

³ Exsufficate, inflated.

⁴ To seel—to blind.

Of her own clime, complexion, and degree,
 Whereto we see in all things nature tends,— Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,
 Foul disproportion, thoughts unnatural:—
 But pardon me: I do not in position¹ 231
 Distinctly speak of her; though I may fear
 Her will, recoiling to her better judgment,

May fall to match you with her country forms,
 And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:

If more thou dost perceive, let me know
 more;

Set on thy wife to observe: leave me, Iago.

Iago. My lord, I take my leave. [Going.]

Des. Faith, that's with watching; 't will away again:
 Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
 It will be well.—(Act iii. 3. 233-237.)

Oth. Why did I marry?—This honest creature doubtless 242
 Sees and knows more, much more, than he unfolds.

Iago. My lord, I would I might entreat your honour [Returning.]
 To scan this thing no further; leave it to time:
 Although 't is fit that Cassio have his place,—
 For, sure, he fills it up with great ability,—
 Yet, if you please to hold him off awhile,
 You shall by that perceive him and his means:

Note if your lady strain his entertainment²
 With any strong or vehement importunity;
 Much will be seen in that. In the meantime
 Let me be thought too busy in my fears,—
 As worthy cause I have to fear I am,—
 And hold her free, I do beseech your honour.

Oth. Fear not my government. 256

Iago. I once more take my leave. [Exit.]

Oth. This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
 And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
 Of human dealings. If I do prove her haggard,³

¹ In position = directly, formally.

² Entertainment, i.e. that you should receive him back.

³ Haggard = a wanton. See note 153.

Though that her jesses¹ were my dear heart-strings, 261
 I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind,
 To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black,
 And have not those soft parts of conversation
 That chamberers² have; or, for I am declin'd
 Into the vale of years,—yet that's not much;—
 She's gone; I am abus'd; and my relief

Iago. Why, what's that to you?—(Act iii. 3. 315.)

Must be to loathe her. O curse of marriage,
 That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
 And not their appetites! I had rather beat aoad,
 And live upon the vapour of a dungeon, 271
 Than keep a corner in the thing I love
 For others' uses. [Yet, 't is the plague of great ones;
 Prerogativ'd are they less than the base;
 'T is destiny unshunnable, like death:
 Even then this forked plague³ is fated to us
 When we do quicken.⁴]—Desdemona comes:

¹ Jesses, the leather thongs tied round the hawk's legs and held by the falconer. ² Chamberers = effeminate men.
³ Forked plague, i.e. cuckold's horns.
⁴ Quicken, i.e. come into being.

If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!—
 I'll not believe 't.

Re-enter DESDEMONA and EMILIA.

Des. How now, my dear Othello!
 Your dinner, and the generous⁵ islanders 280
 By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am to blame.

Des. Why do you speak so faintly?
 Are you not well?

Oth. I have a pain upon my forehead here.

Des. Faith, that's with watching; 't will away again:

Let me but bind it hard, within this hour
 It will be well.

Oth. Your napkin is too little;

[He puts the handkerchief from him; and she drops it.

Let it alone. Come, I'll go in with you.

Des. I'm very sorry that you are not well.

[Exeunt Othello and Desdemona.

Emil. I am glad I have found this napkin:⁶
 This was her first remembrance from the Moor:
 My wayward husband hath a hundred times Woo'd me to steal it; but she so loves the token,— 293

For he conjur'd her she should ever keep it,—
 That she reserves it evermore about her
 To kiss and talk to. I'll have the work ta'en out,⁷

And give't Iago:

What he will do with it heaven knows, not I;
 I nothing but to please his fantasy.

Re-enter IAGO.

Iago. How now! what do you here alone?

Emil. Do not you chide; I have a thing for
 you. 301

Iago. A thing for me!—it is a common thing—

Emil. Ha!

Iago. To have a foolish wife.

Emil. O, is that all? What will you give me now

For that same handkerchief?

Iago. What handkerchief?

Emil. What handkerchief!

⁵ Generous, of noble birth.

⁶ Napkin, handkerchief.

⁷ Ta'en out = copied.

Why, that the Moor first gave to Desdemona;
That which so often you did bid me steal.

Iago. Hast stol'n it from her? 310

Emil. No, faith; she let it drop by negligence,
And, to th' advantage, I, being here, took 't up.
Look, here it is.

Iago. A good wench; give it me.

Emil. What will you do with 't, that you have been so earnest
To have me filch it?

Iago.

Why, what's that to you?

[Snatching it.]

Emil. If 't be not for some purpose of import,
Give 't me again: poor lady, she'll run mad
When she shall lack it.

Iago. Be not you acknown on 't;¹

I have use for it. Go, leave me. [Exit Emilia.]
I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it. Trifles light as air 322
Are to the jealous confirmations strong

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more.—(Act iii 3. 363, 369)

As proofs of holy writ: this may do something.
The Moor already changes with my poison:—
Dangerous conceits are, in their natures, poisons,

Which at the first are scarce found to distaste,
But, with a little act upon the blood,
Burn like the mines of sulphur.—I did say
so:—

Look, where he comes! Not poppy, nor mandragora,² 330

Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'd'st yesterday.

Re-enter OTHELLO.

Oth. Ha! ha! false to me?

Iago. Why, how now, general! no more of that.

Oth. Avaunt! begone! thou hast set me on the rack:—

I swear 't is better to be much abus'd
Than but to know 't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord!

Oth. What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?

I saw 't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me:
I slept the next night well, was free and merry; 340

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips:
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stol'n,
Let him not know 't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. [I had been happy, if the general camp, }
Pioners and all, had tasted her sweet body, } 348

¹ Be not you acknown on 't, i. e. "Feign ignorance about it."
² Mandragora, mandrake = a powerful opiate.

So I had nothing known.] O, now, for ever
Farewell the tranquil mind! farewell content!
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue! O, farewell!
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill trump, 351

The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner, and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war!
And, O you mortal engines, whose rude throats
Th' immortal Jove's dread clamours counterfeit,
Farewell! Othello's occupation's gone!

Iago. Is't possible, my lord?

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore,—

Be sure of it; give me the ocular proof; 360
Or, by the worth of man's eternal soul,
Thou hadst been better have been born a dog
Than answer my wak'd wrath!

Iago. Is't come to this?

Oth. Make me to see't; or, at the least, so prove it,

That the probation bear no hinge nor loop
To hang a doubt on; or woe upon thy life!

Iago. My noble lord,—

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Never pray more; abandon all remorse;¹
On horror's head horrors accumulate; 370
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add
Greater than that.

Iago. O grace! O heaven forgive me!
Are you a man? have you a soul or sense?—
God b' wi' you! take mine office.—O wretched fool,

That liv'st to make thine honesty a vice!—
O monstrous world! Take note, take note, O world, 377

To be direct and honest is not safe.—
I thank you for this profit; and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay:—thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wise; for honesty's a fool,
And loses that it works for.

Oth. By the world,
I think my wife be honest, and think she is not;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art
not:

I'll have some proof: her name, that was as fresh

As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black ✓
As mine own face.—If there be cords or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams, 389
I'll not endure it.—Would I were satisfied!

Iago. I see, sir, you are eaten up with passion:

I do repent me that I put it to you.

You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would! nay, I will.

Iago. And may: but, how? how satisfied,
my lord?

Would you, the supervisor, grossly gape on,— [Behold her topp'd?]

Oth. Death and damnation! O!

Iago. It were a tedious difficulty, I think,
To bring them to that prospect: damn them,
then,

If ever mortal eyes do see them bolster
More than their own! What then? how then?
What shall I say? Where's satisfaction?

[It is impossible you should see this, 402
Were they as prime² as goats, as hot as monkeys,
As salt as wolves in pride, and fools as gross
As ignorance made drunk.] But yet, I say,
If imputation and strong circumstances—
Which lead directly to the door of truth—
Will give you satisfaction, you may have't.

Oth. Give me a living³ reason she's disloyal.

Iago. I do not like the office: 410

But, sith I'm enter'd in this cause so far,
Prick'd to't by foolish honesty and love,—
I will go on. I lay with Cassio lately;
And, being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleep.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul
That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs;
One of this kind is Cassio:

In sleep I heard him say, "Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves;" 420
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand,

Cry ["O sweet creature!" and then kiss me;
hard,

As if he pluck'd up kisses by the roots }
That grew upon my lips: then laid his leg }
Over my thigh, and sigh'd, and kiss'd; and then;

¹ Remorse, pity.

² Prime, lascivious.

³ Living, conclusive.

Cried] "Cursed fate that gave thee to the Moor!"

426

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.

Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion:
'T is a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream.

Iago. And this may help to thicken other proofs

430

That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. I'll tear her all to pieces.

Iago. Nay, but be wise: yet we see nothing done;

Oth. Now, by yond marble heaven,
In the due reverence of a sacred vow
I here engage my words—(Act iii. 3. 460-463.)

She may be honest yet. Tell me but this,—
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief
Spotted¹ with strawberries in your wife's hand?

Oth. I gave her such a one; 't was my first gift.

Iago. I know not that: but such a handkerchief—

I'm sure it was your wife's—did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with.

Oth. If it be that,—

Iago. If it be that, or any that was hers,
It speaks against her with the other proofs.

¹ Spotted = embroidered.

Oth. O, that the slave had forty thousand lives,—

442

One is too poor, too weak for my revenge!

Now do I see 't is true.—Look here, Iago;

All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven:

'T is gone.—

Arise, black vengeance, from the hollow hell!

Yield up, O love, thy crown and hearted² throne

To tyrannous hate! Swell, bosom, with thy fraught,

For 't is of aspics' tongues!

² Hearted, seated in the heart.

Iago. Yet be content.

Oth. O, blood, blood, blood! 451

Iago. Patience, I say; your mind perhaps may change.

Oth. Never, Iago. Like to the Pontic sea,
Whose icy current and compulsive course
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontic and the Hellespont;
Even so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace,
Shall ne'er look back, ne'er ebb to humble
love,

Till that a capable and wide revenge
Swallow them up.—Now, by yond marble
heaven, 460

In the due reverence of a sacred vow [Kneels.
I here engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet.— [Kneels.
Witness, you ever-burning lights above,
You elements that clip¹ us round about,—
Witness that here Iago doth give up
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's service! Let him command,

And to obey shall be in me remorse,
What bloody business ever.

Oth. I greet thy love,
Not with vain thanks, but with acceptance
bounteous, 470

And will upon the instant put thee to't:
Within these three days let me hear thee say
That Cassio's not alive.

Iago. My friend is dead; 'tis done at your request:
But let her live.

Oth. Damn her, lewd minx! O, damn her!
[Come, go with me apart; I will withdraw,
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the fair devil.] Now art thou my lieutenant.

Iago. I am your own for ever. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Before the castle.

Enter DESDEMONA, EMILIA [and Clown.]

[Des. Do you know, sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lies?²

Clo. I dare not say he lies any where.

Des. Why, man?

Clo. He's a soldier; and for one to say a soldier lies, is stabbing.

Des. Go to: where lodges he?

Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lie.

Des. Can any thing be made of this? 10

Clo. I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.

Des. Can you inquire him out, and be edified³ by report?

Clo. I will catechize the world for him; that is, make questions, and by them answer.

Des. Seek him, bid him come hither: tell him I have moved my lord on his behalf, and hope all will be well. 20

Clo. To do this is within the compass of man's wit; and therefore I will attempt the doing it. [Exit.]

Des. Where should I lose that handkerchief,
Emilia?

Emil. I know not, madam.

Des. Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse

Full of crusadoes: and, but my noble Moor
Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness
As jealous creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill thinking.

Emil. Is he not jealous?

Des. Who, he? I think the sun where he was born 30

Drew⁴ all such humours from him.

Emil. Look, where he comes.

Des. I will not leave him now till Cassio
Be call'd to him.

Enter OTHELLO.

How is't with you, my lord?

Oth. Well, my good lady.—[Aside] O, hardness to dissemble!—

How do you, Desdemona?

Des. Well, my good lord.

Oth. Give me your hand: this hand is moist,
my lady.

Des. It yet hath felt no age nor known no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfulness and liberal heart:—

¹ Clip, encompass.

² Lies, lodges.

³ Edified, used purposely in an affected sense = instructed.

⁴ Drew, i.e. as the sun draws vapours from the ground.

Hot, hot, and moist. this hand of yours requires
 A sequester from liberty, fasting and prayer,
 Much castigation, exercise devout; 41
 For here 's a young and sweating devil here,
 That commonly rebels. 'Tis a good hand,
 A frank one.

Des. You may, indeed, say so;

For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.

Oth. A liberal hand: the hearts of old gave hands;

But our new heraldry is hands, not hearts.

Des. I cannot speak of this. Come now your promise.

Oth. What promise, chuck?

Oth. Give me your hand: this hand is moist, my lady—(Act iii. 4. 36.)

Des. I've sent to bid Cassio come speak with
 you. 50

Oth. I have a salt and sorry rheum offends
 me;

Lend me thy handkerchief.

Des. Here, my lord.

Oth. That which I gave you.

Des. I have it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Des. No, indeed, my lord.

Oth. That is a fault.

That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give;

She was a charmer, and could almost read
 The thoughts of people: she told her, while she kept it,

'T would make her amiable, and subdue my father

Entirely to her love; but if she lost it, 60

Or made a gift of it, my father's eye
 Should hold her loathed, and his spirits should hunt

After new fancies: she, dying, gave it me;
 And bid me, when my fate would have me wive,
 To give it her. I did so: and take heed on't;
 Make it a darling like your precious eye;

To lose 't or give 't away were such perdition
As nothing else could match.

Des. Is 't possible?

Oth. 'Tis true: there's magic in the web of it:
A sibyl, that had number'd in the world 70
The sun to course two hundred compasses,¹
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work;
The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk;

And it was dy'd in mummy which the skilful
Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.

Des. Indeed! is 't true?

Oth. Most veritable; therefore look to 't well.

Des. Then would to God that I had never seen 't!

Oth. Ha! wherefore?

Des. Why do you speak so startingly and rash?

Oth. Is 't lost? is 't gone? speak, is it out o' the way? 80

Des. Heaven bless us!

Oth. Say you?

Des. It is not lost; but what an if it were?

Oth. How!

Des. I say, it is not lost.

Oth. Fetch 't, let me see 't.

Des. Why, so I can, sir, but I will not now.
This is a trick to put me from my suit:

Pray you, let Cassio be receiv'd again.

Oth. Fetch me the handkerchief: my mind misgives.

Des. Come, come; 90

You'll never meet a more sufficient man.

Oth. The handkerchief!

{ [Des. I pray, talk me of Cassio.

{ Oth. The handkerchief!]

Des. A man that all his time
Hath founded his good fortunes on your love,
Shar'd dangers with you,—

Oth. The handkerchief!

Des. In sooth, you are to blame.

Oth. Away! [Exit.

Emil. Is not this man jealous?

Des. I ne'er saw this before. 100

Sure, there's some wonder in this handkerchief:
I'm most unhappy in the loss of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a year or two shows us a man:
[They're all but stomachs, and we all but food;

They eat us hungrily, and when they're full,
They belch us.]—Look you,—Cassio and my husband.

Enter CASSIO and IAGO.

Iago. There is no other way; 'tis she must do 't:

And, lo, the happiness!² go, and impórtune her

Des. How now, good Cassio! what's the news with you?

Cas. Madam, my former suit: I do beseech
you 110

That by your virtuous means I may again

Exist, and be a member of his love

Whom I with all the office of my heart

Entirely honour: [I would not be delay'd.

If my offence be of such mortal kind

That nor my service past, nor present sorrows,

Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,

Can ransom me into his love again,

But to know so must be my benefit;

So shall I clothe me in a forc'd content, 120

And shut myself up in some other course,

To fortune's alms.]

Des. Alas, thrice-gentle Cassio!

My advocacy is not now in tune;

My lord is not my lord; nor should I know
him,

Were he in favour as in humour alter'd.

So help me every spirit sanctified,

As I have spoken for you all my best,

And stood within the blank³ of his displeasure

For my free speech! You must awhile be patient:

What I can do I will; and more I will 130

Than for myself I dare: let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now,
And certainly in strange unquietness.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have seen the cannon,

When it hath blown his ranks into the air,

And, like the devil, from his very arm

Puff'd his own brother;—and can he be angry?

Something of moment, then: I will go meet
him:

There's matter in 't indeed, if he be angry.

¹ Number'd in the world, &c., i.e. lived 200 years.

² The happiness! i.e. how lucky that she is there.

³ Blank, aim.

Des. I prithee, do so.

[Exit Iago.]

Something, sure, of state,—

[Either from Venice, or some unhatch'd practice 141

Made démonstrable here in Cyprus to him,—]

Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases

Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. ['Tis even so;

For let our finger ache, and it indues
Our other healthful members even to that sense

Of pain: nay, we must think men are not gods,
Nor of them look for such observancy 149

As fits the bridal.—Beshrew me much, Emilia,

I was—unhandsome¹ warrior as I am—

Arraigning his unkindness with my soul;

But now I find I had suborn'd the witness,

And he's indicted falsely.]

Emil. Pray heaven it be state-matters, as you think,

And no conception nor no jealous toy²

Concerning you.

Des. Alas the day, I never gave him cause!

Emil. But jealous souls will not be answer'd so;

They are not ever jealous for the cause, 160

But jealous for they're jealous: 'tis a monster

Begot upon itself, born on itself.

Des. Heaven keep that monster from Othello's mind!

Emil. Lady, amen.

Des. I will go seek him.—Cassio, walk here about:

If I do find him fit, I'll move your suit,

And seek t' effect it to my uttermost.

Cas. I humbly thank your ladyship.

[Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.]

[Enter BIANCA.]

Bian. Save you, friend Cassio!

Cas. What make you from home?

How is it with you, my most fair Bianca?

I' faith, sweet love, I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your lodging,

Cassio. 171

What, keep a week away? seven days and nights? 173

Eight score eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,

More tedious than the dial eight score times?

O weary reckoning!

Cas. Pardon me, Bianca:

I have this while with leaden thoughts been press'd;

But I shall, in a more continue time,³

Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca,

[Giving her Desdemona's handkerchief.]

Take me this work out.⁴

Bian. O Cassio, whence came this?

This is some token from a newer friend:

To the felt absence now I feel a cause: 182

Is't come to this? Well, well.

Cas. Go to, woman!

Throw your vile guesses in the devil's teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealous

now

That this is from some mistress, some remembrance:

No, in good troth, Bianca.

Bian. Why, whose is it?

Cas. I know not neither: I found it in my chamber.

I like the work well: ere it be demanded,—

As like enough it will,—I'd have it copied:

Take it, and do't; and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you! wherefore? 192

Cas. I do attend here on the general;

And think it no addition,⁵ nor my wish,

To have him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cas. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me.

I pray you, bring me on the way a little;

And say if I shall see you soon at night.⁶

Cas. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring

you; 199

For I attend here: but I'll see you soon.

Bian. 'Tis very good; I must be circum-

stanc'd.⁷ [Exeunt.]

³ In a more continue time, i.e. when I am less interrupted.

⁴ Take out=copy.

⁵ Addition, title to honour.

⁶ Soon at night=this very night.

⁷ Be circumstanc'd, i.e. obey circumstances.

¹ Unhandsome, unfair.

² Toy, whim, fancy.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Cyprus. Before the castle.Enter OTHELLO and IAGO.Iago. Will you think so?Oth. Think so, Iago!Iago. What,

To kiss in private?

Oth. An unauthoriz'd kiss.Iago. [Or to be naked with her friend in bed

An hour or more, not meaning any harm?

Oth. Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean harm!

It is hypocrisy against the devil:

They that mean virtuously and yet do so,

The devil their virtue tempts, and they tempt heaven.

Iago. So they do nothing, 't is a venial slip:]

But if I give my wife a handkerchief,— 10

Oth. What then?Iago. Why, then, 't is hers, my lord; and, being hers,

She may, I think, bestow 't on any man.

Oth. She is protectress of her honour too:

May she give that?

Iago. Her honour is an essence that's not seen;

They have it very oft that have it not:

But, for the handkerchief,—

Oth. By heaven, I would most gladly have forgot it:— 19

Thou said'st,—O, it comes o'er my memory,

As doth the raven o'er th' infectious house,

Boding to all,—he had my handkerchief.

Iago. Ay, what of that?Oth. That¹'s not so good now.Iago. What,

If I had said I had seen him do you wrong?

Or heard him say,—as knaves be such abroad,

Who having, by their own importunate suit,

Or voluntary dotage of some mistress,

Convinced² or supplied them, cannot choose

But they must blab—

Oth. Hath he said anything?Iago. He hath, my lord; but be you well assur'd, 30

No more than he'll unswear.

Oth. What hath he said?Iago. Faith, that he did—[I know not what he did.]Oth. What? what?Iago. [Lie—Oth. With her?Iago. With her, on her;] what you will.Oth. [Lie with her! lie on her!—We say lie on her, when they belie her.—Lie with her!

that's fulsome.—] Handkerchief—confessions

—handkerchief!—To confess, and be hang'd for his labour;—first, to be hang'd, and then to confess.—I tremble at it. Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion without some instruction. It is not words that shake me thus:—pish!—noses, ears, and lips.—

Is 't possible?—Confess—handkerchief!—

O devil!— [Falls in a trance.

Iago. Work on,

My medicine, work! Thus credulous fools are caught;

And many worthy and chaste dames even thus,

All guiltless, meet reproach.—What, ho! my lord!

My lord, I say! Othello!

Enter CASSIO.

How now, Cassio!

Cas. What's the matter? 50*Iago.* My lord is fall'n into an epilepsy:

This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the temples.Iago. No, forbear;The lethargy must have his³ quiet course:

If not, he foams at mouth, and by and by

Breaks out to savage madness. Look, he stirs:

Do you withdraw yourself a little while,

He will recover straight: when he is gone,

I would on great occasion speak with you.

[Exit Cassio.

How is it, general? [have you not hurt your head?

¹ That, i.e. what Iago has just said.² Convinced, overcome.³ His=its.

Oth. Dost thou mock me?

Iago. I mock you! no, by heaven.
Would you would bear your fortune like a
man! 62

Oth. A horned man's a monster and a beast.

Iago. There's many a beast, then, in a populous city,

And many a civil monster.]

Oth. Did he confess it?

Iago. Good sir, be a man;
[Think every bearded fellow that's but yok'd
May draw with you: there's millions now alive
That nightly lie in those unproper¹ beds
Which they dare swear peculiar:² your case is better. 70

O, 'tis the spite of hell, the fiend's arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a secure couch,
And to suppose her chaste! No, let me know;
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be. ✓

Oth. O, thou art wise; 't is certain.

Iago. Stand you awhile apart;
Confine yourself but in a patient list.³
Whilst you were here o'erwhelmed with your grief,—

A passion most unfitting such a man,—
Cassio came hither: I shifted him away,
And laid good 'scuse upon your ecstasy; 80
Bade him anon return, and here speak with me;
The which he promis'd. Do but encave⁴ yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,

That dwell in every region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew,—
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is again to cope with your wife:
I say, but mark his gesture. Marry, patience;
Or I shall say you're all in all in spleen,
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou hear, Iago?
I will be found most cunning in my patience;
But—dost thou hear?—most bloody.

Iago. That's not amiss;
But yet keep time in all. Will you withdraw?

[Othello retires.]

Now will I question Cassio of Bianca, 94
A housewife that, by selling her desires, 1
Buys herself bread and clothes: it is a creature
That dotes on Cassio,—as 'tis the strumpet's plague

To beguile many and be beguil'd by one:—
He, when he hears of her, cannot refrain
From the excess of laughter:—here he comes:—
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad; 101
And his unbookish⁵ jealousy must construe Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour,
Quite in the wrong.

Re-enter CASSIO.

How do you now, lieutenant?

Cas. The worser that you give me the addition

Whose want even kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't.

Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's power,

[Speaking lower.]

How quickly should you speed!

Cas. Alas, poor caitiff!

Oth. [Aside] Look, how he laughs already!

Iago. I never knew a woman love man so.

Cas. Alas, poor rogue! I think, i' faith, she loves me. 112

Oth. [Aside] Now he denies it faintly, and laughs it out.

Iago. Do you hear, Cassio?

Oth. [Aside] Now he importunes him
To tell it o'er:—go to; well said, well said.

Iago. She gives it out that you shall marry
her:

Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha! 120

Oth. [Aside] Do you triumph, Roman? do
you triumph?

Cas. I marry her!—what, a customer!⁶
Prithee, bear some charity to my wit; do not think it so unwholesome:—ha, ha, ha!

Oth. [Aside] So, so, so, so:—they laugh that win.

Iago. Faith, the cry goes that you shall marry her.

Cas. Prithee, say true.

¹ Unproper, common.

² Peculiar, i.e. peculiar to themselves, their own.

³ List, limit, i.e. of self-control.

⁴ Encave, i.e. hide in a recess.

⁵ Unbookish, ignorant. See note 187.

⁶ Customer, loose woman.

Iago. I am a very villain else. 139
Oth. [Aside] Have you scor'd¹ me? Well.
Cas. This is the monkey's own giving out:
 she is persuaded I will marry her, out of her own love and flattery, not out of my promise.
Oth. [Aside] Iago beckons me; now he begins the story.

Cas. She was here even now; she haunts me in every place. I was, the other day, talking on the sea-bank with certain Venetians; and thither comes the bauble, and falls me thus about my neck,— 140

Oth. [Aside] Crying "O dear Cassio!" as it were: his gesture imports it.

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so hales and pulls me:—ha, ha, ha!—(Act iv. 1. 143, 144.)

Cas. So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so hales and pulls me:—ha, ha, ha!

Oth. [Aside] Now he tells how she pluck'd him to my chamber. O, I see that nose of yours, but not that dog I shall throw it to.

Cas. Well, I must leave her company.

Iago. Before me! look, where she comes.

Cas. 'T is such another fitchew!² marry, a perfum'd one. 151

Enter BIANCA.

What do you mean by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the devil and his dam haunt you!
 What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now? I was a fine fool to take it. I must take out³ the work!—A likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and not know who left it there! This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There,—give it your hobby-horse:⁴ wheresoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't. 161

³ Take out, copy.

⁴ Hobby-horse, loose woman.

¹ Scor'd; branded (?). See note 190 ² Fitchew, polecat.

Cas. How now, my sweet Bianca! how now! how now!

Oth. [Aside] By heaven, that should be my handkerchief!

Bian. An you'll come to supper to-night, you may; an you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. [Exit.]

Iago. After her, after her.

Cas. Faith, I must; she'll rail in the street else. 171

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cas. Yes, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you; for I would very fain speak with you.

Cas. Prithee, come; will you?

Iago. Go to; say no more. [Exit Cassio.]

Oth. [Coming forward] How shall I murder him, Iago?

Iago. Did you perceive how he laugh'd at his vice? 181

Oth. O Iago!

Iago. And did you see the handkerchief?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours, by this hand: and to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife! she gave it him, and he hath given it his whore.]

Oth. [I would have him nine years a-killing.] —A fine woman! a fair woman! a sweet woman!

Iago. Nay, you must forget that. 190

Oth. Ay, let her rot, and perish, and be damn'd to-night; for she shall not live: no, my heart is turn'd to stone; I strike it, and it hurts my hand.—O, the world hath not a sweeter creature: she might lie by an emperor's side, and command him tasks.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her! I do but say what she is:—so delicate with her needle!—[an admirable musician! O, she will sing the savageness out of a bear!—] of so high and plenteous wit and invention!— 201

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. O, a thousand-thousand times:—and then, of so gentle a condition!

Iago. Ay, too gentle.

Oth. Nay, that's certain:—but yet the pity of it, Iago! O Iago, the pity of it, Iago!

Iago. If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her patent to offend; for, if it touch not you, it comes near nobody. 210

[Oth. I will chop her into messes:—cuckold me!

Iago. O, 't is foul in her.

Oth. With mine officer!

Iago. That's fouler.]

Oth. Get me some poison, Iago; this night:—I'll not expostulate with her, lest her body and beauty unprovide my mind¹ again:—this night, Iago. 219

Iago. Do it not with poison, strangle her in her bed, even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good: the justice of it pleases: very good.

Iago. And for Cassio,—let me be his undertaker:² you shall hear more by midnight.

Oth. Excellent good. [A trumpet within.]

What trumpet is that same?

Iago. Something from Venice, sure. 'T is Lodovico

Come from the duke: and, see, your wife is with him.

Enter LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, and Attendants.

Lod. Save you, worthy general!

Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Lod. The duke and senators of Venice greet you. [Gives him a packet.]

Oth. I kiss the instrument of their pleasures.

[Opens the packet, and reads.]

Des. And what's the news, good cousin Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you, signior; Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thank you. How does Lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lives, sir.

Des. Cousin, there's fall'n between him and my lord

An unkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My lord? 239

Oth. [Reads] "This fail you not to do, as you will—"

Lod. He did not call: he's busy in the paper. Is there division 'twixt my lord and Cassio?

¹ Unprovide my mind, i.e. make my mind waver.

² Let me be his undertaker, let me deal with him.

Des. A most unhappy one: I would do much
T' atone¹ them, for the love I bear to Cassio.

Oth. Fire and brimstone!

Des. My lord?

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What, is he angry?

Lod. May be the letter mov'd him;
For, as I think, they do command him home,
Deputing Cassio in his government.

Des. Trust me, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed!

Des. My lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. Why, sweet Othello,—

Oth. Devil! [Striking her.

Des. I have not deserv'd this. 252

Lod. My lord, this would not be believ'd in Venice,

Though I should swear I saw't: 'tis very much:
Make her amends; she weeps.

Oth. O devil, devil!
If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,
Each drop she falls would prove a crocodile.—
Out of my sight!

Des. I will not stay t' offend you.
[Going.

Lod. Truly, an obedient lady:—
I do beseech your lordship, call her back. 260

Oth. Mistress!

Des. My lord?

Oth. What would you with her, sir?

Lod. Who, I, my lord?

Oth. Ay; you did wish that I would make her turn:

Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on,
And turn again; and she can weep, sir, weep;
And she's obedient, as you say,—obedient,—
Very obedient.—Proceed you in your tears.—
Concerning this, sir,—O well-painted passion!—

I am commanded home.—Get you away;
I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate,
And will return to Venice.—Hence, avaunt!

[Exit Desdemona.

Cassio shall have my place. And, sir, to-night
I do entreat that we may sup together: 273 You're welcome, sir, to Cyprus.—Goats and monkeys! [Exit.

Lod. Is this the noble Moor whom our full² senate

Call all-in-all sufficient?—Is this the nature Whom passion could not shake? whose solid virtue

The shot of accident, nor dart of chance,
Could neither graze nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

[Lod. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? 280

Iago. He's that he is: I may not breathe my censure.

What he might be,—if, what he might, he is not,—

I would to heaven he were!]

Lod. What, strike his wife!

Iago. Faith, that was not so well; yet would
I knew

That stroke would prove the worst!

Lod. Is it his use?

Or did the letters work upon his blood,
And new-create³ this fault?

Iago. Alas, alas!

It is not honesty in me to speak
What I have seen and known. You shall observe him;

And his own courses will denote him so, 290
That I may save my speech: do but go after,
And mark how he continues.

Lod. I'm sorry that I am deceiv'd in him.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A room in the castle.

Enter OTHELLO and EMILIA.

Oth. [Sarcastically] You have seen nothing,
then?

Emil. Nor ever heard, nor ever did suspect.

Oth. Yes, you have seen Cassio and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harm, and then I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them.

Oth. What, did they never whisper?

Emil. Never, my lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o' the way?

² Full, i.e. met in full number.

³ New-create, cause, originate.

Emil. Never.

Oth. To fetch her fan, her gloves, her mask, nor nothing?

Emil. Never, my lord.

10

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst, my lord, to wagershe is honest,

Lay down my soul at stake: if you think other,
Remove your thought,—it doth abuse your bosom.

If any wretch have put this in your head,
Let heaven requite it with the serpent's curse!
For, if she be not honest, chaste, and true,

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech import?
I understand a fury in your words,
But not the words.—(Act iv. 2. 31-33.)

There's no man happy; the purest of their wives 18

Is foul as slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither:—go.

[Exit Emilia.]

She says enough;—yet she's [a simple bawd
That cannot say as much. This is a subtle
whore,]

A closet-lock-and-key of villanous secrets:
And yet she'll kneel and pray; I've seen her
do't.

Enter DESDEMONA with EMILIA.

Des. My lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray, chuck, come hither.

Des. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes;

Look in my face.

Des. What horrible fancy's this?

Oth. [To Emilia] Some of your function,¹ mistress;

¹ Function, service.

Leave procreants alone, and shut the door;
Cough, or cry "hem," if any body come:
Your mystery, your mystery;—nay, dispatch.
[Exit Emilia.]

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech import? 31

I understand a fury in your words,
But not the words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true
And loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it, damn thyself;
Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils
themselves

Should fear to seize thee: therefore be doubledamn'd,—

Swear thou art honest.

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? with whom? how am I false? 40

Oth. Ah, Desdemona!—away! away! away!

Des. Alas the heavy day!—Why do you weep?

Am I the motive of these tears, my lord?

If haply you my father do suspect

An instrument of this your calling back,¹

Lay not your blame on me: if you have lost him,
Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleas'd heaven
To try me with affliction; had they rain'd
All kinds of sores and shames on my bare head;
Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips; 50
Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes;
I should have found in some place of my soul
A drop of patience: but, alas, to make me
The fixed figure for the time, for scorn,
To point his slow and moving finger at!—
Yet could I bear that too; well, very well:
But there, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life,—
The fountain from the which my current runs,
Or else dries up; to be discarded thence! 60
Or keep it as a cistern for foul toads
To knot and gender in!—turn thy complexion
there,
Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubin,—

Ay, there, look grim as hell! 64

Des. I hope my noble lord esteems me honest.

Oth. O, ay; as summer flies are in the shambles,

That quicken even with blowing, O thou weed,
Who art so lovely-fair, and smell'st so sweet,
That the sense aches at thee,—would thou hadst ne'er been born!

Des. Alas, what ignorant sin have I committed? 70

Oth. [Was this fair paper,² this most goodly book,

Made to write "whore" upon?] What committed!

[Committed!—O thou public commoner!

I should make very forges of my cheeks,

That would to cinders burn up modesty,

Did I but speak thy deeds.—] What committed!

Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon
winks;—

The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,

Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,

And will not hear it.—What committed!—

Impudent strumpet!

Des. By heaven, you do me wrong.

Oth. Are not you a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian:

If to preserve this vessel for my lord 88

From any other foul unlawful touch,

Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, [not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be sav'd.

Oth.] Is't possible?

Des. O, heaven forgive us!

Oth. I cry you mercy, then:

I took you for that cunning whore of Venice

That married with Othello.—[Raising his voice]

You, mistress, 90

That have the office opposite to Saint Peter,

And keep the gate of hell!

Re-enter EMILIA.

You, you, ay, you!

[We've done our course;] there's money for your pains:

I pray you, turn the key, and keep our counsel.

[Exit.]

¹ Calling back, i. e. from Cyprus.

² This fair paper, Desdemona's face.

Emil. Alas, what does this gentleman conceive?—

How do you, madam? how do you, my good lady?

Des. Faith, half asleep.

Emil. Good madam, what's the matter with my lord?

Des. With who?

Emil. Why, with my lord, madam. 100

Des. Who is thy lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet lady.

Des. I have none: do not talk to me, Emilia; I cannot weep; nor answer have I none, But what should go by water.¹ Prithee, to-night

Lay on my bed my wedding-sheets,—remember;—

And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Here's a change indeed! [Exit.]

Des. 'Tis meet I should be us'd so, very meet.

How have I been behav'd, that he might stick The small'st opinion on my great'st abuse?

Re-enter EMILIA with IAGO.

Iago. What is your pleasure, madam? How is't with you? 110

Des. I cannot tell. Those that do teach young babes

Do it with gentle means and easy tasks:

He might have chid me so; for, in good faith, I am a child to chiding.

Iago. What's the matter, lady?

Emil. Alas, Iago, my lord hath so bewhor'd her,

Thrown such despite and heavy terms upon her, As true hearts cannot bear.

Des. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name, fair lady?

Des. Such as she says my lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her whore: a beggar in his drink 120

Could not have laid such terms upon his callat.²

Iago. Why did he so?

Des. I do not know; I'm sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weep, do not weep:—alas the day!

Emil. Hath she forsook so many noble matches, 125

Her father, and her country, and her friends, To be call'd whore? would it not make one weep?

Des. It is my wretched fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for't!

How comes this trick upon him?

Des. Nay, heaven doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternal villain, Some busy and insinuating rogue, 131 Some cogging, cozening slave, to get some office, Have not devis'd this slander; I'll be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie,

There's no such man; it is impossible.

Des. If any such there be, heaven pardon him!

Emil. A halter pardon him! and hell gnaw his bones!

Why should he call her whore? who keeps her company?

What place? what time? what form? what likelihood?

The Moor's abus'd by some most villanous knave,

Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow:—

O heaven, that such companions³ thou'dst unfold,

And put in every honest hand a whip

To lash the rascals naked through the world

Even from the east to the west!

Iago. [Aside to Emil.] Speak within door.⁴

Emil. O, fie upon them! Some such squire he was

That turn'd your wit the seamy side⁵ without, And made you to suspect me with the Moor.

Iago. You are a fool; go to.

Des. Alas, Iago,

What shall I do to win my lord again?

Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of heaven, 150

I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel:—

If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love, Either in discourse of thought or actual deed;

Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,

³ Companions, fellows, in a bad sense.

⁴ Speak within door, i.e. speak lower.

⁵ Seamy side, i.e. the wrong side.

¹ Water, i.e. tears.

² Callat, mistress.

Delighted them in any other form; 155
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will—though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement—love him dearly, Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do much;

And his unkindness may defeat my life, 160
But never taint my love. [I cannot say
“whore,”—

It does abhor me now I speak the word;
To do the act that might th’ addition¹ earn
Not the world’s mass of vanity could make me.]

Iago. I pray you, be content; ’tis but his humour:

The business of the state does him offence,
And he does chide with you.

Des. If ’t were no other,—

Iago. ’Tis but so, I warrant.

[Trumpets within.

[Hark, how these instruments summon to supper! 169

The messengers of Venice stay the meat:]

Go in, and weep not; all things shall be well.

[Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter RODERIGO.

How now, Roderigo!

Rod. I do not find that thou deal’st justly with me.

Iago. What in the contrary?

Rod. Every day thou daff’st² me with some device, Iago; and rather, as it seems to me now, keep’st from me all conveniency than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope.
I will, indeed, no longer endure it; nor am I yet persuaded to put up in peace what already
I have foolishly suffer’d. 182

Iago. Will you hear me, Roderigo?

Rod. Faith, I have heard too much; for your words and performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me most unjustly.

Rod. With naught but truth. I have wasted myself out of my means. The jewels you have had from me to deliver to Desdemona would half have corrupted a votarist: you have told me she hath receiv’d them, and return’d me expectations and comforts of sudden respect and acquaintance; but I find none.

Iago. Well; go to; very well. 194

Rod. Very well! go to! I cannot go to, man; nor ’t is not very well: nay, I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fobb’d³ in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rod. I tell you ’tis not very well. I will make myself known to Desdemona: if she will return my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation; if not,
assure yourself I will seek satisfaction of you.

Iago. You have said now. 204

Rod. Ay, and said nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I see there’s metal in thee; and even from this instant do build on thee a better opinion than ever before. Give me thy hand, Roderigo: thou hast taken against me a most just exception; but yet, I protest, I have dealt most directly in thy affair.

Rod. It hath not appeared.

Iago. I grant, indeed, it hath not appear’d; and your suspicion is not without wit and judgment. But, Roderigo, if thou hast that in thee indeed, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever,—I mean purpose, courage, and valour,—this night show it: if thou the next night following enjoy not Desdemona, take me from this world with treach-ery, and devise engines⁴ for my life. 222

Rod. Well, what is it? is it within reason and compass?

Iago. Sir, there is especial commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello’s place.

Rod. Is that true? why, then Othello and Desdemona return again to Venice.

Iago. O, no; he goes into Mauritania, and takes away with him the fair Desdemona, unless his abode be linger’d here by some accident:
wherein none can be so determinate⁵ as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you mean, removing of him?

Iago. Why, by making him incapable of Othello’s place,—knocking out his brains.

Rod. And that you would have me to do?

³ Fobb’d, deceived.

⁴ Engines, machinations.

⁵ Determinate, conclusive.

¹ Addition, title.

² Daff’st, puttest me off.

Iago. Ay, if you dare do yourself a profit and a right. He sups to-night with a harlotry,¹ and thither will I go to him:—he knows not yet of his honourable fortune. If you will watch his going thence,—which I will fashion to fall out between twelve and one,—you may take him at your pleasure: I will be near to second your attempt, and he shall fall between us. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but go along with me; I will show you such a necessity in his death, that you shall think yourself bound to put it on him. It is now high² supper-time, and the night grows to waste: about it. 250

Rod. I will hear further reason for this.

Iago. And you shall be satisf'd. [Exeunt.]

[SCENE III. Another room in the castle.

Enter OTHELLO, LODOVICO, DESDEMONA, EMILIA, and Attendants.

Lod. I do beseech you, sir, trouble yourself no further.

Oth. O, pardon me; 't will do me good to walk.

Lod. Madam, good night; I humbly thank your ladyship.

Des. Your honour is most welcome.

Oth. Will you walk, sir?—

O,—Desdemona,—

Des. My lord?

Oth. Get you to bed on the instant; I will be return'd forthwith: dismiss your attendant there: look 't be done.

Des. I will, my lord. 10

[Exeunt Othello, Lodovico, and Attendants.]

Emil. How goes it now? he looks gentler than he did.

Des. He says he will return incontinent:³ He hath commanded me to go to bed, And bade me to dismiss you.

Emil. Dismiss me!

Des. It was his bidding; therefore, good Emilia,

Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu:

We must not now displease him.

Emil. I would you had never seen him!

Des. So would not I: my love doth so approve him,
That even his stubbornness, his checks, his frowns,— 20

Prithee, unpun me,—have grace and favour in them.

Emil. I've laid those sheets you bade me on the bed.

Des. All's one.—Good faith, how foolish are our minds!—

If I do die before thee, prithee, shroud me
In one of those same sheets.

Emil. Come, come, you talk.

Des. My mother had a maid call'd Barbara: She was in love; and he she lov'd prov'd mad, And did forsake her: she had a song of "willow;" An old thing 't was, but it express'd her fortune, And she died singing it: that song to-night Will not go from my mind; I've much to do, But to go hang my head all at one side, 32 And sing it like poor Barbara.—Prithee, dispatch.

Emil. Shall I go fetch your night-gown?

Des. No, unpun me here.—

This Lodovico is a proper man.

Emil. A very handsome man.

Des. He speaks well.

Emil. I know a lady in Venice would have walked bare-footed to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip. 40

Des. [Singing]

The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow;

Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,

Sing willow, willow, willow:

The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd her

Sing willow, willow, willow; [moans;

Hersalt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones;—

Lay by these:—

[Singing] Sing willow, willow, willow;

Prithee, hie thee; he'll come anon:— 50

[Singing]

Sing all a green willow must be my garland.

Let nobody blame him; his scorn I approve,—

Nay, that's not next.—Hark! who is't that knocks?

Emil. It's the wind.

Des. [Singing]

I call'd my love false love; but what said he then?

Sing willow, willow, willow:

If I court more women, you'll couch with more men.—

¹ Harlotry, another form of harlot.

² High, quite, fully.

³ Incontinent, immediately.

So, get thee gone; good night. Mine eyes do itch;
Doth that bode weeping?

Emil. 'Tis neither here nor there.

Des. I've heard it said so.—O, these men,
these men!— 60

Dost thou in conscience think, — tell me,
Emilia,—

That there be women do abuse their husband
In such gross kind?

Emil. There be some such, no question

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all the world?

Emil. Why, would not you?

Des. No, by this heavenly light

Emil. Let husbands know
Their wives have sense like them: they see, and smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
As husbands have.—(Act iv. 3. 94-97.)

Emil. Nor I neither by this heavenly light;
I might do 't as well i' the dark.

Des. Wouldst thou do such a deed for all
the world?

Emil. The world's a huge thing:

It is a great price
For a small vice.

Des. In troth, I think thou wouldst not.

Emil. In troth, I think I should; and undo't when I had done. Marry, I would not do such a thing for a joint-ring,¹ nor for measures of lawn, nor for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition;² but, for the whole world,—why, who would not make her husband a cuckold to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't.

Des. Beshrew me, if I would do such a wrong for the whole world. 79

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i' the world; and having the world for your labour,
't is a wrong in your own world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not think there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen; and as many to the van-

¹ Joint-ring, a ring made to divide into two parts.

² Exhibition, allowance or reward.

tage¹ as would store the world they play'd for.
 But I do think it is their husbands' faults
 If wives do fall: say that they slack their duties,
 And pour our treasures into foreign laps;²
 Or else break out in peevish jealousies, 90 Throwing restraint upon us; or say they strike us,
 Or scant our former having³ in despite;
 Why, we have galls; and though we have some grace,
 Yet have we some revenge. Let husbands know
 Their wives have sense like them: they see,
 and smell,

And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
 As husbands have. What is it that they do
 When they change us for others? Is it sport?
 I think it is: and doth affection breed it?
 I think it doth: is't frailty that thus errs?
 It is so too:—and have not we affections, 101
 Desires for sport, and frailty, as men have?
 Then let them use us well: else let them know,
 The ills we do, their ills instruct us so.
Des. Good night, good night: heaven me such uses send,
 Not to pick bad from bad, but by bad mend!
 [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Cyprus. A street.

Enter IAGO and RODERIGO.

Iago. Here, stand behind this bulk;⁴ straight will he come:

Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
 Quick, quick; fear nothing; I'll be at thy elbow:

It makes us, or it mars us; think on that,
 And fix most firm thy resolution.

Rod. Be near at hand; I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Here, at thy hand: be bold, and take thy stand. [Retires to a little distance.]

Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed;
 And yet he hath given me satisfying reasons:—
 'Tis but a man gone:—forth, my sword; he dies. [Goes to his stand.]

Iago. [I've rubb'd this young quat⁵ almost to the sense,⁶ 11
 And he grows angry.] Now, whether he kill
 Cassio,

Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
 Every way makes my gain: live Roderigo,
 He calls me to a restitution large
 Of gold and jewels that I bobb'd⁷ from him,

As gifts to Desdemona;
 It must not be: if Cassio do remain,
 He hath a daily beauty in his life
 That makes me ugly; and, besides, the Moor
 May unfold me to him; there stand I in much peril: 21
 No, he must die:—be't so: I hear him coming.

Enter CASSIO.

Rod. I know his gait, 'tis he.—Villain, thou diest! [Rushes from his post and makes a pass at Cassio.

Cas. That thrust had been mine enemy
 indeed,
 But that my coat is better than thou know'st:
 I will make proof of thine.

[Draws and wounds Roderigo.]

Rod. O, I am slain!

[Iago rushes from his post, cuts Cassio behind in the leg, and exit.]

Cas. I'm maim'd for ever.—Help, ho!
 murder! murder! [Falls.]

[Enter OTHELLO, at some distance.]

Oth. The voice of Cassio:—Iago keeps his word.]

Rod. O, villain that I am!

[Oth. It is even so.]

Cas. O, help, ho! light! a surgeon! 30

Oth. 'Tis he:—O brave Iago, honest and just,
 That hast such noblesense of thy friend's wrong!

¹ To the vantage, i.e. if they got the opportunity.

² Foreign laps, the laps of women other than their wives

³ Having, possessions.

⁴ Bulk, a projecting part of a building.

⁵ Quat, pimple; i.e. Roderigo.

⁶ Sense=the quick. ⁷ Bobb'd, obtained by cheating.

Thou teachest me:—Minion,¹ your dear lies
 dead, 33
 And your unblest fate hies: strumpet, I come!
 Forth of my heart those charms, thine eyes,
 are blotted;
 Thy bed lust-stain'd shall with lust's blood be spotted. [Exit.

Enter LODOVICO and GRATIANO, at some distance.

Cas. What, ho! no watch? no passage?²
 murder! murder!

Gra. 'Tis some mischance; the cry is very direful.]

Cas. O, help!

[Lod. Hark! 40

Rod. O wretched villain!

Lod. Two or three groan:—it is a heavy night:

These may be counterfeits: let's think't unsafe

To come in to the cry without more help.]

Rod. Nobody come? then shall I bleed to death.

[Lod. Hark!

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with light and weapons.]

Re-enter IAGO, with a light.

[Iago. Who's there? whose noise is this that cries on³ murder?

Lod. We do not know.

Iago. Did not you hear a cry?

Cas. Here, here! for heaven's sake, help me!

Iago. What's the matter?

Gra. This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.

Lod. The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.]

Iago. What are you here that cry so grievously? 53

Cas. Iago? O, I'm spoil'd, undone by villains!

Give me some help.

Iago. O me, lieutenant! what villains have done this?

Cas. I think that one of them is hereabout,
 And cannot make away.

[Iago. O treacherous villains!—

What are you there? come in, and give some help. [To Lodovico and Gratiano.]

Rod. O, help me here! 60

Cas. That's one of them.

Iago. O murderous slave! O villain!
 [Stabs Roderigo.

Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhuman dog!

Iago. Kill men i' the dark!—Where be these bloody thieves?

How silent is this town!⁴—Ho! murder!
 murder!—

What may you be? are you of good or evil?—

Lod. As you shall prove us, praise us.

Iago. Signior Lodovico?

Lod. He, sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy. Here's Cassio hurt
 by villains.

Gra. Cassio!

Iago. How is't, brother? 70

Cas. My leg is cut in two.

Iago. Marry, heaven forbid!—

[Light, gentlemen:—I'll bind it with my shirt.

Enter BIANCA.

Bian. What is the matter, ho? who is't that cried?

Iago. Who is't that cried!

Bian. O my dear Cassio! my sweet Cassio!
 O Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!

Iago. A notable strumpet!—Cassio, may you suspect

Who they should be that have thus mangled
 you?

Cas. No. 80

Gra. I'm sorry to find you thus: I've been to seek you.

Iago. Lend me a garter:—so.—O, for a chair,

To bear him easily hence!

Bian. Alas, he faints!—O Cassio, Cassio,
 Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this trash
 To be a party in this injury.—

Patience awhile, good Cassio.—Come, come;]
 Lend me a light.—Know we this face or no?

Alas, my friend and my dear countryman
 Roderigo? no:—yes, sure; O heaven! Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice? 91

¹ Minion, i.e. Desdemona.

² Passage=Passengers.

³ Cries on, i.e. cries continually.

⁴ In the stage version Lodovico and Gratiano enter here.

Iago. Even he, sir: did you know him?

Gra. Know him! ay.

[Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry you gentle pardon; 93

These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,

That so neglected you.

Gra.

I'm glad to see you.

Iago. How do you, Cassio?—O, a chair, a chair!

Gra. Roderigo!

Iago. He, he, 't is he.—[A chair brought in.]

O, that's well said;—the chair:—

Some good man bear him carefully from hence;

Cas. I'm maim'd for ever.—Help, ho! murder! murder!—(Act v 1, 27.)

I'll fetch the general's surgeon.—[To Bianca]

For you, mistress, 100

Save you your labour.—He that lies slain here, Cassio,

Was my dear friend: what malice was between you?

Cas. None in the world; nor do I know the man.

Iago. [To Bianca] What, look you pale?—
O, bear him out o' th' air.—

[Cassio and Roderigo are borne off.]

Stay you, good gentlemen.—Look you pale, mistress?—

Do you perceive the gastness¹ of her eye?—

Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon.—
Behold her well; I pray you, look upon her:

Do you see, gentlemen? nay, guiltiness will speak,

Though tongues were out of use.] 110

Enter EMILIA.

Emil. 'Las, what's the matter? what's the matter, husband?

¹ Gastness, ghastliness.

Iago. Cassio hath here been set on in the dark 112

By Roderigo, and fellows that are scap'd:
He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead.

Emil. Alas, good gentleman! alas, good Cassio!

Iago. This is the fruit of whoring.—Prithee, Emilia,

Go know of Cassio where he supp'd to-night.—
[To Bianca] What, do you shake at that?

Bian. He supp'd at my house; but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O, did he so? I charge you, go with me. 120

Emil. Fie, fie upon thee, strumpet!

Bian. I am no strumpet; but of life as honest

As you that thus abuse me.

Emil. As I! foh! fie upon thee!

Iago. Kind gentlemen, let's go see poor Cassio dress'd.—

[To Bianca] Come, mistress, you must tell's another tale.—

Emilia, run you to the citadel,
And tell my lord and lady what hath happ'd.—
Will you go on afore?—[Aside] This is the night

That either makes me or fordoes¹ me quite.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A bedchamber in the castle.

DESDEMONA in bed asleep; a light burning.

Enter OTHELLO.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,—

Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!—
It is the cause.—Yet I'll not shed her blood;
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster.
Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.—

Put out the light, and then put out the light:
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me: but once put out thy light, 10

Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relume. When I have pluck'd the rose, 13

I cannot give it vital growth again,

It needs must wither: I'll smell it on the tree.— [Kissing her.

O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice to break her sword!—One more, one more:—

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,

And love thee after:—one more, and that's the last: 19

So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,
But they are cruel tears: this sorrow's heavenly;²

It strikes where it doth love. She wakes.

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Oth. Ay, Desdemona.

[Des. Will you come to bed, my lord?

Oth.] Have you pray'd to-night, Desdemona?

Des. Ay, my lord.

Oth. If you bethink yourself of any crime
Unreconcil'd as yet to heaven and grace,
Solicit for it straight.

Des. Alack, my lord, what may you mean by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be brief; I will walk by: 30

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No,—heaven forbid!—I would not kill thy soul.

Des. Talk you of killing?

Oth. Ay, I do.

Des. Then heaven Have mercy on me!

Oth. Amen, with all my heart!

Des. If you say so, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Hum!

Des. And yet I fear you; for you're fatal then

When your eyes roll so: why I should fear I know not,

Since guiltiness I know not; but yet I feel I fear. 39

Oth. Think on thy sins.

Des. They're loves I bear to you.

¹ Fordoes, undoes.

² Heavenly, i.e. (an affliction) sent by heaven.

OTHELLO
Act V. Scene 2 line 33

17-3 Talk you of killing '
Oth Ky I do

Oth. Ay, and for that thou diest. 41

Des. That death's unnatural that kills for loving.—

Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame:
These are portents; but yet I hope, I hope,
They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still!

Des. I will so. What's the matter?

Oth. That handkerchief which I so lov'd and gave thee

Thou gav'st to Cassio.

Des. No, by my life and soul!
Send for the man, and ask him.

Oth. Sweet soul, take heed,
Take heed of perjury; thou'rt on thy deathbed. 51

Des. Ay, but not yet to die.

Oth. Yes, presently:
Therefore confess thee freely of thy sin;
For to deny each article with oath
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception

That I do groan withal. Thou art to die.

Des. Then Lord have mercy on me!

Oth. I say, amen.

Des. And have you mercy too!—I never did

Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio
But with such general warranty of heaven
As I might love; I never gave him token.

Oth. By heaven, I saw my handkerchief in
's hand. 62

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart.
And mak'st me call what I intend to do
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice:
I saw the handkerchief.

Des. He found it, then;
I never gave it him:—send for him hither;
Let him confess a truth.

Oth. [He hath confess'd.

Des. What, my lord? 69

Oth. That he hath us'd thee.

Des. How? unlawfully?

Oth. Ay.

Des. He will not say so.

Oth. No,] his mouth is stopp'd;

Honest Iago hath ta'en order for 't.¹

Des. O, my fear interprets:—what, is he
dead? 73

Oth. Had all his hairs been lives, my great revenge

Had stomach for them all.

Des. Alas, he is betray'd, and I undone!

Oth. Out, strumpet, weep'st thou for him to my face?

Des. O, banish me, my lord, but kill me not!

Oth. Down, strumpet!

Des. Kill me to-morrow; let me live to-night!

Oth. Nay, if you strive,— 81

Des. But half an hour!

Oth. Being done, there is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer!

Oth. It is too late. [Smother's her.

Emil. [Within] My lord, my lord! what, ho!
my lord, my lord!

[Oth. What noise is this?—Not dead? not yet quite dead?

I that am cruel am yet merciful;

I would not have thee linger in thy pain:—

So, so.

Emil. [Within] What, ho! my lord, my lord!]

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. [Within] O, good my lord, I would speak a word with you! 90

Oth. Yes:—'t is Emilia:—by and by.²—She's
dead.—

'T is like she comes to speak of Cassio's death;
The noise was high.—Ha! no more moving?
Still as the grave.—Shall she come in? were 't good?—

I think she stirs again:—no.—What's best to do?

If she come in, she'll sure speak to my wife:
My wife! my wife! what wife? I have no wife.

O, insupportable! O heavy hour! 98
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon, and that th' affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.³

Emil. [Within] I do beseech you
That I may speak with you, O, good my lord!

Oth. I had forgot thee: O, come in, Emilia:—
Soft,—by and by:—let me the curtains draw.—
Where art thou? [Opens the door.

² By and by, in a moment.

³ At alteration=at the change.

¹ Ta'en order for't, i.e. seen to it.

Enter EMILIA.

What's the matter with thee now?

Emil. O, my good lord, yonder's foul murder done!

Oth. What, now?

Emil. But now, my lord.

Oth. It is the very error of the moon;
She comes more near the earth than she was wont,

And makes men mad.

Emil. Cassio, my lord, hath kill'd a young Venetian Call'd Roderigo.

Oth. Roderigo kill'd!

And Cassio kill'd!

Emil. No, Cassio is not kill'd.

Oth. Not Cassio kill'd! then murder's out of tune,

And sweet revenge grows harsh.

Des. O, falsely, falsely murder'd!

Emil. Alas, what cry is that?

Oth. That! what?

Emil. Out, and alas! that was my lady's voice.—

Help! help, ho! help!—O lady, speak again!

Sweet Desdemona! O, sweet mistress, speak!

Des. A guiltless death I die.

Emil. O, who hath done
This deed?

Des. Nobody,—I myself. Farewell:
Commend me to my kind lord: O, farewell!

[Dies.

Oth. Why, how should she be murder'd?

Emil. Alas, who knows?

Oth. You heard her say herself, it was not I.

Emil. She said so: I must needs report the truth.

Oth. She's, like a liar, gone to burning hell:
'Twas I that kill'd her.

Emil. O, the more angel she,
And you the blacker devil!

Oth. She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Emil. Thou dost belie her, and thou art a devil.

Oth. She was false as water.

Emil. Thou art rash as fire, to say
That she was false: O, she was heavenly true!

Oth. Cassio did tup her; ask thy husband else.

O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,
But that I did proceed upon just grounds
To this extremity. Thy husband knew it all.

Emil. My husband! 140

Oth. Thy husband.

Emil. That she was false to wedlock?

Oth. Ay, with Cassio. Nay, had she been true,

If heaven would make me such another world
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for it.

Emil. My husband!

Oth. Ay, 't was he that told me first:

[An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That sticks on filthy deeds.]

Emil. My husband!

Oth. What needs this iteration,¹ woman? I say thy husband. 150

[Emil. O mistress, villany hath made mocks with love!—

My husband say that she was false!

Oth. He, woman?

I say thy husband:] dost understand the word?

My friend, thy husband, honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious soul
Rot half a grain a day! he lies to the heart:
She was too fond of her most filthy bargain.

Oth. Ha!

Emil. Do thy worst: 160
This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven
Than thou wast worthy her.

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not half that power to do me harm

As I have to be hurt. O gull! O dolt!
As ignorant as dirt! thou hast done a deed—
I care not for thy sword; I'll make thee known,
Though I lost twenty lives—Help! help, ho!
help!

The Moor hath kill'd my mistress! Murder!
murder!

Enter MONTANO, GRATIANO, and IAGO.

[Mon. What is the matter?—How now, general!]

Emil. O, are you come, Iago? you've done well, 169

That men must lay their murders on your neck.

¹ Iterance, repetition.

Gra. What is the matter? 171
Emil. Disprove this villain, if thou be'st a man:

He says thou told'st him that his wife was false:
 I know thou didst not, thou'rt not such a villain:
 Speak, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought; and told no more Than what he found himself was apt and true.

Emil. But did you ever tell him she was false?

Iago. I did. 180

Emil. You told a lie; an odious, damned lie;
 Upon my soul, a lie; a wicked lie:—

She false with Cassio!—did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, mistress. [Go to, charm your tongue.

Emil. I will not charm my tongue; I'm bound to speak:

My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed,—

Mon. Gra. O heavens forfend!

Emil. And your reports have set the murder on.

Oth. Nay, stare not, masters: it is true, indeed.

Gra. 'Tis a strange truth. 189

Mon. O monstrous act!

Emil. Villany, villany, villany!
 I think upon't,¹—I think,—I smell't;—O villany!—

I thought so then;—I'll kill myself for grief:—
 O villany, villany!

Iago. What, are you mad?] I charge you, get you home.

Emil. Good gentlemen, let me have leave to speak:

'Tis proper I obey him, but not now.—

Perchance, Iago, I will ne'er go home.

Oth. O! O! O! [Falling on the bed.

Emil. Nay, lay thee down and roar;
 For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent
 That e'er did lift up eye.

Oth. O, she was foul!— [Rising.
 I scarce did know you, uncle: there lies your niece, 201

Whose breath, indeed, these hands have newly stopp'd:

I know this act shows horrible and grim.

Gra. Poor Desdemon! I'm glad thy father's dead: 204

[Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
 Shore his old thread in twain: did he live now,
 This sight would make him do a desperate turn,

Yea, curse his better angel from his side,
 And fall to reprobance.²]

Oth. 'Tis pitiful; but yet Iago knows 210
 That she with Cassio hath the act of shame
 A thousand times committed; Cassio confess'd it:

And she did gratify his amorous works
 With that recognizance and pledge of love
 Which I first gave her; I saw it in his hand:
 It was a handkerchief, an antique token
 My father gave my mother.

[Emil. O heaven! O heavenly powers!

Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. 'T will out, 't will out:—I peace!
 No, I will speak as liberal as the north: 220
 Let heaven and men and devils, let them all,
 All, all, cry shame against me, yet I'll speak.

Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not.

[Iago offers to stab Emilia.

Gra. Fie!
 Your sword upon a woman?]

Emil. O thou dull Moor! that handkerchief thou speak'st of
 I found by fortune, and did give my husband;
 For often, with a solemn earnestness—
 More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle—
 He begg'd of me to steal it.

Iago. [Villanous whore!

Emil. She give it Cassio! no, alas, I found it,
 And I did give't my husband.]

Iago. Filth, thou liest!

Emil. By heaven, I do not, I do not, gentlemen.— 232

O murderous coxcomb! what should such a fool
 Do with so good a wife?

Oth. Are there no stones in heaven
 But what serve for the thunder?—Precious villain!

[Othello offers to stab Iago, but is disarmed by Montano: Iago stabs Emilia, and then runs out.

¹ I think upon't; she recollects the circumstance of the handkerchief.

² Reprobance, reprobation, eternal perdition.

[Gra. The woman falls; sure, he hath kill'd his wife.

Emil. Ay, ay:—O, lay me by my mistress' side.

Gra. He's gone, but his wife's kill'd.]

Mon. ['T is a notorious villain.] Take you this weapon, 239

Which I have here recover'd from the Moor:
Come, guard the door without; let him not pass,
But kill him rather. I'll after that same villain,
For 't is a damned slave.

[Exeunt Montano and Gratiano.

Oth. I am not valiant neither,
But every puny whipster gets my sword:—
But why should honour outlive honesty?
Let it go all.

Emil. [What did thy song bode, lady?
Hark, canst thou hear me? I will play the swan,
And die in music:—Willow, willow.—

[Singing.
Moor, she was chaste;] she lov'd thee, cruel
Moor; 249

So come my soul to bliss as I speak true;
So speaking as I think, I die,—I die. [Dies.

Oth. I have another weapon in this chamber;
It is a sword of Spain, the ice-brook's temper:¹—
O, here it is.—Uncle, I must come forth.

Gra. [Within] If thou attempt it, it will cost thee dear:

[Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.]

Oth. Look in upon me, then, and speak with me,

Or, naked as I am, I will assault thee.

Re-enter GRATIANO.

Gra. What is the matter?

Oth. Behold, I have a weapon;
A better never did itself sustain 260
Upon a soldier's thigh: I've seen the day
That, with this little arm and this good sword,
I've made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop:—but, O vain boast!

Who can control his fate? 't is not so now.—
Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd;
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,²

And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.

Do you go back dismay'd? 't is a lost fear;
Man³ but a rush⁴ against Othello's breast, 270
And he retires:—where should Othello go?—
Now, how dost thou look now? O ill-starr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,

This look of thine will hurl my soul from heaven,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl!

Even like thy chastity.—

O cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!—
O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead! 281
Oh! oh! oh!

Enter LODOVICO, MONTANO, CASSIO carried in a chair, and Officers with IAGO, prisoner.

Lod. Where is this rash and most unfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello;—here I am.
Lod. Where is that viper? bring the villain forth.

Oth. I look down towards his feet,⁵—but that's a fable.—

If that thou be'st a devil, I cannot kill thee.

[Wounds Iago.

Lod. Wrench his sword from him.

[Othello is disarmed.

Iago. I bleed, sir; but not kill'd.

Oth. I am not sorry neither: I'd have thee live;

For, in my sense, 't is happiness to die. 290

Lod. O thou Othello, that wert once so good,
Fall'n in the practice of a damned slave,
What shall be said to thee?

Oth. Why, any thing:
An honourable murderer, if you will;
For naught I did in hate, but all in honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confess'd his villany:

Did you and he consent in Cassio's death?

Oth. Ay. 293

Cas. Dear general, I never gave you cause.

³ Man, aim.

⁴ Rush, as though in a mock tournament.

⁵ I look down, &c., i.e. in order to see if his feet are cloven.

¹ The ice-brook's temper, i.e. tempered in the icy brook.

² Butt=end.

Oth. I do believe it, and I ask your pardon.
Will you, I pray, demand that demi-devil
Why he hath thus ensnar'd my soul and body?

Iago. Demand me nothing: what you know,
you know:

From this time forth I never will speak word.

Lod. What, not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,

Which, as I think, you know not. Here's a letter

Found in the pocket of the slain Roderigo;
And here another: the one of them imports
The death of Cassio to beundertook 311
By Roderigo.

Oth. O villain!

Cas. Most heathenish and most gross!

Lod. Nowhere's another discontented paper,
Found in his pocket too; and this, it seems,
Roderigo meant t' have sent this damned villain;
But that, belike, Iago in the interim
Came in and satisfied him.

Oth. O the pernicious caitiff!—
How came you, Cassio, by that handkerchief
That was my wife's?

Cas. I found it in my chamber:
And he himself confess'd but even now 321
That there he dropp'd it for a special purpose
Which wrought to his desire.

Oth. O fool! fool! fool!

Cas. There is besides in Roderigo's letter,—
How he upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was cast: and even but now he spake,
After long seeming dead,—Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this room, and go with us: 330

Your power and your command is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this slave,
If there be any cunning cruelty
That can torment him much and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close prisoner rest,
Till that the nature of your fault be known
To the Venetian state.—Come, bring away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two before you go.
I've done the state some service, and they know't;— 339

No more of that.—I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice: then must you
speak

Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme; of one whose hand,
Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away
Richer than all his tribe; of one whose sub-du'd eyes,

Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees 350
Their med'cinable gum. Set you down this;
And say besides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk
Beat a Venetian and traduc'd the state,
I took by the throat the circumcised dog,
And smote him—thus.

[Stabs himself with a dagger.

[Lod. O bloody period!]¹

Gra. All that's spoke is marr'd.

Oth. I kiss'd thee ere I kill'd thee: no way but this, [Falling upon Desdemona.
Killing myself, to die upon a kiss. [Dies.

Cas. This did I fear, but thought he had no weapon; 360

For he was great of heart.

Lod. [To Iago] O Spartan² dog,
More fell than anguish, hunger, or the sea!
Look on the tragic loading of this bed;
This is thy work:—the object poisons sight;
Let it be hid.—Gratiano, keep the house,
And seize upon the fortunes of the Moor,
For they succeed on you.—To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain;
The time, the place, the torture,—O, enforce it!
Myself will straight aboard, and to the state
This heavy act with heavy heart relate.] 371

[Exeunt.

¹ Period, end.

² Spartan; the Spartans were taken as types of obstinacy.

NOTES TO OTHELLO.

NOTE ON DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

The names of the actors are found in F. 1 at the end of the play:

Othello, the Moore.
 Brabantio, Father to Desdemona.
 Cassio, an Honourable Lieutenant.
 Iago, a Villaine.
 Rodorigo, a gull'd Gentleman.
Duke of Venice.
Senators.
 Montano, Gouverneur of Cyprus.
Gentlemen of Cyprus.
 Lodouico, and Gratiano, two Noble Venetians.
Sailors.
Clowns.
 Desdemona, Wife to Othello.
 Emilia, Wife to Iago.
 Bianca, a Courtizan.

In F. 4 they are given, before the play itself, with a few unimportant differences of spelling; but there Iago is written Jago. All the Ff. misspell Roderigo, Rodorigo. Qq. spell the name rightly. Of these names Gratiano has been used already in the Merchant of Venice; Lodovico, in the anglicized form of Lodowick, we have had, in Measure for Measure, as the assumed name of the Duke when disguised as a Friar. Roderigo we have had in Twelfth Night, ii. 1. 17, as the name taken by Sebastian, where Ff. also spell it Rodorigo. Desdemona would, in Italian, be accented, probably, on the antepenultimate. In Ff. it is often abbreviated to Desdemon, as in iii. 1. 56; iii. 3. 55, &c. Emilia is spelt Emillia or Emilla in Qq., but always in Ff. Emilia. The latter, as the name of the wife of Ægeon, occurs in Comedy of Errors, v. 1. 342, &c. In Winter's Tale Emilia is the name of one of the ladies attendant upon the Queen, Hermione.

NOTE ON TIME OF ACTION.

The difficulties as to the space of time covered by the events of this play are numerous, and have been pointed out by Mr. Daniel in his admirable Time Analysis of this play (see New Shak. Soc. Trans. 1877-1879, Pt. II. pp. 224-232). In the first place we learn that Iago and Roderigo have been long acquainted, and that Iago has been borrowing money from Roderigo, apparently on the strength of pretending to support his courtship of Desdemona. This implies that the acquaintance or friendship between Emilia and Desdemona must have existed before the latter's marriage to Othello; which, considering their respective social positions, does not appear very probable. There must be an interval between acts i. and ii.; but there can be none, except of a few hours, between the next acts, as the incidents are evidently continuous, and cannot have occupied more than forty-eight hours. Yet we find Roderigo complaining, both at the end of act ii. scene 3, and again in act iv. scene 2, that he has been put off by Iago with some excuse or other, has spent nearly all his money, and has given him jewels enough to deliver to Desdemona, which would "half have corrupted a votarist." Again, in act iii. scene 4, we have Bianca reproaching Cassio with keeping a week away from her (line 173):

What, keep a week away? seven days and nights?
 and to make no mistake about it, she adds "Eight score eight hours;" yet he cannot have been on the island more than two days. This note of time can only be explained by supposing that Bianca was Cassio's mistress in Venice, and had followed or accompanied him to Cyprus. Still greater is the difficulty as to the recall of Othello from Cyprus; for the letters of recall must have been sent before the senate could even have known that he had reached the island. There are other minor points of difficulty which it is not necessary to specify. Suffice it to say that there are allusions, which will be easily recognized by the reader, implying a longer period of married life, as far as Othello and Desdemona are concerned, than is possible consistently with the text of the play. It is useless to try and reconcile these discrepancies and contradictions by a system of "double time," or by any similar device. The fact is, Shakespeare did not care about such matters; and the absence of any change of scenery on the stage made all details as to lapse of time of much less importance than they would be now. All the difficulties mentioned above may be explained by the fact that Shakespeare founded his play on the story, in which Othello and Desdemona are supposed to have lived together as husband and wife for some time before leaving Venice, and the events which take place in Cyprus are certainly not confined to two or three days.—F. A. M.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

1. Lines 4-6:

'Sblood, but you will not hear me:
If ever I did dream of such a matter,
Abhor me.

These lines are arranged as by Steevens (1793); in Qq. lines 5 and 6 are printed as one line. The oath 'Sblood is only found in Q. 1; F. 1 prints the passage thus, in two lines:

But you'll not hear me. If ever I did dream
Of such a matter, abhorre me, which F. 2, F. 3 substantially follow. F. 4 prints the passage thus:

But you'll not hear me.
If ever I did Dream
Of such a matter, abhor me

2. Line 10: OFF-CAPP'D to him.—So the Folio. The Quartos have oft capp'd. In either case to capp will convey the idea of showing respect to.

3. Line 13: with a BOMBAST circumstance.—Bombast is here used adjectivally, in the sense of rustian; elsewhere—Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 791, and I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 359, where the prince hails Falstaff as a "creature of bombast"—the word is a substantive. Properly bombast means cotton-wadding; Greek βέμβυξ = silk, cotton (Skeat).

4. Line 16. NONSUITS my mediators.—Lord Campbell comments upon this line as a good instance of Shakespeare's "proneness to legal phraseology." "Nonsuiting," he says, "is known to the learned to be the most disreputable and mortifying mode of being beaten: it indicates that the action is wholly unfounded on the plaintiff's own showing, or that there is a fatal defect in the manner in which his case has been got up: inasmuch that Mr. Chitty, the great special pleader, used to give this advice to young barristers practising at nisi prius: 'Always avoid your attorney when nonsuited, for till he has a little time for reflection, however much you may abuse the judge, he will think that the nonsuit was all your fault.'"—Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements, pp 90. 91.

5. Lines 16, 17:

for, "Certes," says he,
"I have already chose my officer."

Some editors print "For certes" as though it were a single phrase, equivalent to for certain. The for, however, does not, I think, make part of what Othello is supposed to reply. Compare the Tempest, iii. 3. 29, 30:

If I should say, I saw such islanders,—
For, certes, these are people of the island

6 Line 19:

a great ARITHMETICIAN,
One Michael Cassio, a FLORENTINE.

Apart from the fact that Florence was a great trading town, there may be some allusion to the economical and thrifty ways for which the Florentines were famous. "If any," says Peacham, "would be taught the true use of money let him travel to Italy! for the Italian, the Florentine especially, is able to teach all the world, Thrift!"—Peacham's The Worth of a Penny, 1641, Arber's English Garner, vi. p. 263. Iago, as a Venetian, expresses contempt for a native of Florence.

7. Line 21: A fellow almost damn'd in a fair WIFE.—The reference, clearly, is to Cassio, and the fair wife may be Bianca; further I cannot see, and nothing that has been written on the line offers the least explanation of what to me appears to be almost inexplicable. Can it be that Iago is speaking, with mocking self-satire, from his own personal experience of a fair wife? From time to time he poses as the jealous husband; he affects to doubt the loyalty of Emilia; he, too, has been damned in the possession of a beautiful consort; and so as he utters the line does he think of his own hard case, and laugh ironically, or perhaps look the martyr? For it must be remembered that Iago is not merely the personification of deceit towards others: he occasionally tries to deceive himself, the last triumph and victory of the deceiver's art; and this may be one of his daring touches of self-deception. It does not, however, much matter whether we regard the line as said seriously or ironically: the point I would suggest is, that the speaker, in speaking the words, really refers to himself. I need scarcely say that emendations have been numerous. Coleridge was inclined to read life; Grant White prints wife; and the heroic Hammer, ausus immane nefas, ventured on a fair phiz, the last word surely in Boeotian bathos.

[The elaborate explanation given by Arrowsmith (Shakespeare's Editors and Commentators, p. 39), and quoted by Dyce, that the words fair wife are to be connected with Iago's comparison of Cassio to a spinster just below (line 24), and that they are equivalent to saying that Cassio is no more a soldier than a fair wife, is too intricate for general comprehension. Certainly Mr. Verity's explanation above seems far more plausible; though quite possibly, as some commentators have pointed out, there is an allusion here to the rumoured marriage of Cassio and Bianca (see iv. 1. 118-133), a union which could not but socially damn him; or Iago may imply that Cassio is completely under petticoat government, and therefore not fit to be an officer in any position of trust. Staunton objected that this line can have no reference to Bianca, because "there is no reason for supposing that Cassio had ever seen Bianca until they met in Cyprus." But surely the relations between Cassio and Bianca could not have arisen in so short a time as elapsed between his arrival in Cyprus, and the events in acts iii. and iv. of this play. However, on this point there are many difficulties. Othello does not seem to have known anything of Cassio's connection with Bianca till he sees him talking to her (iv. 1). In iii. 4. 193-195, Cassio gives a reason for not wishing Othello to see him with Bianca; he says he does not wish

To have him see me woman'd.

Again, if Iago knew of this connection of Cassio and Bianca, and that it would be likely to prejudice him with Othello, why did he not mention it before? The answer to this is that it would not have suited his plot to have done so, as it was his object to make out that Cassio was in love only with Desdemona. Part of the confusion as to Bianca's connection with Cassio may have arisen from the fact that Shakespeare combined in her the two women mentioned in Cinthio's story. See Introduction, p. 5. —F. A. M.]

8. Line 24: unless the bookish THEORIC.—For theoric = theory, cf. Henry V. i. 1. 51, 52:

So that the art and practice part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoric.

For the same words, retaining the same forms and used with the same antithesis, see Heywood's English Traveller, i. 1. 1-3:

Oh friend, that I to mine own notion
Had joined but your experience! I have The theoric, but you the practic.

—Heywood's Select Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 157.

"Theoric of war" comes in All's Well, iv. 3. 163.

9. Line 25. the TOGED consuls.—So the Quarto of 1622. The Folio has tongued.

10. Line 31: this COUNTER-CASTER.—Alluding to the practice of making calculations with counters, or small metal disks, which are several times referred to in Shakespeare; e.g. As You Like It, ii. 7. 63; Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2. 23.

11. Line 45: Many a duteous and KNEE-CROOKING knave.—This is not unsuggestive of Hamlet, iii. 2. 66:

And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee.

"Hinge thy knee" is amongst the maxims which Apemantus impresses upon Timon of Athens (iv. 3. 211).

12. Line 63: In COMPLIMENT extern.—Qq. and Ff. all print here "in complement extern." On the question of identity of compliment and complement see Love's Labour's Lost, note 11. Some editors adhere to the spelling of the old copies, and explain the words thus: "in outward completeness." This is intelligible enough, though somewhat tautological. But if we read, as most editors, including the Cambridge, do, compliment, the meaning must be "in external or outward compliment," or "ceremoniousness," or "in conventional expression of politeness."

13. Line 65. I AM not WHAT I AM.—Compare Sonnet cxxi. line 9:

No, I am that I am, and they that level, &c.

Iago, I suppose, means that he will conceal his true character and not be what to others he is, i.e. seems to be.

14. Line 66: does the THICK-LIPS owe.—Coming from the jealous Roderigo the epithet, obviously, must not be pressed. Upon the question of Othello's nationality see Introduction.

15. Line 67: If he can CARRY 'T thus!—That is, "succeed in this way." The phrase occurs again in Lear, v. 3. 36, 37:

and carry 't so

As I have set it down;

where the sense is rather "contrive it;" and in Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 3. For Shakespeare's vague use of it with verbs, see Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, page 150.

16. Lines 70, 71:

*And though he in a fertile climate dwell,
Plague him with flies.*

This sentence is certainly not very intelligible. At first sight there appears to be some confusion of idea; for a fertile climate, in the sense of one where the vegetation is luxuriant, is generally more productive of insect pests than a cold and sterile one. But the association of ideas in Shakespeare's mind may have been a mixed one. For instance, some sorts of flies are particularly plentiful in sandy soil; and again, where there are much blight and many insect pests, vegetation suffers; but perhaps one must not inquire too curiously into Iago's exact meaning. Delicacy of expression or of thought was certainly not his distinguishing characteristic. Though may possibly be a mistake here caused by the though in the next line having caught the copyist's eye, or it may be equivalent to "as" or "because."—F. A. M.

17. Lines 72, 73:

*Yet throw such CHANGES of vexation on't,
As it may lose some colour.*

So Qq. Ff read chances, which I cannot but think, though it is rejected by most editors without any remark, may be the right reading. Chances is used frequently by Shakespeare in the sense of "accidents," as by Othello in the speech below (i. 3. 134). Is it not possible that the commentators may have been misled by the lose some colour in the next line, and so have too hastily preferred the changes of Qq. to the chances of Ff.?—F. A. M.

18. Line 76: by night and negligence.—This is an elliptical expression, the meaning of course being "in time of night and through negligence;" by being used in a double sense. Iago does not stop here to pick and choose his expressions. He wants to urge Roderigo on to instant action, to make him his instrument in annoying Othello. Roderigo throughout the scene is inclined to hang back; having been rejected as a suitor for Desdemona's hand by her father. He does not like the task that Iago sets him; and therefore it is necessary that the latter should keep pushing him forward, and thrusting him into the most prominent position. For, though Brabantio does not seem to know Iago here, it is possible that he might recognize him by sight as Othello's ancient; and therefore Iago shades his face with his hat, in order that his features may not be recognized, and disguises his voice, taking at the same time a malicious delight in the whole incident. Roderigo is doing his dirty work for him; and Brabantio—for whom he feels almost as much contempt as he does for "the snipe," of whom he is making such "sport and profit,"—is humiliated, and can be insulted with comparative impunity.—F. A. M.

19. Line 106: My house is not a GRANGE—Grange is from the Low Latin granea, a barn, i. e. a place where corn, granum, is kept. The word appears sometimes to have conveyed the idea of loneliness and isolation (see Measure for Measure, note 134); cf. Heywood's English Traveller, iii. 1:

And indeed

Who can blame him to absent himself from home,
And make his father's house but as a grange!

—Heywood's Select Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 195.

According to Warton grange was used, in this sense, especially in the eastern and northern counties. It is superfluous to mention "the moated grange" in Measure for Measure, which Tennyson has described for us at length in his wonderful poem. Milton, by the way, probably recollected the etymology of the word when he wrote in Comus (175): "teeming flocks, and granges full." Hunter has an interesting note on the subject (Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. i. pp. 345, 346); he might, however, have remarked that the modern conception of grange as any country house is associated with the word quite early. For instance Cotgrave has "Beauregard: A summer house or grauinge; a house for recreation or pleasure." Again, Nash in his tract, Christ's Teares over Jerusalem, speaking of the plague, remarks that the poor must remain in the city, while "ritch men haue their country granges to fly to" (Nash's Prose Works, in Huth Library, vol. iv. p. 246). In the ballad, too, of Flodden Felde I find the word used of the Cheshire country-seat of the Egerton family.—See Bishop Percy's Folio MS., edited by Prof. Hales and Dr. Furnivall, vol. i. p. 338.

20. Line 112: your NEPHEWS neigh to you.—Nephew (Lat. nepos) here=grandson; cf. Marlowe, Dido Queen of Carthage, ii. 1. 335:

Sleep, my sweet nephew, in these cooling shades.

—Works, Bullen's ed. vol. ii. p. 339.

See I. Henry VI. note 135.

21. Line 124: At this ODD-EVEN and dull watch o' the night.—The time, that is, when one hardly knows whether, strictly speaking, it is night or day; 2 P.M., for instance, is the odd-even of the night; the day has begun, but the night is not over. How any one can find a difficulty in the expression passes my understanding; yet it has been not a little discussed. We have exactly the same idea in Macbeth, iii. 4. 128, 127.

Macb.

What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which

22. Line 128: a knave of common hire, a GONDOLLER.—So the Folio; the 1632 Quarto has gundeller; in the Quarto of 1622 only the first line and the last three lines of this speech are given. Perhaps Shakespeare wrote gundeller; in any case he intended the word to be pronounced as a trisyllable. See Sidney Walker, Shakespeare's Versification, p. 218. In As You Like It, iv. 1. 38 "swam in a gondola" baffled the printer's skill.

23. Line 138: Of HERE and EVERY WHERE.—For the adverbs used as substantives compare Lear, i. 1. 264:

Thou lovest here, a better where to find.

24. Line 159: Lead to the SAGITTARY the raised search.—What was the Sagittary? The subject has been much discussed. According to Knight, the reference is to "the residence at the Arsenal of the commanding officers of the navy and army. The figure of an archer with his drawn bow, over the gates, still indicates the place." Knight's theory is scarcely tenable. In the first place, his description of the figure appears to be incorrect; the latter, says the American critic, Mr. Rolfe, is "not over the gates, but is one of four statues standing in front of the structure. It represents a man holding a bow (not 'drawn') in his hand, but is in no respect more conspicuous than its three companions. If Shakespeare was ever in Venice he probably saw the statue, but we cannot imagine why it should suggest to him to call the place the Sagittary" (Furness' Variorum edn., Othello, p. 26). Again, the Arsenal was the most conspicuous building in Venice; no Venetian would require to be guided there, still less could any one in the employ of the government have a difficulty in finding his way thither. Yet in scene 3, line 121, Othello sends Iago with the attendants to show them where the Sagittary was:

Ancient, conduct them, you best know the place.

This is scarcely consistent with the theory that the Sagittary was a part of the Arsenal. I may mention, too, an incidental point of evidence, viz. that Coryat in his Crudities gives (vol. i. pp. 278-283) a minute and detailed account of the Arsenal, and had the Sagittary formed a portion of the latter, it would hardly have passed without mention. Perhaps, after all, the name was a mere invention on the part of Shakespeare; in which case it is a thousand pities that he has not had the satisfaction of laughing at the tortures to which he unwittingly subjected generations of editors.

25. Line 183: And RAISE some special officers of night.—Raise=rouse, as in Merchant of Venice, ii. 8. 4:

The villain Jew with outcries rais'd the duke.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

26. Line 5: I had thought t' have YERK'D him.—Yerk here = "to strike sharply;" in Henry V. iv. 7. 83, the sense is kick:

Yerk out their armed heels.

Compare Lyly's Sapho and Phao, i. 1: "I am afraid she will yerke me, if I hit her" (Lyly's Works, Fairholt's ed. i. p. 159). Cotgrave has: "Ruer des pieds; to kicke, winse, Yerke." Yerk and yerke are obviously the same word; cf. Cotgrave: "Fouetter; to scourge, lash, yerk or jerke." There is a third word jerk, given by Cotgrave (s.v. attainte) and connected with the more familiar pair. I find it in Nash's Summer's Last Will and Testament: "When I jerked my whip and said to my horses but Hay" (Nash's Prose Works, edited by Grosart, in Huth Library, vol. vi. p. 125). Skeat sub voce jerk should be consulted.

27 Line 12. That the MAGNIFICO is much below'd—Compare The Merchant of Venice, iii. 2. 282, where the Clarendon Press editors quote from Florio, "Magnifico, nobly-minded, magnificent Also a Magnifico of Venice;" see note 247 to that play. In The Return from Parnassus, iii. 4, we read:

Where it shall dwell like a magnifico.
—Arber's Reprint, p. 45.

Coryat, by the way, tells us that all the "gentlemen of Venice . . . are called Clarissimos" (Coryat's Crudities, ed 1776, vol. ii. p. 32). On the other hand, in Peacham's curious tract, The Worth of a Penny (1641), I find the following: "Go into other countries, especially Italy! the greatest magnifico in Venice will think it no disgrace to his magnificenza to go to market" (Arber's English Garner, vol. vi p. 274). At Milan clarissimo appears to have been the term in use; cf Dekker's Honest Whore, Part I. i. 2: "before any clarissimo in Milan" (Dekker's Plays, Mermaid ed p. 98).

28 Lines 22-24:

and my demerits
May speak, UNBONNETED, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd.

Unbonneted must, I think, mean with the bonnet taken off; i.e. as a sign of respect. How does this fit in with the general drift of the passage? Othello is protesting against the idea that he is a mere adventurer, "an extravagant and wheeling stranger," who has had the luck to win a distinguished position at Venice. I am, he says, of noble birth: if I have succeeded I deserved to: my fortune may be great, but my qualities (demerits) are equal to my fortune, or nearly so: using a metaphor, I say that my demerits can speak to, address, accost—what you will—my fortune, whom, for the moment, we will personify, though, of course, as a slight sign of respect, they would do so unbonneted. I believe, therefore, that unbonneted is the right reading, and that it is thrown in parenthetically and ironically; and this explanation is, I think, supported by the fact that in the Folio the word is placed in brackets. And bonneted (Theobald), e'en bonneted (Hanmer), are the best of the corrections. [We must notice here the explanation given by Fuseli "At Venice the bonnet, as well as the toge, is a badge of aristocratic honours to this day" (Furness, p. 33), and therefore the meaning is that Othello was equal in rank to Brabantio as far as birth went, and that he could, without the addition to the dignity of which the bonnet was the sign, speak to "as proud a fortune" as that he had reached. But I think that Mr. Verity's explanation given above is much the simplest, and, in confirmation of it, we may notice the modest affectation of the word demerits, instead of, as we should have expected, merits. Othello's words may be thus paraphrased: "The lack of merit in me is not so great, but that I may, with no other than the ordinary marks of courtesy, claim the honour of an alliance with one of the rank of Brabantio's daughter." But it is just possible that Shakespeare might here, with pardonable carelessness, have used unbonneted in exactly the opposite sense to that which it generally has, that is to say, as—"without taking the bonnet off."—F. A. M.]

29. Line 28: For the SEA'S WORTH.—We have an equally vague reference to the "sea's rich gems" in Sonnet xxi line 6. Perhaps, as Hunter suggests, Shakespeare had in his mind's eye the fascinating idea of "treasures buried in the deep" (Illustrations of Shakespeare, ii. p. 282). Compare Richard III i. 4. 26.

80

30. Line 46: The senate sent about three several QUESTS.—As we should say, "search-parties." "Questing hounds" was a very common name for sporting dogs, a fact which Otway remembered when he wrote (in The Soldier's Fortune, iv. 3): "Lie still, lie still, you knave, close, close, when I bid you; you had best quest, and spoil the sport, you had!" (Otway's Plays, Mermaid ed p. 257) Cotgrave has: "Queste: A quest, inquiry, search, inquisition, seeking."

31 Line 50: boarded a land CARRACK.—Carrack is properly a Portuguese word signifying any kind of large merchant vessel. Compare Comedy of Errors, iii. 2. 140: "whole armadoes of carracks." So Heywood's Fair Maid of the West, part I. i. 1 11, 12:

If their carracks
Come deeply laden.
—Heywood's Select Plays, Mermaid ed, p. 8r.

And in Arber's English Garner, vol. iii. pp 11-31, there is an account of a "Voyage, in a Portuguese carrack, to Goa, in 1588 A.D."

32. Line 51: If it prove LAWFUL PRIZE.—"Shakespeare gives us very distinct proof that he was acquainted with Admiralty law, as well as with the procedure of Westminster Hall . . . the trope (i.e. 'lawful prize') indicating that there would be a suit in the High Court of Admiralty to determine the validity of the capture" (Lord Campbell, Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements, pp. 91, 92).

33 Line 63: thou hast ENCHANTED her—I do not think that any one has noted the imitation of this and the following scene which occurs in Massinger's A Very Woman, v. 3. To me it is quite clear that Massinger remembered Brabantio's words when he wrote the following dialogue, the speakers in which are the father (the Viceroy), his daughter (Almira), a physician (Paulo), and the Duke.

Vice. (to Almira). O thou shame
Of women! thy sad father's curse and scandal!
With what an impious violence thou tak'st from him
His few short hours of breathing!
Paul. Do not add, sir,
Weight to your sorrow in the ill-bearing of it.
Vice. From whom, degenerate monster, flow these low
And base affections in thee? What strange philtres
Hast thou received? What witch with damned spells Deprived thee of thy reason! Look on me,
Since thou art lost unto thyself, and learn,
From what I suffer for thee, what strange tortures
Thou dost prepare thyself.
Duke. Good sir, take comfort;
The counsel you bestow'd on me, make use of.
Paul. This villain (for such practices in that nation
Are very frequent) it may be, hath forced,
By cunning potions, and by sorcerous charms,
This frenzy in her.

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 523.

Many touches in Massinger show that he was well read in the works of Shakespeare.

34. Line 68: The wealthy CURLED DARLINGS of our nation —For some mysterious reason curling the hair appears to have been a mark of affectation; cf. Lear, iii. 4. 87: "A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; that curled my hair," where Mr. Aldis Wright quotes from Harsnet's Declaration, p. 54: "Maynie the Actor, comes mute upon the stage, with his hands by his side, and his hair curled up. Loe heere (cries Weston the Interpreter) comes up the spirit of pride." Stubbes, too, brands the practice "of curling and laying out of . . . naturall heyre" as "impious and at no hand lawfull," as "the ensigne of Pride," and a mark of "wantonnes to all that beould it" (Anatomie of Abuses, New Shakspeare Society publications, part i. p. 68). So Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 160 Darlings, we may note, appears as deareling in the Folio. The singular must, I think, have been an error of the printer; the form deareling was, perhaps, in current use. In Elizabethan English the word appears to have borne an offensive sense, to have been, in fact, equivalent to paramour. This is clear from a passage in Stubbes' Anatomie, where lovers who have been previously described as paramours are referred to as dearlynges; and Dr. Furnivall in his admirable index quotes from Huloet, 1552: "Darlynge, a wanton terme used in Veneriall speach, as be these: honeycombe . . . sweterhert, true love. Adonis . . . delitæ—suavium." See Anatomie of Abuses, part I. pp. 88 and 356; and Spenser, Faerie Queene, bk. iv. canto viii. liv. 5: which keeper is this Dwarfe, her dearlyng base.

35. Line 75: That WAKEN MOTION —Waken is Hanmer's emendation of the text; the folio and quartos read weaken. Retaining weaken, Ritson interprets: "impair the faculties." I doubt whether motion can bear any such meaning. To waken motion would simply mean excite motion or passion, the natural effect of such drugs as Brabantio has hinted at. For motion = passion, cf. i. 3. 334, 335: "we have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbidden lusts." The A. S. form of weake was wæc: is it possible that in Shakespeare's time weaken and waken were confused in pronunciation, or even that they were spelt alike? Theobald substituted weaken notion, explaining notion in the sense of "understanding," "judgment," as in Lear, i. 4. 247-249:

Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes?
Either his notion weakens, his discernings
Are lethargied—Ha! waking?

Compare also Macbeth, iii. 1. 83: "a notion craz'd," and Coriolanus, v. 6. 107. Theobald's emendation is adopted by Pope, Johnson, Capell, and others.

36. Lines 78, 79:

a practiser

OF ARTS INHIBITED.

We may remember that a very severe statute against witchcraft had been passed in the first year of James's reign; see As You Like It, v. 2. 78, with note.

37. Line 83: were it my CUE.—That is, "were it my part to fight." For cue, see Midsummer Night's Dream, note 151.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

38. Line 8: A TURKISH fleet, and bearing up to CYPRUS.—Upon the historical points which are here raised I shall venture to borrow Knight's note, it is as follows: "The Republic of Venice became the virtual sovereign of Cyprus in 1471, when it assumed the guardianship of the son of Catharine Cornaro, who, being left a widow, wanted the protection of the Republic to maintain the power which her husband had usurped. The island was then first garrisoned by Venetian troops. Catharine, in 1489, abdicated the sovereignty in favour of the Republic. Cyprus was retained by the Venetians till 1570, when it was invaded by a powerful Turkish force, and was finally subjected to the dominion of Selim II. in 1571. From that period it has formed (until, of course, 1880) a part of the Turkish Empire. Nicosia, the inland capital of the island, was taken by storm; and Famagusta, the principal seaport, capitulated after a long and gallant defence. It is evident, therefore, that we must refer the action of Othello to a period before the subjugation of Cyprus by the Turks. The locality of the scenes after the first act must be at Famagusta, which was strongly fortified—a fact which Shakespeare must have known, when in III. ii. Othello says: 'I will be walking on the works.'" Upon the capture of Cyprus by the Turks Howell has something to say in his Instructions for Forraire Travell (1642): "She (i.e. Venice) hath continued a Virgin . . . nere upon twelve long ages, under the same forme and face of Government, without any visible change or symptom of decay, or the least wrinkle of old age, though, her too neer neighbour, the Turk had often set upon her skirts and sought to deflowre her, wherein he went so far that he took from her Venus joynture [I meane the Iland of Cyprus,] which she long possessed, and was the sole Crown she ever wore" (Arber's Reprint, pp. 42, 43). Later on (page 45) Howell speaks of Venice as "the greatest rampart of Christendome against the Turk by Sea." Turning to Coryat's Crudities I find the following: "And for the space of many yeares they (the Venetians) possessed the whole island of Cyprus, situate in the Mediterranean Sea . . . they were expelled againe by the Turkes An 1571" (Coryat's Crudities, ed. 1776, vol. ii. pp. 66, 67). It may be worth while to note that the first act of Dekker's Old Fortunatus takes place in Cyprus; so, too, does the whole of Ford's Lover's Melancholy.

39. Line 14: The Turkish PREPARATION.—Used of a force ready for action, as in Coriolanus, i. 2. 15:

These three lead on this preparation.

So Lear, iv. 4. 22.

40. Line 35: Have there injoinited them with an after fleet.—From Knolles' Historie of the Turks it would seem that this detail is historically correct.

41. Line 48, 49:

*Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you
Against the general enemy Ottoman.*

In the novel we are merely told that "the Venetians resolving to change the garrison which they maintain in Cyprus, elected the Moor to the command of the troops which they destined for that island" (Hazlitt's Shakespeare's Library, part I. vol. ii. p. 286).

42. Line 64: SANS witchcraft.—Mr. Aldis Wright in a note on The Tempest, i. 2. 97 ("A confidence sans bound") suggests that sans may first have been used in purely French phrases, such as "sans question," Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. 91; "sans compliment," King John, v. 6. 16. Afterwards it appears to have established itself in English as a recognized preposition, Cotgrave giving "Sans: Sanse, without."

43. Line 82: the soft phrase of peace—Compare iii. 3. 264:

And have not those soft parts of conversation,
and Coriolanus, iii. 2. 82, 83.

Hast not the soft way which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim.

The epithet conveys the idea of effeminacy.

44. Lines 91, 92:
what drugs, what charms,
What CONJURATION.

The trial of Othello, Lord Campbell remarks, is conducted precisely as though "he had been indicted on Stat. 33, Hen. VII. c. 8 for practising 'conjuration, witchcraft, enchantment, and sorcery, to provoke to unlawful love;" a sufficiently pointed reference to the terms of the act of parliament (Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements, p. 92). For the omission of with—with what drugs, &c., see Abbott, p. 136.

45. Lines 107-109:

Without more wider and more overt test
THAN THESE thin habits and poor likelihoods
Of MODERN seeming do prefer against him.

So FF; Qq. have "These are," and you instead of do in the next line. As to the exact meaning of habits here it is rather difficult to determine. It may mean "externals" or "clothes" in a figurative sense; but Singer makes the very plausible suggestion that it may also be a Latinism from habita = "things, considered, reckoned, as in the phrase habit and repute; i.e. held and esteemed." Modern is used in its not uncommon Shakespearean sense of hackneyed, commonplace. So "modern instances," As You Like It, ii. 7. 156; "modern ecstasy," Macbeth, iv. 3. 170; "a modern quill," Sonnet lxxxiii. line 7.

46. Line 135: Of moving ACCIDENTS by flood and field.—Accidents often bears the general sense of events, experiences; e.g. Edward III. v. 1:

And I must sing of doleful accidents.
—Doubtful Plays of Shakespeare, Tauchnitz ed. p. 72.

47. Line 189: And PORTANCE in my travels' history.—So Coriolanus, ii. 3. 232:

The apprehension of his present portance;
i.e. demeanour, bearing. The word occurs frequently in Spenser; e.g.

And her proud portance and her princely gest.
—Faerie Queene, bk. iii. canto ii. stanza xxvii. l. 2.
But for in court gay portance he perceiv'd.
—Ibid. book ii. canto iii. st. v. l. 7.

See Globe ed. of Spenser, pp. 92, 165. For travels the Folio has travellours, i.e. traveller's, which Delius adopts.

48. Lines 143-145:

And of the Cannibals that each other eat,
The Anthrophophagi, and men whose heads
Do grow beneath their shoulders.

These, obviously, are touches borrowed from contemporary books of travel; they may be illustrated by various references. Humber, for instance, in the pseudo-Shakespearean drama of Locrine remarks, iii. 6:

Would God we had arriv'd upon the shore
Where Polyphemus and the Cyclops dwell;
Or where the bloody Anthrophophagi
With greedy jaws devour the wandering wights.

—Tauchnitz ed. p. 168.

There is a similar allusion in Sir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici, part I. section xxxvii: "Nay, further, we are what we all abhor, Anthrophophagi, and cannibals, devourers not only of men, but of ourselves;" and Shakespeare may have read the second chapter in the seventh book of Holland's translation (1601) of Pliny's Natural History. With the second part of the lines given above cf. The Tempest, iii. 3. 46, 47:

or that there were such men
Whose heads stood in their breasts;

in illustration of which the commentators quote from Maundeville's Travels: "And in another Yle, toward the Southe, duellen folk of foule (i.e. ugly) Stature and of cursed kynde, that hau no Hedes: and here Eyen ben in here Scholdres" (Halliwell's ed. p. 203). Furness in his note on this passage (Variorum Othello, pp. 56, 57) brings together a number of similar passages which it would take too much space to reproduce.

49. Lines 162, 163:

yet she wish'd
That heaven had made her such a man.

Possibly her=for her; i.e. Desdemona wished "that heaven had made such a husband for her;" more likely, however, she wished "she had been such a man as was Othello."

50. Line 167: She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd.—This line is a perfect criticism upon Desdemona's feeling towards Othello. Her love is the love of blinded and blinding admiration: she is carried away by the romance of Othello's great deeds: it is a picturesque passion, not the perfect union of two equally-balanced natures. Hence, without the serpentine craft of Iago to hurry on the tragedy, time might have brought its disillusion and despair.)

51. Line 180: My noble father, &c.—Desdemona's speech is not unsuggestive of Marlowe's Tamburlaine, part i. v. 2. 386-394.

52. Lines 202, 203:

When remedies are past, the griefs are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.

The rhyme in this speech is obviously intended to emphasize the sententious moralizing of the duke.)

53. Lines 218, 219:

I never yet did hear
That the bruise'd heart was PIERCED through the ear.

Warburton, thinking that pierced must mean wounded, substituted pieced. Pierced, however, = reached, or penetrated. Malone aptly quotes from the Faerie Queene, bk. iv. cviii. st. 26:

Her words . . .
Which, passing through the eares, would pierce the heart.

54. Line 225: opinion, a sovereign MISTRESS of effects — Compare Merchant of Venice, iv. 1 50-52:

affection,
Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood
Of what it likes or loathes.

The old form of the word was maistres, and in the lines just quoted the two Quartos and the Folio all read maisters, an error, probably, for maistres.

55. Line 227: be content to SLUBBER.—Slubber is here equivalent to sully. Elsewhere the word means "to slur over," "do carelessly;" so Merchant of Venice, ii. 8. 39:

Slubber not business for my sake.

Cotgrave gives "boffer, to bungle up or slubber over things in haste;" for which sense, perhaps, compare a couplet in the anonymous sonnets entitled Zepheria (1594):

My slubbr'ing pencil casts too gross a matter,
Thy beauty's pure divinity to blaze

—Arber's English Garner, v. p. 66.

56. Line 230.—Mr. Irving here marks in his own acting edition (not published) a very suggestive stage-direction: Look at Desdemona first; as if to show that Othello felt what a sacrifice he was making in leaving her at that moment, on their very wedding night.—F. A. M.

57. Line 238: place and EXHIBITION — Exhibition = allowance, as in The Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 3. 69; see note 33 of that play. This use of the word is too common to need illustration; cf. however, for a good instance, The London Prodigal, i. 1:

What, doth he spend beyond the allowance I left him?

How! beyond that? and far more? Why, your exhibition is nothing. He hath spent that, and since hath borrowed. —Tauchnitz ed. p. 220

58. Line 239: accommodation and BESORT—Besort here = fit attendance. It occurs as a verb in Lear, i. 4. 272:

such men as may besort your age;

i e suit, become.

59. Line 250: and STORM of fortunes.—Violence and storm must be taken as a single phrase; but the latter is curious. The 1622 Quarto has scorne of Fortunes; one would have been relieved had it read scorn of fortune.

60. Line 252: Even to the very QUALITY of my lord.—By quality Desdemona surely means the very nature, character of Othello. I should not have thought it necessary to note the point, had not some editors interpreted the word to mean profession; as though Desdemona wished to say: "I will be as much a soldier as my lord is." Quality, where it signifies a profession, is generally used of the actor's calling; cf. Hamlet, ii. 2. 363. So in Massinger's play The Roman Actor, Aretinus, speaking to Paris (the actor), says, i. 3:

Stand forth.

In thee, as being the chief of thy profession,
I do accuse the quality of treason.

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 197.

Compare again The Picture, ii. 1:

How do you like the quality?
You had a foolish itch to be an actor,
And may stroll where you please.

—Ibid. p. 293.

Quarto 1 has utmost pleasure in place of very quality.

61. Lines 264, 265:

Nor to comply with heat—the young AFFECTS
In ME defunct—and proper satisfaction.

Me is a slight and necessary correction of the text; the old reading was my Affects is equivalent to passions. Two curious imitations of the passage have been pointed out. Compare The Bondman, i. 3:

Let me wear
Your colours, lady; and though youthful heats,
That look no further than your outward form,
Are long since buried in me

—Gifford, Massinger, ii. p. 30.

So again, Fletcher's Fair Maid of the Inn, i. 1:

While our cold fathers,
In whom long since their youthful heats were dead.

—Vol. x. p. 20 (ed. Dyce).

The arrangement of the lines in our text is that first given by Capell, as suggested by Upton, and followed by Dyce, the Cambridge edd., and others. Qq read heate, the young affects

In my defunct, which Ff. follow, except that they have no comma after heat; and F 2, F 3, F. 4 substitute effects for affects. Pages of commentary have been written on this passage, and the emendations proposed would alone fill half a column of one of our pages. It is difficult to see what all the "pothier" has been about; nor are Othello's words a fit subject to expatiate on at any length. He says later in the play, as Theobald pointed out, when debating with himself the reasons which may have alienated Desdemona's affection from him (iii. 3. 265, 266):

or, for I am declin'd

Into the vale of years,—yet that's not much.

This makes the meaning of this previous passage perfectly clear, which we take to be that Othello is a man who has learned to restrain his passions, to be their master instead of being mastered by them,—at least so he believes. Perhaps the word proper may be taken here to = selfish.

62. Lines 293, 294:

Look to her, Moor, if thou hast eyes to see:
She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee.

(This Parthian arrow, which may well rankle in Othello's heart, is a fine touch; it is the first suggestion he hears that Desdemona may be faithless, and the suggestion comes from her own father.) Compare the warning which Mowbray gives the king in Richard II. i. 2. 201-205, after the latter has pronounced sentence of his banishment:

No, Bolingbroke: if ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence!
But what thou art, God, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.

"In real life," says Coleridge, "how do we look back to little speeches as presentimental of, or contrasted with, an affecting event! Even so, Shakspeare, as secure of being read over and over, of becoming a family friend, provides this passage for his readers, and leaves it to them" (Lectures on Shakspeare, Bohn's ed., 1884, p. 387). We can imagine Othello afterwards recurring again and again to Brabantio's words.

63 Line 328: or MANURED with industry—That is, cultivated with industry. Milton twice uses the word in exactly the same way:

That mock our scant manuring

—Paradise Lost, bk. iv. 628.

And bk. xi. 28, 29:

Which, his own hand manuring, all the trees

Of Paradise could have produced.

Compare too Stubbes' Anatomic of Abuses, part i. p. 36: "God . . . placed him (man) in Paradise terrestrial, commanding him to tyl and manure the same" (Furnivall's ed. in New Shakspeare Society Publications). The derivation is obvious: main, œuvre.

64. Line 344: never better STEAD thee—That is, "stood thee in good stead." So The Tempest, i. 2. 164, 165:

necessaries,

Which since have steaded much.

Compare too Merchant of Venice, i. 3. 7.

65. Line 355: as bitter as coloquintida . . . therefore put money in thy purse.—I have taken the reading of the 1632 Quarto; it differs—for the better—in various small points from the earlier Quarto and from the Folio. Coloquintida is more familiar under its other name colocynth as a common ingredient in aperient or liver pills. It is never prescribed alone, and in large quantities is said to be dangerous. It is made from the fruit of the Citrullus Colocynthus or bitter-apple, a kind of cucumber.

66. Line 363: a SUPERSUBTLE VENETIAN.—The shrewdness of the Venetians was proverbial. Howell tells us that Venice "hath subsisted thus long as much by Policy as Armes, as much by reach of Wit, and advantage of treaty, as by open strength, it having bene her practise ever and anon to sow a piece of Fox tayle to the skinnie of S. Marks Lyon" (Instructions for Forraune Travell, Arber's Reprint, p. 43). This is a testimony to the Venetian's political sharpness. By supersubtle, however, as applied to Desdemona, Iago doubtless meant cleverness in finding ways of being faithless to Othello; and we may remember the contemporary proverb that "the first handsome woman that ever was made, was made of Venice Glass; which implies Beauty, but Brittleness withal" (Howell's Letters, ed. 1754, p. 56). Readers of Ascham will recollect the very unflattering picture of Venice, and indeed of Italy generally, which he draws in the Schoolmaster; see Arber's Reprint, pp. 77–86. Coryat, too, gives us no very edifying account of Venetian society: he finds it necessary to dissertate for several pages on the courtesans of Venice, of whom the number "is very great" (see his Cruities, vol. ii. pp. 38–60).

67. Line 389: Thus do I ever . . . —Upon this speech of Iago's, which in the final couplet closes with a crescendo of passion, I must borrow Coleridge's criticism: "Iago's soliloquy—the motive-hunting of a motiveless malignity—how awful it is! Yea, whilst he is still allowed to bear the divine image, it is too fendish for his own steady view—for the lonely gaze of a being next to devil, and only not quite devil—and yet a character which Shakspeare has attempted and executed, without disgust and without scandal" (Lectures on Shakspeare, Bohn's ed., 1834, p. 388).

68. Line 392: I hate the Moor.—It is a question what in the play are the exact motives that influence Iago; in the novel his passion for Desdemona is undoubtedly the main incentive to his villainy. See Introduction p. 6.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

69. A SEAPORT TOWN in CYPRUS.—The scene of the action is Famagusta; see what has been said in note 38. Sir John Maundeville has something to tell us about Cyprus, "righte a gode Ile and a fayr and a gret, and it hathe 4 princypalle Cytees within him. And there is an Erchebysshope at Nichosie, and 4 othere Bysschoppes in that Lond. And at Famagost is on of the princypalle Havenes of the See, that is in the World: and there arryven Cristene Men and Sarazynes and Men of alle Naciouns . . . And besyde Famagost was Seynt Barnabee the Apostle born" (The Voiage and Travaile of Sir John Maundeville, Kt., Halliwell's ed. (1883), pp. 27, 28).

70. Line 3: 'twixt the HEAVEN and the main—Q. 1 reads haven, a reading adopted and strongly defended by Malone. Steevens suggested that Shakespeare might have written heavens. If the Gentleman, who had been on the look-out from the rocky promontory which partly defends the harbour of Famagusta, could not discern a sail even on the horizon, it must be confessed that the announcement of Cassio's arrival, a few lines further on (22), rather staggers one; but if, as is often the case in stormy weather, no one could see far from the shore, the vessel might have been tolerably near to the haven without being visible; and the reading of Q. 1 would be the more probable of the two. In support, however, of the reading of Ff., we may quote the passage from Paradise Lost:

As when far off at sea a fleet descried

Hangs in the clouds

—Book ii. 636, 637.

But would not the more poetical expression of "the heaven and the main" suit Montano better than the somewhat prosaic First Gentleman.—F. A. M.

71 Lines 7–9:

If it hath RUFFIAN'D so upon the sea,

What ribs of oak, when MOUNTAINS MELT on them,

Can hold the mortise?

We are reminded at once of "the ruffian billows" in II. Henry IV. iii. 1. 22. In line 8 Q. 1 reads: "the huge mountain's mes it;" a misprint for "mountains melt" (a transposed s). Pope adopted the slightly altered form "huge mountains melt." Mortise is the cavity cut in one piece of timber to receive the "tenon" or projecting part from another. Heavy timbers are generally fastened together by two of these mortises and tenons. The word is apparently used by Shakespeare, in a general sense, for that sort of joint which is still called "a mortise joint." He does not use the noun elsewhere; but in Hamlet, iii. 3. 19, 20, we find the verb:

To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things

Are mortis'd and adjoin'd.

72. Line 12: The chiding billow seems to pelt the clouds.—The exaggerated language in this passage is not unsuggestive of The Tempest, i. 2. 2–5. Compare, too, The Winter's Tale, iii. 3. 85–90.

73. Line 13: with high and monstrous MANE.—A magnificent metaphor, which the last-century editors entirely lost by reading, with F. 2 and F. 3, man. Qq give mayne. Knight restored it to the text.

74 Lines 14, 15:

*Seems to cast water on the burning Bear,
And quench the GUARDS of th' ever-fixed POLE*

For the idea compare Lear, iii. 7. 59-61:

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endured, would have buoy'd up,
And quench'd the stelled fires

The ever-fixed pole is the pole-star, referred to in Much Ado, iii. 4. 59, Sonnet cxvi lines 7 and 8, and Julius Cæsar, iii. 1. 60-62, the epithets "true-fix'd" and "resting" being applied to it in the last-mentioned passage. Upon the reference to the guards, a correspondent of Notes and Queries writes as follows: "They (i.e. the guards) are the two stars β and γ Ursæ Minoris, on the shoulder and fore-leg of the Little Bear, as usually depicted, or sometimes on the ear and shoulder. They were more observed in Shakespeare's time than now for the purposes of navigation. Norman's Safeguard of Sailors, 1587, has a chapter, 'Howe to Knowe the houre of the night by the Guards.' They were even made the subject of mechanical contrivances for facilitating calculation, one of which is described in The Arte of Navigation, trans. by Richard Eden from the Spanish of Martin Curtus (or Cortez) 1561, consisting of fixed and movable concentric circles with holes, through which to observe 'the two starres called the Guardians, or the mouth of the horne'" (Notes and Queries, 5th series, vol. viii. p. 83)

75 Lines 25-28:

*The ship is here put in,
A VERONESA Michael Cassio,
Lieutenant to the warlike Moor Othello,
Is come on shore.*

F. 1 reads:

The ship is heere put in: A Verenessa, Michael Cassio.

That is to say, Verenessa qualifies Michael Cassio. Theobald saw the error, Cassio not being a native of Verona, and changed the punctuation, so as to make the epithet refer to the ship. The question then arises—how are we to interpret Verenessa, or, as Qq. have it, Veronessa, of a vessel? "A ship of Verona" sounds rather impossible, Verona being inland; also four lines back it was "a noble ship of Venice." There are two fairly feasible explanations: one, that Verona was a dependency of Venice, and so might have had to supply the vessel, which for this reason could have been called a Veronese boat; the other, that Vernessa is the name of the ship. In the latter case I should propose to read La Veronessa, a suggestion which others, I daresay, have made. Perhaps the L dropped out through some confusion with the next line, which begins with the same letter. Elze has an ingenious theory, that we should read verrinnessa, a word which apparently is not actually found in any Italian author, but which might quite well exist, being a substantive formed from the nautical word verrinare=perforare, to cleave; a verrinnessa would therefore signify, in our phrase, a cutter.

76. Line 43: Thanks to the valiant of this warlike isle — So the Quarto of 1622, except that for warlike (the Folio reading) it gives worthy. The Folio has:

Thanks you, the valiant of the warlike isle.

77 Line 65: does tyre the INGENUER.—The Quarto of 1622 reads does beare all excellency; the Folio, do's tyre the ingenuer; ingeniuer may, as Steevens suggested, be a misprint for ingenue, a vague word, signifying any one possessed of great natural gifts. Cassio means that no artist could possibly do justice to Desdemona, if he tried to describe her charms.

78. Line 70: Traitors ENSTEED'D to clog the guiltless keel.—The 1622 Quarto reads enscaped, a misprint, perhaps, for enscaped, which would be forcible enough. Ensteeped will mean submerged, referring to the sands

79. Line 72: Their MORTAL natures — Mortalis, it may be observed, never in classical authors bears the sense of "deadly;" this use of the word is only found in patristic Latin, a point noted by Keightley in his comment on the second line of Milton's Paradise Lost:

the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought Death into the world. —Book i. 1-3.

80. Line 96: See for the news.—Q 1 reads So speaks this voice, which might have been meant to be equivalent to such an expression, on the part of Cassio, as "So say I."

81. Line 120: if not CRITICAL.—That is, censorious; so critic in Troilus and Cressida, v. 2. 131; and Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 170, "critic Timon."

82 Line 132: if she be BLACK and witty —For the Elizabethan dislike of dark complexions, see Love's Labour's Lost, note 132; and Troilus and Cressida, note 14

83. Line 149 —She that was ever fair, &c.—For the rhyme in this speech see note 52.

84. Line 156: To change the OOD'S HEAD for the salmon's tail.—This means, as Steevens explains, "to exchange a delicacy for coarser fare;" and he quotes from Queen Elizabeth's Household Book, in the 43rd year of her reign, to show that salmons' tails were part of the perquisites of the master cook. Singer adds as an illustration an Italian proverb: "E meglio esser Testa di Lucio che coda de Sturione." According to Furness (quoted by Furness), by salmons' tail Iago means Othello. There is no doubt a great deal of personal application in this rhymed speech. Mr. Booth (the actor) suggests that a glance at Roderigo, during the last line of the speech, would imply that Iago was referring to Desdemona; for Roderigo was one of the suitors who had been following her for some time. On this point Dr. Furness makes a very sensible suggestion. He asks if Roderigo should not be disguised in this act, and refers to Iago's advice to Roderigo (i. 3. 346) to "defeat thy favour with an usurp'd beard." In this very scene (line 273) Iago tells Roderigo that Cassio does not know him; and this is strange, for, as Dr. Furness remarks, it is scarcely possible that Cassio and Roderigo should not have met in Venice. But, ingenious as this suggestion is, I doubt if it would be practicable to carry it out on the stage.—F. A. M.

85 Line 101: and CHRONICLE SMALL BEER.—That is, score the reckoning in a tavern. Iago takes up Desdemona's own word—"to make fools laugh 't the alehouse." But his meaning is that women at the best, are only fit to suckle children and to look after the house expenses

86. Line 184. O my fair warrior!—Steevens thought that in this he saw some imitation of the French sonneteers; pointing out that Ronsard frequently calls his mistress guerriere; and was followed by Southerne, who imitated him. But, as Furness observes, Southerne was not born till nearly five or six years after Shakespeare's death; and it is evident that fair warrior refers to Desdemona's determination to follow Othello to the wars, instead of remaining "a moth of peace."

87. Line 191: If it were now to die, &c.—This is the classical idea, that a man should die in the very moment of his utmost happiness; otherwise "call no man fortunate till he is dead." Scholars will recollect the story of Cleobis and Biton; see Rawlinson's Herodotus, vol. 1. pp. 165, 166.

88 Line 246: a SLIPPER and subtle knave—Slipper, the older form of slippery (which F. 2 and F. 3 read), occurs not infrequently. Compare Spenser, The Shepherds Calendar, November:

O' trustless state of earthly things, and slipper hope
Of mortal men.

—Spenser's Works, Globe ed. p. 48a.

Nares refers us to The Paradise of Dainty Devices, E. 3:

You worldly wights that have your fancies fixt,
On slipper hope.

89. Line 259: PADDLE with the PALM of his HAND.—Compare The Winter's Tale, i. 2. 115:

But to be paddling palms and pinching fingers;

and Hamlet, iii. 4. 135.

90 Line 263: an INDEX and obscure prologue.—See Troilus and Cressida, note 88.

91. Line 282: qualification.—This is the only passage in which Shakespeare uses this word; and it is here used in a sense totally obsolete. Baret gives "to Qualifie one that is angry. Tranquillum facere ex irato;" and again, under appease, he gives to qualifie in the same sense; but he does not give the substantive anywhere in this sense. Under appaisement Cotgrave gives "a pacification . . . qualifying;" and in Sherwood, 1650 (the English dict. appended to Cotgrave), qualification is given, and as the French equivalent, among other words, we find mitigation; and mitigation is rendered by Cotgrave qualification. Johnson explains the latter part of the sentence as—"not to retain some bitterness." This, in spite of Mr. Furness's objection, seems certainly to be the meaning. Iago's object was to create mutiny or discontent among the people of Cyprus, which should be composed only by the dismissal of Cassio. It is a curious commentary on the supposed cleverness of Iago that the senate should have chosen Cassio to replace Othello in the command.—F. A. M.

92. Line 312: If this poor TRASH of Venice, whom I TRASH.—The Quarto of 1623 has "whom I crush;" the Folio and the second Quarto, "whom I trace." The change, trace to trash, gives good sense. To trash a hound was to check his speed by placing on his neck a collar weighted with lead. Upon the origin of the word in this connection Skeat throws no light. Warburton read brach of Venice; cf., however, "I do suspect this trash" in v. 1. 85

93 Lines 314, 315:

*I'll have our Michael Cassio ON THE HIP;
Abuse him to the Moor in the RANK GARB.*

For on the hip see Merchant of Venice, note 82. [Ff. read "in the right garb;" but the reading of Qq. is generally preferred, and is explained by Steevens as meaning "grossly," that is, "without mincing the matter." It appears to me that whichever reading we adopt the sense must be pretty much the same. Mr. Furness most ingeniously and eloquently defends the reading of the Ff. (to which Knight adheres), and says that he should have expected "in a rank garb," if we take rank to mean "coarse." Malone, whom Schmidt follows, thinks that rank means here "lascivious," and refers to the well-known passage in The Merchant of Venice, i. 3. 81, 82:

the ewes, being rank,

In end of autumn turned to the rams, with which we may compare Cymbeline, ii. 5. 24: "lust and rank thoughts;" and it is very possible Iago means to say that he will accuse Cassio, or rather abuse him as "a lascivious fellow," a sense which the next line, perhaps, tends to confirm. But rank may mean only "immoderate," or even simply "great;" as in the passage in As You Like It, iv. 1. 85: "I should think my honesty ranker than my wit." For garb compare Hamlet, ii. 2. 390: "the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: let me comply with you in this garb."—F. A. M.]

ACT II. SCENE 2.

94. Line 3: the MERE perdition of the Turkish fleet.—Mere, the Latin merus, sometimes, as here, means complete, entire; cf. Merchant of Venice, iii. 2. 265:

Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy.

95. Line 6: his ADDICTION leads him.—This is the reading of Q. 2, Q. 3. Ff. have addition; Q. 1 reads mind. An anonymous conjecture quoted by the Cambridge edd. would combine the two latter readings as mind's addition. Shakespeare uses addiction in one other passage only, in Henry V. i. 1. 54:

Since his addiction was to courses vain.

96. Line 9: All OFFICES are open.—The rooms, says Halliwell, appropriated to the upper servants of great families. Compare Macbeth, ii. 1. 14; so "Unpeopled offices" in Richard II. i. 2. 60, where, however, the idea may be rooms generally; and see note 56 of that play.

97. Line 11: till the BELL have told eleven.—The reference, probably, is to the watch-bell of the fortress. Conceivably, however, Shakespeare is here throwing in a touch of local colour, and the bell in question may be the one referred to by Dekker in Old Fortunatus, i. 1: "this fool that mocks me, and swears to have the last word, in spite of my teeth, ay, and she shall have it because she is a woman, which kind of cattle are indeed all echo, nothing but tongue, and are like the great bell of St. Michaels in Cyprus, that keeps most rumbling when men would most sleep" (Dekker, Mermaid ed. p. 294) I hope the suggestion is not too far-fetched.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

98 Line 31: a brace of CYPRUS GALLANTS—Andelocia in Dekker's Old Fortunatus, i. 2, has a poor opinion of the "curled darlings" of the island: "I doubt for all your bragging, you 'll prove like most of our gallants in Fama-gosta, that have a rich outside and a beggarly inside, and like mules wear gay trappings, and good velvet foot cloths on their backs, yet champ on the iron bit of penury—I mean, wear coin" (Dekker's Select Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 310). [It is worth noticing, in this short dialogue between Iago and Cassio, how strongly the modesty and clean-mindedness of the latter are contrasted with the immodesty and dirty-mindedness of the former.—F. A. M.]

99 Line 57: Three LADS of Cyprus.—So Qq.; Ff. have else for lads. Delius most ingeniously suggests that this may have been meant for LS, the abbreviation for Lords. Collier's Old Corrector altered it to elves. Dyce, in his second edition, adhered to the Folio, comparing John, ii. 1. 276: "Bastards, and else;" i.e. "and such like;" but in his third edition he adopted the reading of Qq. It is quite possible that the reading of Ff. may be the right one; "three else" being equivalent to nothing more than "three others (besides Roderigo)."

100. Line 60: with FLOWING cups.—Compare Henry V. iv. 3. 55:

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

101. Line 66: they have given me a ROUSE.—"A rouse," says Gifford, "was a large glass, in which a health was given, the drinking of which by the company formed a carouse." Apparently Gifford connected the words etymologically: really they are quite distinct. Carouse, according to Skeat, is the German garauis, "right out; used of emptying a bumper." Rouse, on the other hand, is (says Skeat) "really a Danish word; such a bout (of drinking) being called the Danish roussa." Skeat's derivation, by the way, of carouse is given in Blount's Glossographia, s.v. For rouse cf. Massinger's Duke of Milan, i. 1:

Your lord, by his Duke,
Stands bound to take his rouse;

and The Bondman, ii. 3:

We'll talk anon; and then rouse!
Massinger's Works, Cunningham's ed.
pp. 65, 117, and 642

102. Line 68.—Steevens commented on the fact that Montano, who is described in the list of dramatis personæ given in F. 1 as Governour of Cyprus (that is to say before Othello arrived), seems rather out of place in the present scene, where he is taking part in festivity not very dignified. In Booth's arrangement of the play he makes Montano enter later (at line 128), just in time to see Cassio stagger off drunk. (See Furness, p. 129.) But Montano is necessary to the dramatic action of the scene; and there is nothing unseemly in his joining, on such an occasion, in a little festivity as long as it was kept within proper bounds, especially as he himself is perfectly sober all the time.—F. A. M.

103. Line 71. And let me the canakin clink, clink.—Halliwell-(Phillips) quotes, from The Knave in Grain new Vampt [a comedy acted with great success "many days together" at the Fortune], Quarto, 1640, by J. D., what appears to be a reference to this scene:

*Lead. Clink, boyes —Toma. Drinke, boyes —
Still. And let the canakin clinke, boyes.*

He adds that "the song itself does not appear to have been discovered" (see Furness, p. 130) Shakespeare treats old ballad snatches a trifle unceremoniously: is he by any chance here giving a free version of a song found in Thomas Ravenscroft's Pammelia, Music's Miscellany or mixed Variety of Pleasant Roundelays, 1609? I reproduce the stanzas as printed in the notes to Bullen's Lyrics (1887), p. 191:

Come drunk to me,
And I to thee,
And then shall we
Full well agree.

I've lov'd the jolly tankard,
Full seven winters and more,
I lov'd it so long that I went upon the Score.
Who loveth not the tankard,
He is no honest man;
And he is no right soldier,
That loveth not the can.

*Tap the canakin, troll the canakin,
Toss the canakin, turn the canakin!*
*Hold now, good son, and fill us a fresh can,
That we may quaff it round from man to man.*

Mr. Bullen does not notice the resemblance which this bears to the Othello fragment Iago's stanza, it may be added, was set to music by Lindley in his Dramatic Songs of Shakspeare, 1816. Two other compositions are mentioned by the editors of the volume (1884) on Shakespeare's songs in the publications of the New Shakspeare Society, page 52. Since writing the above I have noted the refrain "tap the canakin" in Dekker's Shoemaker's Holiday, ii. 3, where Lacy, disguised as a Dutchman, sings a stanza which ends

Tap eens de canneken, Drincke, Schone Mannekin.

—Dekker's Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 21.

[Ff. print line 74 thus (substantially):

O, man's life's but a span;

which, if it did not interfere with the setting of the song, is decidedly preferable to the reading of the Qq.—F. A. M.]

104. Lines 79, 80: your DANE, your GERMAN, and your swag-bellid HOLLANDER.—References to the drinking faculties of the three nations here mentioned are common enough. Compare Merchant of Venice, i. 2. 92, with note 61 to that play; and Hamlet, i. 4. 17-20. So, to go outside Shakespeare's Works, Thomas Lord Cromwell, 'iii. 3:

*In Germany and Holland, riot serves;
And he that most can drink, most he deserves;*

—Tauchnitz ed. p. 106.

and Heywood, Rape of Lucrece, iii. 3: "Thou shouldst drink well, for thou hast been in the German wars;" also same play, iii. 5, Valerius' song—Heywood's Select Plays, Mermaid ed. pp. 373, 384; and Sir Thomas Browne's Religio Medici:

L'Espagnol superbe, et l'Alleman yraguise

Part ii. section iv. 7.

and Massinger's Great Duke of Florence, ii. 2:

drink more in two hours

Than the Dutchmen or the Dane in four and twenty.

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 231

Also Middleton's The Spanish Gypsy, i. 1. 5: "it's as rare to see a Spaniard a drunkard as a German sober"

105. Line 82: Is your ENGLISHMAN so EXPERT in his DRINKING?—Expert is the reading of Q. 1. Ff Q 2, Q. 3 have exquisite. Shakespeare here and in the Hamlet passage (i. 4. 17–20) is satirizing the growing vice of drunkenness in England, a vice which many writers regarded as an importation from the Netherlands. See a very curious paper on Drinking-Customs in England in Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature, Chandos ed. in pp. 292–300. Disraeli gives the following extract from Nash's Pierce Penniless: "Superfluity in drink is a sin that ever since we have mixed ourselves with the Low Countries is counted honourable; but before we knew their lingering wars, was held in that highest degree of hatred that might be. Then if we had seen a man go wallowing in the streets, or lain sleeping under the board, we should have spit at him, and warned all our friends out of his Company" (Pierce Penniless, 1595, sig. F2). Camden in his History of Queen Elizabeth, bk. iii., writes to the same effect; likewise Peacham in the Compleat Gentleman, 1622, p. 123: "But since we had to doe in the quarrell of the Netherlands . . . the custom of drinking and pledging healthes was brought over into England; wherein let the Dutch be their own judges, if we equall them or not; yea, I think rather excell them" (quoted by Furness, Variorum Othello, p. 131).

For what follows the commentators refer us to Beaumont and Fletcher, The Captain, iii. 2:

Lod. Are the Englishmen

Such stubborn drinkers?

Piso. Not a leak at sea

Can suck more liquor, you shall have their children

Christen'd in mull'd sack, and at five years old

Able to knock a Dane down.

—Dyce's ed. ii. p. 257.

Lilly speaks to much the same effect in Sapho and Phao, iii. 2:

O! that's a roving Englishman,
Who in deepe healths do's so excell,

From Dutch and French he beares the bel.

—Works, vol. i. p. 188.

It may be added that a severe statute against drunkenness was passed in 1607—4 James I. chap. v.—the terms of which are given in the notes to Furnivall's edition of Stubbes' Anatomy of Abuses, part i. p. 285; while for further information on the whole subject the reader must be referred to Hunter's Illustrations, vol. ii. pp. 220, 221.

106. Line 88: to overthrow your ALMAIN.—Almain = German, occurs very frequently. The following are some of the instances that I have noted, substantive and adjective; Edward III. i. 1:

to solicit too

The Emperor of Almaigne in one name.

—Tauchnitz ed. p. 6.

We Germans have no changes in our dances,

An Almain and an upspring, that is all.

—Alphonso's Emperor of Germany, iii., x.

Chapman's Works, ed. 1874, p. 397.

"Slavomians, Almain rutters" (Tamburlaine, part II. i. 1. 22), and the same expression in Doctor Faustus, i. 1. 219—Bullen's Marlowe, i pp. 112 and 219. The use was not merely literary; Master John Newbery, writing from Goa, 20th January, 1584, to a friend in London, says: "All nations do and may come freely to Ormus; as Frenchmen, Flemings, Almains" (Arber's English Garner, iii. 180). The word held its own in England till at least the end of the seventeenth century; for instance, Dryden in his Epistle to Etheredge has the couplet:

But spite of all these fable-makers,

He never sowed on Almain acres.

—Etheredge's Works, ed. 1888, p. 404.

Cf. too, Dryden's Play The Assignment, ii. 1.

107. Line 90: I 'll do you justice.—Steevens explains this as—"I will drink as much as you do." Compare II. Henry IV. v. 3. 76, where Falstaff says to Silence, the stage-direction being [seeing him take off a bumper]: "Why, now you have done me right."

108. Line 92: King Stephen was a worthy peer.—The stanzas are taken from a ballad entitled "Take thy old Cloak about thee," which Percy printed in his Reliques. In the reprint of Bishop Percy's Folio MS. by Professor Hales and Dr. Furnivall the song appears under a different name—"Bell my Wiffe"—with the substitution of King Harry for King Stephen; and the editors remark that the dialect and general character of the piece imply a northern origin; also that it is really a political song, "a controversy between the Spirits of Social Revolution and Social Conservatism" (vol. ii. p. 321). I give their version of what Iago sings:

King Harry was a very good k[ing,]

I trow his hose cost but a Crowne;

he thought them xad ouer to deere,

therfor he called the taylor Clowne

he was king and wore the Crowne, and thouse but of a low degree;

its pride that putts this cumtrye doune;

man! put thye old Cloake about thee!

—Ut supra, p. 324.

The popularity of this old song is shown by the number of references to it which occur. Compare The Tempest, iv. 1. 221–223: "O King Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano! look what a wardrobe here is for thee!" So Dekker's Guls Hornbook (1609): "his breeches were not so much worth as K. Stephen's, that cost but a poore noble" (Dekker's Prose Works, Huth Library, ii. p. 210); and Greene's Quippe for an Ypstart Courtier, 1592. This last reference is worth giving in full: "I tell thee sawy skipiack," says the laudator temporis acti, "it was a good and a blessed time here in England, when K Stephen wore a pair of cloth breeches of a Noble a Paire, and thought them passing costlye: then did hee count Westminster hal to little to be his dining chamber, and his almes was not bare bones, instead of broken meat, but lusty chines of beefe fel into the poore mans basket" (Greene's Works, Huth Library, vol. xi. p. 234). Here the point of the allusion is obvious: the speaker pours contempt on his own times, looking back to the old and happy far-off days when the world went so very well.

Though possibly, as we have said, of northern origin, the song is not mentioned in Scotch literature earlier than 1728, when it is given by Allan Ramsay in his Tea-Table Talk. The music of it, based, says Chappell (i. 505), upon the old tune of Green Sleeves, will be found in Caulfield's Collection, vol. ii. p. 68.

As to the reading, I have followed the 1622 Quarto. The Quarto of 1630 and the Folio both have:

King Stephen was and a worthy Peere.

For the redundant and, so common in ballad poetry, compare the song at the end of Twelfth Night.

109 Lines 113-120.—In Hawkins's Life of Edmund Kean (vol. ii. p. 360) will be found a most interesting anecdote of the great actor, which shows how careful he was to study his facts from nature, and also that he did not limit his interest in any play to the part which he played himself. Sitting in the public room of an inn, a friend who was with him asked Edmund Kean when he studied? Pointing to a man at the other end of the room, who was very much intoxicated, he answered, "I am studying now; I wish some of my Cassios were here." Then he went on to explain that in this drunken scene, instead of rolling about ridiculously, Cassio should "try to stand straight when it was impossible," and he said that the only man who ever played this scene properly was Holland. Furness also quotes from Booth: "The traditional 'business,' said to be Charles Kemble's, cannot be improved upon. Cassio drops his handkerchief, and in his effort to recover it, falls on his knees; to account for this position to his companions, he attempts to pray. His clothes being awry, his sword has slipped to his right side, and this confuses him for a moment as to which is his right or his left hand."—F. A. M.

110. Line 135: He'll watch the HOROLOGE a double set.—We have explained this in the foot-note as Johnson explained it, supposing that the dial of the ancient clocks was, like ours, divided into twelve hours only; but Halpin, in his Dramatic Unities (p. 18), says that the Italian horologe had twenty-four hours upon its dial-plate; and Halliwell quotes a description by Admiral Smythe of an ancient clock similarly divided. Halpin absolutely bases an argument on this with regard to the Time Analysis of the play; but surely, as Furness remarks, we are not to take Iago here literally. This is the only passage in which Shakespeare uses the word horologe, nor does it seem to be of common occurrence in the dramatist's time; but it is used by Chaucer and by Heywood in his Epigrammes upon Proverbs, edn. 1598. O. back.

The deuill is in th' orologe, the houres to trye,

Search houres by the Sunne, the deuills diall will lie.

The deuill is in th' orologe, now cheere in boules:

Let the deuill keepe our clocks, while God keepe our soules.

Stevens quotes from The Devil's Charter, by Barnaby Barnes, 1607:

my gracious lord,

By Sisto's horologe 'tis struck eleven.

From these passages and others it would seem that horologe was always used of a clock and never of an hour-glass.

111. Line 152: I'll beat the knave into a TWIGGEN bottle.—Q. read "wicker bottle;" F. 1 hyphens the word thus, Twiggen-Bottle. Booth, quoted by Furness, says that this means "I will slash him till he resembles one of those Chianti flasks covered with straw net-work"—such as Cassio probably had just been drinking out of; but this, though very ingenious, is a little far-fetched. The whole passage down to line 156 is printed as prose in Q, but as nine irregular lines in F. 1. Our text is arranged as in the Globe and in Dyce; but I must confess it seems ridiculous to me to attempt to arrange such a passage as verse at all.—F. A. M.

112 Line 164:

Zounds, I bleed still; I am hurt to the death.

[Faints.

It is very difficult to know how to print this line. F. 1 has:

Q 1 has: I bleed still, I am hurt to th' death. He dies.

Q 2: Zounds, I bleed still, I am hurt to the death:

Q 2: I bleed still, I am hurt to the death. He faints.

F 2, F 3, F 4

I bleed still, I am hurt, but not to th' Death.

The omission of Zounds by Q. 2 and Ff. is of no importance. The difficulty is to decide whether the words "He dies" at the end of the line in F. 1 are really a stage-direction, which, as often happens, has got into the text; or whether they are part of the text, and are meant to indicate that, at this point, Montano, ceasing to act on the defensive, as he has done throughout, vigorously attacks Cassio. The fact that Q. 2, which was most probably printed from a theatre copy of the play, has the words he faints in italics, makes it probable that the words "He dies" in F. 1 (printed in roman) were originally a stage-direction. On the other hand, if, at this point, Montano has fallen, half-fainting, into the arms of those near him, it is difficult to understand the reason both for Othello's exclamation in the next line, and for Iago's speech (lines 166-168). True it is that the action is very rapid here, and that Iago might continue crying out to Cassio and Montano to stop, after all necessity for doing so had ceased, in order to emphasize his own zeal in the cause of order. But there is nothing inconsistent with what follows in Montano, at this point, vigorously attacking Cassio. All that he says afterwards is that he acted in self-defence. (See lines 203, 204.) But this would have been equally true, even if he had been driven, by the violence of his adversary's attack, to drop a purely defensive attitude. As Dr. Furness remarks, it does not do to inquire too closely in a scene which depends so much upon hurried action; but I think that the probable explanation may be that this line (164) has got out of its place; or, at any rate, that Iago's speech (lines 166-168) is intended to be spoken immediately after Othello's entrance; for clearly that speech cannot be spoken if one of the combatants is in a passive and fainting condition.—F. A. M.

113 Line 170: Are we TURND TURKS.—In Hamlet, iii. 2. 287, the phrase turn Turk means to change completely; so, too, in Much Ado, iii. 4. 57; cf. also Sedley's Bellamira, iv. 8: "I will turn Turk, but I will avoid wine hereafter." In the present passage the expression derives fresh point from the following reference to the Ottomites. It is as though Othello wished to say—not merely have we changed our natures entirely; but by the change we have become like the very people who, if they could, would do us mortal harm.

114 Line 173: to CARVE FOR his own rage—Compare Hamlet, i. 3 19, 20:

He may not, as unvalu'd persons do,
Carve for himself.

This is the only other passage in which Shakespeare uses this expression, which Schmidt renders "to indulge, to do at a person's pleasure." It arose from the fact that to carve for one's self was a thing one could not often do in Shakespeare's time; as a carver was to be found in the retinue of every gentleman of any means, and at every ordinary, so that the privilege of helping one's self to the choicest morsels was not often enjoyed.—F. A. M.

115. Lines 179-181:

friends all but now, even now,
IN QUARTER, and IN TERMS like bride and groom
Devesting them for bed.

There has been much dispute as to the meaning of the word quarter here. Johnson explained it "In their quarters, at their lodging" (Var. Ed. vol. ix. p. 329); but that it could not be. Malone corrected this to "on our station," comparing Timon, v. 4 59-61:

not a man
Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
Of regular justice in your city's bounds.

Henley says that the quarter referred to "was that apartment of the castle assigned to the officers on guard, where Othello, after giving Cassio his orders, had, a little before, left him" (Var. Ed. vol. ix. p. 329). In support of the meaning given in our foot-note Schmidt quotes from Comedy of Errors, ii. 1. 108:

So he would keep fair quarter with his bed; and he compares John, v. 5. 20: "keep good quarter and good care to-night." Reed quotes from The Dumb Knight, iii. 1: "Did not you hold fair quarter and commerce with all the spies of Cyprus?" As regards the use of terms, Schmidt would render that word here "relation, footing," comparing Lear, i. 2 171: "Parted you in good terms?" and again Cymbeline, iii. 1. 80: "if you seek us afterwards in terms (i.e. as an enemy), you shall find us in our salt-water girdle." According to this interpretation in terms would simply equal our common expression on terms; but on the whole the meaning given in our foot-note seems preferable.

116. Line 182. As if some PLANET had UNWITTED men.—That the planets exercised a malignant influence was a common superstition in Elizabethan times, often referred to by Shakespeare; e.g. Hamlet, i. 1. 182:

The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike.

So Coriolanus, ii. 2. 117, 118:

Coriol like a planet.
struck

Cf. Titus Andronicus, ii. 4. 14; and the use, still surviving, of moon-struck.

117. Lines 188, 189:

Oth. How COMES it, Michael, you ARE thus forgot?
Cas. I pray you, pardon me:—I cannot speak.

Qq. read:

How came it Michael you were thus forgot.

But there does not seem any necessity for the past tense.

For a similar use of the verb to be with an intransitive verb, compare below, iii. 3. 265, 266:

or, for I am declin'd
Into the vale of years.

Booth, in his acting copy, marked you here as to be emphasized. In Fechter's acting-edition the following stage-direction is inserted after pardon me in the next line: Cassio speaks thickly, stops short, and then in deep humiliation. We have indicated the pause in the text by a break.—F. A. M.

118. Line 195: And SPEND your rich opinion—That is, waste. Perhaps, too, there may be some reference to the technical use of spend as a hunting term; cf. Venus and Adonis, 695.

Then do they spend their mouths.

For opinion=reputation, compare above, i. 3. 225, and Merchant of Venice, i. 1. 102: "this fool gudgeon, this opinion."

119. Line 206: having my best judgment COLLIED—Properly collied signifies blackened, as with coal; so Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 1. 145: "in the collied night;" see note 25 to that play. The word is well illustrated by Cotgrave, who gives "charbonner . . . to collowe, to bleach, or make black with a coal: charbonneux . . . coalle, full of coales: charbonné . . . collowed, smeered, blacked with coales." Here the sense is "having obscured my judgment." Qq. read coold, an obvious misprint; while Collier's emendation, quelled, is quite unnecessary.

120. Lines 216, 217:

In night, and on the court AND guard OF safety!
'T is monstrous.

So Qq. and Ff; but this reading is vigorously attacked by Theobald, who altered it to "court of guard and safety," an emendation which Malone adopted, supporting it by a long note, in which he pointed out that the expression "court of guard" was a recognized phrase for the guard-room, quoting from this very play, ii. 1. 220: "The lieutenant to-night watches on the court-of-guard." He also compares line 167 above:

Have you forgot all sense of place and duty?

in which Qq. and Ff. both misprint: "all place of sense and duty." Certainly the slight transposition, which Malone so ably supports, is a very plausible one; and I cannot see that Steevens does much to support the reading of the old copies when he quotes Bottom's ridiculous line from Midsummer's Night's Dream, iii. 1. 192:

I shall desire you of more acquaintance.

Malone says that the expression guard of safety is nonsense; but could it not mean the "keeping watch over the security of the town?" Certainly the preposition on seems to support the old reading. Cowden Clarke explains the passage "in the very spot and guarding place of safety." As to monstrous, which we have marked in a foot-note to be pronounced as a trisyllable, it was undoubtedly often printed monstrous, and so Capell printed it. According to Furness (p. 143), "There is also a third spelling, monstruous, found in Surrey's poems, and in the Faerie Queene, i. ii. line 366 ed. Grosart."—F. A. M.

121. Line 247: doth MINCE this matter.—That is, lessen, extenuate the matter. We may compare the French mincer, mince=small

122. Line 254: Lead him off—Malone thought that this was a stage-direction which had got into the text, and it certainly looks very like it. It is exactly in the style of such directions as we find marked in the margin of MS. plays, which are generally couched in the imperative mood. It is not a very elegant expression in Othello's mouth, and better expressed by a gesture on the part of the actor

123. Line 263: I have lost the immortal part of myself—It may be worth while to point out how completely the scene through which he has just passed has sobered Cassio; after a brief spell of frenzy he is himself again, and feels only too well what this terrible interval has cost him. Iago's speech may be compared or contrasted with his words in the next act, scene 3, lines 155-161.

124. Line 268: there is more SENSE in that than in reputation—Qq. read offence, which an anonymous commentator (apud Cambridge edd.) suggested was a misprint for of sense. Singer adopts the reading of Qq, pronouncing the reading of Ff. "an evident mistake;" but surely most commentators would exactly reverse that pronouncement. Iago is ridiculing Cassio's sensibility as to his reputation, and he says that there is more sense; i.e. feeling, in a bodily wound than in a wound to your reputation.

125. Line 276: to AFFRIGHT an imperious lion—Some commentators find that this word does not suit the sense. Staunton proposed to appease; but surely Iago's meaning is that Othello has punished Cassio to frighten the fiercer spirits in Cyprus from committing a similar offence.—F. A. M.

126. Line 330: against any LAY.—For lay=wager, stake, see II. Henry VI v. 2. 26, 27:

Chf. My soul and body on the action both!
York. A dreadful lay!

Compare, too, The Honest Whore, part I. i. 4:

Cas. I'll wage a hundred ducats upon the head on't, that it moves him, frets him and galls him.

Pro. Done, 'tis a lay.

—Dekker, Select Plays in Mermaid ed. p. x08.

127. Line 358: They do SUGGEST.—Suggest, in the sense of tempt, occurs not infrequently; cf. Sonnet cxliv. lines 1, 2:

Two loves I have of comfort and despair,
Which like two spirits do suggest me still.

128. Line 361: That she REPEALS him.—For repeal=recall, cf. Richard II. ii. 2. 49:

The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself.

So Julius Caesar, iii. 1. 51; and elsewhere.

129. Line 392: And bring him JUMP when he may Cassio find.—That is, "exactly when." So Hamlet, i. 1. 65: "jump at this dead hour," where Ff. read just; and see note 11 of that play.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

130. Line 1: Masters, PLAY here.—Alluding to the old custom of waking people the morning after their marriage with a song or piece of concerted music. See Romeo and Juliet, note 144; and as an instance in point compare the following from Lilly's Mother Bombe, v. 8:

Syn. Come, fellowes, 'tis almost day, let us have a fit of mirth at Sperantus' doore, and give a song to the bride

Nas. I believe they are asleep, it were pittie to awake them.

And again in the same scene:

Bed . . . what shall we sing?

Syn. The Love knot, for that's best for a briddall

Sing—Good morrow, faire bride, and send you joy of your briddall.

—Works, vol. II pp. 132, 133.

Ritson says that hautboys were the wind-instruments used.

131. Line 2: and bid "Good morrow, general"—Good morrow, general, ought, I think, to be printed this way, though the marks of quotation are wanting in the Folio.

132. Lines 3, 4: have your instruments been in NAPLES, that they speak 't the nose thus?—This must be a reference to the Neapolitan Pulcinella, although in the earliest accounts of that old-world hero the extreme nasalism which we now associate with Mr. Punch is not mentioned. Punch, by the way, does not appear to have found his way to England till 1662, when, on May 9th, Pepys saw "the famous Italian puppet-play" in Covent Garden; cf., too, Evelyn's Diary, August 21st, 1667. England's most distinguished exponent of the "pity and terror" of Pulcinella was the Powell whom the Spectator immortalized, March 16th, 1710. France had its Jean Brioché, friend, patron, and possessor of illustrious Fagotin, le singe de Brioché. Shakespeare, I suppose, heard of the Neapolitan entertainment from some traveller-friend; or was he ever in Italy? [A very unpleasant explanation is given by some commentators of this sentence; but there can be little doubt that the allusion is to the nasal tone so very prevalent both in the speaking and singing of Neapolitans. Everyone who has been at Naples for two or three days, and has heard any of the national melodies sung in the streets,—such as the well-known Santa Lucia,—will remember how disagreeable this nasal twang is. Having been present myself, during a long residence at Naples, at several great musical functions—as it is the fashion to call them—I can testify that this singing through the nose is not limited to the street singers; it often mars one's enjoyment of music otherwise well rendered.—F. A. M.]

133. Line 13: he desires you, OF ALL LOVES.—So Q. 1; Ff. have for love's sake.—The same phrase occurs in Merry Wives, ii. 2. 119: "Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves;" and Mida. Night's Dream, ii. 2. 154: "Speak, of all loves!"

134. Lines 42, 43:

I never knew

A FLORENTINE more kind and honest.

There is a pleasant sketch of Florentine character in Thomas Lord Cromwell, in the person of Frescobald, the merchant. It must not, of course, be supposed, that Cassio calls Iago a Florentine, which would be in direct contradiction with v. 1. 89-91; he merely wishes to say, "I never knew any one kinder, even among my own countrymen."

ACT III. SCENE 3.

135 Lines 12, 13:

*He shall in STRANGENESS stand no further off
Than in a politic distance.*

Qq have "in strangest" The Cambridge edd. record the very plausible anonymous conjecture "in's strangest" Shakespeare is rather fond of the use of the word strange and strangeness in this sense. Compare the well-known line in Romeo and Juliet, ii. 2. 102:

I should have been more strange, I must confess, that is, "distant," and, more apposite to the passage in our text, II. Henry VI. iii. 1. 5

The strangeness of his alter'd countenance.

136. Line 23: I'll WATCH him TAME.—See Troilus and Cressida, note 174; and to the instance there given add the following from The London Prodigal, i. 1:

I' faith, brother, like a mad, unbridled colt,
Or as a hawk, that never stoop'd to lure:
The one must be tam'd with an iron bit,
The other must be watch'd, or still she's wild

—Tauchnitz ed p 227.

Probably the reference is the same in Coriolanus, v. 1. 56.

137. Line 54: To suffer with him.—So Ff.; Q 1 has "I suffer with him," a reading preferred by Malone, Steevens, and many other editors. If it be adopted there should be a semicolon at the end of the previous line. The reading of Q 1 perhaps makes Desdemona's sympathy with Cassio a little more marked.

138. Line 70: Or stand so MAMMERING on—Mammer=to hesitate, is an uncommon word. Latham gives two good instances of its use: one in A World of Wonders (1608), p. 326: "if he stand in amaze and mammering to hear such glibberish;" the other in Drant's Translation of Horace (1587), "when she daynes to send for him, then mammering he doth doate" (ll 3) And to these Halliwell adds a reference from Lyl: "I stooode in a great mamer-ing, how I might behaue myself" (Euphues, Arber's ed. p. 299). Wedgwood appears to treat the word as a corruption of stammer.

139 Line 90: Excellent WRETCH!—This is the reading of the old copies, which Theobald, Hamner, and some others, quite unnecessarily, altered to vench. Wretch is used still, in some parts of England, as a term of endearment. Halliwell (Archaic and Provincial Dict.) gives it as being still so used in Gloucestershire. Those who prefer vench quote from below, in this play, v. 2. 272: "O ill-starr'd vench!"

140. Lines 91, 92:

and when I love thee not,

CHAOS IS COME AGAIN.

So Venus and Adonis, 1019, 1020:

For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

Steevens first quoted the above; and Hunter, in his New Illustrations (vol. ii. p. 282), notices this as one of the many passages in this play which remind us of Venus and Adonis and of the Rape of Lucrece. Singer says the original idea is to be found in Hesiod's Theogony, where Chaos ceases when Love appears.

141. Lines 106, 107:

HE ECHOES me,

As if there were some monster in HIS thought.

This is said aside. The Folio reading is far less graphic:

Alas, thou echo'st me,

As if there were some monster in thy thought.

Delius follows the Folio, like Dyce, I have kept to the text of the 1622 Quarto

It is quite clear, I think, that Ford had this scene in his mind's eye when he wrote the passages in the third act (scene 3) of Love's Sacrifice, in which D'Avolos rouses the suspicions of the Duke. Here, for instance, is a typical speech:

Duke. Thou art a traitor: do not think the gloss
Of smooth evasion, by your cunning jests
And coining of your politician's brain,
Shall juggle me off, I'll know't, I vow I will.
*Did I not note your dark abrupted ends
Of words half spokel your 'wells, if all were known'?*
Your short 'I like not that' your girds and 'buts'?
Yes, sir, I did; such broken language argues
More matter than your subtlety shall hide:
Tell me, what is't? by honour's self I'll know

—Mermaid edn. of Ford, pp. 338, 339

There is much in Ford's drama that suggests comparison with Othello.

142 Line 123: They're close DELATIONS.—The sense required is "secret informations;" cf. delator in Latin, meaning an informer. According to Minshew, dilate and delate are synonymous, and dilations is the reading of the Folios in the present passage. It may be noted, too, that in Hamlet, i. 2. 38, the Quartos (except the imperfect one of 1603) give delated, while Ff. read dilated. As to the sense, no exactly parallel use of the word appears to be forthcoming. In Bacon delate=to carry, convey; in Minshew's Dictionary delate=to speak at large, i.e. as we should say, to dilate. But I can see no reason for supposing that Shakespeare was unacquainted with the classical meaning of the word: there must be many Latinisms in his vocabulary which are not found in the works of his contemporaries.

143. Line 135, 136:

*I am not bound to that all slaves are free to.
Utter my thoughts?*

Q. 1 has:

I am not bound to that all slaves are free to,
Utter my thoughts?

Q. 2 has the same, except that it has a colon after thoughts instead of a note of interrogation. Ff. have, by mistake:

I am not bound to that: All slaves are free:
Utter my thoughts?

The reading in our text is that usually adopted; but it is quite possible that the reading of Q. 2 may be the right one, and that Utter my thoughts may be part of the same sentence, that is: "I am not bound to do that all slaves are free not to do," viz. utter my thoughts.

144. Lines 140, 141:

*Keep LEETS and law-days, and in SESSION sit
With meditations lawful?*

That is, no heart is so absolutely pure that some unchaste thoughts may not be found in it, sitting, as it were, in council by the side of good and noble ideas. Shakespeare is using his favourite legal imagery, which displeased Warburton as "wretchedly forced and quaint." The Court Leet was one of the Manorial Courts which were the outcome of the private jurisdictions of Sac and Soc. To enter into its history would be beside the purpose of a commentary; the judicious reader may consult on the subject Bright's History, i. p. 76, or Feilden's admirable Short Constitutional History of England, p. 64; to say nothing of Stubbs. Session, as in Sonnet xxx lines 1, 2:

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past.

145. Line 157: Who steals my purse steals trash, &c.—The thought developed in these lines is simple enough, and to suppose that Shakespeare was indebted to some one else for it would be truly ridiculous. Still, as an interesting parallel, the passage which Hunter quotes from Wilson's Arte of Rhetoric (1585) is worth inserting, it is as follows: "The places of Logique help oft for amplification. As, where men have a wrong opinion, and think theft a greater fault than slander, one might prove the contrary as well by circumstances as by arguments. And first, he might shew that slander is theft, and every slanderer is a thief. For as well the slanderer as the thief do take away another man's possession against the owner's will. After that he might show that a slanderer is worse than any thief, because a good man's name is better than all the goods in the world, and that the loss of money may be recovered, but the loss of a man's good name cannot be called back again: and a thief may restore that again which he hath taken from him, but a slanderer cannot give a man his good name which he hath taken from him. Again, he that stealeth goods or cattle robs only but one man, but an evil-tongued man infecteth all their minds unto whose ears this report shall come" (p. 126). See Hunter's Illustrations, ii. p. 233.

146. Line 166:

*It is the GREEN-EY'D monster, which doth MOCK
The meat it feeds on*

Green-eyed as applied to jealousy is a conventional epithet, like the Latin lividus; cf. Merchant of Venice, iii. 2. 110; we still speak of a person as being green with envy. Elsewhere in Shakespeare jealousy is yellow; cf. The Winter's Tale, ii. 3. 106, 107, and Merry Wives, i. 3. 113. Mock is difficult, and some editors adopt the emendation make; the sense then is simple enough: jealousy itself invents causes of suspicion, and, feeding on them, grows greater. Perhaps the idea intended by mock is, that the jealous man plays with appearances and signs which seem to him to point to evil much as a cat plays with its victim. Some commentators explain that the meat it feeds on is the victim of jealousy, i.e. the jealous man himself. What argues rather strongly in favour of make is Emilia's diagnosis of jealousy in the next scene, lines 159-162. Still the reading of the copies is not impossible. [May not mock mean here to "imitate," "feign?" Compare III. Henry VI. iii. 3. 255:

For mocking marriage with a dame of France:

and Tim. i. 1. 35:

It is a pretty mocking of the life.

It seems to me that mock in this sense is more expressive than make; for it implies, what is true, that jealousy is self-conscious, that it knows the food on which it lives is false, a delusion, not a reality.—F. A. M.]

147. Line 170: yet STRONGLY loves—So Qq. The Folio has soundly, with which compare Henry V. v. 2. 105: "if you will love me soundly with your French heart"

148. Line 186: Where virtue is, these are more virtuous.—The sense appears to be: these accomplishments are accessions to virtue—they add to the grace and beauty of virtue, as though Shakespeare had written:

Where these are, virtue is more virtuous.

149. Line 210. To SEEL her father's EYES up close as OAK.—We have already had seel; see i. 3. 270. It is a term borrowed from falconry, seeling being a process which gave way to the more humane custom of hooding the hawk. The word is used in Macbeth, iii. 2. 46: "seeling night;" and again in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 112: "The wise gods seel our eyes." Cotgrave has: "siller les yeux: to seele, or sow up, the eyelids;" and Furness (Variorum Othello, pp. 76, 77) quotes from Turberville's Book of Falconrie, 1575, a rather gruesome account of the process. Skeat connects with O. F. cil, eyelid, L. cilium, eyelid, eyelash; and celare, to hide. He remarks that the word should not be confused with ceiling, which is identical with ciel=heaven, caelum, &c.

Close as oak does not seem to have much point, and Staunton's suggestion—"close as hawke's"—is certainly worth mentioning.

150. Lines 227, 228:

Oth. And yet, how nature erring from itself,—

Iago. Ay, there's the point: as—to be bold with you—

This passage is an extremely subtle one from the actor's point of view. It is evident that Iago interrupts Othello here, eagerly availing himself of something more than his mere words, some gesture, or tone in his voice, which indicates that he is recalling some circumstance that tells against Desdemona's truth and loyalty. Booth says that in line 227 Othello refers to his colour, and adds that his father "indicated this by a glance at his hand as it passed down before his eyes from his forehead."

But it is doubtful whether Othello is not rather referring in his mind to those strange inconsistencies in human nature, more especially in that of women; the inconsistencies that manifest themselves often in evil deeds, which their fellow-creatures, with their limited power of reading the human heart, cannot reconcile with their habitual conduct. In line 228 Booth gave what was, as far as I know, quite an original interpretation. Instead of making the words to be bold with you an apologetic parenthesis, as they are usually interpreted, he took them to refer to the boldness of Desdemona with Othello, which was in direct contradiction to the character of her given by her father, i. 3. 94-96:

A maiden never bold;

Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blush'd at her self.

This is an ingenious but surely rather a strained interpretation. Iago has quite sufficient to go upon if Othello's speech is explained as I have explained it above; and he would naturally preface his reminder that Desdemona has rejected many matches with men of her own clime, complexion, and degree, with some apologetic expression. If the elder Booth's interpretation were the right one we should rather expect nor instead of not.—F. A. M.

151. Line 240: Set on thy wife to observe. leave me, Iago.—This line requires to be given with the greatest significance on the part of the actor; for here Othello takes the first step on the road to self-degradation, and he cannot, with his naturally frank and noble nature, do so without a feeling of shame. To set on his wife's confidant and friend to act as a spy upon her is a meanness to which, unless his nature had been poisoned by jealousy, he never could have sunk. It is, perhaps, his consciousness of the contemptible nature of the step that he is taking which makes him so anxious, at this point, to get rid of Iago.—F. A. M.

152. Lines 250–252:

*Note if your lady strain his entertainment
With any strong or vehement importunity;
Much will be seen in that.*

Compare with these lines, and indeed with the scene generally, the following extract from Cinthio's story: "He (the ensign, i.e. Iago) determined to wait till time and place afforded him a fit opportunity for entering on his wicked design (i.e. of making Othello jealous of Cassio); and it was not long before the Moor degraded the Lieutenant (Cassio) for having drawn his sword and wounded a soldier upon guard. This accident was so painful to Desdemona, that she often tried to obtain for him her husband's pardon. In the meantime the Moor had observed to the ensign that his wife teased him so much in favour of the lieutenant, that he feared he should be obliged at last to restore him to his commission. This appeared to that villain the proper moment for opening his scheme of treachery, which he began by saying: 'Perhaps Desdemona is fond of his company.' 'And why?' said the Moor. 'Nay,' replied he, 'I do not chuse to meddle between man and wife; but if you watch her properly, you will understand me.' Nor would he, to the earnest entreaties of the Moor, afford any further explanation. These words had stung the Moor so severely, that he endeavoured perpetually to find out their meaning, and became exceedingly melancholy. Whereupon, when his wife some time afterwards repeated her solicitations that he would forgive the lieutenant, and not sacrifice the service and friendship of so many years to one slight fault, particularly as the lieutenant and the soldier were friends again, the Moor grew angry, and said to her, 'It is somewhat extraordinary, Desdemona, that you should take so much trouble about this fellow; he is neither your brother nor your relation, that he should claim so much of your affection'" (ut supra, pp. 290–292).

153. Line 260: If I do prove her HAGGARD.—Properly a haggard was an untrained hawk. Often, however, it was used in a slang sense to mean a loose woman; so Courtall remarks in She Would If She Could, iii. 1: "I protest, yonder comes the old haggard" (Etheredge's Works, ed. 1888, p. 161). See Much Ado, note 170.

154 Lines 262, 263:

*I'd WHISTLE her OFF, and LET her DOWN the WIND,
To PREY at FORTUNE.*

I borrow here Johnson's note: "Falconers always let fly the hawk against the wind; if she flies with the wind behind her, she seldom returns. If therefore a hawk was for any reason to be dismissed, she was let down the wind, and from that time shifted for herself and preyed at fortune."

155 Line 266: into the VALE OF YEARS.—Gray, I suppose, remembered this when he wrote in the Ode on Eton:

*Lo! in the vale of years beneath,
A grisly troop are seen.*

"Vale of life" in his Elegy has rather a different sense.

156. Line 276: Even then this FORKED plague.—See Trouilus and Cressida, notes 24 and 39. "Make me a knight o' the forked order," says a character in Wilson's fine play, The Cheats, v. 2 (Wilson's Works (ed. 1874), p. 91).

157 Lines 277–279:

Desdemona comes.

*If she be false, O, then heaven mocks itself!—
I'll not believe't.*

"Divine!" says Coleridge "The effect of innocence and the better genius" (Lectures on Shakspeare, Bohn's ed. p. 392).

The sight of Desdemona banishes for a moment doubt and suspicion; Othello is restored to his better nature.

158. Line 296: I'll have the work TA'EN OUT.—Here, and in the next scene, line 180, take out=copy. Compare Middleton's Women Beware Women, i. 1:

She intends

To take out other works in a new sampler.

—Middleton's Select Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 266.

159 Line 330: Not poppy, nor MANDRAGORA.—There is a dissertation on the "herbe Mandragoras" in Pliny's Natural History; it "cureth," we are told, "weeping and watering eyes;" also, "it may be used safely enough for to procure sleep" (Holland's Pliny, ed. 1633, vol. ii. p. 235). Shakespeare refers to it again as a soporific in Antony and Cleopatra, i. 5. 4–6; the Duchess of Malfi, in that superlatively great scene (2) of the fourth act of Webster's masterpiece, says:

Come, violent death,

Serve for mandragora to make me sleep.

—Webster and Tourneur in the Mermaid Series, p. 210 and Burton includes "mandrake . . . and syrup of poppy" in his list of sovereign simples for sleeplessness (Anatomy of Melancholy, pt. ii. sec. 5, mem. 1, sub. 6, ed. 1881, p. 456). Compare, too, the following:

The Mandrake cald in Greeke Mandragoras,

Some of his vertues if you looke to know,

The Juice that freshly from the roote doth passe,

Purgeth all feame like blacke Helleborus:

'Tis good for paine engendred in the eies;

By wine made of the roote doth sleepe arise

—Chester's Love's Martyr (A Dialogue), New Shakspeare Society Publications, p. 82

The Sybil in Lilly's Sapho and Phao remarks (ii. 1), amongst a series of valuable precepts, "sow next thy vines Mandrage," with the idea presumably that the produce of the vineyard should prove more than ordinarily sleep-inducing; see Lilly's Dramatic Works, Fairholt's ed. i. p. 172. Further references to the same purport will be found in Hunter's Illustrations, vol ii pp 284, 285 As to poppy, everyone will remember Keats' sound asleep,

Drowns with the fume of poppies.—Ode to Autumn

160 Line 354: and CIRCUMSTANCE of glorious war!—Circumstance=elaborate detail. "So singular a use of the word," says Hunter, "requires something to show that it was not without precedent. Take the following from Langley's Translation of Polydore Virgil, where we find that the Romans celebrated their dead 'with great pomp and circumstance.' Fol. 122. b." (New Illustrations, vol ii. p. 286). For another instance of this use (which, after all, is not so very rare) of circumstance, cf. The Woman in the Moone, i. 1. 13, 14:

All these, and all their endless circumstance,
Here I survey

—Lilly's Works, Fairholt's ed. vol ii. p. 153.

In Hamlet, i. 5. 127, the sense is, "without any circumstance;" so again in The Merchant of Venice, i. 1. 154:

To wind about my love with circumstance.

161 Lines 359-373.—In this passage Othello reaches the climax of his passion. It is here that the actor produces his greatest effect; though the whole scene is full of effects most various and subtle. Edmund Kean used to take hold of Iago by the throat at line 359; while Booth and other actors deferred this action till line 368. It is better, perhaps, to follow Edmund Kean, as both the speeches, 359-366, 368-373 are spoken in what may be called "the white heat" of passion. During the last speech Othello forces Iago on to his knee, in which position the latter speaks the first two lines of his speech beginning O grace, rising at line 375. It was at this point of the scene that Salvini, when in England, roused his audience to the greatest enthusiasm; but with all respect to that great actor, whose Othello was a performance full of beauties, I think that his reading of this whole scene was entirely wrong. He seemed to me to sacrifice much of the subtlety, variety, and intensity of all that went before in order to attain his climax here, which he did by throwing Iago on the ground and putting his foot upon him, and then starting back with an expression of loathing on his face. This was very powerful, and to those who did not understand one word of the language Salvini was speaking, it was very effective; but surely, even in his rage, Othello would have too much respect for Iago to treat him thus; when, in the fury of his passion, he has taken him by the throat and forced him on to his knees, it seems as if the next moment he is appalled at the effects of his own violence.—F. A. M.

162. Line 386: HER name, that was as fresh.—So the Quarto of 1680; in Q. 1 (1622) the speech is wanting. The Folios give "my name," with a full stop after proof. My must, I think, be wrong, because of the words mine own two lines lower down, and because Othello would hardly apply such vauntful language to himself. Moreover, the whole passage is concerned with Desdemona; the transition to Othello would be very awkward.

163. Lines 433-435:

*Tell me but this,—
Have you not sometimes seen a handkerchief
Spotted with strawberries in your wife's hand?*

It may be convenient to give here Cinthio's account of the handkerchief episode; the variations from Shakespeare speak for themselves: "I have already said that Desdemona went frequently to the ensign's (Iago's) house, and passed great part of the day with his wife. The villain had observed that she often brought with her a handkerchief that the Moor had given her, and which, as it was very delicately worked in the Moorish taste, was very highly valued by them both; he determined to steal it, and by its means complete her ruin. He had a little girl of three years old that was much caressed by Desdemona; and one day, when that unhappy woman was on a visit to this villain, he took up the child in his arms and presented it to Desdemona, who received it and pressed it to her bosom. In the same instant this deceiver stole from her sash the handkerchief, with such dexterity, that she did not perceive him: and went away with it in very high spirits. Desdemona went home, and, taken up with other thoughts, never recollected her handkerchief till some days after; when, not being able to find it, she began to fear that the Moor should ask her for it, as he often did." Iago, having got possession of the handkerchief, tells Othello that Cassio had boasted to him (Iago) that Desdemona had made him (Cassio) a present of the "napkin;" Othello determines to question Desdemona; "if his wife had no longer the handkerchief in her possession, it would be a proof that the ensign (Iago) had told him the truth. For which reason one day after dinner, among other subjects, he asked her for this handkerchief. The poor woman, who had long apprehended this, blushed excessively at this question, and, to hide her change of colour, which the Moor had very accurately observed, ran to her wardrobe and pretended to look for it. After having searched for some time, 'I cannot conceive,' said she, 'what is become of it! have not you taken it?'—'Had I taken it,' replied he, 'I should not have asked you for it. But you may look for it and this time more at your ease.' Leaving her then, he began to reflect what would be the best way of putting to death his wife and the lieutenant, and how he might avoid being prosecuted for murder. . . . The Moor . . . did all in his power to prove what he desired not to find true (i.e. that his wife was guilty), and begged the ensign to make him see the handkerchief in possession of the lieutenant (Cassio). Although this was a difficult undertaking, yet the villain promised to do all in his power to give him a satisfactory proof of this. The lieutenant had a woman in the house, who was a notable embroiderer in muslin, and who, struck with the beauty of Desdemona's handkerchief (which Iago, I should note, had secretly left in Cassio's lodging) determined to copy it before it should be returned to her. She set about making one like it, and while she was at work, the ensign discovered that she sat at a window where any one who passed in the street might see her. This he took care to point out to the Moor, who was then fully persuaded that his chaste and innocent wife was an adulteress. He agreed with the ensign to kill both her and the lieutenant" (ut supra, pp. 296-301).

164. Line 435: SPOTTED with strawberries.—As we should say, embroidered; cf. Coriolanus, i. 3. 55:

What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.

165 Line 442: O, that the slave had forty thousand lives
—We have the same idea in Loecrine, ii. 1:

The Hun shall die, had he ten thousand lives:
And would to God he had ten thousand lives

—Tauchnitz ed. p. 159.

Forty thousand, we may note, is merely an indefinite number; Elizabethan writers use four and forty in exactly the same vague way Compare Hamlet, ii. 2. 160, 161:

You know, sometimes he walks four hours together
Here in the lobby

Hammer changed the reading to for hours, but the Clarendon Press editors aptly quote Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, "laughing and gibing with their familiars four hours by the clock" (Arber's Reprint, p. 307) Observe, also, Sonnet ii. line 1:

When forty winters shall besedge thy brow.

The idea may be the same in one of Spenser's sonnets (ix.), Globe ed. of Works, p. 582.

166. Line 447: from THE hollow HELL—So the Folios. Qq. read from thy hollow cell, which the Globe edition prints. The version of the Quartos gives a good antithesis to line 445:

All my fond love thus do I blow to heaven.

167 Line 453: Like to the PONTIC SEA, &c.—Steevens suggested that these lines were based upon the following passage in Holland's translation of Pliny's Natural History: "And the Sea Pontus evermore floweth and runneth out into Propontis, but the sea never retirith back again within Pontus." Holland's translation was published in 1601: Othello can scarcely be referred to an earlier date than 1601; it is quite possible therefore that Steevens's conjecture was correct, and that Shakespeare did owe his knowledge to Pliny. On the other hand, it may simply have been a piece of popular geography—one of the curious facts reported by some Elizabethan adventurer of the type of Mr. Edward Webbe. The lines are wanting in the Quarto of 1622.

168 Line 460: by yond MARBLE HEAVEN.—Shakespeare applies marble to the sky in three other passages, Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 191; Cymbeline, v. 4. 87, and, same scene, 120. The epithet is magnificent, and only the dullest of commentators would care to dissertate on the possible meanings which it could bear. Milton's "pure marble air," Paradise Lost, iii. 564, was probably a reminiscence of the classical and etymological use of the word = glittering; he may even have recollected Sophocles' "marble (i.e. bright) radiance of Olympus" (Antigone, 610). Mar-moreus is frequently said of the sea in Virgil.

169. Line 463: you EVER-BURNING LIGHTS above.—A variation on "these blessed candles of the night" in Merchant of Venice, v. 1. 220, with which in turn may be compared Macbeth, ii. 1. 5 (see note 89 of that play); Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 9; and Sonnet xxi. line 12.

170. Line 471: And will upon the instant PUT thee TO 'T.—That is, test you; cf. Coriolanus, i. 1. 232, 233:

They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to 't.

So Measure for Measure, iii. 2. 101.

171. Line 480.—Here, in the acting edition, act iii. ends; and act iv. commences with line 24 of the next scene.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

172. Line 26: Full of CRUSADOES.—Not a Venetian coin, otherwise Coryat would probably have mentioned it in the account he gives of the money current at Venice. According to Grey, the crusado was a Portuguese coin, worth about three shillings; it was so called from the cross stamped on it, and varied in value, according to some authorities, from six shillings and eightpence to nine shillings. It is rather curious that Elizabethan writers should use in this way the names of foreign pieces; cf. Old Fortunatus, ii. 2: "See'st thou this crusado?" (Dekker's Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 328), and The White Devil, iii. 1:

I have houses,
Jewels, and a poor remnant of crusadoes
—Webster's Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 51.

173. Lines 46, 47:

the hearts of old gave HANDS;
But our new HERALDRY is HANDS, NOT HEARTS.

This is the passage upon which Warburton fastened as approximately fixing the date of the composition of the play. He found here a satirical allusion to the creation of baronets by James I. in 1611. It is very probable that this allusion only existed in Warburton's mind; for, as Steevens pointed out, it was very unlikely that Shakespeare would introduce any sneer at the honours instituted by James I., a prince whom, on the contrary, he seems to have desired to flatter rather than to satirize. In Warner's Albion's England (edn 1596, p. 282) occurs the line:

My hand shall never give my heart, my heart shall give my hand.

Compare also The Tempest, iii. 1. 89, 90:

For . . . here's my hand.
Mrs. And mine, with my heart in 't.

As Knight says, the new heraldry might simply have referred to the practice of quartering the arms of husband and wife, or, as Dyce suggested, the heraldic term to give arms so resembles to give hands that the similarity of the two phrases might have suggested to Shakespeare the word heraldry.

174. Line 56: Did an EGYPTIAN to my mother give.—Egyptian is, perhaps, equivalent to gypsy, a very common use of the word. So in the travels of John Eldred ("the first Englishmen who reached India, overland") we have a description of some Arabs whom he came across at Feluja: "Their hair, apparel, and colour were altogether like to those vagabond Egyptians, which heretofore have gone about in England" (Arber's English Garner, vol. iii. p. 162). Again, in Randolph's Hey for Honesty, v. 1. Mercury sings:

From Egypt have I come,
With Solomon for my guide:
By chiromancy I can tell,
What fortunes thee betide;

to which one of the characters replies, "Well, thou art an arrant gipsy" (Randolph's Works, Hazlitt's ed. ii. p. 479). It is, perhaps, superfluous to note that gypsy is only a corruption of Egyptian, popular tradition assigning Egypt as the original home of the gypsies, whereas most authorities are now agreed that they came from India. Ben Jonson speaks of "a Gypsy lady, and a right beldame," in The Sad Shepherd, ii. 1 (Works, Routledge's ed. p. 497) The association of magic with the gypsies is common enough

175 Lines 70-72:

*A SIBYL, that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic FURY sew'd the work.*

Here and in I. Henry VI. 1. 2. 56 sibyl is used correctly as a substantive; in Merchant of Venice, 1. 2. 116, and elsewhere the word is treated as a proper name. Fury is said in the sonnets of poetic inspiration, e.g. Sonnet c. line 3; so "poet's rage," Son. xvii. line 11.

176. Line 122: To FORTUNE'S ALMS—The construction of the passage is rather loose, though the sense is clear enough; Cassio means that he will have to depend on such scraps of kindness as fortune may throw to him. Pope changed to arms; he must have forgotten Lear, i. 1. 231: "At fortune's alms"

177. Line 128: within the BLANK.—As we should say, "within the range" Blank, of course, is the centre of a target.

178. Line 161: But JEALOUS for they're JEALOUS: 't is a MONSTER.—Compare line 166; the verse is a good instance of what one may call verbal irony.

179. Lines 174, 175:

*and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eight score times?*

It is one of the love-symptoms noted by Democritus Junior that the lover when he is gone from his lady "thinks every minute an hour, every hour as long as a whole day, ten days a whole year, till he see her again" (The Anatomy of Melancholy, part III. sec. 2, mem. 3, reprint (Chatto & Windus), 1881, page 555).

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

180 Line 1: Will you think so? &c.—The opening of this scene is difficult, and I cannot think that the distribution of the speeches is satisfactory. So far as I can understand the sense, it is this Iago has been arguing, with subtlest hypocrisy, that after all there may be no harm in the connection existing between Desdemona and Cassio; pretending to make things look as well as possible for Desdemona, he fans the flame of Othello's jealousy. Grant that there had been a kiss—will Othello think that any evil was intended? Grant that there had been other things (of which he has told Othello before they come on the stage), may not these things have been done in pure innocence? Iago's part is, first to tell Othello that something has happened, and then to offer a damning palliation of the offence; Othello all the while dissents. I would suggest some such arrangement as the following:

Iago. Will you think so?

Othello. Think so, Iago! What,

To kiss in private!

Iago. (Ironically) An unauthoriz'd kiss.

Othello. Or! to be naked with her friend in bed
An hour or more—not meaning any harm:
Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean any harm!

The repetition in line 5 seems to me pointed. The kiss in private and the naked in bed represent, I believe, what Iago has told Othello before they appear on the scene. Iago has been hypocritically suggesting that the incidents are blameless in themselves, and now Othello replies. As the text stands I can trace no sequence of thought.

[Other commentators, Lettsom, for instance, and Deighton, think also that these lines are not properly distributed. Mr. Ventry's arrangement above is a very ingenious one; but the question is, would it be effective, or even intelligible, on the stage? An audience can understand Othello answering such a suggestion as Iago makes in lines 3, 4; but they would hardly understand if Othello spoke all these three lines, that is, from 3 to 6, that he was referring to what had passed between him and Iago before the scene opened; at least the words not meaning any harm must be given to Iago. All through the first part of this scene Iago is suggesting to Othello—or more than suggesting, telling him as facts—certain things which Cassio and Desdemona have done, which most decidedly imply that there was a guilty connection between them, and, at the same time, he pretends they afford no proof of guilt. He could not have adopted any more certain means of incensing Othello against both his wife and Cassio; for the very supposition that such familiarities were consistent with innocence would be an insult to his common sense. I think that it would be better, therefore, from a dramatic point of view, to leave lines 3 and 4 to be spoken by Iago; but the words What, to kiss in private? might certainly form part of Othello's speech, the What especially being very awkward as coming from Iago. The condition of Othello, at this point, must be borne in mind. He is on the brink of an epileptic attack, and, as is invariably the case before such attacks, he would find a difficulty in following out any consecutive line of thought.—F. A. M.]

181. Line 21: As doth the RAVEN o'er th' INFECTIOUS HOUSE.—Infectious = infected, i.e. where a sick person is lying. The superstition here referred to is a very old one; many similar passages might be quoted; for example, The Jew of Malta, ii. 1. 1, 2:

*Thus, like the sad presaging raven, that tolls
The sick man's passport in her hollow beak.*

—Bulwer's Marlowe, ii. p. 35.

Again, Peele's David and Bethsabe:

*Like as the fatal raven, that in his voice
Carries the dreadful summons of our deaths;*

where, as Dyce shows (Greene and Peele, p. 469), Peele was really translating some lines by Du Bartas; and Webster's The White Devil, iii. 1:

*Flam. How croaks the raven!
Is our good duchess dead?*

Loth. Dead.

—Webster's Works, in Mermaid ed. p. 59.

Compare also Macbeth, i. 5. 39-41.

182. Line 37: that's FULSOME.—Properly fulsome only means abundant; cf. Richard III. v. 3. 132:

I, that was wash'd to death with fulsome wine,

Then comes the idea of overfulness and so of offensiveness. See Merchant of Venice, note 91.

183. Line 38: To confess, and be hang'd.—This seems to have been a common proverb. Compare Marlowe's Jew of Malta, iv. 2: "Blame not us but the proverb, confess and be hang'd" (Works, vol i p 258, edn. 1826); and again Halliwell quotes from Shirley's Love Tricks (iv. 6): "Ruf. Did you hear him confess it? Bub. Here's right confess and be hang'd now."

184. Lines 39, 40: Nature would not invest herself in such shadowing passion without some INSTRUCTION—Warburton proposed to alter instruction to induction, and he says that the state of Othello's mind is compared to an eclipse when the earth is darkened by the induction of the moon between it and the sun. But surely this is very far-fetched, although induction, in the sense of "groundwork of fact," would suit the sense of the passage well enough, if not better than instruction; but induction is used by Shakespeare invariably in the sense of "introduction" or "prelude," e.g. in Richard III. i. 1 32:

Plots have I laid, inductions dangerous;

and same play, iv. 4 5:

A dire induction am I witness to.

Some commentators, following Sir Joshua Reynolds' explanation, would make Othello refer to Cassio's dream, iii. 3. 418-426. There can be little doubt that Othello refers to the horrible feeling of growing mental darkness and oppression of the brain which immediately precede an epileptiform attack. Nothing can be more true to nature than the broken exclamations of this speech of Othello's, which Pope, in his blundering nambypambyism, called "trash." One can see the unhappy victim, his whole frame trembling with passion, his hand holding his head, into which, creeping from the spine, comes that terrible sense of numbness in the brain, accompanied, as it were, by a feeling of intense mental distress, which those who have suffered from epileptiform attacks know too well. It may be as well to notice here that the stage-direction in the Folio, Falles in a trance, which is generally followed (substantially) in modern editions, is not so suitable to the circumstances as the direction in Q. 1, which simply is, He fals downe. Epilepsy and epileptiform attacks, which latter were not at that time distinguished from the more serious disease, were both called in Shakespeare's time "the falling sickness," a very apt name. The suddenness with which the unhappy sufferer falls to the ground in such attacks is one of the most characteristic features, and one which has led to fatal accidents in too many cases.—F. A. M.

185. Lines 51, 52:

My lord is fall'n into an epilepsy:

This is his second fit; he had one yesterday.

The dramatic significance of this epileptic seizure, which Shakespeare now makes Othello undergo, has been almost entirely passed over by most commentators, except in its bearing upon the question of the Time of Action of the play. If we are to take Iago's words here literally, they certainly cannot but confirm the other indications (see note on Time of Action) that a much longer space of time is covered by the play than is included by the dramatic action. If Othello really had an epileptic attack on the day before, it is probable that some one besides Iago would have known of it, and an interval of at least a day must have elapsed between acts iii. and iv.; but from Bianca's words (line 155 below) "What did you mean by that same handkerchief you gave me even now?" the action in this scene would seem to take place immediately after the last scene (iii. 4); but, as I have said before, it is useless to attempt to reconcile inconsistencies of this kind. Variations between the historic or actual time and the dramatic time must be allowed to a writer of any imaginative power. It is only your monster of artistic propriety, who writes his verse with the aid of a mathematical ruler, that can preserve the unities of time, place, and action. But there is a dramatic significance in this epileptic attack of Othello far beyond any question of the lapse of time. Though Bucknell, in his Med. Knowledge of Shakespeare (p. 274), says "this designation (epilepsy) appears a mere falsehood," with due deference to that authority, I would submit that Shakespeare's description of epilepsy, or, to be more precise, of an epileptiform attack, given here, is by no means untrue. When Cassio suggests that they should rub his temples Iago says (lines 54-56):

The lethargy must have his quiet course:

If not, he foams at mouth, and by and by

Breaks out to savage madness.

This is a description of two of the features of true epilepsy. In epileptiform seizures foaming at the mouth does not always occur, nor is there always complete insensibility; but it is quite consistent with Iago's character and conduct at this juncture that he should exaggerate the symptoms. In a temperament predisposed to epilepsy such mental agony and violent excitement, as Othello has lately gone through, would be very likely to produce an epileptiform attack, on recovering from which he would be perfectly sensible, but would be in a more or less dazed condition; so that he would be a much easier subject for the deception which Iago proceeds now to practise on him. I have spoken in the Introduction of the injury done to the play by the omission of the greater part of this scene, which is absolutely essential to the plot, as it is the only scene in which Othello has any visible proof of Iago's story. In the physical and mental condition, which this epileptic attack would have produced, there is nothing at all surprising that he should accept the demeanour and gesture of Cassio in his dialogue with Iago, even without the strong confirmatory proof afforded by his seeing Desdemona's handkerchief in Bianca's possession as sufficient proof of the guilt of the lieutenant and his wife. To say, as Salvini did, that this scene is "not in accord with Othello's character," shows considerable misconception of that character. He is a man who habitually puts a very great restraint upon his passion; and the languor produced by the fit from which he had just suffered would help him in restraining himself from any personal violence to Cassio. Nothing can be more pathetic than the wave of tenderness which comes over his agonized spirit in the latter part of this scene, alternating as it does with almost savage ferocity. At last he loses his self-control and sense of dignity alike; and, in his outburst of passion before Lodovico, he shows how much he is degraded physically and morally.

In epileptiform patients there is very often a lapse of memory more or less partial, and though I would not insist on this point, it is quite possible that Shakespeare might have known that fact, and that we should thus account for Othello having, at the beginning of the scene (see line 19), forgotten the incident of the handkerchief; and, again, though he says (see below, line 164): "By heaven, that should be my handkerchief!" recognizing it in Bianca's hand, he says (line 184), in answer to Iago: "Was that (i.e. the handkerchief) mine?" Nor would it do to insist upon the fact that homicidal mania is very often developed in persons subject to epileptiform attacks; but we may safely say that it was not for nothing that Shakespeare introduced this incident of Othello's fit, for the physical strain to which he was thus subjected would materially assist Iago in the prosecution of his infamous design.—F. A. M.

186. Lines 77, 78:

*Whilst you were here O'ERWHELMED with your grief,—
A passion most UNFITTING such a man*

Q 1 has here "erewhile, mad with your grief," the reading of Ff. and Q 2, which we retain in our text, is much preferable. But in the next line Ff have a curious mistake; they read "resulting such a man," an obvious misprint. The Devonshire copy of Q 1 reads ensueting, while Capell's copy and Q 2 both read vnfitting.

187. Lines 101-104:

*As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his UNBOOKISH jealousy must CONSTRUE
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour,
Quite in the wrong.*

This is a hint borrowed from the tale; compare the following: "He (Othello) immediately went [to Iago] and related what had just happened [an unimportant detail], begging him to learn from the lieutenant what he could. . . . The ensign (Iago) rejoiced much in this accident, and promised to do so. He contrived to enter into discourse with him (Cassio) one day in a place where the Moor might see them. He talked with him on a very different subject, laughed much, and expressed by his movements and attitudes very great surprise. The Moor as soon as he saw them separate went to the ensign, and desired to know what had passed between them. The ensign, after many solicitations, at last told him that he (i.e. Cassio) had concealed nothing from him. He says he had enjoyed your wife every time that you have stayed long enough from home to give him an opportunity" (ut supra, p. 298). The epithet unbookish here has been variously explained. Whiter (Specimen of Commentary, 1794), quoted by Furness, after citing many instances where Shakespeare has compared love and lovers to books (e.g. Troilus and Cressida, iv. 5 60, 61:

And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader), thought that unbookish referred to the "Books of Love" and the "language of Lovers." It is generally explained as ignorant; but Furness points to the particular use of the word bookish in this same play (i. 1. 24), and he thinks that the word is used here in some peculiar sense, as if there were "Books of Jealousy" like Saviole's "Practise of Honorable Quarrels." Perhaps the meaning is "his inexperienced or simple-minded jealousy, the jealousy of a nature which knew men from the study neither of mankind nor of books."

Ff. read conserve, which may very well be a misprint for conceive; but the Qq. read conster, which, in its modern form of construe, is preferred by nearly all editors; it certainly suits the word unbookish better than conserve, which is meaningless.

188 Line 108. Now, if this suit lay in Bianca's POWER.—So Qq; Ff read dowre, a reading which Knight, for some mysterious reason, retained

189 Line 121: you triumph, ROMAN—Manifestly the word triumph suggests the epithet Roman, which Warburton declared, however, to be one of the most manifest misprints in the whole of Shakespeare, and altered it to rogue; a proceeding which Shakespeare might himself have called a very roguish trick.

190. Line 130: Have you scor'd me? Well—This has been variously explained. Johnson, for instance, says it means "Have you told the term of my life?" Others think that it means "marked," as they "marked" the backs of beasts. Compare Ant. and Cleo. iv. 7. 12, 13:

Let us score e their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind.

Others think that it means "Have you scored an account against me?" The readings of the older copies are various here. F. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 read "Have you scoar'd me? Well." F. 2, F. 3, F. 4: "scoar'd me, Well." Q. 1 reads "stor'd me well," which Johnson suggests may mean "Have you disposed of me?"

191. Line 150: BEFORE ME!—Compare Romeo and Juliet, iii. 4 34: "Afore me! 'tis so very late;" All's Well, i. 3. 31: "fore me, I speak in respect;" and Coriolanus, i. 1. 124, where Mr. Aldis Wright notes that probably it was a petty oath substituted for the more usual "fore God," in deference to the severe statute which was passed in the reign of James I. "to restrain the abuses of Players;" this act commenced with the words "For the preventing and avoiding of the great abuse of the holy Name of God, in Stage-plays, Enterludes, May games, Shews and such like." In consequence of this statute the reading of the Quartos is often toned down in the Folio; for example, in The Merchant of Venice, i. 2. 121, where Qq. read I pray God grant them, the Folio has the milder I wish; and other instances might be quoted. Probably it was for this reason that Shakespeare used such classical asseverations as by Janus (i. 2. 83), by Jove, &c.

192. Lines 139, 140: and falls me thus about my neck.—Q 1 has "by this hand she fals thus," &c.; the reading of the Folio seems preferable, as by this hand is not necessary. It is evident from the next line that Cassio is intended here to illustrate by gesture Bianca's action.

Just below (line 144) there is another discrepancy between Ff. and Qq. We have retained the reading of Qq; Ff. read "so shakes and pulls me."

193. Line 151: such another FITCHEW.—For a full account of this word see Troilus and Cressida, note 293. The expression such another is a contemptuous one which Schmidt compares to the German auch so eine. Compare Troilus and Cressida, i. 2 232 (Folio 1) "you are such another woman." This expression is used by Shakespeare in three other passages: Merry Wives, i. 4. 160; Much Ado, iii. 4. 87; II. Henry IV ii. 4. 275.

194. Lines 184-186.—Qq. omit this speech, probably by accident; for, as Jennens pointed out, the catchword at the foot of the page is Iago, which shows that the speech was in the MS., though possibly it might have been omitted in the acting.

195. Line 193: my heart is turn'd to stone.—Compare v. 2 63. "thou dost stone my heart." Compare Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 9. 15-17:

throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault,
Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder.

There the thought is too much elaborated; but surely the commentators go a little too far in saying that the pathos of the speech in the text is marred by the touch of realism. "I strike it and it hurts my hand."

196. Line 199: she will sing the savageness out of a bear!—Here again we have a closely parallel passage in Venus and Adonis, 1095, 1096:

when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him.

197. Line 206: the pity of it.—We may compare Macbeth, i. 5. 5: "the wonder of it." I suppose it is an ordinary possessive genitive: the pity, or pitifulness, which it (the circumstances) contains. Perhaps, however, of concerning, about; cf. Measure for Measure, ii. 3. 42: "'Tis pity of him." See Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, p. 114.

198. Lines 209, 210: If you are so fond over her iniquity, give her PATENT to offend.—Malone compares Edward III. (1596), ii. 1. 428:

Why then give sin a passport to offend.

199. Lines 227, 228:

*Something from Venice, sure. 'Tis Lodovico
Come from the duke.*

The reading in our text is from the Qq. with Theobald's punctuation as adopted by the Cambridge edd. F. 1 reads:

I warrant something from Venice,
'Tis Lodovico, this, comes from the Duke.
See, your wife's with him.

The other Ff read the same except that F. 2 has a comma after Lodovico, which F. 3, F. 4 retain, but have no comma after this.

200. Line 229:

Lod. Save you, worthy general!
Oth. With all my heart, sir.

Q. 1 here has: "God save the worthy general." The reading in our text is that of the other Qq and Ff. The omission of the word God was made simply on account of the act of James I. so often alluded to, and is of no importance, as the expression Save you! is merely elliptical for "God save you!" The difficulty here is how we are to take Othello's answer. Malone says that Othello spoke with no relation to what Lodovico had just said; but Steevens and other commentators explain Othello's words as welcoming "the pious wish expressed on his behalf;" and they compare Measure for Measure, ii. 2 157, where, in answer to Isabella's wish, "Heaven keep your honour safe!" Angelo says "Amen!"

201. Line 245: Oth. Are you wise?—In Fechter's acting edition this speech is given to Iago, with the stage-direction that he "seizes the arm of Othello across the table." This certainly seems to be, unlike most of Fechter's emendations, a most sensible suggestion. The speech, one cannot but feel, is out of place in Othello's mouth, and can have very little significance coming from him, as Desdemona has evidently turned round to Lodovico again after Othello's last furious exclamation; and it is quite in keeping with Iago's hypocritical assumption of honesty that he should attempt to recall Othello here to his better self.—F. A. M.

202. Line 251: Oth. Devil! [Striking her.]—The stage-direction was added by Theobald, and is justified by what Lodovico says below (line 238): "What, strike his wife!" This is one of the most painful incidents in the whole play. In the hands of Salvini it became absolutely brutal; for he used to strike Desdemona with his hand on the face; but most actors are content to strike her with the paper which Othello holds in his hand, and which he has been biting in his rage on hearing that Cassio is to supersede him in his command.

203. Line 257: Each drop she FALLS would prove a CROCODILE.—For the active use of "to fall" compare Lucrece, 1551:

For every tear he falls a Trojan bleeds.

Shakespeare here alludes to the fabulous account of crocodiles current in his time. In Bullokar's English Expositor, one of the earliest English dictionaries (edn. 1616), we find the following (quoted by Malone): "It is written, that he will weep over a dead man's head when he hath devoured the body, and then will eat up the head too. Wherefore in Latin there is a proverb, crocodili lacrymæ, crocodile's tears, to signify such tears are fained, and spent only with intent to deceive; or doe harm."

204. Line 269: I am commanded HOME.—So Ff; Q. 1 has here.

205. Line 274: Goats and monkeys!—This may be a recollection of Iago's speech above, iii. 3. 403:

Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys

206. Line 280: is he not LIGHT of brain?—As we say, light-headed. Compare Hamlet, ii. 2. 148, 149:

Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,
Thence to a lightness.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

207. Line 18: the purest of their WIVES.—So Ff; Q. 1 has "the purest of their sex."

208. Line 22: A CLOSET-LOCK-AND-KEY of villainous secrets.—Compare Henry V. ii. 2 96:

That that didst bear the key of all my counsels.

[Malone was the first to observe on the difficulty of deciding where this scene is supposed to take place. Line 23, where Othello tells Emilia to shut the door, indicates that it is in a room in Othello's castle. On the other hand, line 171, Iago says to Desdemona, "Go in, and weep not," which Malone thought might indicate that the scene was without the castle; but surely Go in means nothing more than "Go into your own room" But the appearance of Roderigo here in the same scene is perhaps a greater difficulty; for, after what had occurred in the first act, Roderigo would not be likely to visit Othello or to venture into his house; but, as Cowden Clarke pointed out, we must remember that Roderigo is partially disguised, and that also, as the guard-room was in the castle, it was very natural that Roderigo should go there to look for Iago. The residence of Othello would seem to have been in a public and not in a private building; in fact, merely a portion of the chief fortified place in the town.—F. A. M.]

209 Line 24 Pray, CHUCK, come hither.—The word is used much in the same bitterly ironical way by Macbeth, iii. 2 44-46:

Lady M. What's to be done?
Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed

210 Lines 54, 55:

*The fixed figure for THE TIME, FOR SCORN,
To point his slow AND MOVING finger at.*

As to the second line: the Folio reading and moving seems to me far more vivid and realistic than the unmoving of the Quarto of 1622. In the first line the Quartos read time of scorn; the Folio has time of Scorne, emphasizing more clearly the fact that Scorn is personified. The Globe editors mark the line as corrupt, and I confess time of scorn conveys no meaning to me. I have ventured, therefore, much as I dislike tampering with the text, to introduce a slight emendation. As the couplet now stands the sense is simple. The use of time where we should say the times, i.e. the present age, is common enough; cf. Hunter's Illustrations, ii. 240. Hunter, by the way, is commenting on Hamlet, iii. 1. 70:

For who would bear the whips and scorns of time.

Is it an absolutely impossible idea that what Shakespeare really wrote in the present passage was,

The fixed figure for the scorn of time!

At any rate the Hamlet line is worth remembering in connection with this well-known crux, although the editors do not seem to have noted the point, if point it be. Scholars, of course, will recollect Horace's monstrari digito prætereuntium. [I believe that Mr. Verity's conjecture, the scorn of time (an emendation, by the way, which was first suggested by Malone), is the right reading. It is the simplest alteration, and is strongly supported by the line quoted from Hamlet, iii. 1. 70: "the whips and scorns of time." All the old copies agree in reading the time of scorn; but the two words may easily have been misplaced. If we adhere to the reading of the old copies, we must accept Steevens's explanation that the time of scorn is an expression here like, "the hour of death," the idea being taken from a clock. This speech is so pathetic and so exquisitely musical, that one resents the occurrence in it of any difficulty or obscurity.—F. A. M.]

211 Line 68. Who art so LOVELY-FAIR.—I have ventured to treat lovely fair as a compound. Compare:

Play'd with a boy so lovely-fair and kind —Hero and Leander, Second Sestiad, 195,
Bullen's Marlowe, iii. p. 31

212 Line 71, 72.

*Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,
Made to write 'whore' upon?*

Massinger must have had these lines in his memory when he wrote the following passage in the Emperor of the East, iv. 5:

Can you think
This masterpiece of heaven, this precious vellum,
Of such a purity and virgin whiteness,
Could be design'd to have perjury and whoredom,
In capital letters, writ upon it.

—Massinger's Works, Cunningham's ed. p. 345.

The speaker, it should be added, in the extract is the jealous husband; he points to the face of his wife, whom he suspects of being unfaithful.

213. Line 72: What COMMITTED!—An offensive double entente; in fact, as Polonius would say, "a vile phrase." Compare Lear, iii. 4. 84

214. Line 78: The BAWDY WIND, that KISSES all it meets.
—Compare Merchant of Venice, ii. 6. 16:

Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind.

We have, too, "the wanton wind" in Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1. 129.

215 Line 144: Speak within door.—Johnson explained this phrase, "Do not clamour so as to be heard beyond the house;" perhaps we might paraphrase it nearer, thus; "Do not speak so loud as to be heard outside the room." Qq. have "Speak within doors." It is very important to Iago that Othello should not hear this speech of his good wife; or, even at the last moment, his eyes might have been opened to the treachery of his "honest" ancient.

216. Line 158: Either in DISCOURSE OF THOUGHT or ACTUAL DEED.—Discourse of thought must be equivalent to thought, the natural antithesis to action ("actual deed"). So in Macbeth, v. 1. 12, we find "actual performances" = what Lady Macbeth does, her walking in her sleep and so forth, placed in contrast with what she says. The exact shade of meaning which the poet wished discourse to bear in such a phrase as discourse of thought it is impossible to determine; we may compare, however, the parallel expressions "discourse of reason" in Hamlet, i. 2. 150, and Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2. 116. See note 120 on the latter play. It should be observed that in the present passage Q 2 and Q 3 read "or thought," a variation for which, I think, there is nothing to be said.

217. Line 160: And his unkindness may DEFEAT my life.
—For defeat = destroy, cf. Sonnet lxi. 11:

Mine own true love that doth my rest defeat;

and for the substantive in same sense, Hamlet, ii. 2. 597, 598:

Upon whose property and most dear life
A damn'd defeat was made.

Defeat is simply the French défaire = to undo, render void: so that Shakespeare is using the word in its strict signification.

218 Line 167: And he does CHIDE WITH you.—Ff. omit this line Compare Sonnet cxl. 1:

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide

Baret (Alvearie, 1573) gives "To complaine, to make a quarrell, to chide with one for a thing."

219. Line 192: sudden respect and ACQUAINTANCE.—This is the reading of Ff. and Q 2; Q 1 has acquittance, which some ed. prefer; the meaning being "requital."

220 Lines 196, 197. NAY, I THINK IT IS scurvy, and begin to find myself FOBB'D in it —We have followed the reading of Ff, Q 1 has "by this hand, I say 't is very scurvy;" Q 2, Q. 3: "I say 't is very scurvy" Fobb'd = deluded, cheated. It seems to me best to print this, the ordinary form of the word, though the Quartos and Folios all give fopt. In II. Henry IV. ii. 1. 37, we have fubb'd. The word is common enough; cf. Coriolanus i. 1. 97; and The London Prodigal i. 1:

What doth he think to foff off his posterity with paradoxes?

Tauchtitz ed. p. 225.

221 Line 229: he goes into MAURITANIA. —"Othello," says Hunter (Illustrations, ii pp. 280, 281), "is to be regarded as a Moor in the proper sense of the word, a native of the northern coast of Africa towards the west." Upon this point, however, see the Introduction, p. 12.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

222. Line 23: Good FAITH, how foolish are our minds!—This is the usually-adopted reading. The Folios have good father.

223. Lines 28, 29:

she had a song of "WILLOW;"
An old thing.

Upon the subject of this old ballad I shall venture to "convey" Mr. Chappell's remarks. "The song," he says. "of Oh! willow, willow, which Desdemona sings in the fourth act of Othello, is contained in a MS. volume of songs, with accompaniment for the lute, in the British Museum (Addit. MSS. 15 117). Mr. Halliwell-Phillips considers the transcript to have been made about the year 1633; Mr. Oliphant (who catalogued the musical MSS.) dates it about 1600; but the manuscript undoubtedly contains songs of an earlier time, such as—

O death! rock me asleep,
Bring me to quiet rest, &c., attributed to Anne Boleyn, and which Sir John Hawkins found in a MS. of the reign of Henry VIII. The song of Willow, willow, is also found in the Roxburghe Ballads, i. 54; and was printed by Percy from a copy in the Pepys collection, entitled 'A Lover's Complaint, being Forsaken of his Love; to a pleasant tune' " (Popular Music of the Olden Time, vol. i. p. 206). Mr. Chappell prints the music of the song, subsequently (p. 774) observing that the music at any rate must be older than 1600, since it is found in the Lutebook (dated 1583) of Thomas Dallis, a Cambridge musician of the time. As to the burden, Willow, willow, it was a favourite one in sixteenth-century songs. There is, for instance, a song by John Heywood (famous for his rather dreary Interludes), which is printed in a volume entitled The Moral Play of Wit and

Science, p. 86 (Old Shakespeare Society Publications, 1848), and which has the following burden:

All a green willow, willow, willow, willow;
All a green willow, is my garland.

Again, Mr. Chappell (p. 206) quotes a stanza of a ballad in A Gorgious Gallery of Gallant Inventions (1578), which commences thus:

My love, what disliking in me do you find,
Sing all of green willow;
That on such a sudden you alter your mind?
Sing willow, willow, willow.

Compare too The Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 1. 79, 80:

Then she sung
Nothing but "willow, willow, willow,"

—Dyce's Beaumont & Fletcher, vol. xi. p. 403.
and Middleton's Blurt, Master Constable, i. 1. 206:

Shall Camillo then sing "willow, willow, willow?"
—Bullen's Middleton, vol. i. p. 14

and Massinger's Maid of Honour, v. 1:

You may cry Willow, willow! for your brother

—Works, Cunningham's ed. p. 278

To turn now to another point—the Pepysian version of the song, in which, by the way, the speaker of the stanzas is not the deserted lady, but a forsaken lover. The ballad is far too long for insertion here; I will give, however, the stanzas which correspond to those sung by Desdemona:

A poore soule sat sighing under a sicamore tree,
O willow, willow, willow!

With his hand on his bosom, his head on his knee;
O willow, willow, willow!
O willow, willow, willow!

Sing, O the greene willow shall be my garland.

The cold streame ran by him, his eyes wept apace,
O willow, &c.

The salt tears fell from him, which drowned his face;
O willow, &c.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

The mute birds sate by him, made tame by his mones;
O willow, &c.

The soft tears fell from him, which softened the stones.
O willow, &c.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

Let nobody blame me, her scornes I do prove;
O willow, &c.

She was borne to be fair; I, to die for her love;
O willow, &c.

Sing, O the greene willow, &c.

This extract, to repeat myself, is from the ballad as given by Percy from the original in the Pepysian collection (see the Reliques of Ancient Poetry, Gilfillan's ed. vol. i. pp. 153, 159). The variations from Shakespeare's version need not be pointed out; it is probable that the Pepysian ballad was a popular reimpression (dating, says Rimbault, from Charles II.'s reign; from Charles I.'s reign, says Collier, 1646–1650) of an old Elizabethan original; and this would explain the fact that the version quoted by Chappell from the MS. volume of music in the British Museum, the version printed by Percy, and the fragmentary quotations that occur in the play, are all different, each, perhaps, being a more or less approximate reproduction of some lost original. Another point in connection with this ballad. In the volume of Shakespeare's songs edited by Dr. Furnivall and Mr. Stone for the New Shakspeare Society (1884), we are informed (page 53) that at least eleven settings of what Desdemona sings are known. The list includes three notable versions: by Lindley, in his Dramatic Songs of Shakspeare, 1816; by Bishop, "sung in Comedy of Errors by Miss Stephens" (see Introduction to that play), and by Sir Arthur Sullivan. There is, too, a Willow song in Rossini's Othello; as also in Verdi's last opera, produced at Milan. The librettist of this latest of operatic Othellos represents Desdemona as singing the air after the jealous Moor has bidden her prepare to die. Finally, to bring this discursive note to a close, it is almost superfluous to note that the willow is a familiar type of sorrow, chosen, perhaps, says Dyer (Folklore of Shakspeare, p. 105), in reference to Psalm cxxxvii. verse 2. See Merchant of Venice, note 324.

224. Line 40: walk'd BARE-FOOTED to Palestine.—So Q. 2; F. 1 barefoot. Compare Troilus and Cressida, note 32.

225. Line 41: The poor soul sat SIGHING.—Q. 1 omits from "I've much to do," line 31, to "Nay that's not next," inclusive, line 53; and lines 55-58, and lines 60-63. Ff. have singing; the Q. 2 (which we follow), sighing.

226. Line 54: It's the WIND—A wonderful touch, adding infinitely to the mystery and terror of the scene

227. Line 56: as would STORE the world.—Store is equivalent to the coarser word stock. The substantive is used several times in the Sonnets in exactly the same sense; e.g. Sonnet xi. line 9:

Let those whom Nature hath not made for stores

Sonnet xiv. line 12:

If from thyself to store thou wouldst convert;

and Sonnet lxxxiv. line 3:

In whose confine immured is the store

228. Line 58. SLACK their duties.—Compare Lear, ii. 4 248: "If then they chanc'd to slack you," i.e. be slack in attending upon you

229. Line 105: heaven me such USES send.—Uses here = experiences; perhaps, too, a punning reference is intended to the previous lines: "Then let them use us well," &c.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

230. Line 1: behind this BULK.—F. 1, F. 2 have barke; F. 3, F. 4 bark. Qq. (which we follow substantially) have bulke. Singer substituted balk (which, it appears, was also the emendation of Collier's Old Corrector), and says that balk is defined by Huloet as "the chief beame or pillar of a house." Knight, while printing bulk, has little doubt that bark "was correctly used by Shakspeare in this instance as a projecting part of the fortification,—a buttress," but he gives no instance of such a use. For bulk = the projecting part of a shop where goods were exposed for sale, see Coriolanus, ii. 1. 226-229, where Brutus, describing the reception of Coriolanus in Rome on his return from victory, says:

stalls, bulks, windows

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd

With variable complexions, all agreeing

In earnestness to see him.

That is the only other passage in which Shakspeare uses the word.

231. Lines 11, 12:

*I've rubb'd this young QUAT almost to the sense,
And he grows angry.*

There has been much discussion about this passage. Q. 1 reads gnat, which some edd adopt; but there can be very little doubt that the reading of Ff. (followed by Q. 2, Q. 3) is the right one, as the whole context shows. Quat is used still in the Midland counties, and in Warwickshire especially, in the sense of a pimple, and Stevens quotes from Webster's The Devil's Law Case, 1623 (act ii. sc. i): "O young quat! incontinence is plagued in all creatures in the world" (Works, Dyce's edn vol. ii. p. 36); and Dekker's Gul's Hornbook: "Whosoever desires to bee a man of good reckoning in the Cittie, . . . whether he be a yong Quat of the first yeeres reuennew, or some austere and sullen-faced steward . . . my counsell is that hee take his continual diet at the Tauerne" (edn. 1609, chap. 8, pp. 32, 33).

These passages alone, I think, would settle the question; but the context leaves scarcely any room for doubt that quat = "a pimple" is the right word here, for "to rub to the sense," as Johnson pointed out, is "to rub to the quick;" and we still talk of an angry sore, or an angry boil, or an angry spot; the angry or inflamed condition being exactly what would be the result of rubbing the sore. As to the reading of Q. 1, gnat, compare Love's Labour's Lost, note 124.—F. A. M.

232. Line 14. Every way makes my gain.—So Ff.; Qq. read game.

233. Line 16: that I BOBB'D from him.—See Troilus and Cressida, note 161, where the word is fully discussed.

234. Line 22: No, he must die.—BE'T SO: I HEAR him coming.—F. 1 has "But so, I hear him coming," which F. 2, F. 3, F. 4 follow, except that F. 2 has heare, F. 3, F. 4 hear. Many edd. prefer the But so of Ff. to the reading of Qq. Dyce suggests that it might have been intended for "But soft."

235. Line 27: I'm maim'd for ever.—Malone thought that Iago's reason for wounding Cassio in the leg was because he had overheard what he says above (line 24), when attacked by Roderigo, that he wore secret armour; but Shakspeare is only following here the novel. (See Introduction p. 8). Knight points out that the costume of a soldato disarmato, according to Vecellio, was a buff jerkin and a scarf of company, so that his legs would be the least protected part of his body. As Iago's object was not to maim, but to kill Cassio, it is most probable that he aims his blow at the thigh, intending to sever the femoral artery, in which case the wounded man must have bled to death. Some representatives of Iago on the stage only aim their blow at the leg behind the knee, which is a mistake.—F. A. M.

236. Lines 34, 35:

And your unluck fate hies: strumpet, I come!

Forth of my heart those charms, thine eyes, are blotted.

The reading adopted in line 35 is that substantially of Ff.; hies being spelt highes; while Qq. read "fate hies apace." "Forth of" is the reading of Qq.; F. 1 has "For of;" F. 2, F. 3, F. 4 For off. Forth of=out of, is used by Shakespeare in several passages, e.g. in Julius Caesar, iii. 3. 3:

I have no will to wander forth of doors.

237 Line 37: no watch! no PASSAGE—The explanation given in our foot-note of passage=passengers is the one generally adopted. Perhaps it means, more literally, "no passing of steps" We may compare Comedy of Errors, iii. 1. 98, 99:

If by strong hand you offer to break in
Now in the stirring passage of the day, where "passage of the day" seems to mean "time of the day when most traffic of foot passengers is going on."

238. Line 48: that CRIES on murder.—For cry on=cry out, cf. Hamlet, v. 2. 375: "This quarry cries on havoc." Compare also Marston's Eastward Hoe, ii. 1:

Who cries on murder? Lady, was it you?

—Works, Halliwell's edn vol iii. p. 20.

239. Line 86: To BE A PARTY in this injury—So Ff.; Qq. have "To bear a part."

240 Line 105: Stay you, good GENTLEMEN.—So Ff.; Qq. have gentlewoman, which Malone strongly defends, on the ground that there is no reason for Lodovico and Gratiano going away, while Bianca would naturally follow her wounded lover; but, as Reed points out, Cassio having been named as Othello's successor, it was natural enough that Lodovico and Gratiano should follow, to see if they could render him any assistance, out of respect for his office, even if not out of friendship. A far stronger reason for preferring the reading of Ff. is to be found in the context. Iago begins his speech addressing Bianca What, look you pale? (line 104)—then gives direction to carry the two wounded men "out of the air," and, as he addresses the rest of his speech to Gratiano and Lodovico, with the exception of the one sentence, Look you pale, mistress—there can be little doubt that it is to them, and not to her, that he addresses the words Stay you. Nor is his mode of address to Bianca throughout this scene such that he would be likely to call her by any complimentary title; for it was his cue to be rude and brutal, as he wishes to make her out as bad a character as possible.—F. A. M.

241. Line 106. Do you perceive the GASTNESS of her eye?—Q. 1 and Q. 2 read jeastures. The form gastness is noticeable; it is obviously allied to aghost, which Skeat derives from "a, prefix; and gæstan, to terrify, torment." Indeed aghost should really be spelt agast, the latter being short for agasted, the past participle of agasten. Possibly the h was introduced through some erroneous idea that the word was cognate with ghost. We have gasted in Lear, ii. 1. 57:

Or whether gasted by the noise I made.

Cotgrave renders espouventable by "horrible, gastful, horrid;" gastful occurs in Spenser, The Shepherd's Calendar, August:

Here will I dwell apart
In gastful grove;

and Chaucer repeatedly, if not regularly, uses the form agaste—e.g. The Monkes Tale (Balthasar):

This honde, that Balthasar so sore agaste.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

242.—The account of Desdemona's death in the novel is as follows: "'A method,' says Iago, 'has occurred to me that would satisfy you without creating the least suspicion. The house where you live is very old, and the ceiling of your chamber is broken in many places. Desdemona might be beaten to death with a stocking full of sand, and no marks of this would remain on the body: when she is dead we will pull down a part of the ceiling, and bruise your wife's head; then give out that a beam in falling has done this and killed her. If you follow this advice you will avoid all suspicion, and every one will believe her death to have been accidental.' This savage advice pleased the Moor; and waiting for a convenient opportunity, he concealed the ensign one night in a closet that communicated with their chamber. When they were in bed, the ensign, according to his instruction, made a noise in the closet, and the Moor immediately asked his wife if she had heard it? She answered Yes—'Get up then and see what it is.' Poor Desdemona obeyed, and as soon as she was near the closet-door the ensign rushed out, and with the stocking that he had prepared gave her a violent blow on the small of the back. She fell down scarce able to breathe; but with what little force she had, she called the Moor to her assistance. He got out of bed, and said to her, 'Most infamous woman, you are now to receive the just reward of your infidelity! even so are those wives treated who, pretending to love their husbands, are untrue to their beds.' The poor woman hearing these words, and feeling that she was ready to expire from a second blow that the ensign had given her, said, 'That since the justice of this world was refused her, she attested the Divine justice in favour of her honour and her truth;' and invoking the Divine Assistance, she was finished by the implous ensign, who struck a third time. Afterwards they placed her in her bed; and after breaking her skull, they drew down, as they had determined beforehand, a part of the ceiling. The Moor then called out for help, as the house was falling. The neighbours on this alarm ran thither, and found Desdemona dead under the beams" (ut supra, pp. 303-305).

243. Lines 1-3:

It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul,—
Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!—
It is the cause.

This appears to me to be one of the most difficult passages in the whole play, and one of which there never has been yet given any satisfactory explanation. What does Othello mean by the cause? Does he mean the cause which impels him to take Desdemona's life, or does he mean the cause which has occasioned her supposed unfaithfulness to him? Fechter, apparently taking the latter to be the meaning, provoked a tempest of ridicule from nearly all the critics, by making Othello catch sight of his own face in a looking-glass. In his stage-version the passage is thus printed:

"Othello accidentally touches the glass in which he sees his bronzed face,—(With bitter despair):

It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul!

(retreating to the window his eyes fixed on the heavens.)

Let me not name it to you you chaste stars!

(looking at his face once again)

It is the cause!

(He violently throws the glass into the sea, goes to the door, locks it, advances to the bed, half drawing his sword.)

Certainly this explanation has the merit of boldness. I suppose the idea in Fechter's mind was that Othello attributed Desdemona's intrigue with Cassio to her repugnance to his own tawny complexion, which repugnance drove her to seek consolation in the arms of one of her own countrymen; and that this unchastity of hers was what was not to be named to the chaste stars. Johnson explains the passage as follows: "The meaning I think is this:—I am here (says Othello in his mind) overwhelmed with horror. What is the reason of this perturbation? Is it want of resolution to do justice? Is it the dread of shedding blood? No, it is not the action that shocks me, but 'it is the cause, it is the cause, my soul; let me not name it to you, ye chaste stars! it is the cause'" (Var. Ed. vol. ix. p. 462). Steevens says: "Othello, full of horror at the cruel action which he is about to perpetrate, seems at this instant to be seeking his justification, from representing to himself the cause, i.e. the greatness of the provocation he had received. He may, however, mean—it is the cause of chastity and virtue, that I maintain" (ut supra, pp. 462, 463). Hudson says: "Othello means that Desdemona's crime is the sole motive or reason that impels him to the present act; that in this alone he has a justifying cause, a 'compelling occasion' for what he is about to do" (Furness, p. 293). Grant White, who found the passage most perplexing, could not make up his mind what the cause was; though on line 2 he says the it "refers to Desdemona's supposed unchastity" (ut supra, p. 293). Perhaps the general meaning is clear enough: Othello is trying to justify to himself the act of murder that he is about to do. Addressing his soul, he seeks to silence the reproaches of conscience by insisting that his deed is justified by the cause. In fact, as he says further on, at the end of this speech (line 21), "this sorrow's heavenly," that is to say, "akin to the divine." "It strikes where it doth love;" as we read in Holy Scripture "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." Again, further on, he says (lines 63-65):

O perjur'd woman! thou dost stone my heart.
And mak'st me call what I intend to do
A murder, which I thought a sacrifice.

Compare also lines 137-139:

O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell,
But that I did proceed upon just grounds
To this extremity.

Emilia seems to understand the spirit in which Othello has taken Desdemona's life, when she says (lines 160, 161):

This deed of thine is no more worthy heaven
Than thou wast worthy her.

Indeed, throughout the scene, it is quite evident that Othello had persuaded himself that he was committing not an act of murder, but an act of solemn justice; and though cause may not be exactly the word we should have expected, yet it is one too often abused in connection with crimes of homicide; it is found so often in the mouth of the man who gratifies his own personal malice against his enemy under the guise of "the wild justice of revenge;" or in that of the political cut-throat, who does not scruple to run the risk of taking scores of innocent lives on the chance of reaching the tyrant whom he and his fellow-assassins have condemned to death. Numberless are the cowardly and brutal crimes that have been justified, according to some, by the sacred cause for which they were committed.—F. A. M.

244. Line 5: smooth as MONUMENTAL ALABASTER.—Alabaster was much used for tombs and monuments (see Merchant of Venice, note 22). Compare also Comus, 659-661:

if I but wave this wand,
Your nerves are all chain'd up in alabaster,
And you a statue

Coryat tells us that he saw in one of the libraries at Venice "a little world of memorable antiquities, made in Alabaster" (Coryat's Crudities, ed. 1776, vol. i. p. 224). The simile, of course, is natural and effective; cf. Lucrece, 419:

Her azure veins, her alabaster skin;

with line 391 of the same poem:

Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies.

So The Woman in the Moone, iv. 1:

Such golden hayre, such alabaster looks.
—Fairholt's Lilly, ii. 192.

Alabaster is the old and incorrect form, used by Spenser, Faerie Queene, bk. iii. canto ii st. xlii. line 7:

Her alabaster brest she soft did kis.

In Paradise Regained, iv. 547, we find the right form:

appearing like a mount
Of alabaster, topt with golden spires.

245. Lines 7-13: Put out the light, &c—These lines are full of very wonderful tragic intensity. The speaker seizes on some trivial, accidental object and makes it serve as an illustration of his own position and purpose. We have a precisely parallel piece of artistic subtlety in Richard II. v. 5. 41-48, where the king, in his prison, hears music outside, and lets the music serve as a kind of unconscious commentary on his own jangling, ill-tuned life, and that of men generally.

[We have printed line 7 as Capell prints it. It has been very variously punctuated by different editors, but certainly his arrangement seems the best. Whether Othello carries on the light himself, or whether the light is burning by the bedside, the idea is the same. He is going to extinguish it, when he checks himself as the thought occurs to him which is so beautifully amplified in the following lines. Goldwin Smith thought that this line was a stage-direction which had crept into the text, and would omit it altogether; but surely the beauty of the passage is much injured by such an omission.—F. A. M.]

There are some discrepancies between the Q. and Ff. in this passage. In line 10 the Qq. read: "But once put out thine;" we have kept the reading of Ff. Again, in line 13 Q. 1 has "That can thy light returne;" Q. 2, Q. 3 have returne; the reading in our text is substantially that of Ff.; they print re-tume.

246. Line 22: It strikes where it doth LOVE.—"Let me repeat"—I quote from Coleridge's Lectures—"that Othello does not kill Desdemona in jealousy, but in a conviction forced upon him by the almost superhuman art of Iago —such a conviction as any man would and must have entertained who had believed Iago's honesty as Othello did. We, the audience, know that Iago is a villain from the beginning; but in considering the essence of the Shakesperian Othello, we must perseveringly place ourselves in his situation, and under his circumstances. Then we shall feel immediately the fundamental difference between the solemn agony of the noble Moor, and the wretched fishing jealousies of Leontes, and the morbid suspiciousness of Leonatus, who is, in other respects, a fine character. Othello had no life but in Desdemona:—the belief that she, his angel, had fallen from the heaven of her native innocence wrought a civil war in his heart. She is his counterpart; and, like him, is almost sanctified in our eyes by her absolute unsuspiciousness and holy entireness of love. As the curtain drops, which do we pity the most? (Lectures on Shakspeare, pp. 393, 394). This, it seems to me, is one of those passages in which Coleridge reveals the very heart and vital idea of the poet's work. So far as I know, all modern criticism of the present drama is based on that of Coleridge; a statement indeed which is true of Shakespearian criticism in general—at any rate to a very considerable extent

247. Line 81: I would not kill thy UNPREPARED SPIRIT.
—We may remember Hamlet, i. 5 76-79:

Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,

No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head.

The idea comes out very clearly and pathetically in Heywood's A Woman Killed with Kindness, iv. 6:

O me unhappy! I have found them lying
Close in each other's arms, and fast asleep.
But that I would not damn two precious souls,
Bought with my Saviour's blood, and send them, laden
With all their scarlet sins upon their backs,
Unto a fearful judgment, their two lives
Had met upon my rapier

—Thomas Heywood's Select Plays, in Mermaid ed. p. 53.

Compare, too, Massinger, The Bashful Lover, ii. 7:

Stand forth and tremble!

This weapon, of late drunk with innocent blood,
Shall now carouse thine own: pray, if thou canst,
For, though the world shall not redeem thy body,
I would not kill thy soul.

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 540.

248. Line 46: They do not POINT ON me.—For point on = point to, refer to, compare Julius Cæsar, i. 3 31, 32:

they are portentous things

Unto the climate that they point upon.

So Troilus and Cressida, i. 3. 330, 331:

find Hector's purposes

Pointing on him.

249 Lines 64, 65:

And mak'st me call what I intend to do

A MURDER, which I thought a SACRIFICE.

The sense is: "I came to kill you with the feeling in my mind that I was about to fulfil a sacred duty; but you stone my heart (the Quarto has thy heart), you fill my soul with pitiless cruelty, and when I stab you it will be, not with the calmness of the priest, rather with the remorseless rage of the murderer." Othello will now be an assassin, before he was only avenging justice. His deed is no longer sanctified by sorrow

250 Lines 83, 84:

Oth

It is too late

Emil. My lord, my lord! what, ho! my lord, my lord!

So the Folio and the Quarto of 1630. The Quarto of 1622 inserts a fragment which is much better away; it reads:

Oth. 'Tis too late

Des. O Lord, Lord, Lord.

Em. My Lord, my Lord, &c.

Perhaps the words placed in the mouth of Desdemona represent a piece of player's gag.

251 Line 83: [Smothers her].—"To the Cockpitt to see 'The Moore of Venice,' which was well done Burt acted the Moore; by the same token, a very pretty lady that sat by me, called out, to see Desdemona smothered" (Pepys's Diary, Oct 13, 1660).

252. Line 97: My wife! my wife! what wife! I have no wife—Did Tennyson by any chance remember this line when he wrote in Enoch Arden—

There Enoch spoke no word to any one

But homeward—home—what home? had he a home?

His home, he walk'd?

253 Line 110: she comes MORE NEAR THE EARTH.—We may recollect Milton's:

while overhead the moon

Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth

Wheels her pale course. —Paradise Lost, i. 784-786.

254 Line 183: Go to, CHARM your TONGUE.—Johnson thought it "not improbable that Shakespeare wrote clam your tongue; to clam a bell is to cover the clapper with felt, which drowns the blow and hinders the sound." The proposed correction is certainly maladroit, and perfectly unnecessary, to charm the tongue, i.e. to put it under the spell of silence, being a proverbial phrase. Compare The London Prodigal, ii. 1:

Away, sirrah; charm your tongue;

—Shakespeare's Doubtful Plays, Tauchnitz ed. p. 231 and Cynthia's Revels, i. 1:

How now! my dancing braggart! charm your skipping tongue.

—Ben Jonson's Works, Routledge's ed. p. 72.

Perhaps in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 250, clamour is, as Gifford supposed, a misprint for charm. Furness, by the way (Variorum Othello, p. 815), refers us to The Faerie Queene, v. ix. xxxix. line 3, where charm, however, might mean tune, a sense which it bears in Colin Clouts Come Home Againe, line 5: "charming his oaten pipe." See Globe edition of Spenser, pp. 341 and 549.

255. Line 220: as liberal as the NORTH.—The First Quarto (1622) gives ayre, and this reading has been adopted by many editors. It is more obvious than the north of the Folios, which I have retained (as does the Globe edition), and which may be partly paralleled by Cymbeline, i. 3. 36, 37:

And like the tyrannous breathing of the north

Shakes all our buds from growing.

Collier's MS. Corrector proposed wind, remembering perhaps As You Like It, ii. 7, 47, 48:

I must have liberty

Withal, as large a charter as the wind.

256 Line 235: PRECIOUS villain!—The 1630 Quarto has, less graphically, pernicious.

257. Lines 247, 248:
*I will play the SWAN,
And DIE in MUSIC.*

A very old superstition, alluded to in The Merchant of Venice, iii. 2 44, and King John, v. 7. 21, and based, perhaps, on Ovid's

Sic ubi fata vocant udis abjectus in herbis Ad vada Mæandri concinit albus olor.

—Heroides, vii. 1, 2.

With the English poets the idea is a very favourite one Compare The Phoenix and the Turtle, 14-17, and Hero and Leander, Fourth Sestiad, 266, 267:

the white black-cy'd swans

Did sing;

—Bullen's Marlowe, iii 67.

and Wyatt's The Dying Lover Complaineth:

Like as the swan towards her death
Doth strain her voice with doleful note.

—Wyatt's Works, ed Gilfillan, p. 80.

Many other references might be given; e.g. one in Sidney's Sonnets, Arber's English Garner, ii. p. 173, another in Spenser's Shepheards Calender, October (glosse); another in Love's Metamorphosis, iii. 1.—Fairholt's Lilly, vol. ii. p. 233; and so on.

258. Line 253: It is a SWORD of SPAIN.—Spanish swords were, of course, exceedingly famous and in request. Allusions to them are frequent enough; e.g. 'Tis Pity She's A Whore, i. 2: "spoonmeat is a wholesome diet than a Spanish blade" (Ford's Select Plays, in Mermaid ed. p. 104)

259. Line 268: And very SEA-MARK of my utmost sail.
—So Coriolanus, v. 3. 72: "Like a great sea-mark."

260. Lines 272, 273:
O ill-starr'd WENCH!
Pale as thy SMOOK!

"I may observe," wrote a correspondent of the Gentleman's Magazine in 1829, "that among the common people in Staffordshire the words boy and girl seem even now to be scarcely known, or at least are never used, lad and wench being the universal substitutes. Young women also are called wenches, without any offensive meaning, though in many parts, and especially in the metropolis, the application has become one of vulgar contempt. Hence I have heard that line in Othello,

'O ill-starr'd wench, pale as thy smock,' thus softened down to suit the fastidious ears of a London audience, 'O ill-starr'd wretch, pale as thy sheets.' I owe this extract to Mr. Gomme's Gentleman's Magazine Library, Dialect Section, p. 5.

261. Line 279: BLOW me about in WINDS!—We are reminded of Claudio's

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world.

—Measure for Measure, iii. 1. 124-126.

262. Lines 281, 282:
O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead!
Oh! oh! oh!

So the Quartos Dyce, following neither Quartos nor Folio, prints the most unmusical line

O Desdemona! dead, Desdemona! dead! O!

Professor Hales in his article upon Shakespeare's use of Greek names remarks upon the peculiar appropriateness of Desdemona's name: obviously it is the Greek δουδαιμων, and she of all Shakespeare's characters is superlatively and supremely unfortunate; the very type and symbol of sorrow; not merely unhappy, but unhappiness itself. Professor Hales' essay is reprinted in his Notes and Essays on Shakespeare; see pages 111-113.

263. Lines 346, 347:
*of one whose hand,
Like the base INDIAN, threw a pearl away.*

This is the reading of the Quartos; the Folio has:

*Of one, whose hand
(Like the base JUDEAN) threw.*

Those who retain the text of the Folio suppose that allusion is made to the story of Herod and Mariamne. Myself, I cannot doubt that Judean is an error for Indian, and that the lines are to be explained by a reference to the precisely parallel passages which Boswell was lucky enough to discover. Compare the following:

*So the unskilfull Indian those bright gems
Which might adde majestie to diadems
'Mong the waves scatters.*

—Habington's Castara—To Castara Weeping.

—Arber's Reprint, p. 67.

Again, in The Woman's Conquest, by Sir Edward Howard:

Behold my queen—
Who with no more concern I'll cast away
Than Indians do a pearl that ne'er did know
Its value;

And Drayton's Legend of Matilda:

The wretched Indian spurns the golden ore.
—Works, ed. 1753, vol. ii. p. 351.

This last reference is given by Sidney Walker, A Critical Examination, &c., iii. p. 292. These parallels appear to me to be quite conclusive.

264. Lines 348-350:
*whose subdu'd EYES,
Albeit UNUSED to the MELTING MOOD,
Drop TEARS*

Not unlike Sonnet xxx. line 5:

Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow.

265 Line 351: Their medicinal GUM.—"The gum," says Hunter, "is probably that called Bernix, of which the following account is given in The Great Herbal: 'Bernix is the gomme of a tree that groweth beyond the see For this tre droppeth a gommy thicknesse that hardeneth by heat of the sonne.' Its uses in medicine are then described" (Illustrations, ii. 239). Another suggestion is that myrrh is meant.

266. Lines 358, 359:
*NO WAY BUT THIS,
Killing myself, to DIE UPON A KISS.*

No way but this is probably a variation on the more common no way but one, upon which see Henry V. note 121,

WORDS PECULIAR TO OTHELLO.

Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line
Intentively i. 3 155	Partially ¹⁰ ii. 3 218	Sect ¹⁹ i. 3 337	Trash ²⁹ ii. 1 812
Itterance v. 2 150	Pegs (sub) ii. 1 202	Segregation ii. 1 10	Tup { i. 1 89
Jesses iii. 3 261	Pelt (trans) ii. 1 12	Self-bounty iii. 3 200	" { v. 2 136
*Joint-ring iv. 3 72	Player ¹¹ ii. 1 113	Self-chanty ii. 3 202	Turbaned v. 2 353
Knee-crooking i. 1 45	Pleasance ¹² ii. 3 203	Sequester (sub) iii. 4 40	Twiggen ii. 3 152
Knot (verb) iv. 2 62	Pliant i. 3 151	Shadowing iv. 1 43	Unauthorized iv. 1 2
Law-days iii. 3 140	Plume (verb) i. 3 399	Shipped ²⁰ ii. 1 47	Unbitted i. 3 336
Leagued ¹ ii. 3 218	Poppy iii. 3 330	Signiory ²¹ i. 2 18	Unblessed ³⁰ { ii. 3 311
Lettuce i. 3 325	Post-post-haste i. 3 46	Silliness i. 3 309	" { v. 1 34
Levels ² i. 3 240	Potting ii. 3 79	Skillet i. 3 273	Unbookish iv. 1 102
*Light-winged ³ i. 3 269	Pottle-deep ii. 3 56	Slipper (adj.) ii. 1 249	Unfitting iv. 1 78
List (=desire) ii. 1 105	Prerogative ⁴ iii. 3 274	Slubber ²² i. 3 330	Unhatched ³¹ iii. 4 141
Loading (sub) v. 2 363	Prime ¹³ (adj.) iii. 3 403	Sollicitation iv. 2 202	Unlace ³² ii. 3 194
Locusts i. 3 356	Probal ii. 3 344	Sooty i. 2 70	Unmoving iv. 2 55
Loveliness ⁴ ii. 1 233	Procreants iv. 2 28	Sorry ²³ iii. 4 51	Unperfectness ii. 3 298
Lust-stained v. 1 36	Promulgate i. 2 21	Sour ²⁴ iv. 3 98	Unpin iv. 3 21, 24
Mammering iii. 3 70	Protectress iv. 1 14	Spirit-sturring iii. 3 352	Unproper iv. 1 69
Man ⁵ (verb) v. 2 270	Purse ¹⁴ iii. 3 113	Squabble ii. 3 281	Unprovide iv. 1 218
Manage ⁶ i. 3 215	Qualification ii. 1 282	Startlingly iii. 4 79	Unreconciled v. 2 27
Mediators ⁷ i. 1 16	Quarries ¹⁵ i. 3 141	*State-affairs i. 3 72, 190	Unshunnable iii. 3 275
Molestation ii. 1 10	Quat v. 1 11	*State-matters iii. 4 155	Unused ³³ v. 2 349
Moorship i. 1 33	Rash (adverbially) iii. 4 79	Steep-down v. 2 280	Unvarnished i. 3 90
Morale ii. 3 301	Reconciliation iii. 3 47	Stone ²⁵ v. 2 63	Unwitted ii. 3 182
Mortise ⁸ (sub.) i. 1 9	Recover ¹⁶ ii. 3 272	Supersubtle i. 3 365	Venial iv. 1 9
Mutualities ii. 1 267	Relume v. 2 13	Supervisor iii. 3 395	Veritable iv. 4 76
Night-brawler ⁹ ii. 3 196	Reprobance v. 2 209	Swag-bellied ii. 3 79	Veronesa ii. 1 26
Nonsuits i. 1 16	Requisites ii. 1 250	Symbols ii. 3 350	Waterish ³⁴ iii. 3 15
Observancy iii. 4 149	Re-stem i. 3 37	Tented i. 3 85	Weaponed v. 2 266
Ocular iii. 3 360	Rose-lipped iv. 2 63	Thicken ²⁶ iii. 3 430	*Wedding-sheets iv. 2 105
*Odd-even i. 1 124	Sagittary i. 1 159	Thick-lips i. 1 66	*Well-desired ii. 1 206
Off-capped i. 1 10	Sail ¹⁷ v. 2 263	Thinly ²⁷ iii. 3 431	Well-painted ³⁵ iv. 1 263
Offenceless ii. 3 275	Seamy iv. 2 146	Toged i. 1 25	Whereinto iii. 3 137
*Olympus-high ii. 1 190	Search ¹⁸ i. 1 159	Topped ²⁸ (verb) i. 3 396	Whipster v. 2 244
Outsport ii. 2 3		Toughness i. 3 344	*Wind-instrument iii. 1 5, 10
Out-tongue ⁹ i. 2 19		Tranquil iii. 3 348	Wind-shaked ii. 1 13
Overt i. 3 107			Womaned iii. 4 195
Parallel (adj.) ii. 3 355

1 = joined in friendship; used figuratively in Cymbeline, iii. 2. 213.
2 = to coincide with; used elsewhere in various senses.
3 hyphenated in Q. 1. 48onn. iv. 1
4 = (to) aim; used elsewhere in various senses.
5 = to bring about; used elsewhere in other senses.
6 Lucrece, 1020.
7 A term in carpentry; the verb occurs in Hamlet, iii. 3. 20.
8 Two words in Q. 1.

10 Lucrece, 534.
11 = a trifier; = one who plays at a game, Lear, i. 4. 96; very frequently used = an actor.
12 Pass. Pilgrim, 158.
13 = lascivious; used repeatedly in other senses.
14 = to wrinkle; occurs elsewhere in two other passages = to put in a purse.
15 (Of stone); as term in hunting occurs elsewhere in three passages.
16 = to reconcile; often used in other senses.
17 = a voyage; used elsewhere frequently, especially in other figurative senses.
18 = searchers; used frequently elsewhere in its ordinary sense.

19 = a cutting or scion; used elsewhere in other senses.
20 Used adjectively.
21 = grand council of Venice; used elsewhere in other senses.
22 = to sully; = to do carelessly, in Merchant of Venice, ii. 8. 39.
23 = painful; used in other senses very frequently elsewhere.
24 Used substantively; and in Lucrece, 867.
25 Figuratively = to harden; = to throw stones, in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 807, 836; Lucrece, 978.
26 Used transitively; intransitively in two other passages.
27 = inadequately; used in its more ordinary sense of not thickly in two other passages.
28 = tugged.

29 = to restrain; = to lop, in Tempest, i. 2. 81.
30 This verb is used in Sonn. iii. 4.
31 = not yet brought to light; = unhooked, Tw. Night, iii. 4. 287.
32 Figuratively = to disgrace; in literal sense in Pass. Pilgrim, 149.
33 = not accustomed, and in Sonn. xxx. 5; = not used, in Hamlet, iv. 4. 39; and in several passages in Sonnets.
34 Used figuratively in the sense of thin; in its literal sense of watery in Lear, i. 1. 261.
35 Here figuratively; but used literally in Venus, 212, Lucrece, 1443. Printed as two words in Q. 1.

ORIGINAL EMENDATIONS ON OTHELLO.

EMENDATION SUGGESTED.

Note 180. iv. 1. 1:

Iago. Will you think so?

Othello

To kiss in private!

Iago (Ironically) An unauthoriz'd kiss.

Othello. Or! to be naked with her friend in bed

Think so, Iago! What,

*An hour or more—not meaning any harm:
Naked in bed, Iago, and not mean any harm!*

EMENDATION ADOPTED.

Note 117. ii. 3. 188, 189:

Oth How comes it, Michael, you are thus forgot?

Cas I pray you, pardon me —I cannot speak.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

CLAUDIUS, King of Denmark.

HAMLET, son to the former, and nephew to the present king.

OLONIUS, Lord-chamberlain.

HORATIO, friend to Hamlet.

LAERTES, son to Polonius.

VOLTIMAND,	}	Courtiers.
CORNELIUS,
ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN,
OSRIC,
A Gentleman,

A Priest.

MARCELLUS,	}	Officers.
BERNARDO,

FRANCISCO, a soldier.

REYNALDO, servant to Polonius.

Players.

Two Clowns, grave-diggers.

FORTINBRAS, Prince of Norway.

A Captain.

English Ambassadors.

GERTRUDE, Queen of Denmark, and mother to Hamlet.

OPHELIA, daughter to Polonius.

Lords, Ladies, Officers, Soldiers, Sailors, Messengers, and other Attendants.

Ghost of Hamlet's Father.

SCENE—EL SINORE; except in the fourth scene of the fourth act, where it is a plain in Denmark.

HISTORIC PERIOD: Supposed about the end of the 9th or the beginning of the 10th century.

TIME OF ACTION.

Mr. Marshall (Study of Hamlet, 1875), has the following scheme of time:—

Day 1: Act I. Scenes 1-3.

Day 2: Act I. Scenes 4 and 5.—Interval, about two months.

Day 3: Act II.

Day 4: Act III. and Act IV. Scenes 1-3.

Day 5: Act IV. Scene 4.—Interval, about two months.

Day 6: Act IV, Scenes 5-7.—Interval, two days.

Day 7: Act V. Scene 1.

Day 8: Act V. Scene 2.

Mr. Daniel's scheme differs from this only in reducing the Interval between Days 5 and 6 to about a week; he marks no Interval between Days 6 and 7, and gives one Day only for the whole of Act V.

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

The Literary History of Hamlet is of such great interest, and, at the same time, so full of difficulties and of disputed points, that the most one can do, in the limited space of such an Introduction as this, is to place the chief facts clearly before one's readers, and to point out briefly the deductions which have been or may be made from these facts.

On July 26th, 1602, the Stationers' Register contains the following entry:

James Robertes. Entred for his Copie vnder the handes of master PASFEILD and master waterson warden A booke called 'the Revenge of HAMLETT Prince [of] Denmarke' as yt was latelie Acted by the Lord Chamberleyne his seruantes vj^a

For some reason the publication was deferred; and it was not till 1603 that the first edition of the play was printed with the following title-page:

"THE | Tragicall Historie of | HAMLET
| Prince of Denmarke | By William Shakespeare. | As it hath beene diuerse times acted by his Highnesse ser- | uants in the Cittie of
London: as also in the two V- | niuersities of Cambridge and Oxford, and else-where |
At London printed for N. L. and John Trun-dell. | 1603." No printer's name is given.
In 1604 another Quarto (Q. 2) was printed with the same title, but: "Newly imprinted and enlarged to almost as much | againe as it was, according to the true and perfect |
Coppie. | AT LONDON | Printed by I. R.
for N. L. and are to be sold at his | shoppe
under Saint Dunstons Church in | Fleet street.
1604."

There is little doubt that I. R. is James

Roberts, who had entered the book on the Stationers' Register, 1602; though N. L. (Nicholas Ling) had, in the meantime, in conjunction with Trundell, published a surreptitious edition. This latter Quarto (Q. 2) forms, with the first Folio, the principal authority for the received text of Hamlet; Q. 1 being, as is very generally known, a very imperfect copy of the play, so much so that we cannot profess to give any but a few of the various readings which it contains.

The history of the discovery of this Quarto is a very curious one. In 1821 Sir Henry Bunbury came into possession of the library of Barton, which had belonged to Sir Thomas Hanmer. Among the volumes was a shabby, ill-bound quarto, barbarously cropped, but of almost priceless value; for it contained not only this then unique copy of the early Hamlet, but also ten other Shakespeare Quartos, dated from 1598 to 1603, and The Two Noble Kinsmen, 1634. The Cambridge editors think this volume had belonged to Sir Thomas Hanmer; but surely he could never have overlooked such a treasure. Sir H. Bunbury says he found it in a closet at Barton, in 1823, and that "it probably was picked up by my grandfather, Sir William Bunbury, who was an ardent collector of old dramas" (see Furness, vol. ii. p. 13). The volume was sold to the Duke of Devonshire, in whose possession it now is. This copy of the 1603 Quarto of Hamlet was long thought to be unique; but in 1856 a bookseller in Dublin, M. W. Rooney, purchased from a student of Trinity College a shabby quarto which he had brought from his home in a midland county of England in 1853. He had taken it from a bundle of old pamphlets as a memento of his family, and had tried in vain to dispose of it. On examining this pamphlet, Mr. Rooney found that it was another copy of the supposed unique Quarto of Hamlet, which, though it wanted the title-page, yet had the last leaf, which was wanting in the Duke of Devonshire's copy.¹ It was sold to Mr. Boone for £70, purchased from him for £120 by Mr. Halliwell (Phillips), and is now in the British Museum. Other Quarto editions of Hamlet were published, one in 1605 (Q. 3) being a mere reprint of Q. 2 by J. R[oberts] for N. L[ing]. On November 19th, 1607, Nicholas Ling transferred all his copyrights to John Smithwicke, who brought out the Quarto printed in 1611 with the title-page substantially the same as that of Q. 3 (except that it is called for the first time The Tragedy instead of The Tragical Historie) and also another Quarto, without date, said to be "newly imprinted and enlarged." The Cambridge editors call the 1611 Quarto Q. 4, and the undated Quarto Q. 5; though Mr. Collier and some other authorities think that the latter was printed in 1607. For the convenience of reference we shall adopt the same order of numbering as the Cambridge editors. After the publication of the first Folio the sixth Quarto (Q. 6) was published in 1637, and at the end of the 17th and the beginning of the 18th century several players' Quartos were published, four of which—those of 1676, 1685, 1695, 1703—have been collated by the Cambridge editors. The Quarto of 1695 contains the cast of the play with Betterton as Hamlet, and the passages omitted on the stage are marked by inverted commas. I have carefully collated this copy with the received text of Hamlet, and some of the most remarkable omissions and alterations will be noticed.

Some time before 1603, as early as 1589, or even 1587 according to others, we find a reference to some play on the subject of Hamlet, in an Epistle to the Gentlemen Students of both Universities, by Thomas Nashe, prefixed to Greene's Menaphon (printed in 1589). The passage, so often quoted, contains the following sentence: "he will afford you whole Hamlets, I should say, Handfulls of tragical speeches." In 1594 the Lord Chamberlain's men, of whom Shakespeare was one, were acting with the Lord Admiral's men at Newington Butts under the part management of Henslowe, in whose diary we find the following entry on June 9th: "Rd. at hamlet . . . viiis." This seems to have been an old play; for Henslowe does not put the letters ne to it, as he always does in the case of new plays, and the receipts must have been very small if his share only amounted to eight shillings. As we do not find any other record of the performance of Hamlet in Henslowe's Diary, we may conclude that the play, whosoever it was, was not a very popular one; yet in Dr. Thomas Lodge's Wits Miserie, and the Worlds Madnesse discovering the Devils Incarnate of this age, 1596, we find another reference to it; one of the Devils, speaking of the author, says the Doctor is "a foule lubber, and looks as pale as the visard of y^e ghost, which cried so miserally at y^e theator like an oisterwife, Hamlet revenge" (p. 56). Steevens mentions that he had "seen a copy of Speight's edition of Chaucer, which formerly belonged to Dr. Gabriel Harvey" with a note in the latter's handwriting: "The younger sort take much delight in Shakspeare's Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet Prince of Denmarke, have it in them to please the wiser sort, 1598" (Var. Ed. vol. vii. p. 168). Malone examined the book in question, and found that it was purchased by Harvey in 1598; but he thought the above note need not have been written until 1600. If it were written when the book was first brought out, it would prove the fact that Shakespeare's name was connected with the play of Hamlet in 1598; though, singular to state, Meres, in the often-quoted passage from Palladis Tamia, does not mention Hamlet amongst his tragedies. In Sir Thomas Smith's Voiage and Entertainment in Rushia, &c. 1605, sig. K. ". . . his fathers Empire and Gouvernment we find was but as the Poeticall Furie in a Stage-action, compleat yet with horrid and wofull Tragedies: a first, but no second to any Hamlet; and that now Reuenge, iust Reuenge was comming with his Sworde drawne against him, his royall Mother, and dearest Sister, to fill vp those Murdering Sceanes;" and lastly, Samuel Rowlands, 1620, in The Night Raven (Sig. d. 2) has:

¹ I take these particulars from a small pamphlet published by Mr. Rooney in 1856.

INTRODUCTION.

I will not cry Hamlet Revenge my greeves,
But I will call Hang-man Revenge on theeves.

All these passages are generally held to allude to the old play; but, though this may be true of the earlier allusions before 1600, I do not see any reason to believe that the later ones, because they happen to contain the words Hamlet Revenge, should not refer to Shakespeare's play. It is no uncommon thing for persons who quote from memory to make mistakes; and the words Hamlet Revenge may simply be a recollection of the line spoken by the Ghost, i. 5. 25:

Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.

This same phrase, "Hamlet Revenge," taken out of the old play, is perhaps referred to in the following passage in the Induction to The Warning for Faire Women, where Comedy says:

How some damn'd tyrant to obtain a crown
Stabs, hangs, impoisons, smothers, cutteth throats:

Then, too, a filthy whining ghost,
Lapt in some foul sheet, or a leather pilch,
Comes screaming like a pig half stick't,
And cries, Vindicta! Revenge, Revenge!
—Simpson's School of Shakspeare, vol. ii. pp. 242, 243.

This last allusion is, to say the least, a doubtful one. It may have referred to one of the many ghosts in the old plays of the period before Shakespeare began to write for the stage. But these same two words, "Hamlet, Revenge," are quoted in Dekker's Satiromastix, 1602: "my name's Hamlet, revenge," where the speaker, Tucca, is followed on to the stage by his boy, "with two pictures under his cloak;" and again in Westward Hoe, 1607. We undoubtedly have a quotation as early as 1604 in Marston's Malcontent, iii. 3: "Illo, ho, ho, ho! arte there, olde true penny?" (Works, ed. Halliwell's, vol. ii. p. 249).

We come now to the most difficult and important question, on which there has been such a great difference of opinion, What does this Quarto of 1603 represent? (1) Is it an early version of Shakespeare's play? or (2) is it a mutilated copy, disfigured by blunders of the copyist or the enterprising publisher who annexed it, of the same play from which the Quarto of 1604 was printed? or (3) is it, as the Clarendon editors suggest in their preface, the old play partly revised and rewritten by Shakespeare? That there was an old play, founded on the prose history of Hamlet (to be mentioned hereafter), I think is almost indisputable; and though personally I venture to differ from the authorities on this point, believing that Hamlet in its first rough edition was one of Shakespeare's earliest dramatic efforts, yet it is scarcely possible to maintain that the play, referred to by Nash as one well known in 1589, could have been by Shakespeare, who was then only in his twenty-fifth year. But that Shakespeare had written a version of Hamlet some time before 1603 I firmly believe.

That the Quarto edition, surreptitiously published for N. L. (Nicholas Ling), represents this early version to a certain extent, allowing for mistakes of the copyist and printer—and, most important of all, for excisions and perhaps some interpolations made by the company or companies who had acted the tragedy—there is little doubt. Space will not allow me here to enter into an elaborate analysis of the differences between Q. 1 and Q. 2; but, after examining and re-examining, and comparing the two texts together from a literary and dramatic point of view, it seems impossible to believe that, whether obtained partly from actors' parts and partly transcribed from memory, or taken down in shorthand, the Quarto of 1603 was derived from the same version of the play as the Quarto of 1604, or from the MS. from which the play was printed in F. 1. On the other hand, there is too much of Shakespeare's Hamlet, as we know it, in the Quarto of 1603, for us to admit that it was the old play, only partly revised by him. The more and more one studies the differences, both great and small, between the two Quarto editions of the play, the more one comes to the conclusion that the first was a corrupt and incorrect copy of the play as first put together by its author. In that monumental work, Furness's New Variorum edition of Shakespeare, there will be found, admirably summed up, the various arguments on this point (vol. ii. pp. 14-33). No doubt the theory, so ably set forth by Messrs. Clark and Wright in the Clarendon Press edition, is a very plausible one; and it is quite possible that Shakespeare may have left here and there, in his earlier version of Hamlet, more lines of the old play than he thought fit to retain on maturer consideration; and, in confirmation of this, it is only fair to notice that there are more rhymed couplets in the Quarto of 1603 than in the subsequent edition. The scene between the Queen and Horatio, which is peculiar to the Quarto of 1603, and seems afterwards to have been expanded by the author into the first portion of act v. scene 2, between Hamlet and Horatio, also has the appearance of belonging to the old play; but still the presence of this scene in the first sketch may be accounted for, as being part and parcel of the design to put the Queen's character in a favourable light, which is one of the characteristics of Q. 1. In act i. scene 2 Hamlet's speech beginning:

My lord, tis not the sable sute I weare; is addressed to the King and not to his mother. In Q. 2 it commences thus:

Seemes Maddam, nay it is, I know not seemes.

Again, in Hamlet's soliloquy after the interview with the ghost, act i. 5. 105, the words

O most pernicious woman

are omitted in Q. 1; and we have instead:

Murderous, bawdy, smiling damned villaine, applied to Claudius. The fact of the names Corambis and Montano being given to Polonius and Reynaldo in Q. 1 has been noticed by every commentator; but not the difference between Rosencraft and Gilderstone (Q. 1) and Gylldersterne and Rosencrans in Q. 2. That Q. 1 was partly made up of copies of actors' parts seems indicated by the fact that, in most cases, the cues of the various speeches are printed correctly. If any reader will examine Q. 1 carefully, he will find that the dialogue assigned to some of the characters is printed very correctly in certain portions of the play, and very incorrectly in others; which looks as if the copyist had sometimes written with the MS. before him, and sometimes from the memory either of himself or that of others. The wretched hash that is made of some of the soliloquies may be accounted for by the fact that, in a theatre copy used by a travelling company, the text may not have been set down in full, but only the latter portions or cues of the long speeches. Some of the alterations may have been made by the actors; and this conjecture is confirmed by an examination of the Players' Quarto of 1695, which, as I have already said, represents the version used by Betterton. If, after Hamlet had become almost a classic, an actor of Betterton's intelligence, playing before an audience containing a large number of educated persons more or less familiar with the text of Shakespeare, could venture to mutilate Shakespeare's poetry as he did in Hamlet's first soliloquy e.g. in the following passage:

So excellent a King,
So loving to my Mother. (sic)
That he permitted not the Winds of Heaven
Visit her Face too roughly;

or thus, in a speech of Hamlet which occurs before:

'Tis not alone this mourning cloke could smother;

or again, to change the beautiful line,

I do not set my life at a pin's fee,

to the bald and prosaic:

I do not value my life;

or in the great soliloquy commencing: "To be, or not to be," to substitute for the lines:

And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,

the following:

And thus the healthful face of resolution
Shews sick and pale with thought;

if Betterton in his time ventured to sanction at least, if not to invent, such mutilations of the text, what would not actors dare at a time when Shakespeare was only one of the many dramatic authors of the day, when his pre-eminence had not as yet been recognized save by a very few?

It is time, however, to set before our readers the theory as to the Quarto of 1603, which,

INTRODUCTION.

after long and careful study of it, has grown up in my mind. It is, of course, mere conjecture; but then conjecture has been allowed, of late, to play such fantastic tricks with Shakespeare's very existence, that one may be excused, perhaps, if one ventures to employ it to a more practical end. I would suggest that Shakespeare, at an early period of his career, formed the idea of writing a play in which the chief character should be a person of Hamlet's disposition, through whose mouth he would have the opportunity of speaking many of the secret thoughts of his young heart; one whose lot should be cast amid the most uncongenial surroundings. Some of the speeches, such as the soliloquy, "To be, or not to be," he might have sketched out roughly before he had even decided upon the plot of the play. In his youth, at Stratford-on-Avon, he must have heard a great deal of the terrible scandal relating to the Earl of Leicester's marriage with the widow of the Earl of Essex, after having, as was generally reported, poisoned her husband; and this "tragedy in private life" was surely in his mind when he was writing Hamlet. Indeed, when one comes to examine his character, Claudius with his utterly unscrupulous ambition, his nauseous plausibility, his skilful intrigues to gain popularity, his sensual bonhomie, his cunning employment of courtiers as tools for his infamous designs, is as lifelike a portrait of Robert Dudley as Shakespeare would have ventured to draw.¹

When Shakespeare was acting, with the rest of "my Lorde chamberlen men," under Henslowe's management, in 1594, the old play of Hamlet was represented, in which it is possible that he found the germ of a great tragedy suited to his purpose; the principal character of which could well be developed into a self-analysing hero, oppressed by the uncongeniality of his surroundings, such as he had already pictured in his mind. As soon as he had leisure he took the subject in hand, and wrote his first idea of the play. With this he was not himself satisfied; but, by some means or other, a copy of this first draft got into the hands of a travelling company, who played it with success in different towns, and the two universities of Cambridge and Oxford.² That the actors themselves ventured to make some alterations in the play is extremely probable, and when, some time in the dramatic season 1601-2, Shakespeare had elaborated his first draft into what was substantially the play as we have it in the Quarto of 1604, and had produced it with great success and with his own company, the enterprising pirate publisher stepped in, and, being unable to procure the genuine play, obtained from the travelling company the faulty MS. which they had used, and printed it, as Shakespeare's play, in 1603.

In the Stationers' Register, under date July 26th, 1602, is the entry to James Robertes, [already given above]. In his admirable Forewords to Griggs's Facsimile of the Quarto of 1603 Dr. Furnivall thinks that this entry refers to the pirated edition published in the next year; but on the title-page of the First Quarto no printer's name is given, and on that of the genuine Quarto, 1604, we have "Printed by I. R[oberts] for N. L. and are to be sold at his shoppe under Saint Dunstons Church in Fleet street." It will be noticed that no address is given on the title-page by the publishers of Q. 1. Is it not possible—if my theory as to the date of Shakespeare's revision of his first draft be the right one—that Roberts had obtained the promise of the genuine MS., but that the negotiation having fallen through, N. L. [Nicholas Ling] and John Trundell meanwhile published their spurious edition; and that Shakespeare then, disgusted that such a maimed copy of his great work should be palmed off upon the public, consented to let Roberts have the full and correct manuscript to print from; a manuscript which contained at least one superb passage, the soliloquy in act iv. scene 4, which was not in the theatre copy as printed afterwards in the First Folio, or, if there originally, had been subsequently cut out? It is generally presumed that the N. L. of both the First and Second Quartos was Nicholas Ling; but it is quite possible that the transactions as to the publication of the genuine MS. may have taken place only with Roberts, in whose name, as will be seen from the entry quoted above, the book had first been entered on the Stationers' Register. In the interval between the publication of the pirated Quarto and that of the genuine one in 1604 Shakespeare may have made some further improvements and alterations in the play. But to whatever circumstances we owe its publication, I fully agree with Dr. Furnivall that we have in the Quarto of 1604 the most complete and the best text of Hamlet; and it is quite possible that, but for the dishonest action of N. L. and John Trundell, we should have had to rest content with the much inferior text of the First Folio.

¹ How deep an impression this story made upon many people of the time may be gathered from the Secret Memoirs of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, first published in 1706, and privately reprinted by Messrs. E. & G. Goldsmid, Edinburgh, 1887.

² See title-page of Quarto 1608.

According to my theory, then, we must suppose that the First Quarto (1603) represents Shakespeare's first draft of the play, minus the passages cut out by the actors, and plus the alterations they chose to make, in addition to the errors of the transcriber and printer.

This may seem to be a very far-fetched theory, and there is no doubt that it will be scouted by many Shakespeareans whose authority is worthy of the very highest respect; but I would submit that the title-page of Q. 1 is peculiar in more respects than one. It is the only title-page of any Quarto edition of Shakespeare's plays, as far as I know, which has the statement "As it hath benee diuerse times acted by his Highnesse seruants in the Cittie of London." Now, what does this mean? Who were "his Highnesse seruants?" The Lord Chamberlain's servants we know; they were the company to which Shakespeare belonged in 1597. The First Quarto of Romeo and Juliet says that it was often played by "the Right Honourable the Lord of Hunsdon his servants." After 1603 or 1604 we have "by his Majesty's servants," e.g. in the entry in the Stationers' Register of King Lear of November 26th, 1607; but nowhere have we "his Highness' servants." The Quarto of Love's Labour's Lost has "As it was presented before her Highness this last Christmas."

Now, it is worth remarking that we learn from Henslowe's Diary that on May 9th, 1603, "my Lord of Worsters men" played by the king's license, which must have been conceded to them by James I. before he granted one to his own company, formerly the Lord Chamberlain's and subsequently known as "his Majesty's servants," the patent of which to L. Fletcher, Shakespeare, Burbage, and others bears date May 17th, 1603. I would venture, therefore, to suggest that the Quarto of 1603 was printed from a copy of the play which had never been played by Shakespeare's own company, but by another one; perhaps by "my Lord of Worsters men," or by some members of that company who had been travelling during the last five or six years preceding 1603.

As to the chief source whence the plot of this play was taken, it has undoubtedly perished with the old play; for we cannot consider that Shakespeare owed anything directly to the original history of Hamlet in Saxo Grammaticus, or to Belleforest's version of it from Bandello, published in 1559; much less to the English translation of Belleforest, which was published by Pavier in 1608. The title given by Belleforest to the story was: "Avec quelle ruse Amleth, qui depuis fut Roy de Dannemarch, vengea la mort de son pere Horvuendile, occis par Fengon son frere, autre occurrence de son histoire." Pavier calls his translation—which Collier described as "bald, literal, and in many places uncouth"—simply the Hystorie of Hamblet Prince of Denmarke (Hazlitt's Shak. Lib. Pt. 1, vol. ii. p. 215, 216). This English translation was, I firmly believe, only published in consequence of the success of the play. The incidents common to Shakespeare's play and to the English Hystorie of Hamblet are very few; and as to any hints for the characterization of the Dramatis Personæ the prose narrative is a perfect blank. No two persons can be more different than the coarse, brutal, ruffianly Hamblet and the hero of Shakespeare's tragedy. Of course the author of the old play may have followed more closely the story as given in Belleforest than Shakespeare has; but the only incidents, common to the Hystorie and to the play, are the fact of the King having murdered his brother, and afterwards contracted an incestuous marriage with his sister-in-law; the assumption of madness by Hamlet; and his killing one of the King's friends who had concealed himself during the interview between himself and his mother. The idea of using Ophelia as a means to detect whether Hamlet's madness was real or not was, no doubt, suggested by the very coarse incident in Saxo Grammaticus, which is considerably modified in Belleforest and in the English translation. The fact that one of the courtiers, who had been brought up with Amlethus, helps him to avoid the trap laid for him by means of the woman, in Saxo Grammaticus, may have suggested the character of Horatio; but it is at the best a very faint suggestion. The Danish prince is certainly sent to England, and procures, by means of counterfeit letters, that the fate, intended for him by Fengon at the hands of the King of England, should overtake the two courtiers sent with him, much in the same way as Hamlet procures the banishment of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern; but we may presume that these incidents were found in the old play, and were not taken by Shakespeare direct from the Hystorie.

INTRODUCTION.

As to the question whether Pavier's Hystorie of Hamlet was really published earlier than 1608—as Collier confidently asserted without an atom of proof—and before the production of the play, I think that it is completely answered by Elze, an abstract of whose cogent argument will be found in vol. ii. p. 89 of Dr. Howard Furness's New Variorum Edition of Hamlet. There are two passages in the History which have been often quoted as showing that Shakespeare had, at any rate, studied this prose story. They both occur in the scene, which corresponds to the scene in the Queen's closet in the play, in which Polonius is killed, and they will be found on page 236 of Vol. II. Part I. of Hazlitt's edition of the Shakespeare Library. In the first the narrator states that "the counsellor entred secretly into the Queenes chamber, and there hid himselfe behind the arras." The next is that which describes Hamlet entering "like a cocke beating with his armes, (in such manner as cockes vse to strike with their wings), vpon the hangings of the chamber, whereby feeling something stirring vnder them, he cried a rat a rat, and presently drawing his sworde thrust it into the hangings" (Hazlitt's Shak. Lib. vol. ii. Pt. I. p. 236). It is very remarkable that neither in Saxo Grammaticus nor in Belleforest is there any mention of arras or hangings. In Saxo Grammaticus the word used is stramentum, the whole passage being: "obstreptentis galli more occentum edidit, brachiiisque pro alarum plausu concussis, con(s)enso stramento¹ corpus crebris saltibus librare cepit, siquid illic clausum delitesceret, experturus. Atubi subiectam pedibus molem persensit, ferro locum rimatus, suppositum confodit, egestumque latebra trucidauit" (Holder's ed. p. 91). The corresponding word, in Belleforest, to stramentum is loudier or lodier, and he says that "le Conseiller entra secrettement en la chambre de la Reine, se cacha sous quelque loudier" (Belleforest, Histoires Tragiques, vol. v. p. 42). As to the expression, A rat, a rat! there is not the slightest parallel to this either in Saxo Grammaticus or in Belleforest. It is highly improbable, to say the least, that these alterations should have been made by the translator, unless they had been suggested to him by the play. If we could discover any early copy of the translation which was published by Pavier, it would help us to determine whether these expressions were taken from the old play, or whether they were, as I think is more probable, inserted after Shakespeare's Hamlet had been represented on the stage.

It would be impossible to give here the many passages to be found in authors of the seventeenth century before the Restoration, in which portions of this play are either bodily "conveyed," or most obviously imitated. To take an early and a late one, one may fairly say that Marston's Malcontent (1604) would never have been written—though Giovanni Altofronto, otherwise Malevole, is ¹ I should have thought that stramentum, in this passage, meant the rushes or straw that are strewed on the floor; but Belleforest certainly seems to have taken it to mean "a counterpane," though the former meaning coincides better with the context of the passage in Saxo.

HAMLET.

but a Brummagem imitation of Hamlet after all—if Shakespeare's play had not appeared. As a specimen of one of the later imitations of Hamlet, we may mention that little-known tragedy The Fatal Contract, by William Hemmings, Master of Arts at Oxford, printed in 1661, but acted before that. In that play we have an Aphelia and a Ghost in armour; and, though the story of the play is totally different, many passages from Hamlet are either adapted or closely imitated.

The Cambridge editors say that the text of Hamlet in the Folio of 1623 is derived from an independent MS., one which had evidently been curtailed for the purpose of representation. Some passages are however found in the Folio which are not found in Q. 2, or in its successors, but some of which "are found in an imperfect form in the Quarto of 1603, and therefore are not subsequent additions" (vol. viii. p. xi.). The text is, in this edition, like that of most editors, founded upon a combination of those of Q. 2 and F. 1.

STAGE HISTORY.

From the time of its first production to the present day the tragedy of Hamlet seems to have kept a firmer and more uninterrupted hold upon the stage than any other play of Shakespeare's. Except during that brief and gloomy period, when Puritanism was in the ascendant, and no rational or wholesome amusements were allowed to the English people, one may venture to say that not a single year passed without it being represented several times, not only in London, but in the provinces. It is a common saying, amongst people connected with the stage, that no actor has ever yet positively failed in Hamlet; and managers, in town and country, will tell you that you have only to put Hamlet up, even with a bad cast, and you may rely on a fairly good house. Be the reason what it may, it is certain that, for the general public, who are not afflicted with that elegant complaint known as ennui or boredom—generally the result of too close an intimacy with and complete subserviency to one's own self,—for ordinary people who have not emasculated their minds and passions, Hamlet, even imperfectly represented, has always had a strong interest: while, whenever an actor of talent, to say nothing of genius, attempts the chief part, he is sure to attract a numerous and attentive audience. One need not go far back in the annals of the English stage to learn that on those few occasions when an actor of real genius has arisen to throw a new light upon the complex character of Hamlet, the theatre-going public have always evinced their sympathy and interest by flocking night after night to see such a performance. This extraordinary popularity of Hamlet as an acting play is full of instruction to two classes of persons; first, to those who are never tired of declaring that the taste of the present day necessitates a total separation between literature and the drama; secondly, to those who are always sneering feebly and dyspeptically at the actor's art—persons ravenously jealous of the applause which the actor receives, but which the public ungenerously withholds from them in any of their multifarious capacities. These latter may lay to heart the undoubted fact that Hamlet, the most poetic in some respects of any of Shakespeare's plays, could not have been written by anyone but a practised actor familiar with the stage and all its ways; also this fact, scarcely less disputable, that all the reams of criticism, which have been written on the character of Hamlet, have not been able to bring home to the minds of men the real meaning of the character so clearly as a single performance of some great actor.

Allusion has been made, in the Literary History of this play, to the peculiarity of the title-page of the first Quarto (1603). It is the only one of all the Shakespearean Quartos that contains any specific reference to performances out of London. If we are to believe that title-page, then, we know that Hamlet in its unrevised form was acted at both universities and elsewhere in the provinces by some company, probably not Shakespeare's own. These performances may have been simultaneous with those of the revised play in London by the Lord-Chamberlain's company to which Shakespeare belonged; or they may have taken place before Shakespeare produced his revised version. At any-rate, during the lifetime of its author, Hamlet was already a popular play, and this is proved by the numerous allusions to it by contemporary writers. Of these allusions to the play as an acted play, one of the earliest and most interesting is an entry in the "journal" or log-book of Captain Keeling of the ship Dragon, in 1607; "September 5 [at 'Serra Leona'] I sent the interpreter, according to his desier, aboard the Hector, wher he brooke fast, and after came aboard mee, wher we gave the tragedie of Hamlett;" and again on the 31st of the same month, "I envited Captain Hawkins to a fishe dinner, and had Hamlet acted aboard," adding "wth I permitt to keepe my people from idlenes and unlawfull games, or sleepe" (Shakespeare's Centurie of Prayse, p. 79). The next reference we find is in an elegy on "y^e Death of the famous Actor Richard Burbedge," which mentions Hamlet amongst his characters:

INTRODUCTION.

hee's gone & wth him what A world are dead.
which he reui'd, to be reuiued soe,
no more young Hamlett, ould Heironymoe, &c.

—Centurie of Prayse, p. 131.

The materials for the stage history of any play during the reigns of James I. and Charles I. are very scanty; but the two following extracts may serve to show that this play was still a very popular one. In Anthropophagus: the Man-Eater, 1624, p. 14, by E. S., speaking of flatterers the author says: "for they are like Hamlets ghost, hic et ubique, here and there, and every where, for their oune occasion;" and in John Gee's New Shreds of the old Snare, 1624: "As for examples the Ghost in Hamblet, Don Andreas Ghost in Hieronimo" (Centurie of Prayse, p. 160).

Pepys saw Hamlet on August 24th, 1661, at the Opera—that is to say, the House in Lincoln's Inn Fields—"done with scenes very well, but above all, Betterton did the Prince's parts beyond imagination" (vol. i. p. 342); and again, on November 28th of the same year, "very well done" (p. 382). Downes' first mention of Hamlet is in 1662, among the plays acted at the new theatre (Sir William Davenant's) in Lincoln's Inn Fields: "The Tragedy of Hamlet, Hamlet being performed by Mr. Betterton: Sir William (having seen Mr. Taylor, of the Black-Fryars Company, act it; who being instructed by the Author Mr. Shakespeare) taught Mr. Betterton in every particle of it, gain'd him esteem and reputation superlative to all other plays. Horatio by Mr. Harris; the King by Mr. Lilliston; the Ghost by Mr. Richards; (after by Mr. Medburn.) Polonius by Mr. Lovel; Rosencrans by Mr. Dixon; Guilderstern by Mr. Price; 1st. Gravemaker by Mr. Underhill; the 2d. by Mr. Dacres; the Queen by Mrs. Davenport; Ophelia by Mrs. Saunderson;" (afterwards Mrs. Betterton): "No succeeding Tragedy for several years got more reputation or money to the Company than this" (pp. 29, 30). This account of Downes incidentally opens the question as to who was the original representative of Hamlet, Taylor or Burbage? This is a point on which we have no decisive evidence. But whether Burbage was the original of Hamlet or not, we know that he acted the part and identified himself, to a great measure, with it, as will be seen from the funeral elegy on his death already quoted. Taylor, according to the Historia Histrionica, acted Hamlet "incomparably well." Pepys saw Hamlet again on May 28th, 1663, and on August 31st, 1668, on which latter occasion he says that he had not seen it "this year before, or more; and mightily pleased with it, but above all with Betterton, the best part, I believe, that ever man acted" (vol. v. p. 347). So long as Betterton lived no one seems to have cared to dispute his supremacy in this part. In the Quarto, 1695,¹ as well as in the octavo edition,

¹ The cast prefixed to this edn. shows that except Betterton and his wife there were few survivors from the cast of 1662:

Claudius , King of Denmark.....	Mr. Crosby.
Hamlet , Son to the former King....	Mr. Betterton.
Horatio , Hamlet's Friend.....	Mr. Smith.
Marcellus , an Officer.....	Mr. Lee.
Polonius , Lord Chamberlain.....	Mr. Nouke.
Laertes , Son to Polonius	Mr. Young.
Rosencrans , } two Courtiers.....	Mr. Norris.
Guilderstern , }.....	Mr. Cademan.
Fortinbrass , King of Norway.....	Mr. Perceival.
Ostrick , a fantastical Courtier....	Mr. Jevan.
Barnardo , } two Centinels.....	Mr. Rathband.
Francisco , }.....	Mr. Floyd.
Ghost of Hamlet's Father.....	Mr. Medburn.
Two Grave-makers.....	Mr. Undrill.
	Mr. Williams.
Gertrard , Queen of Denmark.....	Mrs. Shadwel.
Ophelia , in love with Hamlet	Mrs. Betterton.

1703, his name is in the cast. On December 20th, 1709, we find him at the Haymarket Theatre still acting Hamlet, though now above 70 years old, with the manner, gesture, and voice of youth. Even the crabbed Antony Aston was obliged to acknowledge that though Betterton in his old age could no longer look the Prince of Denmark, yet he was Hamlet. This must have been the last occasion on which he played the part, for on the 13th April, 1710, in the same season he made his last appearance as Melantius in the Maid's Tragedy. Rather than disappoint the public, he is said to have plunged his gouty foot into cold water in order to enable him to walk on the stage in a slipper. The result was that the disease flew to his head, and he was carried home from the theatre only to die. During Betterton's latter years Wilks and Powell both played Hamlet, but neither of them seems to have made any great impression in the part. At Drury Lane on February 14th, 1710, Miss Santlow, afterwards Mrs. Booth, played Ophelia for the first time; and after having drowned herself, apparently came to life again to speak the epilogue "in boy's clothes" (Genest, vol. ii. p. 435). Mrs. Mountford on November 6th, 1705, appeared, for the first time, as Ophelia at Drury Lane. According to an anecdote, said to have been related by Colley Cibber to the celebrated George Anne Bellamy, she subsequently became insane; but her madness not being of a violent nature, she was allowed a certain measure of freedom. One evening, learning that Hamlet was being played at the theatre, she managed to give her attendants the slip, and, to the astonishment alike of actors and audience, pushed on to the stage in the mad scene before the actress who was playing Ophelia could prevent her, when she gave what must have been one of the most touching realizations of that pathetic scene ever witnessed. This was indeed her last appearance, for death soon after put an end to her misery.

In the interval between Betterton's death and the appearance of Garrick, besides W. Powell already mentioned, Mills, Ryan, and Millward seem to have been the only representatives of Hamlet. Booth, curious to say, never seems to have attempted this part, but contented himself with that of the Ghost, as did Boheme. Quin wisely left the young Prince of Denmark alone. He played the King to Ryan's Hamlet at Lincoln's Inn Fields, 1718, 1719; and later on he appeared as the Ghost at Drury Lane, apparently for the first time, in the season 1731-32, probably to the Hamlet of Wilks. This was a part which Quin's stately style of elocution well became, and it appears to have been one of his most successful characters. A handsome young Irishman, Dennis Delane, whose physical advantages atoned, with one portion of the audience at any rate, for defects in his elocution and action, had appeared as Hamlet at Drury Lane on March 15th, 1742; having previously played the Ghost on January 26th of the same year, when Millward being unable to perform, Hamlet had to be read by Cibber, jun.; which must have been very like the tragedy with the Prince of Denmark left out. But Delane's rising fame was quite obscured by the appearance of Garrick as Hamlet for the first time in England—he had played the part in Ireland—on November 16th, 1742; on which occasion Delane, as the Ghost, had plenty of opportunities to observe his rival's triumph. The cast included Hallam as Laertes, Taswell as Polonius, and Macklin as the First Gravedigger, with Mrs. Pritchard as the Queen, and Mrs. Clive as Ophelia. In spite of his unsuitable dress and his trick chair¹ in the closet scene, Garrick's Hamlet was a great success. He played it again, for his benefit, on the 13th January, and during this season (1742-43) no less than thirteen times.

While Garrick was establishing his fame in Hamlet and other Shakespearean characters, the rival house at Covent Garden could only oppose such attractions as Ryan in Hamlet, supported by Quin as the Ghost and Mrs. Clive as Ophelia. On March 31st, 1744, the Irish actor Sheridan made his first appearance on the English stage as Hamlet, with Mrs. Pritchard as the Queen. Hamlet was one of the six characters that Garrick played in the summer of 1746 at Covent Garden, receiving £300 for the six performances. On this occasion it may be worth noticing that Shuter appeared as Osric. This was an early performance of the celebrated comedian who, later in his career, was one of the most truly comic representatives of the First Gravedigger. In the next season, at Drury Lane, appeared the most formidable rival Garrick ever had to encounter, Spranger Barry, an Irish actor, who made his first appearance as Hamlet, at Drury Lane, for Macklin's benefit on the 24th March, 1747, but was never able to eclipse Garrick in this part as he did undoubtedly in that of Othello. On March 20th, 1755, for Woodward's benefit, there was a very strong cast in Hamlet, which included besides Garrick Mrs. Pritchard as the Queen, and Mrs. Cibber as Ophelia, and the bénéficiaire himself as Polonius, a part which did not suit him so well as that of Osric. The actor, who seems to have taken Garrick's place as Hamlet most frequently during his particularly short career on the stage, was Charles Holland, whom Churchill censures so much for his imitation of his great manager and master. Genest relates an amusing anecdote of this actor, with reference to the admirable reform introduced by Garrick in the season 1762-63, namely, the enlargement of Drury Lane so as to do away with the necessity of having members of the audience seated in a built-up amphitheatre on the stage, at benefits and other specially attractive performances. Holland was playing Hamlet for his first benefit, and the seats on the stage were filled with people from Chiswick, his native place. When the Ghost appeared, by the usual stage trick Hamlet's hat flew off, and it fell at the feet of a young damsel from Chiswick, who was a great admirer of Holland. She, with the very best intentions, picked up the hat, stole softly from her seat, and placed it on Holland's head, with the broad corner foremost as generally worn by drunken men; and Holland, unconscious of the ridiculous appearance he presented, went on with the scene, to the huge delight of the audience. At Covent Garden on April 25th, 1788, for Bensley's benefit, William Powell made his first appearance as Hamlet with, "for that night only," Mrs.

¹ A chair so made that, when he rose from it, it fell over.

INTRODUCTION.

Yates as the Queen. He repeated the part three times in the following season. Had not this promising actor died at the premature age of thirty-four, it is possible he might have proved a serious rival to Garrick.

Hamlet had hitherto escaped the desecrating hand of adapters or mutilators such as Davenant, Dryden, Tait, Cibber, and others; but in an evil moment it occurred to Garrick to try and improve this matchless tragedy. Happily his version was so indifferently received that he never ventured to print it. Some of his ideas are quite unobjectionable, such as the different division into acts of the play; while one was distinctly good, namely, the restoration of the fourth scene of act iv. between Fortinbras and Hamlet. The chief alterations he made were in the last act, from which he excised bodily the Gravediggers and Osric. The Queen was not poisoned on the stage, but was led from her seat in a supposed state of insanity brought on by remorse; the King, when attacked by Hamlet, draws his sword and defends himself, and is killed in the struggle. Tate Wilkinson, unable to get a copy of Garrick's alteration, arranged a version for himself, which he published in his Wandering Patentee. In this he inserted passages from other plays of Shakespeare, putting into the mouth of the King the dying speech of Cardinal Beaufort from II. Henry VI. iii. 3. 8-18. He also saved the life of Laertes. Garrick's version was played at Drury Lane up to April 21st, 1780, when, for the benefit of Bannister, jun., "Hamlet as written by Shakespeare" was produced. After this, Garrick's version never seems to have been acted. Hamlet could not certainly have been among Jack Bannister's best characters; but, nevertheless, he did good service in restoring Shakespeare's play to the stage.

Henderson, who next to Barry was the most powerful rival against whom Garrick had to contend, made his first appearance as Hamlet at Drury Lane, September 30th, 1777; among the cast being Palmer as the Ghost, Farren as Horatio, and Mrs. Mary Robinson (Perdita) as Ophelia. He had made his original début, anonymously, in this character at Bath on October 6th, 1772. His physical disqualifications for the part were many, his fencing being one of his weakest points; but in the delivery of some of the soliloquies, and in the scene with the Players, he was inferior to none of his great rivals.

HAMLET.

A mere enumeration of the many actors who have played Hamlet in London alone would occupy a considerable space; while pages might be filled with criticisms of the stately John Kemble, the scholarly Young, and the passionate Edmund Kean, whose scene with Ophelia was so infinitely touching. G. F. Cooke failed completely in Hamlet. Charles Kemble looked the Prince completely, but Hamlet was not one of his greatest successes. Mrs. Siddons played the part some five or six times, but only in the country; she did not venture on the experiment in London. She is by no means the only actress who has essayed the part. Charlotte Cushman played it a few times in America, and alluded to it in her letters as the very highest effort she had ever made; Miss Marriott played Hamlet more than once in London, at Sadler's Wells and elsewhere; and Madame Sarah Bernhardt was seen as the Danish Prince in a French version, produced at the Adelphi, June 12, 1899. Some critics have tried to prove that Hamlet really was a woman; and perhaps a female Hamlet may be less unsatisfactory than a female Romeo. Macready, Phelps, Charles Kean, and numerous other actors distinguished themselves, more or less, as Hamlet in the first half of last century. The most sensational Hamlet within recollection, in some points at least, was the late Charles Fechter, whose performance (1863) was certainly full of charm; and when we consider the great difficulties that he had to overcome, we cannot but admit that, coming from a Frenchman, it was one of the greatest tributes to the genius of Shakespeare which has been given in our time. This character has always had the strongest fascination for foreign actors. Some persons, laudatores temporis acti, have insisted that Devrient was the greatest Hamlet they ever saw. Rouvier was seen to little advantage at the St. James's Theatre as Hamlet. Other distinguished foreign actors who have essayed the part in this country are Salvini, Ernesto Rossi, and Mounet Sully.

No greater tribute to the intrinsic power which Hamlet possesses over an audience has ever been shown, than the wonderfully long run which this play had, when produced by Mr. Bateman at the Lyceum (October 31st, 1874), with Henry Irving as the Prince. The representation had no adventitious advantages of scenery, and the cast in some respects was not particularly strong. Since then the play has been revived with every advantage that beautiful scenic accessories could give, but with scarcely greater success than it had for the two hundred consecutive nights when it was represented in its unadorned state. Sir Henry Irving's Hamlet commanded the profound admiration and appreciative study of scholars and the public, and held its place in the front rank of the great actor's representations, from the date of his first appearance in the part to that of his lamented death—full of honours rather than of years—on October 13th, 1905. Miss Terry's Ophelia, which graced the revival of Hamlet at the Lyceum under Irving's own management (December 30th, 1878), was pronounced ideal and divine. Several actors have given, during recent years, versions of the part usually rendered interesting by the exponents' earnest efforts to realize to the utmost the character of Hamlet, as seen in the light of the critical and illuminative study bestowed on it by modern writers and thinkers. Among such performances have been those of Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree (who produced the tragedy with every scenic advantage at the Haymarket, in January, 1892); Mr. J. Forbes-Robertson (Lyceum, September, 1897); Mr. H. B. Irving (Adelphi, April, 1905); and Mr. Martin Harvey (Lyric, May, 1905).

What is believed to have been the first representation in America of Hamlet was, in spite of Quaker opposition, given in Philadelphia, 27th July, 1759, by the company under the management of Douglass.

The cast, so far as it can be traced, was:

Hamlet = Hallam.	Laertes = Reed.
Polonius = Harman.	Horatio = Morris.
Ghost = Douglass.	King = Tomlinson.

INTRODUCTION.

Grave-diggers =	{ Allyn. Harman.
Player King =	Scott.
Osric =	A. Hallam.
Guildenstern =	Horne.
Ophelia =	Mrs. Harman.
Queen =	Mrs. Douglass.
Player Queen =	Mrs. Love.

Since then Hamlet has been as popular in America as in England, and every tragedian of note—Booth, Wallack, Forrest, and others, whose names are scarcely less familiar here than there—has been seen as “Hamlet the Dane.”

HAMLET IN GERMANY.

I have thought it best, under the above heading, to treat a question which concerns both the Literary and Stage History of Hamlet. In his interesting work, Shakespeare in Germany, published in 1864, Mr. Cohn says: “About the year 1665, this piece was performed by the Veltheim company, but it is of a much older date than this, for we find it in the Dresden Stage-library in 1626, and even then it was no new piece, as there is every reason to believe that it had been brought to Germany by the English players as early as 1603” (part i. p. cxx). In part ii. (pp. 241–304 inclusive) he gives the German text and an English translation, side by side, of this tragedy, the full title of which is “Fratricide Punished, or Prince Hamlet of Denmark.” The German text given Mr. Cohn describes as a “late and modernized copy of a much older manuscript.” The copy bears the date “Pretz, den 27. Oktober 1710”; it is entitled TRAGOEDIA. Der bestrafte Brudermord ober: Prinz Hamlet aus Dännemarf (Tragedy. Fratricide Punished, or Prince Hamlet of Denmark), and appears to have been first published, in its entirety, in 1781, “in the German periodical Olla Potrida” (sic). It commences with a short Prologue, the speakers in which are Nacht (Night), and the Three Furies, Alecto, Tisiphone, and Megeera. This Prologue is in verse, with the exception of one long prose speech of Night; and it is the only portion of the play which contains anything which can pretend to the title of poetry. The tragedy itself is a wretchedly dreary composition, written entirely in prose, with the exception of one or two rhyming couplets at the end of scenes, and is remarkable for having every vestige not only of the poetry, but of the dramatic vigour of Shakespeare's play, carefully eliminated. In fact it bears about as much relation to the Tragedy of Hamlet—as we know it from the Second Quarto (1604), or the Folio, or even in the mutilated version of the Quarto of 1603—as one of Kirkman's Drolls does to the play on which it was professedly founded, whether the work of Shakespeare or of any contemporary author. Of Hamlet's wonderful soliloquies not a line remains; and even where the story does follow that of Shakespeare's tragedy, the scenes are so arranged as to destroy entirely the dramatic construction of the original. In short it is such a contemptible production, that any student or admirer of Shakespeare may be excused if he finds himself unable, from want of patience, to read the whole of it. I have been through it carefully myself, line by line, and, after making allowances for the extensive modernization the printed version may have undergone, it is impossible to believe that it represents, however remotely, any version of Hamlet written by Shakespeare. Mr. Cohn says (part i. p. cxxi): “Single passages in the German piece shew that an edition of the original must have been used which contained passages that are in the folio, but not in the first quarto, while other passages prove incontrovertibly that precisely this quarto must have been the source employed by the translator. Thus, for instance, the Ghost says to Hamlet, ‘Mark me, Hamlet, for the time draws near when I must return to whence I came,’ and concludes his speech with the words ‘Thus was I robbed of kingdom, wife and life by this foul tyrant.’ The former is evidently taken from the words which the Ghost uses in our accepted text of Hamlet:

My hour is almost come,
‘When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself;

while the latter corresponds exactly to the order in which the Ghost mentions the same things in the original.

HAMLET.

Thus was I sleeping by a brother's hand
Of Crowne, of Queene, of life, of dignitie
At once deprived,' etc."

But I cannot really see anything in the text of the German piece to justify these statements of Mr. Cohn. That the author, whoever he was, had seen or read Shakespeare's Hamlet, as we have it in the Folio or the Quarto of 1604, is most probable, if not certain; also that he must have had access to some copy of the Quarto of 1603, which edition, it will be remembered, was not then known to any of the English commentators of the 18th century. This, in itself, is a very interesting fact, for we may venture to infer from this that this Quarto of 1603, or something like it, had been represented on the stage in Germany, whether in English or in a German translation we have no evidence to show. On the other hand, that there are passages in the German play, which, to quote Mr. Cohn, "prove incontrovertibly that precisely this quarto must have been the source employed by the translator," I cannot see. If we found in the German version that the peculiar sequence of the scenes, for instance, in the Quarto of 1603, was followed rather than that of the Folio or the Quarto of 1604; or if there were any parallels to the one scene peculiar to the Quarto of 1603, the scene between Horatio and the Queen (see Shakspeare Quarto Facsimile of Hamlet, scene xiv. p. 53), Mr. Cohn's statement, quoted above, might be justifiable; but we find no such thing. On the other hand there seems to me no internal evidence that the author of the German piece, "Eratricide Punished," &c., need have used the Quarto of 1603 at all. He could have obtained the wretchedly bald skeleton of Hamlet, which he has dressed up in dull and shabby prose, from the Folio, or from the Quarto of 1604. Bald, and corrupt in many passages the Quarto of 1603 undoubtedly is; but it does contain the germs of three of the finest soliloquies, and many passages of beautiful poetry, all of which the German adapter succeeded in eliminating; so that it really could be only a trifle to him to have got rid of the additional poetry, and of the finer passages first given in the Quarto of 1604.

The only absolute point of resemblance between the German play and the Quarto of 1603 is that Polonius in the former is called Corambus, and in the latter Corambis; but there is no resemblance in the names of the other characters; for instance Laertes, who is called in Q. 1 Leartes, in the German play is Leonhardus; Claudius is called Erico, apparently a modified form of Eric; the Queen is called Sigrie; while Hamlet, Horatio, and Ophelia (not Ofelia as in the Quarto of 1603), and Francisco are found both in the German play and in the Quarto of 1604. In the first scene of the German play the Two Sentinels, as in the Quarto of 1603, are simply First and Second Sentinel; but the name Barnardo, which occurs in the Quarto of 1603, does not occur in the German play. Of new characters introduced into the latter we have Phantasma the Clown, who takes the place of Osric in the last act, and who is a most abominable excrescence in the other scenes, principally the mad scenes of Ophelia, in which he appears. There is also Jens a Peasant, an unimportant character, who appears only in a short scene in the third act. The Principal of the Comedians is called Carl. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern do not appear; but "Two Ruffians" are introduced in their place, who accompany Hamlet on his voyage to England by the King's orders; they attempt, in a ridiculous scene in the fourth act, to shoot Hamlet. From a careful examination of the German text I can only discover one passage which could hardly have been written, unless the author had seen either the Quarto of 1604 or the Folio, and that is in act i. scene 7 of the German piece, which commences with the speech corresponding to that of the King in Shakespeare's play:

Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death.

—Act i. sc. 2.

In the German version the beginning of that speech is thus rendered: "Obschon unsers Herrn Bruders Tod noch in frischem Gedächtniss bey jedermann ist, und uns gebietet, alle Solennitäten einzustellen, werden wir doch anjetzo genöthiget, unsere schwarze Trauerkleider in Carmosin, Purpur und Scharlach zu verändern." The English translation given in Cohn's book is slightly misleading; it runs thus: "Though yet of our dear brother's death the memory is green to all and it beftteth us to suspend all joyous demonstrations, yet from this time 'tis meet we change our suits of solemn black to crimson, purple, and scarlet" (part ii. p. 256). Literally it should be translated thus: "Although our brother's death still is in fresh remembrance with every one, and it befits us to defer all [state] solemnities, yet are we from this time compelled to change our black mourning clothes into crimson, purple, and scarlet." In many places the translator has, very naturally, paraphrased the German text in the language of Shakespeare, even where the latter does not literally render the words of the former.

INTRODUCTION.

As to any actual evidence of the representation of Shakespeare's Hamlet, or of any other play on the same subject as early as 1603 or 1604, we can find none in Mr. Cohn's work. In the collection of so-called English Comedies and Tragedies, published in 1620¹ (see Cohn, part i. pp. cvii-cxi), Hamlet does not occur. The first mention of its representation appears to be in a very interesting catalogue of plays, written in an almanac by an officer of the Dresden Court in 1626, in which we find that on the 24th June of that year, Tragædia von Hamlet einen printzen in Dennemarck (Tragedy of Hamlet, a Prince of Denmark) was represented. The other Shakespearean plays contained in the list are Julius Cæsar, Lear, and Romeo and Juliet, which alone appears to have been acted more than once (see Cohn, part i. pp. cxv, cxvi). Marlowe's tragedy of "Barrabas the Jew of Malta" was acted twice, and so was a comedy called "Josepho the Jew of Venice," which may have been partly taken from Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, and partly from Marlowe's play. There is nothing to show that the Hamlet in this list was not Shakespeare's tragedy as we have it in the Folio.

But now we come to a second very interesting question, namely, was this wretched version of Hamlet, the modernized text of which is given in Cohn, really taken from an old

German play, founded, not on Shakespeare's Hamlet, but on the old play of that name mentioned in Henslowe's Diary under the year 1594? The bald way in which the story is treated, the introduction of incongruous comic characters and scenes, and, perhaps, the fact that the German play is preceded by a prologue, which is written in a serious vein and in somewhat poetical language, all lead us to infer that such may have been the case; but, of course, till we have discovered, if we ever do, the text of the old play of Hamlet, this question must remain undecided. But, at least, we may say this, that it is much more likely that the German play had for its original an old-fashioned tragedy, written before Shakespeare's time, than that the author took the trouble to concoct such a wretched unpoetical and dull piece of work from any one of the versions of Shakespeare's Hamlet which have come down to us.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

The extraordinary popularity of this tragedy, not only on the stage and in the study of the scholar and poet, but amongst the people who read anything at all, is probably not exceeded, even if it be equalled, by any other literary work in our language, and certainly not by any dramatic work ever written. Hamlet has enriched our language even more than any other work of Shakespeare's with popular and familiar expressions, which indeed have become household words. Wherever the English language is spoken men and women will be found, not always consciously, perhaps, clothing their ideas—ideas common to all humanity—in the language of Hamlet. The enormous amount of intellectual activity, which this play of Shakespeare has produced, may be seen in the formidable list of works written on the subject, given in Furness's New Variorum edition of Hamlet, vol. ii.; nor is the bulk of this literature mere polemical writing. Those who have made a study of the whole play, or of the single character of Hamlet, have, in the course of that study, generally been brought to think about subjects on which they might otherwise have bestowed very little consideration. As for its popularity as an acting play, ¹ A second edition with exactly the same contents was published in 1624, ut supra, p. cix.

HAMLET.

I have spoken of that already. When we come to ask ourselves how is it that this tragedy and its strange philosophic, weak, irresolute hero has taken such a hold on the minds and hearts of the people, it is not very easy at first sight to give an answer. Many more sympathetic stories have been dramatized; for, after all, the main motive of Hamlet, filial love, is not so popular as sexual love. Again, the story has many features in it which can appeal but little to general sympathy. Incestuous marriages, performed in such indecent haste as that of Gertrude and Claudius, are not common; while in the fitful energy with which he carries out his task of vengeance, Hamlet does things which cannot but alienate our sympathies.

Indeed some critics have denounced Hamlet as an immoral and almost contemptible character. They have had no difficulty in pointing out instances of his deplorable weakness, and of his cowardly inaction at those decisive moments in his life which demand firm decision and prompt action. But, perhaps, it is the very weakness of Hamlet which inspires our sympathy; he is no hero cast in a semi-divine mould. His imperfections, his errors, no less than his affections and his passions, are intensely human. They appeal to the great heart of mankind; his intellectual superiority to those around him, which he feels himself no less than we do, is never allowed to dominate his character so as to paralyse his emotions, or to fetter his impulses. His philosophy is not of that kind which sets him up on an eminence, whence he looks down with calm and rational contempt on the weaknesses of his fellow-creatures. His scepticism is of the most superficial nature. It is a mere film, so to speak, over his heart, which throbs with the tenderest affection and the warmest passion.

As to Hamlet's love for his father, which is evidently the strongest affection in his nature, we feel that it was something far beyond the habitual respect or submission which so often does duty for filial devotion. This love is founded not on the false basis of family pride, nor on a mere blind admiration of his father's talents and virtues, but on a keen appreciation of all his nobler qualities; qualities with which Hamlet sympathizes, not from the point of view of a mere outside admirer—if one may use the expression—who felt that they were quite beyond his own reach, but with the earnest veneration of one who kept them always before his eyes as an example to be imitated; who was sensible that these qualities were the real source of that feeling of genial companionship, which raises the love of a son for his father so far beyond the sterile region of duty.

The close sympathy that existed between the elder Hamlet and his son, which is so insisted on by the dramatist, directs our attention to what is the key-note to the whole play, which may in some respects be called the Tragedy of Uncongeniality. When Hamlet first appears upon the scene, one cannot fail to be struck by the painful moral isolation of his position. Not one single soul of all those around him seems to share the least in the great sorrow which weighs him down. Not two months have elapsed since the sudden death of his father; of the king whom all his subjects appeared to love and honour; of the generous open-hearted brother, the chivalrous, tender, devoted husband; yet on no face, save on that of his son, is there any shade of sadness. Hamlet looks to the throne, and he sees there his uncle with a smile of smug self-satisfaction on his sensual face. He listens to him pouring forth sentence after sentence of plausible platitudes with an unctuous hypocrisy, which must have been unspeakably nauseous to the son of that murdered brother whose throne he had, morally if not legally, usurped. And by that uncle's side what does he see? His mother; who was scarcely a widow before she was again a bride; a mother from whose loving sympathy he had looked to find his greatest consolation in his sorrow, on whose sobbing breast he had thought to pour forth all the anguish of his soul. But—horrible disillusion—he had found that breast disturbed by nothing but the throbs of an incestuous passion; and those tears, the worthless tribute of conventional hypocrisy, to the memory of her dead husband, dried by her lover's kisses. If those who were bound by the nearest and dearest ties to his lost father, were so shamelessly forgetful of his death, what could he expect of the courtiers around him? They might well be forgiven if, in their anxiety to curry favour with the new king, they forgot even that decent affectation of regret for the loss of their late master, however kind and gracious he had been, which they may have thought themselves bound to cast off with the court mourning. So the young prince sits there, the one dark spot on the gay scene; his head bowed down with grief, his heart quivering, his brain reeling from the shock he had received; while he listens to that mother whom he had seen hanging on her late husband's neck, as if she would grow there, exhorting him in placid tones to cast off his "inky cloak," and to look cheerful; an effort which could not but have been rendered much easier by the admirable exhortation from the crowned adulterer, who reminded him that everyone must die some time or other, and that the father, whose death Hamlet showed such bad taste in not forgetting, had at some distant period lost his father. One person there was who longed to throw her arms around his neck, and tell him how she shared his grief and his painful bewilderment at the jarring merriment around him. But she dared not show the secret of her heart; for she was bound, hand and foot, by the trammels of conventionality, and forced to keep silence by the filial awe she felt for her worldly time-serving father, supported as he was by her still more worldly and time-serving brother.

INTRODUCTION.

It is important to notice the condition of Hamlet's mind before Horatio describes to him the appearance of his father's ghost. Half stupefied by the shock which his mother's marriage has given him, he had begun, unconsciously, to piece together in his mind the suspicious circumstances of his father's death; and the accusation which he had but half framed against his uncle is suddenly and supernaturally confirmed by the revelation of the ghost. All the tenderest feelings of his nature are wrung by the pathetic story of his father's end which is now revealed to him. He has to bear, in addition, the overwhelming burden of that solemn duty of revenge enjoined on him by his supernatural visitant. Small wonder if, under this severe strain on his emotional and mental faculties, his reason for a short time totters on its throne; and when his friends rejoin him after the interview with the Ghost, his wild and agitated manner might well induce them to believe that the announcement of his intention to put on an "antic manner" was a conscious anticipation of the madness that he felt to be coming on him. Repeated study of Hamlet only confirms me in the opinion, which I have already ventured to express,¹ that Hamlet's intention of assuming insanity is not inspired only by the idea that he would thus be able to accomplish his task of vengeance more easily, but by the clear consciousness of the fact that, unless his overtaxed mind can have the relief of eccentricity, the assumption must become, sooner or later, a reality. I will again quote that sentence from Coleridge, which is worth all the remarks that German æstheticism or mysticism has perpetrated on this subject: "Hamlet plays that subtle trick of pretending to act only when he is very near really being what he acts." That Hamlet is not absolutely mad, even at this most critical moment of his life, is clear from the beautiful speech which concludes the first act.

In the interval supposed to elapse before the action of the play recommences Hamlet has taken one most important practical step towards the fulfilment of the solemn charge imposed on him by his father's spirit. The terrible disillusion, as regards his mother's real nature, which he has undergone, has swept away all that holy confidence, and nearly all that still holier love between them, which now would have been his greatest consolation. Instinctively Hamlet feels that he must deny himself also that other great consolation which seems within his reach, the sympathetic love of Ophelia. If the great task enjoined him—of his own unfitness for which by nature he is well aware—is ever to be accomplished, he must put aside all temptation to tread "the path of dalliance" by the side of her whom he loves. Shakespeare only allows us a glimpse—but what a vivid one it is—of the fearful struggle that must have gone on in Hamlet's mind before he resolved to give up his love, in that beautiful description which Ophelia gives her father of Hamlet's strange visit to her. He could not, it seems, trust himself to speak a word, but his actions, as she describes them, tell us all that we need know. In the future which lies before him there is no room for love or marriage. Whether he succeeds or whether he fails in the duty supernaturally enjoined him, he will succeed or fail alone. Ophelia must have clearly understood that this strange silent interview was meant by Hamlet to be their last; and she may well be forgiven for lending herself—as she undoubtedly does in the first scene of the third act, however some commentators may try to deny the fact—to an innocent deception, which she believes may aid in at once restoring her lover to reason and to her. It is absolutely necessary, in order to understand that scene between Hamlet and Ophelia, to recognize this fact; that, suspicious as he then is of all around him, Hamlet is convinced, on evidence which would be sufficient even for a more dispassionate mind, that Ophelia has sought that interview, not of her own accord, but at the instigation of those whom Hamlet naturally looks upon as his worst enemies. Thus there comes to him the second great disillusion of his life, more terrible if possible than that which shattered the image of his mother cherished from childhood. For he now learns that she, whom he loved with a love which inspired that bitter cry by the side of her grave (see v. 1. 292–294), is leagued with his enemies, at least so far that she does not scruple to lend herself as an instrument of deception, and as the bait of a trap which they have laid for him. Henceforth there is one being, and one only, in all the world whom Hamlet feels that he can trust, namely, Horatio; and in him his trust remains unshaken to the end.

¹ See A Study of Hamlet (Longmans, 1875), p. 22.

In the great soliloquy, which concludes the second act, Hamlet shows how clearly he is sensible of his own weakness. He distrusts even his father's ghost, and, for a short time at least, entertains the idea that the spirit he has seen "may be the devil," who has imposed upon his weakness and his melancholy disposition. One expression in this soliloquy is very remarkable, and that is where Hamlet, comparing his inactivity with the emotion shown by the player in reciting the sufferings of Hecuba, does not say "I can do nothing," but "I can say nothing." Even now he shrinks from any action, till the Ghost's word has been confirmed by the device of the play. After the success of that experiment he declares that he has no longer any doubt; yet the very next moment he has an opportunity of killing the king when on his knees and unprepared for any attack. The reasons, which Hamlet assigns for not killing Claudius then, are couched in what one cannot but call repulsive language; but the fact is that they are not his real reasons at all. His nature shrinks from the wild justice of revenge; to him an assassination is always an assassination; and therefore he spares Claudius at that moment; though, scarce half an hour afterwards, he does not hesitate to stab him, as he believes, through the arras behind which he thinks that his uncle is concealed. He has worked himself up to such a state of mental exaltation that when he finds his mistake, and that it is Polonius and not Claudius whom he has killed, he does not at the moment feel any remorse; his energies are all concentrated on the first real action which he is about to take in obedience to the command of his father's spirit. This action, if it can be called so, is to be performed by words rather than by deeds. He has resolved to make a bold attempt to awaken his mother's conscience; and the reappearance of the Ghost, while he is engaged in this, serves to confirm him in the idea, of which he has shown some trace in the scene with Ophelia, that he is appointed by heaven as an instrument of vengeance. After the excitement of the scene with his mother, reaction sets in. He weeps over the body of Polonius; and submits without a struggle to the King's command which sends him away to England; though by doing so it would seem, at first sight, that he puts it for ever out of his power to punish his father's murderer. It was, perhaps, because Shakespeare felt this that he introduced the final part of act iii. scene 4 (lines 177-217). For there Hamlet distinctly states to his mother (lines 200-210), that he knew there was some plot against him in sending him to England. This affected knowledge of his uncle's intended treachery may have been only suspicion; but there is another reason for Hamlet falling in with his uncle's plan; if he remained in Denmark he might have to answer for the death of Polonius.¹ The careful reader will observe that, after his interview with his mother, his conduct is much more outrageous towards Claudius. His assumption of insanity is more marked, and he is quite reckless as to what language he uses towards the King. It is also most noticeable that from this time, especially after his interview with the captain of Fortinbras's "lawless resolute," much of the irresolution of his character disappears. The remarkable soliloquy, suggested by the sight of the young Norwegian prince's force on its march, ends with the words

INTRODUCTION.

O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!
—iv. 4. 65, 66.

This resolution Hamlet certainly fulfils. He loses no time, according to the account he gives Horatio, in securing himself against the treachery of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, and providing, most cleverly, for their substitution in his place as victims of the king's treachery. When the pirates take possession of the ship, instead of philosophizing in the background, Hamlet is in the very front of the action, and so is taken prisoner. When Horatio tells him that the king must soon learn from England the trick that has been played him, Hamlet's answer is, "The interval is mine." In fact, from being a man of mere words, he has now become a man of action. No doubt Shakespeare was indebted more or less to the old history of Hamlet, whether in the form of a play or in that of a story, for the incidents in the latter part of his own tragedy; but still we are justified in supposing that he adopted those incidents deliberately; for the design of the play shows far too much thought and care to admit of the theory that the character of Hamlet was not presented to his mind as a consistent whole, consistent in its very inconsistencies. It is true that Hamlet allows an interval, as it were, to take place in the fencing bout with Laertes; and that he treats Claudius, both in the hypocritical letter he sends him after being set on shore by the pirates, and throughout what may be called the prologue to the fencing scene, with an almost exaggerated courtesy. His innate aversion to open violence, which, as shown by his conduct to Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, has been overcome so far that he does not mind shedding human blood by proxy, might have caused him still to delay his vengeance against his father's murderer, had not the treachery practised towards himself driven him into sudden action.

As to the objections which are so freely advanced against the slaughter-house aspect of the stage at the end of the play, I cannot but think that they are somewhat superficial; for surely the many deaths which are the result, partly of the crime of Claudius and Gertrude, and partly of Hamlet's own irresolution, point sternly and appropriately the moral of the tragedy. Had Hamlet proceeded directly to the task imposed on him by his father's spirit, many of the lives forfeited would have been spared, and he himself might have succeeded to the throne of Denmark; but it is the very essence of crimes, such as are portrayed in this play, that their consequences are far-reaching, and involve the lives of the innocent, as well as those of the guilty.

The other characters of the play, with the exception of Polonius and Laertes, have not very much individuality, but they serve admirably as contrasts or foils to Hamlet. His great fault is that he is too introspective; he is always trying to take himself to pieces as it were, and to examine the moral machinery

¹ Perhaps the real meaning of line 211 in that scene,

This man shall set me packing, is that Hamlet recognizes the fact that his rashness, in killing Polonius, has left him no choice as to his going to England.

of his nature; to dissect his own soul, to trace every nerve and fibre of its inner and spiritual nature; but those around him in the court of Denmark cannot be accused of holding over-much converse with their consciences. They take the world just as it comes, and do what those around them do, without ever troubling themselves whether it is right or wrong. Hamlet the elder was a courageous and noble king; his nature, perhaps, was a little too high to be quite appreciated by them, still they appear to have detected that the metal of Claudius had a good deal of alloy in it. But then the latter is king, and, after all, he is a good sort of fellow; he entertains, and does not stint his hospitality; therefore they do not trouble themselves how it was that he came to find himself on his brother's throne and in his brother's bed. Polonius no doubt was a very good servant to the elder brother; but he is not much troubled by the fact that Claudius does not keep the court in mourning quite as long as etiquette, to say nothing of decency, demanded. He serves the younger brother with precisely the amount of laborious vacuity, and short-sighted penetration, which he devoted to the service of the elder. As for Laertes, once the favourite companion and playfellow of the young Hamlet, he is a thorough contrast to his prince. He is essentially a young man of the period, and finds the society of Paris gayer than that of Elsinore. He has any amount of theoretical morality; with amazing self-confidence he can read his sister lectures upon prudence and chastity, but to the practical exposition of such precepts he evidently does not devote much of his time or energy. At any rate, his moral principles do not rest on a very firm basis; and when Claudius proposes to him to take advantage of an apparently friendly contest with Hamlet, and so assassinate him, he is in no way shocked at the proposition; but, with admirable presence of mind, remembers that he has a poison, with which to make his treacherous work more certain. But still he was, from a certain point of view, not a bad sort of son and brother; and had he been in Hamlet's place he would, doubtless, have fulfilled the Ghost's injunctions with greater alacrity, and the tragedy would have been in one or two, instead of in five acts. Horatio is quite a different type of man, poor, and, though brought up in the atmosphere of a court, no sycophant; devoid almost, as it would seem, even of ambition, but loyal to the bottom of his heart; one who knew how to respect his prince without servility, and to love his friend without adulation. Of the other male characters Fortinbras is a mere sketch. He serves as a contrast, suggested more than carried out, to Hamlet, representing as he does the restless active nature that never weighs the consequences of any action. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are admirable portraits of the conventional courtier. They are as like one another as two pieces of Italian paste cut out by the same stamp. They are loyal to the king for the time being, whoever he may be; and are always ready to give proof of their loyalty by doing promptly any dirty action that royalty may bid them do.

With regard to the female characters, the Queen is an excellent type of those women who are wax in the hands of any strong-minded man, but whose honour rests upon a foundation of sand that a passing puff of passion can overthrow; kind-hearted, averse to cruelty, and affectionate enough if they can only make up their minds where their affection is to be placed. Such women drift into crime, because they never look inside themselves, but always at the outside. Ophelia¹ has been shamefully maligned by some critics, who, following Goethe's utterly false and sensuous picture of her, have failed to see the beautiful picture of purity that Shakespeare has drawn in her character. It is only necessary to read what Shakespeare has written about her, and not what some critics may say he has written, to perceive that, though there may be traces of weakness about her, she has not lost her honour; but that she was justly entitled to her "virgin crants," and to the reverence that such a simple, innocent, and loving nature should inspire in a man.

¹ Any reader, who wishes to see the whole question of Ophelia's chastity argued at length, may be referred to my Study of Hamlet.—See Appendix D, pp. 128-151.

INTRODUCTION.

THE RELATIONS OF HAMLET AND OPHELIA.¹

There is one deep note in this play of "Hamlet" which sounds through all the discords of fate, love, and ambition. This note is Hamlet's profound affection for his father. In no literature is there any filial devotion which surpasses that. It is outraged by the beloved father's murder and by the mother's frailty; it is tortured by doubt and irresolution; it is the motive and the cue for the passion which wrecks Ophelia's hopes and ruins her life.

If we do not bear this in mind, Hamlet's conduct in the last interview with the unhappy girl becomes inexplicable, and may easily be assigned to that insanity which is the simplest but most unsatisfactory solution of the problem. In this scene, perhaps, the actor has the most difficult task in the whole range of the drama. He has to present the conflict in Hamlet's soul so clearly that it shall connect itself in the minds of the audience with the whole train of thought which precedes it, instead of seeming the brutal outbreak of a mere madman. So grave is the difficulty of interpretation that I am anxious, in the interests of any young actor who may undertake it, that playgoers should think out the story before they see the tragedy.

Let us remember that the terrible duty which has been laid upon Hamlet by the spirit of his dead father forces him to wipe away from the tablets of his brain all "trivial, fond records," for in a soul doomed to be the avenger of "a dear father murdered," there is no room for the love of woman. Was it not a woman, too, who was the cause of this appalling crime? What crime? "What evidence," reasons Hamlet with himself, "what evidence have I to sustain my story? The testimony of a visitor from another world! With a disclosure made only to me—for nobody else heard it. Who will believe it? Who will believe such witness to the justice of my vengeance?" Should Hamlet revenge himself upon his father's murderer, he will appear to the people of Denmark just what he charges Claudius with being—a murderer—and the people will wreak their vengeance upon him. Distracted by doubt, he is actually contemplating suicide when he is disturbed by the approach of Ophelia, and on this innocent victim of destiny, who had been the idol of this sweet prince's heart—by a process familiar in human experience—all the elements in his mental struggle are at once concentrated with overwhelming force, spurred, too, by the suspicion that she is privy to the eaves-dropping of her father and Claudius.

In all Hamlet's assumptions of mental wandering he is greatly aided by the excitability of his temperament. His emotions are always ready to carry him away, and his wild imaginings easily lend themselves to the maddest disguises of speech. A flash of volition may often be the exponent of a chain of thought, and perhaps the action of Hamlet's mind was somewhat after this manner: He feels the woe of Ophelia and his own. He writhes under the stigma of heartlessness which he cannot but incur. How remove it? How wipe away the stain? It is impossible. Cursed then be the cause. His whole nature surges up against it—the incestuousness of this king; the havoc of illicit passion, which has killed his noble father, wrecked his fairest hopes, stolen from him his mother's love—nay, robbed him even of the maternal idea, which remains to many a man in unblemished purity and even sweetness, long after a breach has taken place between his mother and himself. His (Hamlet's) mother was once fair and honest, honest as Ophelia now. Is Ophelia honest? Impossible to think otherwise. But it were a mad quip to ask her, and let the after dialogue take its own course. Take what course it will, it must dwell on the one subject which will harden Hamlet's heart, and give rigour to his nature. Thus comes the paradox:—

Hamlet. Ha, ha! are you honest?

Ophelia. My lord!

Hamlet. Are you fair?

¹ From the President's Annual Address to the Wolverhampton Literary and Scientific Society, delivered by Henry Irving, 19th February, 1890.

HAMLET.

Ophelia. What means your lordship?

Hamlet. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.

Ophelia. What beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty?

Hamlet. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is, than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness; this was some time a paradox, but now the time gives it proof.

Hamlet's mother's beauty had been her snare. Her honesty had fallen a victim to her beauty. Let beauty and honesty therefore—here was the stroke of mad exaggeration—have no discourse.

Hamlet. I did love you once.

Ophelia. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Hamlet. You should not have believed me; for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it.

The thought underlying this is one of almost peevish aggravation of the root-grievance cankering in the speaker's mind: "I am nothing but vicious. You should not have believed me. My old stock—that is, the vice I had from my mother—would so contaminate all that was honest in my nature, or all the good I might have got through my intercourse with you, would be so polluted by the overpowering bad impulses in me that you had better not have known me—ininitely better not have loved me." And then with a wild "bolt," as it were, he utters the words that may most sharply end all—"I loved you not." This is the surgeon's knife for such complaints, and many a man has used it coolly and callously. But such men were not Hamlets. He uses it more in frenzy than in judgment, in an agony of pain, amid a thousand fond remembrances, but dominated by the one conviction that he must break with Ophelia, cost what it may. His instincts were accurate, though his temperament was not calculating, and the impetus of necessity drove him, in that moment of miserable stress, to use words which could not have been more ruthlessly and effectually chosen by the most cold-blooded of deceivers.

There is nothing more pitiable, tender, or forlorn, in the whole range of the drama, than Ophelia's reply: "I was the more deceived."

These are her last voluntary words, except her ejaculations of prayer that Heaven may help and restore her lover; but these do not come till further wild and whirling words have convinced her that it is with a madman she is talking. For the moment it is enough that she is abandoned, and the past repudiated. Her heart is wrecked. She incoherently answers the one question Hamlet puts to her—"Where's your father?"—and gazes and listens in frozen horror to the tirades which he has now worked himself up to deliver.

But his words are not devoid of sequence, nor is their harshness untouched with sympathy. "Get thee to a nunnery." Where else, but in such a sanctuary, should so pure a being be sheltered? Where else could Ophelia so well escape the contamination on which her lover's mind was still running? The next lines, violent, self-accusing, cynical, almost gross in their libel of humanity, are probably uttered in desperate and yet restrained anxiety to snatch at and throw to the heart-pierced maiden some strange, morbid consolation, but without giving her any faint shadow of the one solace which he so well knows would be all-sufficing. It is neither necessary nor possible to suppose that all this was deliberately thought out by Hamlet. At such moments as he was passing through, the high pressure of a forcible mind carries it over the difficulties in its course, and as truly so when the leaps and bounds seem without system as when the progress is more regular. But for any purpose of comfort, how utterly is this without effect! Mute is Ophelia, and after his burst of self-condemning, man-condemning fury, her lover is mute also.

Let us imagine them thus together, when suddenly Hamlet remembers—there is no need for him to have any reminder—the hidden presence of the king. He sharply asks Ophelia, "Where's your father?" How shall we interpret her reply?

Her words are, "At home, my lord." How comes she to say this? If she had known her father and the king were behind the arras, as you know in this play they are supposed to be, she might still have made the same reply, so wrapt in her thoughts that all recollection of the king's and Polonius's presence might have left her: in short, the words might have been spoken in mere vacancy. If she did not know the king and her father were watching, of course the words were simple sincerity and truth; or, taken by surprise by the question, and feeling herself to be an unwilling instrument in something that was going on, while, though her own motive was pure, she was at a loss how to explain it, she may have given a reply which she knew to be false in the desire to clear herself of complicity in what Hamlet would certainly think mean and despicable. This or worse is probably Hamlet's opinion for the moment, but that he banishes the thought is curiously proved by the tender passage which follows; for, after sternly rebuking Polonius, Hamlet may be said to excuse himself by implication, and to ask pardon indirectly for the seeming reproach. "Be thou as chaste," he says, "as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape calumny."

INTRODUCTION.

And now Hamlet's excitement reaches its greatest height. Goaded within and without, nay, dragged even by his own feelings in two opposite directions, in each of which he suspects he may have gone too far under the eyes of malignant witnesses, he is maddened by the thought that they are still observing him, and as usual, half in wild exultation, half by design, begins to pour forth more and more extravagant reproaches on his kind. He must not commit himself to his love, nor unbosom his hate, nor has he a moment's pause in which to set in order a contrived display of random lunacy. As usual passion, and preconceived gloomy broodings abundantly supply him with declamation which may indicate a deep meaning or be mere madness according to the ears that hear it, while through all his bitter ravings there is visible the anguish of a lover forced to be cruel, and of a destined avenger almost beside himself with the horrors of his provocation and his task. The shafts fly wildly, and are tipped with cynic poison; the bow from which they are sped is a strong and constant though anxious nature, steadily, though with infinite excitement, bent upon the one great purpose fate has imposed upon it. The fitful excesses of his closing speech are the twangings of the bow from which the arrow of avenging destiny shall one day fly straight to the mark.

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again!—(Act 1. 1. 40.)

HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A platform before the castle. Midnight.

FRANCISCO at his post. The clock strikes twelve.
Enter to him BERNARDO.

Ber. Who's there?

Fran. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold yourself.

Ber. Long live the king!

Fran. Bernardo?

Ber. He.

Fran. You come most carefully upon your hour.¹

Ber. 'Tis now² struck twelve; get thee to bed, Francisco.

Fran. For this relief much thanks: 'tis bitter cold,

And I am sick at heart. 9

Ber. Have you had quiet guard?

Fran. Not a mouse stirring.

Ber. Well, good night.

If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus,
The rivals³ of my watch, bid them make haste.

Fran. I think I hear them.—Stand, ho!
Who is there? 14

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS.

Hor. Friends to this ground.⁴

Mar. And liegemen to the Dane.

Fran. Give you⁵ good night.

Mar. O, farewell, honest soldier:
Who hath reliev'd you?

Fran. Bernardo has my place.
Give you⁵ good night. [Exit.

Mar. Holla! Bernardo!

Ber. Say,
What, is Horatio there?

Hor. A piece of him.

Ber. Welcome, Horatio: welcome, good
Marcellus. 20

Mar. What, has this thing appear'd again
to-night?

Ber. I have seen nothing.

Mar. Horatio says 't is but our fantasy,
And will not let belief take hold of him
Touching this dreaded sight, twice seen of us:
Therefore I have entreated him along

¹ Upon your hour, i.e. exactly at your hour.

² Now=just now.

³ Rivals, i.e. partners.

⁴ Ground, i.e. country.

⁵ Give you, i.e. God give you.

With us to watch the minutes of this night;
That, if again this apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and speak to it.

Hor. Hush, tush, 't will not appear.

Ber. Sit down awhile;
And let us once again assail your ears, 31
That are so fortified against our story,
What we two nights have seen.

Hor. Well, sit we down,
And let us hear Bernardo speak of this.

Ber. Last night of all,
When yond same star that's westward from the pole
Had made his course to illume that part of
heaven

Where now it burns, Marcellus and myself,
The bell then beating one,—

Mar. Peace, break thee off; look, where it comes again! 40

Enter GHOST.

Ber. In the same figure, like the king that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a scholar; speak to it, Horatio.

Ber. Looks it not like the king? mark it,
Horatio.

Hor. Most like: it harrows¹ me with fear and wonder.

Ber. It would be spoke to.

Mar. Question it, Horatio.

Hor. What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,

Together with that fair and warlike form
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did sometimes march? by heaven I charge thee, speak! 49

Mar. It is offended.

Ber. See, it stalks away!

Hor. Stay! speak, speak! I charge thee, speak! [Exit Ghost.]

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Ber. How now, Horatio! you tremble, and look pale:

Is not this something more than fantasy?
What think you on 't?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this believe

Without the sensible and true avouch

Of mine own eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the king?

Hor. As thou art to thyself:

Such was the very armour he had on 60
When he the ambitious Norway combated;
So frown'd he once, when, in an angry parle,²
He smote the sledded Polacks on the ice.
'T is strange.

Mar. Thus twice before, and jump³ at this dead hour,

With martial stalk hath he gone by our watch.

Hor. In what particular thought to work I know not;

But, in the gross and scope of my opinion,
This bodes some strange eruption to our state.

[Mar. Good now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows, 70

Why this same strict and most observant watch
So nightly toils the subject of the land;
And why such daily cast of brazen cannon,
And foreign mart for implements of war;
Why such impress of shipwrights, whose sore task

Does not divide the Sunday from the week;
What might be toward,⁴ that this sweaty haste Doth make the night joint-labourer with the day: 78

Who is 't that can inform me?

Hor. That can I;

At least, the whisper goes so. Our last king,
Whose image even but now appear'd to us,
Was, as you know, by Fortinbras of Norway,
Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride,
Dar'd to the combat: in which our valiant

Hamlet—

For so this side of our known world esteem'd
him—

Did slay this Fortinbras; who, by a seal'd compact,

Well ratified by law and heraldry,
Did forfeit, with his life, all those his lands
Which he stood seiz'd of⁵ to the conqueror:
Against the which, a moiety competent⁶ 90
Was gaged by our king; which had return'd
To the inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he been vanquisher; as, by the same co-mart,

¹ Harrows, afflicts, tortures; or, perhaps, figuratively = tears, lacerates.

² Parle, parley.

³ Jump, exactly.

⁴ Toward, at hand.

⁵ Seiz'd of, possessed of.

⁶ Competent, corresponding.

And carriage of the article design'd, 94
 His fell to Hamlet. Now, sir, young Fortinbras,
 Of unimproved¹ mettle hot and full,
 Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
 Shark'd up a list of lawless resolute,
 For food and diet, to some enterprise 99
 That hath a stomach² in't: which is no other—
 As it doth well appear unto our state—
 But to recover of us, by strong hand
 And terms compulsative, those foresaid lands
 So by his father lost: and this, I take it,
 Is the main motive of our preparations,
 The source of this our watch, and the chief head
 Of this post-haste and romage³ in the land.

Ber. I think it be no other but e'en so:
 Well may it sort, that this portentous figure Comes armed through our watch; so like the
 king 110
 That was and is the question of these wars.

Hor. A mote it is to trouble the mind's eye.]
 In the most high and palmy state of Rome,
 A little ere the mightiest Julius fell,
 The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted
 dead
 Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets:

As, stars with trains of fire, and dews of blood,
 Disasters in the sun; and the moist star,⁴
 Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
 Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse:
 And even the like precurse of fierce events—
 As harbingers preceding still the fates, 122
 And prologue to the omen coming on—
 Have heaven and earth together demonstrated
 Unto our climatures and countrymen.—
 But, soft, behold! lo, where it comes again!

Re-enter GHOST.

I'll cross it, though it blast me.—Stay, illusion!
 If thou hast any sound, or use of voice,
 Speak to me:
 If there be any good thing to be done, 130
 That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
 Speak to me:
 If thou art privy to thy country's fate,
 Which, happily,⁵ foreknowing may avoid,
 O, speak!

¹ Unimproved, untutored.

² Stomach, i.e. courage.

³ Romage, disturbance.

⁴ The moist star, i.e. the moon.

⁵ Happily, haply.

Or if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
 Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
 For which, they say, you spirits oft walk in
 death,

Speak of it: stay, and speak! [Cock crows.]
 Stop it, Marcellus. 139

Mar. Shall I strike at it with my partisan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand.

Ber. 'T is here!

Hor. 'T is here!

Mar. 'T is gone! [Exit Ghost.]

We do it wrong, being so majestic,

To offer it the show of violence;

[For it is, as the air, invulnerable,
 And our vain blows malicious mockery.]

Ber. It was about to speak when the cock crew.

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing
 Upon a fearful summons. I have heard, 149
 The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
 Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
 Awake the god of day; and at his warning,
 Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
 The extravagant⁶ and erring spirit hies
 To his confine: and of the truth herein
 This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.

Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes
 Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
 The bird of dawning singeth all night long:
 And then, they say, no spirit dare stir abroad;
 The nights are wholesome; then no planets
 strike, 162

No fairy takes,⁷ nor witch hath power to charm;
 (So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.)

Hor. So have I heard, and do in part believe it.

'But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad,
 Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill:
 Break we our watch up: and, by my advice,
 Let us impart what we have seen to-night
 Unto young Hamlet: for, upon my life, 170
 This spirit, dumb to us, will speak to him:
 [Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
 As needful in our loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't, I pray; and I this morn-ning know

Where we shall find him most convenient.]

[Exeunt.]

⁶ Extravagant, wandering.

⁷ Takes, bewitches.

SCENE II. The same. A room of state in the castle.

Enter the KING, QUEEN, HAMLET, POLONIUS, LAERTES, VOLTIMAND, CORNELIUS, Lords, and Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our dear brother's death

The memory be green, and that it us befitted
To bear our hearts in grief, and our whole kingdom

To be contracted in one brow of woe,
Yet so far hath discretion fought with nature
That we with wisest sorrow think on him,
Together with remembrance of ourselves.

Therefore our sometime sister, now our queen,
The imperial jointress of this warlike state,
Have we, as 't were with a defeated joy,— 10

[With one auspicious and one dropping eye,
With mirth in funeral and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,—]
Taken to wife: nor have we herein barr'd
Your better wisdoms, which have freely gone
With this affair along. For all, our thanks.

[Now follows, that you know, young Fortinbras,
Holding a weak supposal of our worth,

Or thinking by our late dear brother's death
Our state to be disjoint and out of frame, 20

Collegued with the dream of his advantage,
He hath not fail'd to pester us with message,
Importing the surrender of those lands

Lost by his father, with all bands¹ of law,
To our most valiant brother. So much for him.

Now for ourself, and for this time of meeting:
Thus much the business is: we have here writ

To Norway, uncle of young Fortinbras,—
Who, impotent and bed-rid, scarcely hears

Of this his nephew's purpose,—to suppress 30
His further gait herein; in that the levies,

The lists, and full proportions, are all made
Out of his subject: and we here dispatch

You, good Cornelius, and you, Voltimand,
For bearers of this greeting to old Norway,

Giving to you no further personal power
To business with the king, more than the scope

Of these dilated articles² allow.

Farewell, and let your haste commend your duty.

Cor. Vol. In that and all things will we show our duty. 40

King. We doubt it nothing: heartily farewell. [Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.]

And now, Laertes, what's the news with you?
You told us of some suit; what is't, Laertes?

[You cannot speak of reason to the Dane,
And lose your voice: what wouldst thou beg,

Laertes,

That shall not be my offer, not thy asking?
The head is not more native to the heart,
The hand more instrumental to the mouth,
Than is the throne of Denmark to thy father.
What wouldst thou have, Laertes?]

Laer.

Dread my lord,
Your leave and favour to return to France,
From whence though willingly I came to Denmark, 52

To show my duty in your coronation,
Yet now, I must confess, that duty done,
My thoughts and wishes bend again towards
France,

And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.

King. Have you your father's leave? What says Polonius?

Pol. He hath, my lord, wrung from me my slow leave

By laboursome petition, and at last,
Upon his will I seal'd my hard consent: 60
I do beseech you, give him leave to go.

King. Take thy fair hour, Laertes; time be thine,

And thy best graces spend it at thy will!
But now, my cousin Hamlet, and my son,—

Ham. [Aside] A little more than kin, and less than kind.

King. How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord; I am too much i'
the sun.

Queen. Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,

And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark.

Do not for ever with thy vail'd³ lids 70

¹ Bands, bonds.

² Dilated articles, articles set out at large.

³ Vail'd, lowered.

Seek for thy noble father in the dust: 71
Thou know'st 't is common,—all that live must die,

Passing through nature to eternity.

Ham. Ay, madam, it is common.

Queen. If it be,

Why seems it so particular with thee?

Ham. Seems, madam! nay, it is; I know not "seems."

'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye, 80
Nor the dejected haviour of the visage,
Together with all forms, moods, shows of grief,
That can denote me truly: these indeed seem,
For they are actions that a man might play:
But I have that within which passeth show;
These but the trappings and the suits of woe.

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature, Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:
But, you must know, your father lost a father;
That father lost, lost his; and the survivor bound 90

In filial obligation for some term
To do obsequious¹ sorrow: but to perséver
In obstinate condolement, is a course
Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief:
It shows a will most incorrect to heaven,

A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,
An understanding simple and unschool'd:

[For what we know must be, and is as common
As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
Why should we in our peevish opposition 100
Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to heaven,
A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
To reason most absurd; whose common theme
Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried,
From the first corse till he that died to-day,
"This must be so."] We pray you, throw to earth

This unprevailing woe; and think of us
As of a father: for let the world take note,
You are the most immediate to our throne;
[And with no less nobility of love 110
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart toward you. For your intent

In going back to school in Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire:
And we beseech you, bend you to remain
Here, in the cheer and comfort of our eye,]
Our chiefest courtier, cousin, and our son.

Queen. Let not thy mother lose her prayers,

Hamlet: 118

I pray thee, stay with us; go not to Wittenberg.

Ham. I shall in all my best obey you, madam.

King. Why, 'tis a loving and a fair reply:
Be as yourself in Denmark. Madam, come;
This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet
Sits smiling to my heart: in grace whereof,
No jocund health that Denmark drinks to-day,
But the great cannon to the clouds shall tell,
And the king's rouse the heavens shall bruit again,

Re-speaking earthly thunder. Come away,

[Exeunt all except Hamlet.

Ham. O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,

Thaw, and resolve² itself into a dew! 130

Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd

His canon 'gainst self-slaughter! O God! God!

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable

Seem to me all the uses of this world!

Fie on 't! O, fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,

That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature

Possess it merely. That it should come to this!

But two months dead! nay, not so much, not two:

So excellent a king; that was, to this, 139

Hyperion to a satyr: so loving to my mother,

That he might not betem³ the winds of heaven

Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!

Must I remember? why, she would hang on him,

As if increase of appetite had grown

By what it fed on: and yet, within a month,—

Let me not think on 't—Frailty, thy name is woman!—

A little month, or e'er those shoes were old

With which she follow'd my poor father's body,

Like Niobe, all tears:—why she, even she—

O God! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,

Would have mourn'd longer—married with

my uncle, 151

My father's brother, but no more like my father

¹ Obsequious, mourning (i.e. referring to "obsequies").

² Resolve, i.e. dissolve.

³ Betem, permit.

Than I to Hercules: within a month; 153
 Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
 Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
 She married. [O, most wicked speed, to post
 With such dexterity¹ to incestuous sheets!]
 It is not nor it cannot come to good:

But break, my heart, for I must hold my tongue!

Enter HORATIO, MARCELLUS, and BERNARDO.

Hor. Hail to your lordship!

Ham. I am glad to see you well:

Ham.

For God's love, let me hear.—(Act i. 2 195.)

Horatio,—or I do forget myself. 161

Hor. The same, my lord, and your poor servant ever.

Ham. Sir, my good friend; I'll change that name with you:

And what make you from Wittenberg, Horatio? Marcellus?

Mar. My good lord,—

Ham. I am very glad to see you. [To Bernardo] Good even, sir.—

But what, in faith, make you from Wittenberg?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my lord.

Ham. I would not have your enemy say so;

Nor shall you do mine ear that violence
 To make it trustor of your own report 172
 Against yourself: I know you are no truant.
 But what is your affair in Elsinore?

We'll teach you to drink deep ere you depart.

Hor. My lord, I came to see your father's funeral.

Ham. I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;

I think it was to see my mother's wedding.

Hor. Indeed, my lord, it follow'd hard upon.

Ham. Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral bak'd meats 180

Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven

¹ Dexterity, i.e. swiftness.

Or ever I had seen that day, Horatio!
My father!—methinks I see my father.

Hor. O, where, my lord?

Ham. In my mind's eye, Horatio.

Hor. I saw him once; he was a goodly king.

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Hor. My lord, I think I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw who? 190

Hor. My lord, the king your father.

Ham. The king my father!

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent ear, till I may deliver,¹
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvel to you.

Ham. For God's love, let me hear.

Hor. Two nights together had these gentlemen,
Marcellus and Bernardo, on their watch,
In the dead vast and middle of the night,
Been thus encounter'd. A figure like your
father,

Arm'd at point, exactly, cap-à-pé, 200
Appears before them, and with solemn march
Goes slow and stately by them: thrice he walk'd
By their oppress'd and fear-surprised eyes,
Within his truncheon's length; whilst they,
distill'd

Almost to jelly with the act of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. This to me
In dreadful secrecy impart they did;
And I with them the third night kept the watch:

Where, as they had deliver'd, both in time,
Form of the thing, each word made true and
good 210

The apparition comes: I knew your father;
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My lord, upon the platform where we watch'd.

Ham. Did you not speak to it?

Hor. My lord, I did;
But answer made it none: yet once methought
It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak:
But even then the morning cock crew loud,
And at the sound it shrunk in haste away,

And vanish'd from our sight.

Ham. 'Tis very strange.

Hor. As I do live, my honour'd lord, 'tis true;
And we did think it writ down in our duty
To let you know of it. 223

Ham. Indeed, indeed, sirs, but this troubles
me.

Hold you the watch to-night?

Mar. Ber. We do, my lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

Mar. Ber. Arm'd, my lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

Mar. Ber. My lord, from head to foot.

Ham. [Abruptly] Then saw you not his face.

Hor. O, yes, my lord; he wore his beaver² up.

Ham. What, look'd he frowningly? 231

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.

Ham. Pale or red?

Hor. Nay, very pale.

Ham. And fix'd his eyes upon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had been there.

Hor. It would have much amaz'd you.

Ham. Very like, very like. Stay'd it long?

Hor. While one with moderate haste might tell a hundred.

Mar. Ber. Longer, longer.

Hor. Not when I saw 't.

Ham. His beard was grizzled,—no?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,
A sable silver'd.

Ham. I will watch to-night; 242
Perchance 't will walk again.

Hor. I warrant it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceal'd this sight,
Let it be tenable in your silence still;
And whatsoever else shall hap to-night,
Give it an understanding, but no tongue: 250
I will requite your loves. So, fare you well:
Upon the platform, 'twixt eleven and twelve,
I'll visit you.

All. Our duty to your honour.

Ham. Your loves, as mine to you: farewell.

[Exeunt Horatio, Marcellus, and Bernardo.]

¹ Deliver, relate.

² Beaver, the front part of the helmet.

My father's spirit in arms! all is not well;
I doubt some foul play: would the night were come!

Till then sit still, my soul: foul deeds will rise, Though all the earth o'erwhelm them, to men's eyes. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A room in Polonius' house.

Enter LAERTES and OPHELIA.

Laer. My necessities are embark'd: farewell:

And, sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you.

Oph. Do you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favour,

Hold it a fashion, and a toy¹ in blood,
[A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute; 9
No more.

Oph. No more but so?

Laer. Think it no more:

For nature, crescent, does not grow alone
In thews and bulk; but, as this temple waxes,
The inward service of the mind and soul
Grows wide withal. Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no soil nor cautel² doth besmirch
The virtue of his will: but you must fear,
His greatness weigh'd, his will is not his own;
For he himself is subject to his birth:]

He may not, as unvalu'd persons do, 19
Carve for himself; for on his choice depends
The safety and the health of the whole state;
[And therefore must his choice be circumscrib'd
Unto the voice and yielding of that body Whereof he is the head. Then if he says he loves you,

It fits your wisdom so far to believe it,
As he in his particular act and place
May give his saying deed; which is no further
Than the main voice of Denmark goes withal.]
Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent³ ear you list his songs; 30

[Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.] 32

Fear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister,
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
[Virtue itself scapes not calumnious strokes:
The canker galls the infants of the spring,
Too oft before their buttons⁴ be disclos'd; 40
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary, then; best safety lies in fear:
Youth to itself rebels, though none else near.]

Oph. I shall the effect of this good lesson keep,
As watchman to my heart. But, good my brother,

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do, 47
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven,
Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede.

Laer. O, fear me not.
I stay too long: but here my father comes.

Enter POLONIUS.

A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave.

Pol. Yet here, Laertes! aboard, aboard, for shame!

The wind sits in the shoulder of your sail,
And you are stay'd for. There; my blessing with thee!

And these few precepts in thy memory
See thou charácter. Give thy thoughts no
tongue,

Nor any unproportion'd thought his act. 60
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
Those friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,

Grapple them to thy soul with hoops of steel;
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd, unfledg'd comráde. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrel; but being in,
Bear 't, that the opposed may beware of thee.
Give every man thine ear, but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgment.

¹ Toy, caprice.

² Cautel, craft.

³ Credent, i.e. credulous.

⁴ Buttons, buds (Fr. boutons).

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, 70
 But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy:
 For the apparel oft proclaims the man;
 And they in France of the best rank and station
 Are most select and generous, chief in that.
 Neither a borrower nor a lender be:
 For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
 And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

This above all: to thine ownself be true,
 And it must follow, as the night the day,
 Thou canst not then be false to any man. 80
 Farewell: my blessing season this in thee!

Laer. Most humbly do I take my leave, my lord.

Pol. The time invites you; go, your servants tend.¹

Oph. But, good my brother,
 Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
 Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven,

Whilst, like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
 Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
 And recks not his own rede.—(Act 1 3. 46-51.)

Laer. Farewell, Ophelia, and remember well
 What I have said to you.

Oph. 'T is in my memory lock'd
 And you yourself shall keep the key of it.

Laer. Farewell. [Exit.]

Pol. What is't, Ophelia, he hath said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the Lord Hamlet.

Pol. Marry, well bethought: 90

'T is told me, he hath very oft of late
 Given private time to you, and you yourself
 Have of your audience been most free and
 bounteous:

If it be so,—as so 't is put on me,²

And that in way of caution,—I must tell you,
 You do not understand yourself so clearly
 As it behoves my daughter and your honour.
 What is between you? give me up the truth.

Oph. He hath, my lord, of late made many tenders

Of his affection to me. 100

Pol. Affection! pooh! you speak like a green
 girl,

Unfitted in such perilous circumstance.

Do you believe his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my lord, what I should think.

Pol. Marry, I'll teach you: think yourself
 a baby,

That you have ta'en these tenders for true pay,

¹ Tend, wait,

² Put on me, urged on me.

Which are not sterling. Tender¹ yourself more dearly;

Or—not to crack the wind of the poor phrase,
Running it thus—you 'll tender me a fool.

Oph. My lord, he hath importun'd me with love 110

In honourable fashion.

Pol. Ay, fashion you may call 't; go to, go to.

Oph. And hath given countenance to his speech, my lord,

With almost all the holy vows of heaven.

Pol. Ay, springes to catch woodcocks. I do know,

When the blood burns, how prodigal the soul
Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter,

Giving more light than heat,—extinct in both,
Even in their promise, as it is a-making,—

You must not take for fire. [From this time
Be something scunter of your maiden presence;

Set your entreatments² at a higher rate 122
Than a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet,

Believe so much in him, that he is young,
And with a larger tether may he walk

Than may be given you: in few, Ophelia,
Do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,³

Not of that dye which their investments⁴ show, 129
But mere implorators of unholy suits,

Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,
The better to beguile.] This is for all:

I would not, in plain terms, from this time
forth,

Have you so slander⁵ any moment's leisure
As to give words or talk with the Lord Hamlet.

Look to 't, I charge you: come your ways.
Oph. I shall obey, my lord. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. The platform before the castle.

Enter HAMLET, HORATIO, and MARCELLUS.

Ham. The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager⁶ air.

Ham. What hour now?

Hor. I think it lacks of twelve.

Mar. No, it is struck.

Hor. Indeed? I heard it not: then it draws near the season

Wherein the spirit held his wont to walk.

[A flourish of trumpets, and ordnance shot off, within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

Ham. The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse,

Keeps wassail, and the swaggering up-spring
reels;

And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish
down, 10

The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.

Hor. Is it a custom?

Ham. Ay, marry, is't:

But to my mind,—though I am native here,
And to the manner born,—it is a custom
More honour'd in the breach than the observance.

[This heavy-headed revel east and west
Makes us traduc'd and tax'd of other nations:
They clepe⁷ us drunkards, and with swinish phrase

Soil our addition;⁸ and, indeed, it takes 20
From our achievements, though perform'd at height,

The pith and marrow of our attribute.

So, oft it chanceth in particular men,
That, for some vicious mole of nature in them,

As, in their birth,—wherein they are not guilty,
Since nature cannot choose his origin,—

By the o'ergrowth of some complexion,
Often breaking down the pales and forts of reason;

Or by some habit, that too much o'er-leavens
The form of plausible manners;—that these men,— 30

Carrying, I say, the stamp of one defect,
Being nature's livery, or fortune's star,—

Their virtues else—be they as pure as grace,
As infinite as man may undergo—

Shall in the general censure take corruption
From that particular fault: the dram of eale

Doth all the noble substance of a doubt

To his own scandal.]

Hor. Look, my lord, it comes!

Enter GHOST.

Ham. Angels and ministers of grace defend us!

¹ Tender, regard.

² Entreatments, solicitations.

³ Brokers, bawds.

⁴ Investments, vestures.

⁵ Slander, misuse.

⁶ Eager, sharp.

⁷ Clepe, call.

⁸ Addition, title.

HAMLET.

Act I Scene ii. lines 123-126

For

For Lord Hamlet.
Believe so much in him, that he is young
And with a larger tether may he walk

Be thou a spirit of health¹ or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell.

Be thy intents wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,²
That I will speak to thee: I'll call thee Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me!

Let me not burst in ignorance; but tell
Why thy canóniz'd bones,³ hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements; why the sepulchre.

Wherein we saw thee quietly in-urn'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws 50
To cast thee up again! What may this mean,

Ham. It waves me still.—
Go on; I'll follow thee.—(Act i. 4 78, 79.)

That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature
So horribly to shake our disposition
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we do?

[Ghost beckons Hamlet.]

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

Mar. Look, with what courteous action 60

It waves⁴ you to a more removed ground: 61
But do not go with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speak; then I will follow it.

Hor. Do not, my lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee;
And for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself?

It waves me forth again: I'll follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the flood,
my lord,

¹ A spirit of health, i.e. a saved spirit.

² Questionable shape, i.e. shape inviting question.

³ Canóniz'd bones, bones buried with due funeral rites.

⁴ Waves, beckons

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff 70
That beetles o'er his base into the sea,
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,

And draw you into madness? think of it:
The very place puts toys¹ of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Ham. It waves me still.—
Go on; I'll follow thee. 79

Mar. You shall not go, my lord.

Ham. Hold off your hands.

Hor. Be rul'd; you shall not go.

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Némean lion's nerve.

[Ghost beckons.

Still am I call'd: unhand me, gentlemen;

[Breaking from them.

By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets²
me:

I say, away!—Go on; I'll follow thee.

[Exeunt Ghost and Hamlet.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow; 't is not fit thus to obey
him.

Hor. Have after.³ To what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark. 90

Hor. Heaven will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. The same. A more remote part of the platform.

Enter GHOST and HAMLET.

Ham. Where wilt thou lead me? speak; I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing

To what I shall unfold.

Ham. Speak; I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou shalt hear.

Ham. What?

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit; 9

Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night,
And for the day confin'd to fast in fires,

Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purg'd away. But that I am forbid

To tell the secrets of my prison-house,

I could a tale unfold whose lightest word

Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young
blood,

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres,

Thy knotted and combined locks to part,

And each particular hair to stand on end,

Like quills upon the fretful porpentine.⁴ 20

But this eternal blazon⁵ must not be

To ears of flesh and blood. List, list, O, list!

If thou didst ever thy dear father love,—

Ham. O God!

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural murder.

Ham. Murder!

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know't, that I, with wings as swift

As meditation or the thoughts of love, 30
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;
And duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethe wharf, Wouldst thou not stir in this. Now, Hamlet,
hear:

'T is given out that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark

Is by a forged process of my death

Rankly abus'd: but know, thou noble youth,

The serpent that did sting thy father's life

Now wears his crown.

¹ Toys, freaks.

² Lets, hinders.

³ Have after, follow.

⁴ Porpentine, porcupine.

⁵ Eternal blazon, revelation of eternity.

Ham.

O my prophetic soul!

My uncle!

41

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,With witchcraft of his wit, with traitorous gifts,—Of wicked wit and gifts, that have the power
So to seduce!—won to his shameful lust

The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen:

O Hamlet, what a falling-off was there!

From me, whose love was of that dignity,

That it went hand in hand even with the vow

I made to her in marriage; and to decline¹Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

52

[But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though lewdness court it in a shap of heaven;
So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.]

But, soft! methinks I scent the morning air;

Brief let me be.—Sleeping within my orchard,

My custom always in the afternoon,

60

Upon my *sécure*² hour thy uncle stole,

With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial,

And in the porches of mine ears did pour

The leperous distilment; whose effect

Holds such an enmity with blood of man,

That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through

The natural gates and alleys of the body;

And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posset

And curd, like eager³ droppings into milk,

The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine;

[And a most instant tetter bark'd about,

71

Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust

All my smooth body.]

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispatch'd:⁴

Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,

Unhousell'd,⁵ disappointed,⁶ unanel'd;⁷

No reckoning made, but sent to my account

With all my imperfections on my head:

O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!

80

If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;

Let not the royal bed of Denmark be

A couch for luxury⁸ and damned incest. 83

But, howsoever thou pursu'st this act,

Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive

Against thy motheraught: leave her to heaven,

And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge

Ham.

Remember thee!

Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat
In this distracted globe.—(Act i. 5. 95-97.)

To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!

The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,

And gins to pale his uneffectual fire: 90

Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, remember me. [Exit.

Ham. O all you host of heaven! O earth!
what else?And shall I couple hell?—Hold, hold, my heart;

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,

¹ Decline, turn aside.² Sécure, unsuspecting.³ Eager, sour.⁴ Dispatch'd, deprived.⁵ Unhousell'd, without the sacrament.⁶ Disappointed, unprepared.⁷ Unanel'd, without extreme unction.⁸ Luxury, lust.

But bear me stiffly up. Remember thee!
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat

In this distracted globe. Remember thee!
Yea, from the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond¹ records, 99
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copied there;
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter: yes, by heaven!—
O most pernicious woman!
O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!
My tables,—meet it is I set it down,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;
At least I'm sure it may be so in Denmark:

[Writing.]

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word;
It is, "Adieu, adieu! remember me." 111
I have sworn 't.

Hor. [Within] My lord, my lord!

Mar. [Within] Lord Hamlet!

Hor. [Within] Heaven secure him!

Ham. So be it!

Mar. [Within] Illo, ho, ho, my lord!

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy! come, bird, come.

Enter HORATIO and MARCELLUS,

Mar. How is't, my noble lord?

Hor. What news, my lord?

Ham. O, wonderful!

Hor. Good my lord, tell it.

Ham. No; you'll reveal it.

Hor. Not I, my lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my lord.

Ham. How say you, then; would heart of man once think it?— 121

But you'll be secret?

Hor. Mar. Ay, by heaven, my lord.

Ham. There's ne'er a villain dwelling in all Denmark

But he's an arrant knave.

Hor. There needs no ghost, my lord, come from the grave

To tell us this.

Ham. Why, right; you're i' the right;
And so, without more circumstance² at all,
I hold it fit that we shake hands and part:

You, as your business and desire shall point
you;

For every man hath business and desire, 130
Such as it is; and for mine own poor part,
Look you, I'll go pray.

Hor. These are but wild and whirling words,
my lord.

Ham. I'm sorry they offend you, heartily;
Yes, faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence, my lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is,
Horatio,
And much offence too. Touching this vision
here,

It is an honest ghost, that let me tell you:
For your desire to know what is between us, O'ermaster 't as you may. And now, good friends, 140

As you are friends, scholars, and soldiers,
Give me one poor request.

Hor. What is't, my lord? we will.

Ham. Never make known what you have seen to-night.

Hor. Mar. My lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but swear't.

Hor. In faith,

My lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I, my lord, in faith.

Ham. Upon my sword.

Mar. We have sworn, my lord, already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my sword, indeed.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Ah, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there, true-penny?— 150

Come on; you hear this fellow in the cellarage:
Consent to swear.

Hor. Propose the oath, my lord.

Ham. Never to speak of this that you have seen,

Swear by my sword.

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Hic et ubique? then we'll shift our ground.

Come hither, gentlemen,

And lay your hands again upon my sword:

Never to speak of this that you have heard,

Swear by my sword. 160

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Well said, old mole! canst work i'
the earth so fast?

¹ Fond, foolish. ² Circumstances, circumlocution.

A worthy pioner! Once more remove, good friends. 163

Hor. O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

Ham. And therefore as a stranger give it welcome.

There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,

Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

But come;

Here, as before, never, so help you mercy,

How strange or odd soe'er I bear myself,—

As I, perchance, hereafter shall think meet

To put an antic disposition on,— 172

That you, at such times seeing me, never shall,

With arms encumber'd thus, or this head-shake,

Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase,

As "Well, well, we know," or "We could, an if we would,"

Or "If we list to speak," or "There be, an if they might,"

Or such ambiguous giving out, to note

That you know aught of me: this not to do, So grace and mercy at your most need help you, Swear. 181

Ghost. [Beneath] Swear.

Ham. Rest, rest, perturbed spirit! [They swear.] So, gentlemen,

With all my love I do commend me to you:

And what so poor a man as Hamlet is

May do t'express his love and friending to you,

God willing, shall not lack. Let us go in together;

And still your fingers on your lips, I pray.

The time is out of joint: O cursed spite,

That ever I was born to set it right! 190

Nay, come, let's go together. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A room in Polonius' house.

Enter POLONIUS and REYNALDO.

Pol. Give him this money and these notes, Reynaldo.

Rey. I will, my lord.

Pol. You shall do marvell's wisely, good Reynaldo,

Before you visit him, to make inquiry Of his behaviour.

Rey. My lord, I did intend it.

[Pol. Marry, well said; very well said. Look you, sir,

Inquire me first what Danskers are in Paris; And how, and who, what means, and where they keep,

What company, at what expense; and finding, By this encompassment and drift of question, That they do know my son, come you more nearer 11

Than your particular demands will touch it: Take you, as 't were, some distant knowledge of him;

As thus, "I know his father and his friends, And in part him;" do you mark this, Reynaldo?

Rey. Ay, very well, my lord.

Pol. "And in part him; but," you may say, "not well:

But, if't be he I mean, he's very wild; Addicted so and so;" and there put on him What forgeries you please; marry, none so rank As may dishonour him; take heed of that; 21 But, sir, such wanton, wild and usual slips As are companions noted and most known To youth and liberty.

Rey. As gaming, my lord.

Pol. Ay, or drinking, fencing, swearing, Quarrelling, drabbing: you may go so far.

Rey. My lôrd, that would dishonour him.

Pol. Faith, no; as you may season it in the charge.

You must not put another scandal on him, That he is open to incontinency; 30 That's not my meaning: but breathe his faults so quaintly¹

That they may seem the taints of liberty, The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind, A savageness in unreclaimed² blood, Of general assault.

¹ Quaintly, artfully.

² Unreclaimed, untamed.

Rey. But, my good lord,—
Pol. Wherefore should you do this?
Rey. Ay, my lord,
 I would know that.
Pol. Marry, sir, here's my drift;
 And I believe it is a fetch of warrant:¹
 You laying these slight sullies on my son,
 As 't were a thing a little soil'd i' the working,
 Mark you, 41
 Your party in converse, him you would sound,

Pol. Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth.
 —(Act II. 1. 63)

Having ever seen in the prenominate crimes
 The youth you breathe of guilty, be assur'd
 He closes with you in this consequence;
 "Good sir," or so, or "friend," or "gentleman,"
 According to the phrase or the addition²
 Of man and country.

Rey. Very good, my lord.

Pol. And then, sir, does he this,—he does—
 What was I about to say? By the mass, I was about to say something: where did I leave?

Rey. At "closes in the consequence," at "friend or so," and "gentleman." 58

Pol. At "closes in the consequence,"—ay, marry;

He closes with you thus: "I know the gentle-
 man;

I saw him yesterday, or t' other day,
 Or then, or then, with such, or such, and, as
 you say,

There was he gaming, there o'ertook in 's rouse,
 There falling out at tennis:" or perchance,
 "I saw him enter such a house of sale," 60
 Videlicet, a brothel, or so forth.

See you now;
 Your bait of falsehood takes this carp of truth:
 And thus do we of wisdom and of reach,³
 With windlasses⁴ and with assays of bias,⁵
 By indirections find directions out:
 So, by my former lecture and advice,
 Shall you my son. You have me, have you not?

Rey. My lord, I have.

Pol. God be wi' you! fare you well.

Rey. Good my lord!] 70

Pol. Observe his inclination in yourself.

Rey. I shall, my lord.

Pol. And let him ply his music.

Rey. Well, my lord.

Pol. Farewell! [Exit Reynaldo.]

Enter OPHELIA.

How now, Ophelia! what's the matter?

Oph. O my lord, my lord, I have been so affrighted!

Pol. With what, i' the name of God?

Oph. My lord, as I was sewing in my chamber,

Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
 No hat upon his head, his stockings foul'd,
 Ungarter'd, and down-gyved⁶ to his ankle;
 Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other, 81

And with a look so piteous in purp'ort

As if he had been loosed out of hell

To speak of horrors,—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know;

But, truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

³ Of reach, i.e. far-sighted.

⁴ Windlasses, roundabout ways.

⁵ Assays of bias, indirect attempts.

⁶ Down-gyved, i.e. hanging about his ankles like gyves or fetters.

¹ Fetch of warrant, warranted device.

² Addition, title.

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard;
Then goes he to the length of all his arm;
And, with his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face 90

As he would draw it. Long stay'd he so;
At last, a little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,¹

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me hard.—(Act ii. 1. 87)

And end his being: that done, he lets me go:
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;
For out o' doors he went without their help,
And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Pol. Come, go with me: I will go seek the king. 101

This is the very ecstasy² of love;
Whose violent property fordoes³ itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings,
As oft as any passion under heaven
That does afflict our natures. I am sorry.

¹ Bulk, breast.

² Ecstasy, madness.

³ Fordoes, destroys.

What, have you given him any hard words of late?

Oph. No, my good lord; but, as you did command,
I did repel his letters, and denied 109
His access to me.

Pol. That hath made him mad.—
I am sorry that with better heed and judgment
I had not quoted⁴ him: [I fear'd he did but trifle,
And meant to wreck thee; but, beshrew my jealousy!⁵
By heaven, it is as proper to our age

⁴ Quoted, observed.

⁵ Jealousy, suspicion.

{To cast¹ beyond ourselves in our opinions,
 {As it is common for the younger sort
 {To lack discretion.} Come, go we to the king:
 This must be known; which, being kept close,
 might move
 More grief to hide than hate to utter love.
 Come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A room in the castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and Attendants.

King. Welcome, dear Rosencrantz and Guildenstern!

Moreover that we much did long to see you,
 The need we have to use you did provoke
 Our hasty sending. Something have you heard
 Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
 Sith nor the exterior nor the inward man
 Resembles that it was. What it should be,
 More than his father's death, that thus hath put him

So much from the understanding of himself,
 I cannot dream of: I entreat you both, ¹⁰
 That, being of so young days brought up with
 him,
 And sith so neighbour'd to his youth and humour,

That you vouchsafe your rest here in our court
 Some little time: so by your companies
 To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather,
 So much as from occasion you may glean,
 Whether aught to us unknown afflicts him thus,
 That open'd lies within our remedy.

Queen. Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you; ¹⁰

And sure I am two men there are not living
 To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
 To show us so much gentry² and good will
 As to expend your time with us awhile,
 For the supply and profit of our hope,
 Your visitation shall receive such thanks
 As fits a king's remembrance.

Ros. Both your majesties
 Might, by the sovereign power you have of us,
 Put your dread pleasures more into command
 Than to entreaty.

Guil. But we both obey, ²⁹

And here give up ourselves, in the full bent,³
 To lay our service freely at your feet, ³¹
 To be commanded.

King. Thanks, Rosencrantz and gentle Guildenstern.

Queen. Thanks, Guildenstern and gentle Rosencrantz:

And I beseech you instantly to visit
 My too-much-changed son.—Go, some of you,
 And bring these gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Guil. Heavens make our presence and our practices

Pleasant and helpful to him!

Queen. Ay, amen!

[Exeunt Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, and some Attendants.]

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. The ambassadors from Norway, my good lord, ⁴⁰
 Are joyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast been the father of good news.

Pol. Have I, my lord? Assure you, my good liege,

I hold my duty, as I hold my soul,
 Both to my God and to my gracious king:
 And I do think—or else this brain of mine
 Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
 As it hath us'd to do—that I have found
 The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy.

King. O, speak of that; that do I long to hear. ⁵⁰

[Pol.] Give first admittance to th' ambassadors;

My news shall be the fruit⁴ to that great feast

King. Thyself do grace to them, and bring them in. [Exit Polonius.]

He tells me, my dear Gertrude, he hath found
 The head and source of all your son's distemper.

Queen. I doubt it is no other but the main;⁵
 His father's death, and our o'erhasty marriage.

King. Well, we shall sift him.

Re-enter POLONIUS, with VOLTIMAND and CORNELIUS.

Welcome, my good friends!
 Say, Voltimand, what from our brother Norway?

¹ Cast, plan.

² Gentry, courtesy.

³ Bent, inclination.

⁴ The fruit, i. e. the dessert.

⁵ The main, i. e. the main source.

Volt. Most fair return of greetings and desires. 60

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress
His nephew's levies, which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Polack,
But, better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your highness: whereat griev'd,
That so his sickness, age, and impotence,
Was falsely borne in hand,¹ sends out arrests
On Fortinbras; which he, in brief, obeys;
Receives rebuke from Norway, and, in fine,
Makes vow before his uncle never more 70
To give the assay of arms against your majesty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thousand crowns in annual fee;
And his commission to employ those soldiers,
So levied as before, against the Polack:
With an entreaty, herein further shown,

[Gives a paper.]

That it might please you to give quiet pass
Through your dominions for this enterprise,
On such regards of safety and allowance 79
As therein are set down.

King. It likes us well;

And at our more consider'd time we'll read,
Answer, and think upon this business.
Meantime we thank you for your well-took labour:

Go to your rest; at night we'll feast together:
Most welcome home!

[Exeunt Voltimand and Cornelius.]

Pol. This business is well ended.]
My liege, and madam,—to expostulate²
What majesty should be, what duty is,
Why day is day, night night, and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste night, day, and
time.

Therefore, since brevity is the soul of wit,³
And tediousness the limbs and outward flour-ishes, 91

I will be brief: your noble son is mad:
Mad call I it; for, to define true madness,
What is 't but to be nothing else but mad?
But let that go.

[Queen. More matter, with less art.]

Pol. Madam, I swear I use no art at all.
That he is mad, 't is true: 't is true 't is pity;

And pity 't is 't is true: a foolish figure;
But farewell it, for I will use no art.
Mad let us grant him, then: and now remains
That we find out the cause of this effect, 101
Or rather say, the cause of this defect,
For this effect defective comes by cause:
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus.
Perpend.⁴

I have a daughter,—have whilst she is mine,—
Who, in her duty and obedience, mark,
Hath given me this: now gather, and surmise.

[Reads.]

"To the celestial and my soul's idol, the most beautiful Ophelia,"— 110

That's an ill phrase, a vile phrase,—“beautiful” is a vile phrase: but you shall hear.
Thus: [Reads.]

"In her excellent white bosom, these," &c.—

Queen. Came this from Hamlet to her?

Pol. Good madam, stay awhile; I will be faithful. [Reads.]

"Doubt thou the stars are fire;
Doubt that the sun doth move;
Doubt truth to be a liar;
But never doubt I love. 119

"O dear Ophelia, I am ill at these numbers; I have not art to reckon my groans: but that I love thee best, O most best, believe it. Adieu.

"Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, HAMLET."

This, in obedience, hath my daughter shown
me:

And more above, hath his solicitings,
As they fell out by time, by means, and place,
All given to mine ear.

King. But how hath she Receiv'd his love?

Pol. What do you think of me?

King. As of a man faithful and honourable.

Pol. I would fain prove so. But what might you think, 121

When I had seen this hot love on the wing,—
As I perceiv'd it, I must tell you that,
Before my daughter told me,—what might you,
Or my dear majesty your queen here, think,
If I had play'd the desk or table-book,
Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumb,
Or look'd upon this love with idle sight;

¹ Borne in hand, deluded

² Expostulate, discuss in full.

³ Wit, i.e. understanding.

⁴ Perpend, consider.

What might you think? No, I went round¹ to work, 139

And my young mistress thus I did bespeak:
"Lord Hamlet is a prince, out of thy star;
This must not be:" and then I prescripts gave
her,

That she should lock herself from his resort,
Admit no messengers, receive no tokens.
Which done, she took the fruits of my advice:
And he repulsed,—a short tale to make,—
Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,
Thence to a watch,² thence into a weakness,
Thence to a lightness,³ and, by this declension
Into the madness wherein now he raves 150
And all we mourn for.

King. Do you think 't is this?
Queen. It may be, very likely.

Pol. Hath there been such a time—I'd fain know that—

That I have positively said "'T is so,"
When it prov'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.
Pol. [Pointing to his head and shoulder] Take this from this, if this be otherwise:

If circumstances lead me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the centre.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know, sometimes he walks four hours together 160
Here in the lobby.

Queen. So he does, indeed.

Pol. At such a time I'll loose my daughter
to him:

Be you and I behind an arras then;
Mark the encounter: if he love her not,
And be not from his reason fall'n thereon,
Let me be no assistant for a state,
But keep a farm and carters.

King. We will try it.

Queen. But, look, where sadly the poor wretch comes reading. 163

Pol. Away, I do beseech you, both away:
I'll board him presently:—O, give me leave.
[Exeunt King, Queen, and Attendants.]

Enter HAMLET, reading.

How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord!

Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest, as this world goes,
is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my lord. 180

Ham. For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a good kissing carrion,⁴—Have you a daughter?

Pol. I have, my lord.

Ham. Let her not walk i' the sun: conception is a blessing; but not as your daughter may conceive:—friend, look to 't.

Pol. [Aside] How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter: yet he knew me not at first; he said I was a fishmonger: he is far gone, far gone: and truly in my youth I suffered much extremity for love; very near this.
I'll speak to him again.—What do you read,
my lord? 193

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my lord?

Ham. Between who?

Pol. I mean, the matter that you read, my
lord.

Ham. Slanders, sir: for the satirical rogue says here, that old men have gray beards, that their faces are wrinkled, their eyes purging thick amber and plum-tree gum, and that they have a plentiful lack of wit, together with most weak hams: all which, sir, though I most powerfully and potently believe, yet I hold it not honesty to have it thus set down; for you yourself, sir, should be old as I am, if, like a crab, you could go backward.

Pol. [Aside] Though this be madness, yet there is method in 't.—Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

Ham. Into my grave? 210

Pol. Indeed, that is out o' the air.—[Aside]
How pregnant sometimes his replies are! a happiness that often madness hits on, which reason and sanity could not so prosperously be delivered of. I will leave him, and suddenly contrive the means of meeting between him

¹ Round, i.e. roundly, directly.

² Watch, sleeplessness. ³ Lightness, lightheadedness.

⁴ A good kissing carrion, i.e. carrion good for kissing.

and my daughter.—My honourable lord, I will most humbly take my leave of you.

Ham. You cannot, sir, take from me any thing that I will more willingly part withal, —except my life, except my life, except my life. 221

Pol. Fare you well, my lord.

Ham. These tedious old fools!

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Pol. You go to seek the Lord Hamlet: there he is.

Ros. [To Polonius] God save you, sir!

[Exit Polonius.]

GUIL. My honoured lord!

Ros. My most dear lord!

Pol. [Aside]

Will you walk out of the air, my lord?

Ham. Into my grave?—(Act II. 2. 208-210.)

Ham. My excellent good friends! How dost thou, Guildenstern? Ah, Rosencrantz! Good lads, how do ye both? 230

[Ros. As the indifferent children of the earth.

GUIL. Happy, in that we are not overhappy; On Fortune's cap we are not the very button.

Ham. Nor the soles of her shoe?

Ros. Neither, my lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waist, or in the middle of her favours?

GUIL. Faith, her privates we.

Ham. In the secret parts of Fortune? O, most true; she is a strumpet.] What's the news? 240

Ros. None, my lord, but that the world's grown honest.

Ham. Then is doomsday near: but your news is not true. Let me question more in particular: what have you, my good friends, deserved at the hands of Fortune, that she sends you to prison hither?

GUIL. Prison, my lord!

Ham. Denmark's a prison.

[Ros. Then is the world one. 250

Ham. A goodly one; in which there are many confines, wards, and dungeons, Denmark being one o' the worst.]

Ros. We think not so, my lord.

Ham. Why, then, 'tis none to you: for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Ros. Why, then, your ambition makes it one; 'tis too narrow for your mind. 259

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space, were it not that I have bad dreams.

Guil. Which dreams, indeed, are ambition; for the very substance of the ambitious is merely the shadow of a dream.

Ham. A dream itself is but a shadow.

Ros. Truly, and I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. 268

Ham. Then are our beggars bodies, and our monarchs and outstretched heroes the beggars' shadows. Shall we to the court? for, by my fay, I cannot reason.

Ros. Guil. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No such matter: I will not sort you with the rest of my servants; for, to speak to you like an honest man, I am most dreadfully attended. But, in the beaten way of friendship, what make you at Elsinore? 278

Ros. To visit you, my lord; no other occasion.

Ham. Beggar that I am, I am even poor in thanks; but I thank you: and sure, dear friends, my thanks are too dear a halfpenny. Were you not sent for? Is it your own inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come, deal justly with me: come, come; nay, speak.

Guil. What should we say, my lord?

Ham. Why, any thing—but to the purpose. You were sent for; and there is a kind of confession in your looks, which your modesties have not craft enough to colour: I know the good king and queen have sent for you. 291

Ros. To what end, my lord?

Ham. That you must teach me. But let me conjure you, by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the obligation of our ever-preserved love, and by what more dear a better proposer could charge you withal, be even¹ and direct with me, whether you were sent for, or no?

Ros. [Aside to Guildenstern] What say you? 300

Ham. [Aside] Nay, then, I have an eye of² you.—If you love me, hold not off. 302

Guil. My lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discovery, and your secrecy to the king and queen moults no feather. I have of late—but wherefore I know not—lost all my mirth, foregone all custom of exercises; and indeed it goes so heavily with my disposition, that this goodly frame, the earth, seems to me a sterile promontory; this most excellent canopy, the air, look you, this brave o'erhanging firmament, this majestical roof fretted³ with golden fire, why, it appears no other thing to me than a foul and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of work is man! how noble in reason! how infinite in faculty! in form and moving how express and admirable! in action how like an angel! in apprehension how like a god! the beauty of the world! the paragon of animals! And yet, to me, what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me; no, nor woman neither, though by your smiling you seem to say so.

Ros. My lord, there was no such stuff in my thoughts. 325

Ham. Why did you laugh, then, when I said "man delights not me"?

Ros. To think, my lord, if you delight not in man, what lenten entertainment the players shall receive from you: we coted⁴ them on the way; and hither are they coming, to offer you service.

Ham. He that plays the king shall be welcome,—his majesty shall have tribute of me; the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target; the lover shall not sigh gratis; the humorous man⁵ shall end his part in peace; the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickle o' the sere; and the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall halt for 't. What players are they? 340

Ros. Even those you were wont to take such delight in, the tragedians of the city.

Ham. How chances it they travel? their residence, both in reputation and profit, was better both ways.

² Of, on. ³ Fretted, adorned. ⁴ Coted, overtook and passed.

⁵ The humorous man, i. e. the man of "humours" or fantastic caprices.

[Ros. I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.]

Ham. Do they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the city? are they so followed? 350

Ros. No, indeed, they are not.

[Ham. How comes it? do they grow rusty?

Ros. Nay, their endeavour keeps in the wonted pace: but there is, sir, an aery of children, little eyases,¹ that cry out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapped for't: these are now the fashion; and so berattle the common stages,—so they call them,—that many wearing rapiers are afraid of goose-quills, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What, are they children? who maintains 'em? how are they escoted? Will they pursue the quality no longer than they can sing? will they not say afterwards, if they should grow themselves to common players,—as it is most like, if their means are no better,—their writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their own succession. 368

Ros. Faith, there has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them² to controversy: there was, for a while, no money bid for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question.

Ham. Is't possible?

Guil. O, there has been much throwing about of brains.

Ham. Do the boys carry it away?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.] 379

Ham. It is not very strange; for my uncle is king of Denmark, and those that would make mows at him while my father lived, give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece for his picture in little. 'Sblood, there is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out. 385

[Flourish of trumpets within.

Guil. There are the players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elsinore. Your hands, come: the appurtenance of welcome is fashion and ceremony: [let me comply with you in this garb; lest my extent³ to the players, which, I tell you, must show fairly outward, should more appear like entertainment than yours.] You are welcome: but my uncle-father and aunt-mother are deceived.

Guil. In what, my dear lord? 395

Ham. I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw.

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. Well be with you, gentlemen!

Ham. Hark you, Guildenstern; and you too; at each ear a hearer: that great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts.

Ros. Happily⁴ he's the second time come to them; for they say an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will prophesy he comes to tell me of the players; mark it.—You say right, sir: o' Monday morning; 't was so indeed.

Pol. My lord, I have news to tell you.

Ham. My lord, I have news to tell you. When Roscius was an actor in Rome,— 410

Pol. The actors are come hither, my lord.

Ham. Buz, buz!

Pol. Upon my honour,—

Ham. Then came each actor on his ass,—

Pol. The best actors in the world, either for tragedy, comedy, history, pastoral, pastoral-comical, historical-pastoral, tragical-historical, tragical-comical-historical-pastoral, scene indivisible, or poem unlimited: Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light. For the law of writ and the liberty, these are the only men. 421

Ham. O Jephthah, judge of Israel, what a treasure hadst thou!

Pol. What treasure had he, my lord?

Ham. Why,

“One fair daughter, and no more,
The which he loved passing well.

Pol. [Aside] Still on my daughter.

Ham. Am I not i' the right, old Jephthah?

Pol. If you call me Jephthah, my lord, I have a daughter that I love passing well. 431

Ham. Nay, that follows not.

Pol. What follows, then, my lord?

Ham. Why,

¹ Eyases, nestlings.

² Tarre them, set them on.

³ Extent, condescension.

⁴ Happily, haply

"As by lot, God wot,"

and then, you know,

"It came to pass, as most like it was,"— the first row of the pious chanson will show you more; for look, where my abridgment comes. 439

Enter four or five Players.

You are welcome, masters; welcome, all; I am glad to see ye well; welcome, good friends. —O, my old friend! why, thy face is valanced since I saw thee last; comest thou to beard me in Denmark?—What, my young lady and mistress; By'r lady, your ladyship is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chopine.¹ [Pray God, your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, be not cracked within the ring.]—Masters, you are all welcome. We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see: we'll have a speech straight: come, give us a taste of your quality: come, a passionate speech. 452

First Play. What speech, my good lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was never acted; or, if it was, not above once; for the play, I remember, pleased not the million; 't was caviare to the general: but it was—as I received it, and others, whose judgments in such matters cried in the top of mine—an excellent play, well digested in the scenes, set down with as much modesty as cunning. I remember, one said there were no sallets² in the lines to make the matter savoury, nor no matter in the phrase that might indict the author of affection;³ but called it an honest method, as wholesome as sweet, and by very much more handsome than fine. One speech in it I chiefly loved: 't was Aeneas' tale to Dido; and thereabout of it especially where he speaks of Priam's slaughter: if it live in your memory, begin at this line; let me see, let me see: 471

"The rugged Pyrrhus, like the Hyrcanian beast,"

—'t is not so: it begins with Pyrrhus;

"The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose sable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the night resemble

When he lay couched in the ominous horse,
[Hath now this dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot
Now is he total gules; horribly trick'd⁴
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,
Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets,
That lend a tyrannous and damned light 482
To their vile murders: roasted in wrath and fire,
And thus o'er-sized⁵ with coagulate gore,
With eyes like carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus Old grandsire Priam seeks."

So, proceed you.

Pol. 'Fore God, my lord, well spoken, with good accent and good discretion.

First Play. "Anon he finds him 490
Striking too short at Greeks; his antique sword,
Rebellious to his arm, lies where it falls,
Repugnant to command: unequal match'd,
Pyrrhus at Priam drives; in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unnerv'd father falls. [Then senseless Ilium,
Seeming to feel this blow, with flaming top
Stoops to his base, and with a hideous crash
Takes prisoner Pyrrhus' ear: for, lo! his sword,
Which was declining on the milky head 500
Of reverend Priam, seem'd i' the air to stick:
So, as a painted tyrant, Pyrrhus stood;
And, like a neutral to his will and matter,
Did nothing.]"

But, as we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heavens, the rack⁶ stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death, anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the region;⁷ so, after Pyrrhus' pause,
Aroused vengeance sets him new a-work; 510
And never did the Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eterne,
With less remorse than Pyrrhus' bleeding sword
Now falls on Priam.

Out, out, thou strumpet, Fortune! [All you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heaven
As low as to the fiends!]"

Pol. This is too long. 520

Ham. It shall to the barber's, with your beard. Prithee, say on: [he's for a jig or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps; say on:] come to Hecuba.

First Play. "But who, O, who had seen the mobled⁸ queen—"

¹ Chopine, high shoe.

² Sallets, salads.

³ Affection, i.e. affectation.

⁴ Trick'd, traced, coloured (in heraldry).

⁵ O'er-sized, covered as with glue.

⁶ The rack, the vaporous upper clouds.

⁷ The region, i.e. the air.

⁸ Mobled, veiled.

Ham. "The mobled queen"?

Pol. That's good; "mobled queen" is good.

First Play. "Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames

With bisson¹ rheum; a clout upon that head
Where late the diadem stood; and for a robe, 530
About her lank and all o'er-teemed loins,
A blanket, in the alarm of fear caught up;—
Who this had seen, with tongue in venom steep'd,
'Gainst Fortune's state would treason have pronounced:

But if the gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs,
The instant burst of clamour that she made—
Unless things mortal move them not at all—
Would have made milch the burning eyes of heaven,
And passion in the gods." 541

Pol. Look, wher he has not turned his colour, and has tears in's eyes. Pray you, no more.

Ham. 'Tis well; I'll have thee speak out the rest soon.—Good my lord, will you see the players well bestow'd? Do you hear, let them be well used; for they are the abstract and brief chronicles of the time: after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you live. 551

Pol. My lord, I will use them according to their desert.

Ham. God's bodykins, man, better: use every man after his desert, and who should scape whipping? Use them after your own honour and dignity: the less they deserve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come, sirs. 559

Ham. Follow him, friends: we'll hear a play to-morrow.

[Exit Polonius with all the Players except the First.]

Dost thou hear me, old friend; can you play the Murder of Gonzago?

First Play. Ay, my lord.

Ham. We'll ha't to-morrow night. You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down and insert in't, could you not?

First Play. Ay, my lord. 569

Ham. Very well. Follow that lord; and look you mock him not. [Exit First Player.]

¹ Bisson, blinding.

My good friends, I'll leave you till night: you are welcome to Elsinore. 573

Roz. Good my lord!

Ham. Ay, so God be wi' ye.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Now I am alone.

O, what a rogue and peasant slave am I!

Ham. Yet I,
A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing.—(Act II. 2. 598-599.)

Is it not monstrous, that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
That, from her working, all his visage wann'd;
Tears in his eyes, distraction in's aspect, 581
A broken voice, and his whole function² suiting
With forms to his conceit?³ and all for nothing!
For Hecuba!
What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weep for her? What would he do,

² His whole function, i.e. all his faculties.

³ Conceit, conception.

Had he the motive and the cue for passion
That I have? He would drown the stage with tears,

And cleave the general ear with horrid speech,
Make mad the guilty, and appal the free, 580
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed
The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I,
A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, peak,¹
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
Upon whose property and most dear life
A damn'd defeat² was made. Am I a coward?
Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
Tweaks me by the nose? gives me the lie i' the throat, 601

As deep as to the lungs? who does me this, ha?
'S wounds, I should take it: for it cannot be
But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
To make oppression bitter; or, ere this
I should have fatted all the region kites,
With this slave's offal: bloody, bawdy villain!
Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless³ villain!

O, vengeance! 610
Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave,
That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,

Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,

And fall a-cursing, like a very drab,
A scullion!

Fie upon't! foh! About,⁵ my brain! Hum,
I have heard

That guilty creatures sitting at a play
Have by the very cunning of the scene 619
Been struck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions;
For murder, though it have no tongue, will
speak

With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father
Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks;
I'll tent⁶ him to the quick: if he but blench,
I know my course. The spirit that I have seen

May be the devil: and the devil hath power
To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and perhaps
Out of my weakness and my melancholy, 630
As he is very potent with such spirits,
Abuses⁷ me to damn me: I'll have grounds
More relative⁸ than this. The play's the thing
Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A room in the castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. And can you, by no drift of circumstance,⁴

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy?

Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted;

But from what cause he will by no means speak.
Guil. Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;

But, with a crafty madness, keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession 9

Of his true state.

Queen. Did he receive you well?

Ros. Most like a gentleman.

Guil. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Ros. Niggard of question, but of our demands
Most free in his reply.

Queen. Did you assay him
To any pastime?

Ros. Madam, it so fell out, that certain players

¹ Peak, mope.

² Defeat, destruction.

³ Kindless, unnatural.

⁴ Drift of circumstance, roundabout method.

⁵ About, i.e. to work.

⁶ Tent, probe.

⁷ Abuses, deludes.

⁸ Relative, i.e. to the purpose.

We o'er-raught¹ on the way: of these we told him,
And there did seem in him a kind of joy
To hear of it: they are about the court,
And, as I think, they have already order 20
This night to play before him.

Pol. 'Tis most true:
And he beseech'd me to entreat your majesties
To hear and see the matter.

King. With all my heart; and it doth much content me

To hear him so inclin'd.
Good gentlemen, give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose on to these delights.

Ros. We shall, my lord.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

King. Sweet Gertrude, leave us too;
For we have closely² sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 't were by accident, may here 30
Affront³ Ophelia:

Her father and myself, lawful espials,
Will so bestow ourselves that, seeing unseen,
We may of their encounter frankly judge,
And gather by him, as he is behav'd,
If 't be the affliction of his love or no
That thus he suffers for.

Queen. I shall obey you:
And for your part, Ophelia, I do wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause Of Hamlet's wildness: so shall I hope your virtues 40
Will bring him to his wonted way again,
To both your honours.

Oph. Madam, I wish it may. [Exit Queen.]

Pol. Ophelia, walk you here. Gracious, so please you,
We will bestow ourselves. [To Ophelia] Read
on this book;

That show of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness. We are oft to blame in this,— 'Tis too much prov'd,—that with devotion's visage

And pious action we do sugar o'er
The devil himself.

King. [Aside] O, 't is too true!
How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience! 50

¹ O'er-raught, overtook.

² Closely, secretly.

³ Affront, confront.

The harlot's cheek, beautied with plastering art, 51
Is not more ugly to⁴ the thing that helps it

Ros. He does confess he feels himself distracted;
But from what cause he will by no means speak.

—(Act III. 1. 5, 6.)

Than is my deed to my most painted word:
O heavy burden!

Pol. I hear him coming: let's withdraw, my lord. [Exeunt King and Polonius.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the question:
Whether 't is nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,

⁴ To, i.e. compared to.

Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them: to die, to sleep;
No more; and by a sleep to say we end 61
The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks

That flesh is heir to? 'Tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wish'd. To die, to sleep;
To sleep, perchance to dream: ay, there's the rub;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may
come,

When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause: there's the respect¹
That makes calamity of so long life;
For who would bear the whips and scorns of
time, 70
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,

The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus² make
With a bare bodkin?³ who would fardels⁴ bear,
To grunt⁵ and sweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The undiscover'd country from whose bourn
No traveller returns, puzzles the will, 80
And makes us rather bear those ills we have Than fly to others that we know not of?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all,
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprises of great pith and moment
With this regard their currents turn awry
And lose the name of action. Soft you now!
The fair Ophelia! Nymph, in thy orisons 89
Be all my sins remember'd.

Oph. Good my lord,
How does your honour for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thank you; well, well, well.

Oph. My lord, I have remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to re-deliver;
I pray you, now receive them.

Ham. No, not I;

I never gave you aught.

Oph. My honour'd lord, you know right well you did;

And, with them, words of so sweet breath
compos'd
As made the things more rich: their perfume
lost,

Take these again; for to the noble mind 100
Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord.

Ham. Ha, ha! are you honest?⁶

Oph. My lord?

Ham. Are you fair?

Oph. What means your lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest and fair, your honesty should admit no discourse to your beauty.

Oph. Could beauty, my lord, have better commerce than with honesty? 110

Ham. Ay, truly; for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd than the force of honesty can translate beauty into his likeness: this was sometime a paradox, but now the time gives it proof. I did love you once.

Oph. Indeed, my lord, you made me believe so.

Ham. You should not have believed me;
for virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock
but we shall relish of it: I loved you not.

Oph. I was the more deceived. 121

Ham. Get thee to a nunnery: why wouldst thou be a breeder of sinners? I am myself indifferent⁷ honest: but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better my mother had not borne me: I am very proud, revengeful, ambitious; with more offences at my beck than I have thoughts to put them in, imagination to give them shape, or time to act them in.
What should such fellows as I do crawling between heaven and earth? We are arrant knaves, all; believe none of us. Go thy ways to a nunnery. Where's your father? 133

Oph. At home, my lord.

Ham. Let the doors be shut upon him, that he may play the fool no where but in's own house. Farewell.

Oph. O, help him, you sweet heavens!

Ham. If thou dost marry, I'll give thee this plague for thy dowry: be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow, thou shalt not escape

¹ Respect, consideration.

² Quietus, discharge.

⁴ Fardels, burdens

³ Bodkin, dagger.

⁵ Grunt, groan.

⁶ Honest, i.e. virtuous.

⁷ Indifferent, fairly.

calumny. Get thee to a nunnery, go: farewell. Or, if thou wilt needs marry, marry a fool: for wise men know well enough what monsters you make of them. To a nunnery, go; and quickly too. Farewell. 146

Oph. O heavenly powers, restore him!

Ham. I have heard of your paintings too, well enough; God has given you one face, and you make yourselves another: you jig, you amble, and you lisp, and nickname God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance. Go to, I'll no more on't; it hath made me mad. I say, we will have no more marriages: those that are married already, all

Oph. Take these again; for to the noble mind
Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind.
There, my lord — (Act iii. 1. 100-102.)

but one, shall live; the rest shall keep as they are. To a nunnery, go. [Exit.]

Oph. O, what a noble mind is here o'er-thrown!

The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue, sword;

The expectancy and rose of the fair state, 160
The glass of fashion and the mould of form,
The observ'd of all observers, quite, quite down!

And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
That suck'd the honey of his music vows,
Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,

Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh;
That unmatch'd form and feature of blown youth

Blasted with ecstasy:¹ O, woe is me
To have seen what I have seen, see what I see!

Re-enter KING and POLONIUS.

King. Love! his affections do not that way tend; 170
Nor what he spake, though it lack'd form a little,

¹ Ecstasy, madness.

Was not like madness. There 's something in his soul, 172

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood,

[And I do doubt the hatch and the disclose

Will be some danger: which for to prevent,

I have in quick determination

Thus set it down:] he shall with speed to England,

For the demand of our neglected tribute:

Haply the seas and countries different

With variable objects shall expel 180

This something-settled matter in his heart,

Whereon his brains still beating puts him thus

From fashion of himself. What think you on't?

Pol. It shall do well: but yet do I believe

The origin and commencement of his grief

Sprung from neglected love. How now,

Ophelia!

You need not tell us what Lord Hamlet said;

We heard it all. My lord, do as you please;

But, if you hold it fit, after the play, 189

Let his queen mother all alone entreat him

To show his grief: let her be round with him;

And I'll be plac'd, so please you, in the ear

Of all their conference. If she find¹ him not,

To England send him, or confine him where

Your wisdom best shall think.

King.

It shall be so:

Madness in great ones must not unwatch'd go.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The same. A hall in the same.

Enter HAMLET and several Players.

Ham. Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of your players do, I had as lief the town-crier spoke my lines. Nor do not saw the air too much with your hand, thus; but use all gently: for in the very torrent, tempest, and, as I may say, the whirlwind of passion, you must acquire and beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. O, it offends me to the soul to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings, who, for the most part, are capable of nothing but inexplicable dumb-shows and noise: I would have such a fellow whipped for o'er-doing Termagant; it out-herods Herod: pray you, avoid it.

First Play. I warrant your honour. 17

Ham. Be not too tame neither, but let your own discretion be your tutor: suit the action to the word, the word to the action; with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature: for any thing so overdone is from² the purpose of playing, whose end, both at the first and now, was and is, to hold, as 't were, the mirror up to nature; to show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and pressure.³ Now, this overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve; the censure⁴ of the which one must, in your allowance, o'erweigh a whole theatre of others. O, there be players that I have seen play, and heard others praise, and that highly, not to speak it profanely, that neither having the accent of Christians nor the gait of Christian, pagan, nor man, have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journey-men had made men, and not made them well, they imitated humanity so abominably.

First Play. I hope we have reformed that indifferently with us, sir. 41

Ham. O, reform it altogether. And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them: for there be of them that will themselves laugh, to set on some quantity of barren spectators to laugh too, though in the meantime some necessary question of the play be then to be considered: that's villanous, and shows a most pitiful ambition in the fool that uses it. Go, make you ready. [Exeunt Players.

[Enter POLONIUS, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDEN-
STERN.

How now, my lord! will the king hear this piece of work?

Pol. And the queen too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the players make haste. [Exit Polonius.] Will you two help to hasten them?

¹ Find, i.e. find out.

² From, apart from, contrary to.

³ Pressure, impression, stamp.

⁴ Censure, judgment.

Ros. Guil. We will, my lord.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

Ham. What ho! Horatio!

Enter HORATIO.

Hor. Here, sweet lord, at your service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal.¹ 60

Hor. O, my dear lord,—

Ham. Nay, do not think I flatter;
For what advancement may I hope from thee,
That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits,
To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp,
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee
Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
And could of men distinguish, her election
Hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been
As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;
A man that fortune's buffets and rewards Hast ta'en with equal thanks: and bless'd are those 73

Whose blood and judgment are so well com-mingled

That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Give me that man

That is not passion's slave, and I will wear
him

In my heart's core, ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee.—Something too much of this.—
There is a play to-night before the king; 80

One scene of it comes near the circumstance
Which I have told thee of my father's death:
I prithee, when thou seest that act a-foot,
Even with the very comment of thy soul
Observe my uncle: if his occulted² guilt
Do not itself unkennel in one speech,
It is a damned ghost that we have seen;
And my imaginations are as foul
As Vulcan's stithy.³ Give him heedful note:
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face, 90
And after we will both our judgments join
In censure⁴ of his seeming.

¹ Cop'd withal, encountered with.

² Occulted, concealed.

³ Stithy, i.e. forge.

⁴ Censure, judgment.

Hor.

Well, my lord.

If he steal aught the whilst this play is playing,
And 'scape detecting, I will pay the theft.

Ham. They're coming to the play; I must be idle:⁵

Get you a place.

Ham. Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man
As e'er my conversation cop'd withal.—(Act iii. 2. 59, 60.)

Danish march. A flourish. Enter KING, QUEEN, POLONIUS, OPHELIA, ROSENCRANTZ, GUIL-
DENSTERN, and others.

King. How fares our cousin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent, i' faith; of the chameleon's dish: I eat the air, promise-crammed: you cannot feed capons so. 100

⁵ Idle, crazy.

King. I have nothing with this answer,
Hamlet; these words are not mine. 102

Ham. No, nor mine now. [To Polonius] My lord, you played i' the university, you say?

Pol. That did I, my lord; and was accounted a good actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Cæsar; I was killed
i' the Capitol; Brutus killed me. 109

Ham. It was a brute part of him to kill so capital a calf there. Be the players ready?

Ros. Ay, my lord; they stay upon your patience.

Queen. Come hither, my dear Hamlet, sit by me.

Ham. No, good mother; here's metal more attractive.

Pol. [To the King] O, ho! do you mark that?

Ham. Lady, shall I lie in your lap?

[Lying down at Ophelia's feet.

[Oph. No, my lord. 120

Ham. I mean, my head upon your lap?

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Do you think I meant country matters?

Oph. I think nothing, my lord.

Ham. That's a fair thought to lie between maids' legs.

Oph. What is, my lord?

Ham. Nothing.]

Oph. You are merry, my lord.

Ham. Who, I? 180

Oph. Ay, my lord.

Ham. O God, your only jig-maker. What should a man do but be merry? for, look you, how cheerfully my mother looks, and my father died within's two hours.

Oph. Nay, 't is twice two months, my lord.

Ham. So long? Nay, then, let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of sables. O heavens! die two months ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope a great man's memory may outlive his life half a year: but, by'r lady, he must build churches, then; [or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the hobby-horse, whose epitaph is, "For, O, for,
O, the hobby-horse is forgot."] 145

Hautboys play. The dumb-show enters.

Enter a KING and a QUEEN very lovingly; the QUEEN embracing him, and he her. She kneels, and makes *show of protestation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her neck: lays him down upon a bank of flowers: she, seeing him asleep, leaves him.

Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his crown, kisses it, and pours poison in the KING's ears, and exit. The QUEEN returns; finds the KING dead, and makes passionate action. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes, comes in again, seeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away. The Poisoner wooes the QUEEN with gifts: she seems loth and unwilling awhile, but in the end accepts his love.*

[Exeunt.

Oph. What means this, my lord?

Ham. Marry, this is miching mallecho; it means mischief.

Oph. Belike this show imports the argument of the play. 150

Enter Prologue.

Ham. We shall know by this fellow: [the players cannot keep counsel; they'll tell all.

Oph. Will he tell us what this show meant?

Ham. Ay, or any show that you'll show him: be not you ashamed to show, he'll not shame to tell you what it means.

Oph. You are naught, you are naught: I'll mark the play.]

Pro. For us, and for our tragedy,
Here stooping to your clemency, 160
We beg your hearing patiently. [Exit.

Ham. Is this a prologue, or the posy¹ of a ring?

Oph. 'T is brief, my lord.

Ham. As 'woman's love.

Enter a KING and a QUEEN.

P. King. Full thirty times hath Phœbus' cart² gone round

Neptune's salt wash and Tellus' orb'd ground,
And thirty dozen moons with borrow'd sheen
About the world have times twelve thirties been,
Since love our hearts and Hymen did our hands
Unite commutual in most sacred bands. 170

P. Queen. So many journeys may the sun and moon

Make us again count o'er ere love be done!
But, woe is me, you are so sick of late,
So far from cheer and from your former state,
That I distrust you. Yet, though I distrust, Discomfort you, my lord, it nothing must:
[For women's fear and love hold quantity;
In neither aught, or in extremity.]

¹ Posy, i. e. a rhymed motto.

² Cart, chariot.

{ Now, what my love is, proof hath made you know;
 { And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so: 180
 { Where love is great, the littlest doubts are fear;
 { Where little fears grow great, great love grows there.]

P. King. Faith, I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;

My operant powers their functions leave¹ to do:
 And thou shalt live in this fair world behind,
 Honour'd, below'd; and haply one as kind
 For husband shalt thou—

P. Queen. O, confound the rest!
 Such love must needs be treason in my breast:
 In second husband let me be accurst!
 None wed the second but who kill'd the first. 190

Ham. [Aside] Wormwood, wormwood.

[P. Queen. The instances² that second marriage move

Are base respects³ of thrift, but none of love:
 A second time I kill my husband dead
 When second husband kisses me in bed.]

P. King. I do believe you think what now you speak;

But what we do determine oft we break.
 { Purpose is but the slave to memory;
 { Of violent birth, but poor validity:⁴
 { Which now, like fruit unripe, sticks on the tree, 200
 { But fall unshaken when they mellow be.
 { Most necessary 't is that we forget
 { To pay ourselves what to ourselves is debt:]

What to ourselves in passion we propose,
 The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.

[The violence of either grief or joy
 Their own enactures with themselves destroy:
 Where joy most revels, grief doth most lament;
 Grief joys, joy grieves, on slender accident.

This world is not for aye, nor 't is not strange 210
 That even our loves should with our fortunes change;
 For 't is a question left us yet to prove,
 Whether⁵ love lead fortune, or else fortune love.

The great man down, you mark his favourite flies;
 The poor advanc'd makes friends of enemies.

And hitherto doth love on fortune tend:
 For who not needs shall never lack a friend;

And who in want a hollow friend doth try.
 Directly seasons⁶ him his enemy.

But, orderly to end where I begun, 220
 Our wills and fates do so contrary run,
 That our devices still are overthrown;
 Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our own:]
 So think thou wilt no second husband wed;
 But die thy thoughts when thy first lord is dead.

P. Queen. Nor earth to me give food nor heaven
 light!

Sport and repose lock from me day and night!
 [To desperation turn my trust and hope!
 An anchor's⁷ cheer in prison be my scope!
 Each opposite,⁸ that blanks⁹ the face of joy, 230
 Meet what I would have well, and it destroy!]
 Both here and hence pursue me lasting strife,
 If, once a widow, ever I be wife!

Ham. If she should break it now!

P. King. 'T is deeply sworn. Sweet, leave me here awhile;

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
 The tedious day with sleep. [Sleeps.

P. Queen. Sleep rock thy brain;
 And never come mischance between us twain! [Exit.

Ham. Madam, how like you this play?

Queen. The lady doth protest too much,
 methinks. 240

Ham. O, but she'll keep her word.

King. Have you heard the argument? Is there no offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they do but jest, poison in jest; no offence i' the world.

King. What do you call the play?

Ham. The Mouse-trap. Marry, how? Tropically. This play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the duke's name; his wife, Baptista: you shall see anon; 't is a knavish piece of work: but what o' that? your majesty, and we that have free souls, it touches us not: let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung. 253

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one Lucianus, nephew to the king.

Oph. You are as good as a chorus, my lord.

Ham. I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the puppets dallying.

[Oph. You are keen, my lord, you are keen.]

Ham. It would cost you a groaning to take off my edge. 260

Oph. Still better, and worse.

Ham. So you must take your husbands.]
 Begin, murderer; [pox,] leave thy damnable faces, and begin. Come: "the croaking raven doth bellow for revenge."

Luc. Thoughts black, hands apt, drugs fit, and time agreeing;
 Confederate season, else no creature seeing;
 Thou mixture rank, of midnight weeds collected,

¹ Leave, leave off, cease. ² Instances, inducements.

³ Respects, considerations.

⁴ Validity, efficacy.

⁵ Whether, pronounced (as it was often written) wh'er.

⁶ Seasons, i.e. brings to maturity in his true character.

⁷ Anchor's, i.e. anchorite's, hermit's.

⁸ Opposite, obstacle.

⁹ Blanks, blanches, pales.

With Hecate's¹ ban thrice blasted, thrice infected,
 Thy natural magic and dire property 270
 On wholesome life usurp immediately.
[Pours the poison into the sleeper's ears.]

Ham. He poisons him i' the garden for his estate. His name's Gonzago: the story is extant, and writ in choice Italian: you shall see anon how the murderer gets the love of Gonzago's wife.

Oph. The king rises.

Ham. What, frighted with false fire!

Queen. How fares my lord?

Pol. Give o'er the play.

King. Give me some light: away! 280

All. Lights, lights, lights!

[Exeunt all except Hamlet and Horatio.]

Ham. Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
 The hart ungalled play;

For some must watch, while some must sleep:

So runs the world away.

*[Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers,
 —if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me,—with two Provincial roses on my razed shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry² of players,
 sir?*

Hor. Half a share. 290

Ham. A whole one, I.]

For thou dost know, O Damon dear,
 This realm dismantled was
 Of Jove himself; and now reigns here
 A very, very—pajock.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Ham. O good Horatio, I'll take the ghost's word for a thousand pound. Didst perceive?

Hor. Very well, my lord.

Ham. Upon the talk of the poisoning? 300

Hor. I did very well note him.

Ham. Ah, ha! Come, some music! come,
 the recorders!³

For if the king like not the comedy,
 Why, then, belike, he likes it not, perdy.

Come, some music!

Re-enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Guil. Good my lord, vouchsafe me a word
 with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole history.

Guil. The king, sir,— 310

Ham. Ay, sir, what of him?

Guil. Is, in his retirement, marvellous dis-tempered.⁴

Ham. With drink, sir?

Guil. No, my lord, rather with choler.

Ham. Your wisdom should show itself more richer to signify this to his doctor; for, for me to put him to his purgation⁵ would perhaps plunge him into far more choler. 319

Guil. Good my lord, put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair.

Ham. I am tame, sir: pronounce.

Guil. The queen, your mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guil. Nay, good my lord, this courtesy is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will do your mother's commandment: if not, your pardon,⁶ and my return shall be the end of my business. 330

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guil. What, my lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased: but, sir, such answer as I can make, you shall command; or, rather, as you say, my mother: therefore no more, but to the matter: my mother, you say,—

Ros. Then thus she says; your behaviour hath struck her into amazement and admiration.⁷ 339

Ham. O wonderful son, that can so astonish a mother! But is there no sequel at the heels of this mother's admiration? impart.

Ros. She desires to speak with you in her closet, ere you go to bed.

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our mother. Have you any further trade⁸
 with us?

Ros. My lord, you once did love me.

Ham. So I do still, by these pickers and stealers. 349

⁴ Distempered, discomposed (used also of bodily disorder).

⁵ Purgation, a play upon the legal and medical senses of the word.

⁶ Your pardon, i.e. your leave to go.

⁷ Amazement and admiration, i.e. surprise and wonder.

⁸ Trade, business.

¹ Hecate, pronounced Hecat.

² Cry, company (from a cry of hounds).

³ Recorders, musical instruments.

Ros. Good my lord, what is your cause of distemper? you do surely bar the door upon your own liberty, if you deny your griefs to your friend.

Ham. Sir, I lack advancement.

Ros. How can that be, when you have the voice of the king himself for your succession in Denmark?

Ham. Ay, sir, but "While the grass grows,"¹ —the proverb is something musty. 359

Re-enter Players with recorders.

O, the recorders! let me see one. To withdraw with you:—why do you go about to recover the wind of me,² as if you would drive me into a toil?

Guil. O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.

Ham. I do not well understand that. Will you play upon this pipe?

Guil. My lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guil. Believe me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you. 370

Guil. I know no touch of it, my lord.

Ham. It is as easy as lying: govern these ventages³ with your fingers and thumb, give it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most eloquent music. Look you, these are the stops.

Guil. But these cannot I command to any utterance of harmony; I have not the skill. 378

Ham. Why look you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me! You would play upon me; you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery; you would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass: and there is much music, excellent voice, in this little organ; yet cannot you make it speak. 'Sblood, do you think I am easier to be played on than a pipe? Call me what instrument you will, though you can fret⁴ me, you cannot play upon me.

¹ "While the grass grows the steed starves."

² To recover the wind of me, i.e., in hunting, to get to windward of the game, that it may be driven into the toil without scenting it.

³ These ventages, the stops.

⁴ Fret, a quibble; the frets are the stops of an instrument.

Enter POLONIUS.

God bless you, sir! 390

Pol. My lord, the queen would speak with you, and presently.

Ham. Do you see yonder cloud that 's almost in shape of a camel?

Pol. By the mass, and 't is like a camel, indeed.

Ham. Methinks it is like a weasel.

Pol. It is backed like a weasel.

Ham. Or like a whale?

Pol. Very like a whale. 399

Ham. Then will I come to my mother by and by. They fool me to the top of my bent.⁵ I will come by and by.⁶

Pol. I will say so.

Ham. By and by is easily said. [Exit Polonius.—Leave me, friends.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, Horatio, and Players.

'T is now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn, and hell itself breathes out

Contagion to this world: now could I drink
hot blood,

And do such bitter business as the day

Would quake to look on. Soft! now to my mother. 410

O heart, lose not thy nature; let not ever

The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom:

Let me be cruel, not unnatural:

I will speak daggers to her, but use none;

[My tongue and soul in this be hypocrites;
How in my words soever she be shent,⁷

To give them seals⁸ never, my soul, consent!]
[Exit.

SCENE III. A room in the same.

Enter KING, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe
with us

To let his madness range. Therefore prepare
you;

I your commission will forthwith dispatch,

⁵ Bent, tension, as of a bent bow.

⁶ By and by, immediately.

⁷ Shent, confounded, put to shame.

⁸ To give them seals, i.e. to put them in execution.

And he to England shall along with you:
 [The terms of our estate may not endure
 Hazard so near us as doth hourly grow
 Out of his lunacies.

Guil. We will ourselves provide:
 Most holy and religious fear it is
 To keep those many many bodies safe
 That live and feed upon your majesty. 10

Ros. The single and peculiar life is bound,
 With all the strength and armour of the mind
 To keep itself from noyance;¹ but much more
 That spirit upon whose weal depends and rests*

The lives of many. The cease² of majesty
 Dies not alone; but, like a gulf, doth draw
 What's near it with it; it is a massy wheel,

Ham Now might I do it pat, now he is praying —(Act iii. 3. 73.)

Fix'd on the summit of the highest mount,
 To whose huge spokes ten thousand lesser things 19
 Are mortis'd and adjoin'd; which, when it falls,
 Each small annexment, petty consequence,
 Attends the boisterous ruin. Never alone
 Did the king sigh, but with a general groan.]

King. Arm you, I pray you, to this speedy voyage;

For we will fetters put upon this fear,
 Which now goes too free-footed.

Ros. Guil. We will haste us.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.

Enter POLONIUS.

Pol. My lord, he's going to his mother's closet:

Behind the arras I'll convey myself,
 To hear the process; I'll warrant she'll tax him home: 29

And, as you said, and wisely was it said,
 'Tis meet that some more audience than a
 mother,

Since nature makes them partial, should o'er-
 hear

¹ Noyance, injury.

² Cease, extinction.

The speech, of vantage.¹ Fare you well, my liege: 33

I'll call upon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thanks, dear my lord.
[Exit Polonius.]

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heaven;
It hath the primal eldest curse upon 't,
A brother's murder! Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will: 39
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent,
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood,
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves mercy

But to confront the visage of offence?
And what's in prayer but this twofold force,
To be forestalled ere we come to fall, 40
Or pardon'd being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But, O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? "Forgive me my foul murder?"

That cannot be, since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd, and retain the offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;
And oft 'tis seen the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: but 'tis not so above; 60
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In his true nature; and we ourselves compell'd,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?²
Try what repentance can: what can it not?
Yet what can it when one can not repent?
O wretched state! O bosom black as death!
O limed³ soul, that struggling to be free Art more engag'd.⁴ Help, angels! Make assay!

Bow, stubborn knees; and, heart with strings of steel, 70

Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe!
All may be well. [Retires and kneels.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now might I do it pat, now he is praying;
And now I'll do 't: and so he goes to heaven;
And so am I reveng'd. That would⁵ be scann'd:
A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven.

O, this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread, 80
With all his crimes broad blown, as flush⁶ as May;

And how his audit stands who knows save
heaven?

But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him: and am I, then, reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage?
No.

Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid
hent:

When he is drunk asleep, or in his rage,
[Or in the incestuous pleasure of his bed;] 90
At gaming, swearing, or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in't;
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at
heaven,
And that his soul may be as damn'd and black
As hell, whereto it goes. My mother stays:
This physic but prolongs thy sickly days.

[Exit.]

[The King rises and advances.]

King. My words fly up, my thoughts remain below:

Words without thoughts never to heaven go.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Another room in the same.

Enter QUEEN and POLONIUS.

Pol. He will come straight. Look you lay home to him:

Tell him his pranks have been too broad⁷ to bear with,
And that your grace hath screen'd and stood between

¹ Of vantage, i.e. from a point of vantage.

² Rests, remains. ³ Limed, caught with bird-lime.

⁴ Engag'd, entangled.

⁵ Would, i.e. requires to.

⁶ Flush, full of vigour.

⁷ Broad, unrestrained.

Much heat and him. I'll sounce me even here.
Pray you, be round with him.

Ham. [Within] Mother, mother, mother!

Queen. I'll warrant you;
Fear me not: withdraw, I hear him coming.
[Polonius goes behind the arras.]

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Now, mother, what's the matter?

Queen. Hamlet, thou hast thy father much offended. 10

Ham. Mother, you have my father much
offended.

Queen. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.

Queen. Why, how now, Hamlet!

Ham. What's the matter now?

Queen. Have you forgot me?

Ham. No, by the rood, not so:
You are the queen, your husband's brother's
wife;
And—would it were not so!—you are my mother.

Queen. Nay, then, I'll set those to you that can speak.

Ham. Come, come, and sit you down; you shall not budge;

You go not till I set you up a glass 19
Where you may see the inmost part of you.

Queen. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me? Help, help, ho!

Pol. [Behind] What, ho! help, help, help!

Ham. [Drawing] How now! a rat? Dead, for a ducat, dead!

[Makes a pass through the arras.]

Pol. [Behind] O, I am slain!

[Falls and dies.]

Queen. O me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay, I know not:
Is it the king?

Queen. O, what a rash and bloody deed is this!

Ham. A bloody deed! almost as bad, good mother, 28

As kill a king, and marry with his brother.

Queen. As kill a king!

Ham. Ay, lady, 'twas my word.

[Lifts up the arras, and sees Polonius.]

174

Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!
I took thee for thy better: take thy fortune;
Thou find'st to be too busy in some danger.
Leave wringing of your hands: peace! sit you
down,

And let me wring your heart: for so I shall,
If it be made of penetrable stuff;
If damned custom have not braz'd it so,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense.¹

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tongue

In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an act 40
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty,
Calls virtue hypocrite, takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love
And sets a blister there, makes marriage-vows
As false as dicers' oaths: O, such a deed
As from the body of contraction² plucks
The very soul, and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words: heaven's face doth glow;
Yea, this solidity and compound mass,
With tristful visage, as against the doom, 50
Is thought-sick³ at the act.

Queen. Ay me, what act,
That roars so loud, and thunders in the index?

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on
this,

The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See, what a grace was seated on this brow;
Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station⁴ like the herald Mercury
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination and a form indeed, 60
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man:
This was your husband. Look you now, what follows:

Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?

Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten⁵ on this moor? Ha! have you eyes?

¹ Sense, feeling.

² Contraction, i.e. marriage contract.

³ Thought-sick, sick with anxiety.

⁴ Station, attitude in standing.

⁵ Batten, grow fat.

You cannot call it love; for at your age
 The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
 And waits upon the judgment: and what
 judgment 70
 Would step from this to this? [Sense, sure, you have,
 Else could you not have motion:¹ but sure that sense

Is apoplex'd: for madness would not err,
 Nor sense to ecstasy was ne'er so thrall'd
 But it reserv'd some quantity² of choice,
 To serve in such a difference. What devil was't
 That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman-blind?³
 Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
 Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans⁴ all,
 Or but a sickly part of one true sense 80

Ham. Thou wretched, rash, intruding fool, farewell!
 I took thee for thy better.—(Act iii. 4. 31, 32.)

Could not so mope.]

O shame! where is thy blush? Rebellious hell,
 If thou canst mutine in a matron's bones,
 To flaming youth let virtue be as wax,
 And melt in her own fire: proclaim no shame
 When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,
 Since frost itself as actively doth burn,
 And reason panders will.

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more:
 Thou turn'st mine eyes into ay very soul;
 And there I see such black and grained⁵ spots
 As will not leave their tinct.

[Ham. Nay, but to live
 In the rank sweat of an enseamed⁶ bed, 92
 Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making
 love
 Over the nasty sty,—]

Queen. O, speak to me no more;
 These words, like daggers, enter in mine ears;
 No more, sweet Hamlet!

Ham. A murderer and a villain;
 A slave that is not twentieth part the tithe
 Of your precedent⁷ lord; a vice of kings;⁸
 A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,

¹ Motion, emotion.

² Quantity, portion.

³ Hoodman-blind, blindman's-buff.

⁴ Sans, without

⁵ Grained, dyed in grain.

⁶ Enseamed, defiled.

⁷ Precedent, former.

⁸ A vice of kings, i. e. a buffoon king.

That from a shelf the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket!

Queen. No more! 101

Ham. A king of shreds and patches,—

Enter GHOST.

Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards! What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas, he's mad!

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to chide,

That, laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
The important¹ acting of your dread command?
O, say!

Ghost. Do not forget: this visitation 110

Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.

But, look, amazement on thy mother sits:

O, step between her and her fighting soul:

Conceit² in weakest bodies strongest works:

Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas, how is 't with you,

That you do bend your eye on vacancy,

And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?

Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;

[And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,

Your bedded³ hair, like life in excrements,

Starts up, and stands on end.] O gentle son,

Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper

Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Ham. On him, on him! Look you, how pale he glares!

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,

Would make them capable.⁴ Do not look upon me;

Lest with this piteous action you convert

My stern effects: then what I have to do

Will want true colour; tears perchance for blood. 130

Queen. To whom do you speak this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all that is I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there! look, how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!

Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal! [Exit Ghost.

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy⁵
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep
time, 140

And makes as healthful music: 't is not madness

That I have utter'd: bring me to the test,

And I the matter will re-word; which madness

Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,

Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,

That not your trespass, but my madness speaks:

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,

Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,

Infects unseen. Confess yourself to heaven;

Repent what's past; avoid what is to come;

[And do not spread the compost⁶ on the weeds,

To make them ranker. Forgive me this my

virtue; 152

For in the fatness of these pursy times

Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,

Yea, curb⁷ and woo for leave to do him good.]

Queen. O Hamlet, thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worser part of it,

And live the purer with the other half.

Good night: but go not to my uncle's bed;

Assume a virtue, if you have it not. 160

[That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat,

Of habits devil, is angel yet in this,

That to the use of actions fair and good

He likewise gives a frock or livery,

That aptly is put on. Refrain to-night,

And that shall lend a kind of easiness

To the next abstinence: the next more easy;

For use almost can change the stamp of nature,

And either lay the devil, or throw him out

With wondrous potency. Once more, good

night:] 170

And when you are desirous to be bless'd,

I'll blessing beg of you. For this same lord,

[Pointing to Polonius.

I do repent: but heaven hath pleas'd it so,

¹ Important, urgent.

² Conceit, imagination.

³ Bedded, matted.

⁴ Capable, susceptible.

⁵ Ecstasy, madness.

⁶ Compost, manure.

⁷ Curb (Fr. courber), bow.

To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their scourge and minister.
I will bestow him, and will answer well 176
The death I gave him. So, again, good night.
I must be cruel, only to be kind:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.
[One word more, good lady.

Queen.

What shall I do?

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you do: 181

Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you his mouse;¹

And let him, for a pair of reechy² kisses,

Ham. Save me, and hover o'er me with your wings,
You heavenly guards! What would your gracious figure?—(Act iii 4. 103, 104)

Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers,

Make you to ravel all this matter out,
That I essentially am not in madness,
But mad in craft. 'T were good you let him
know;

For who, that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock,³ from a bat, a gib,⁴
Such dear concernings hide? who would do so?
No, in despite of sense and secrecy, 192
Unpeg the basket on the house's top,

Let the birds fly, and, like the famous ape,
To try conclusions,⁵ in the basket creep,
And break your own neck down.

Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,

And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.

Ham. I must to England; you know that?

Queen. Alack,

I had forgot: 't is so concluded on. 201

Ham. There's letters seal'd: and my two schoolfellows,

¹ Mouse, a term of endearment.

² Reechy, dirty.

³ Paddock, toad.

⁴ Gib, tomcat.

⁵ Conclusions, experiments.

Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
 They bear the mandate; they must sweep my way,
 And marshal me to knavery. Let it work;
 For 't is the sport to have the engineer
 Hoist with his own petar:¹ and 't shall go hard
 But I will delve one yard below their mines,
 And blow them at the moon: O, 't is most sweet

When in one line two crafts directly meet.~
 This man shall set me packing:² 211
 I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room.
 Mother, good night. Indeed this counsellor
 Is now most still, most secret, and most grave,
 Who was in life a foolish prating knave.
 Come, sir, to draw toward an end with you.
 Good night, mother.]
 [Exeunt severally; Hamlet dragging in Polonius.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A room in the castle.

Enter KING, QUEEN, ROSENCRANTZ, and GUILDENSTERN.

King. There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves:
 You must translate: 't is fit we understand
 them.

Where is your son?

Queen. Bestow this place on us a little while.

[To Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, who exeunt.]

Ah, my good lord, what have I seen to-night?

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?

Queen. Mad as the sea and wind, when both contend

Which is the mightier: in his lawless fit,
 Behind the arras hearing something stir,
 Whips out his rapier, cries "A rat, a rat!"
 And, in this brainish³ apprehension, kills 11
 The unseen good old man,

King. O heavy deed!

It had been so with us, had we been there:
 His liberty is full of threats to all,
 To you yourself, to us, to every one.
 Alas, how shall this bloody deed be answer'd?
 It will be laid to us, whose providence
 Should have kept short,⁴ restrain'd and out of haunt,

This mad young man: but so much was our
 love,

We would not understand what was most fit,
 But, like the owner of a foul disease, 21

To keep it from divulging, let it feed 22
 Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone?~
Queen. To draw apart the body he hath kill'd:

O'er whom his very madness, like some ore⁵
 Among a mineral⁶ of metals base,
 Shows itself pure; he weeps for what is done.

King. O Gertrude, come away!
 The sun no sooner shall the mountains touch,
 But we will ship him hence: and this vile deed
 We must, with all our majesty and skill, 31
 Both countenance and excuse. Ho, Guilden-
 stern!

Re-enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Friends both, go join you with some further aid:

Hamlet in madness hath Polonius slain,
 And from his mother's closet hath he dragg'd
 him:

Go seek him out; speak fair, and bring the body
 Into the chapel. I pray you, haste in this.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]
 Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends;
 And let them know, both what we mean to do,
 And what's untimely done: so, haply, slander—
 Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter, 41
 As level as the cannon to his blank,⁷ Transports his poison'd shot—may miss our name,
 And hit the woundless air. O, come away!
 My soul is full of discord and dismay.

[Exeunt.]

¹ Petar, petard.

² Packing, plotting (as well as in its present sense).

³ Brainish, brainsick. ⁴ Kept short, under control.

⁵ Ore, probably = gold.

⁶ Mineral, lode.

⁷ Blank, mark.

SCENE II. The same. Another room in the same.

Enter HAMLET.

Ham. Safely stowed.

Ros. Guil. [Within] Hamlet! Lord Hamlet!

Ham. But soft, what noise? who calls on Hamlet? O, here they come.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ and GUILDENSTERN.

Ros. What have you done, my lord, with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, whereto 'tis kin.

Ros. Tell us where 'tis, that we may take it thence,

And bear it to the chapel.

Ham. Do not believe it.

Ros. Believe what? 10

Ham. That I can keep your counsel, and not mine own. Besides, to be demanded of a sponge! what replication should be made by the son of a king?

Ros. Take you me for a sponge, my lord?

Ham. Ay, sir; that soaks up the king's countenance,¹ his rewards, his authorities. But such officers do the king best service in the end: he keeps them, like an ape doth nuts, in the corner of his jaw; first mouthed, to be last swallowed: when he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponge, you shall be dry again. 23

Ros. I understand you not, my lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: a knavish speech sleeps in a foolish ear.

Ros. My lord, you must tell us where the body is, and go with us to the king.

Ham. The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body. The king is a thing— 30

Guil. A thing, my lord?

Ham. Of nothing: bring me to him. Hide fox, and all after. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Another room in the same.

Enter KING, attended.

King. I have sent to seek him, and to find the body.

How dangerous is it that this man goes loose! Yet must not we put the strong law on him: He's lov'd of the distracted multitude, Who like not in their judgment, but their eyes;

Queen. Behind the arras hearing something stir,
Whips out his rapier, cries "A rat, a rat!"
And, in this brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man — (Act iv. 1. 9-12.)

And where 'tis so, the offender's scourge is weigh'd,
But never the offence. To bear all smooth and even,
This sudden sending him away must seem Deliberate pause: diseases desperate grown
By desperate appliance are reliev'd, 10
Or not at all.

Enter ROSENCRANTZ.

How now! what hath befall'n?

Ros. Where the dead body is bestow'd, my lord,
We cannot get from him. 179

¹ Countenance, favour.

King. But where is he?

Ros. Without, my lord; guarded, to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before us.

Ros. Ho, Guildenstern! bring in my lord.

Enter HAMLET and GUILDENSTERN.

King. Now, Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At supper.

King. At supper! where? 19

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten: a certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. Your worm is your only emperor for diet: we fat all creatures else to fat us, and we fat ourselves for maggots: your fat king and your lean beggar is but variable service,—two dishes, but to one table: that's the end.

King. Alas, alas!

Ham. A man may fish with the worm that hath eat of a king, and eat of the fish that hath fed of that worm. 30

King. What dost thou mean by this?

Ham. Nothing but to show you how a king may go a progress through the guts of a beggar.

King. Where is Polonius?

Ham. In heaven; send thither to see: if your messenger find him not there, seek him i' the other place yourself. But, indeed, if you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

King. Go seek him there. 40

[To some Attendants.]

Ham. He will stay till ye come.

[Exeunt Attendants.]

King. Hamlet, this deed, for thine especial safety,—

Which we do tender, as we dearly grieve For that which thou hast done,—must send thee hence

With fiery quickness: therefore prepare thyself; The bark is ready, and the wind at help, The associates tend,¹ and everything is bent For England.

Ham. For England!

King. Ay, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I see a cherub that sees them. But, come; for England! Farewell, dear mother.

King. Thy loving father, Hamlet. 52

Ham. My mother: father and mother is man and wife; man and wife is one flesh; and so, my mother. Come, for England! [Exit.]

King. Follow him at foot; tempt him with speed aboard;

Delay it not; I'll have him hence to-night:

Away! for everything is seal'd and done That else leans on the affair: pray you, make haste.

[Exeunt Rosencrantz and Guildenstern.]

[And, England, if my love thou hold'st at aught,— 60

As my great power thereof may give thee sense, Since yet thy cicatrice looks raw and red After the Danish sword, and thy free awe, Pays homage to us,—thou mayst not coldly set² Our sovereign process; which imports at full, By letters congruing to that effect, The present death of Hamlet. Do it, England; For like the hectic in my blood he rages, 68 And thou must cure me: till I know 't is done, Howe'er my haps, my joys were ne'er begun.] [Exit.]

SCENE IV. A plain in Denmark.

[Enter FORTINBRAS, a Captain, and Forces, marching.]

For. Go, captain, from me greet the Danish king;

Tell him that by his license Fortinbras Claims the conveyance of a promis'd march Over his kingdom. You know the rendezvous. If that his majesty would ought with us, We shall express our duty in his eye;³ And let him know so.

Cap. I will do 't, my lord.

For. Go softly⁴ on.

[Exeunt Fortinbras and Forces.]

Enter HAMLET, ROSENCRANTZ, GUILDENSTERN, and others.

Ham. Good sir, whose powers are these?

² Coldly set, regard with indifference.

³ In his eye, in his presence.

⁴ Softly, slowly.

¹ Tend, attend, wait.

Cap. They are of Norway, sir. 10

Ham. How purpos'd, sir, I pray you?

Cap. Against some part of Poland.

Ham. Who commands them, sir?

Cap. The nephew to old Norway, Fortinbras.

Ham. Goes it against the main¹ of Poland, sir,
Or for some frontier?

Cap. Truly to speak, and with no addition,
We go to gain a little patch of ground
That hath in it no profit but the name.

To pay five ducats, five, I would not farm it;
Nor will it yield to Norway or the Pole 21
A ranker² rate, should it be sold in fee.

Ham. Why, then, the Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, it is already garrison'd.

Ham. Two thousand souls and twenty thousand ducats

Will not debate the question of this straw:
This is the imposthume³ of much wealth and
peace,

That inward breaks, and shows no cause without
Why the man dies. I humbly thank you, sir.

Cap. God be wi' you, sir. [Exit.

Ros. Will 't please you go, my lord?

Ham. I'll be with you straight. Go a little before. [Exeunt all except Hamlet.

How all occasions do inform against me, 32
And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
If his chief good and market of his time

Be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more.
Sure, he that made us with such large discourse,⁴
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason

To fust⁵ in us unus'd. Now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple 40
Of thinking too precisely on the event,—

A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And ever three parts coward,—I do not know
Why yet I live to say "This thing's to do;"
Sith⁶ I have cause, and will, and strength, and means

To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me:
Witness this army, of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,

Whose spirit, with divine ambition puff'd,
Makes mouths at the invisible event, 50
Exposing what is mortal and unsure
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great
Is not to stir without great argument,
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw
When honour's at the stake. How stand I,
then,

That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? while, to my shame, I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That for a fantasy and trick of fame 61
Go to their graves like beds, fight for a plot
Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough and continent⁷
To hide the slain? O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!

[Exit.

SCENE V. Elsinore. A room in the castle.

Enter QUEEN and HORATIO.

Queen. I will not speak with her.

Hor. She is importunate, indeed distract;
Her mood will needs be pitied.

Queen. [What would she have?

Hor. She speaks much of her father; says she hears

There's tricks i' the world; and hems, and beats her heart;

Spurns enviously⁸ at straws; speaks things
in doubt,

That carry but half sense: her speech is nothing,

Yet the unshaped use of it doth move

The hearers to collection;⁹ they aim at it,
And botch the words up fit to their own thoughts; 10

Which, as her winks and nods and gestures yield them,

Indeed would make one think there might be thought,

Though nothing sure, yet much unhappily.

Queen. [Aside] 'T were good she were spoken with; for she may strew

Dangerous conjectures in ill-breeding minds.]

¹ The main, the chief power.

² Ranker, richer.

³ Imposthume, abscess.

⁴ Discourse, reasoning faculty.

⁵ Fust, grow stale.

⁶ Sith, since.

⁷ Continent, i.e. that which contains.

⁸ Enviously, angrily.

⁹ Collection, inference.

Let her come in. [Exit Horatio.]
 To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
 Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss:¹
 So full of artless jealousy² is guilt,
 It spills itself in fearing to be spilt. 20

Re-enter HORATIO, with OPHELIA.

Oph. Where is the beauteous majesty of Denmark?

Queen. How now, Ophelia!

Oph. [Sings]
 How should I your true love know
 From another one?
 By his cockle hat³ and staff,
 And his sandal shoon.

Queen. Alas, sweet lady, what imports this song?

Oph. Say you? nay, pray you, mark.

[Sings] He is dead and gone, lady,
 He is dead and gone;
 At his head a grass-green turf,
 At his heels a stone. 30

Queen. Nay, but, Ophelia,—

Oph. Pray you, mark.

[Sings] White his shroud as the mountain snow,

Enter KING.

Queen. Alas, look here, my lord.

Oph. [Sings]
 Larded⁴ with sweet flowers;
 Which bewept to the grave did go
 With true-love showers.

King. How do you, pretty lady? 40

Oph. Well, God 'ild you!⁵ They say the owl was a baker's daughter. Lord, we know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your table!

King. Conceit upon her father.

Oph. Pray you, let's have no words of this; but when they ask you what it means, say you this:

[Sings] To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
 All in the morning betime,
 And I a maid at your window, 50
 To be your Valentine.
*[Then up he rose, and donn'd his clothes,
 And dupp'd⁶ the chamber-door;*

Let in the maid, that out a maid
 Never departed more.]

King. Pretty Ophelia!

Oph. Indeed, la, without an oath, I'll make an end on't:

[Sings] By Gis⁷ and by Saint Charity,
 Alack, and fie for shame! 60
 Young men will do 't, if they come to 't;
 By cock,⁸ they are to blame.
 Quoth she, before you tumbled me,
 You promis'd me to wed.
 So would I ha' done, by yonder sun,
 An thou hadst not come to my bed.]

King. How long hath she been thus? 67

Oph. I hope all will be well. We must be patient: but I cannot choose but weep, to think they should lay him i' the cold ground. My brother shall know of it: and so I thank you for your good counsel. Come, my coach! Good night, ladies; good night, sweet ladies; good night, good night. [Exit.]

King. Follow her close; give her good watch, I pray you. [Exit Horatio.]
 O, this is⁹ the poison of deep grief; it springs
 All from her father's death. O Gertrude,
 Gertrude,

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
 But in battalions! [First, her father slain:]
 Next, your son gone; and he most violent author 80

Of his own just remove: the people muddied,
 Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers,

For good Polonius' death; and we have done
 but greenly,

In hugger-mugger¹⁰ to inter him: poor
 Ophelia

Divided from herself and her fair judgment,
 Without the which we are pictures, or mere beasts:

Last, and as much containing as all these,
 Her brother is in secret come from France,
 Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds,
 And wants not buzzers to infect his ear 90
 With pestilent speeches of his father's death;
 Wherein necessity, of matter beggar'd,
 Will nothing stick our person to arraign
 In ear and ear. O my dear Gertrude, this,

¹ Amis, misfortune.

² Jealousy, suspicion.

³ Cockle hat, badge of pilgrims bound for places of devotion beyond sea.

⁴ Larded, garnished.

⁵ God 'ild you, God yield you (i.e. God bless you).

⁶ Dupp'd, opened (dup=do up, i.e. lift the latch).

⁷ Gis, i.e. Jesus.

⁸ Cock, a vulgarism for God.

⁹ This is, pronounce this.

¹⁰ In hugger-mugger, secretly.

{ Like to a murdering-piece,¹ in many places { Gives me superfluous death.] [A noise within.
Queen. Alack, what noise is this?
King. Where are my Switzers? Let them guard the door.

Enter a Gentleman.

What is the matter?

Gent. Save yourself, my lord:
 The ocean, overpeering of his list,² 99
 Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
 Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,³ O'erbears your officers. The rabble call him
 lord;

{ [And, as the world were now but to begin,
 { Antiquity forgot, custom not known,
 { The ratifiers and props of every word,]
 They cry, "Choose we; Laertes shall be king!"
 Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds,

"Laertes shall be king, Laertes king!"

Queen. How cheerfully on the false trail they cry! 109

O, this is counter, you false Danish dogs!

King. The doors are broke. [Noise within.

Enter LAERTES, armed; Danes following.

Laer. Where is this king? Sirs, stand you all without.

Danes. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you, give me leave.

Danes. We will, we will.

[They retire without the door.

Laer. I thank you: keep the door. O thou vile king,

Give me my father!

[Queen. Calmly, good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood that's calm proclaims me bastard;

{ Cries cuckold to my father; brands the harlot
 { Even here, between the chaste unsmirched
 { brows 119

{ Of my true mother.]

King. What's the cause, Laertes,

That thy rebellion looks so giant-like?

Let him go, Gertrude; do not fear our person:
 There's such divinity doth hedge a king,

That treason can but peep to what it would.
 Acts little of his will. Tell me, Laertes, Why thou art thus incens'd: let him go, Gertrude:

Speak, man.

Laer. Where is my father?

King. Dead.

Queen. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? I'll not be juggled with: 130

To hell, allegiance! [vows, to the blackest devil!]
 Conscience and grace, to the profoundest pit!
 I dare damnation: to this point I stand,—
 That both the worlds I give to negligence,
 Let come what comes; only I'll be reveng'd
 Most thoroughly for my father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My will, not all the world:

And for my means, I'll husband them so well,
 They shall go far with little.

King. Good Laertes,

[If you desire to know the certainty 140
 Of your dear father's death, is't writ in your
 revenge,

That, swoopstake, you will draw both friend
 and foe,

Winner and loser?

Laer. None but his enemies.

King. Will you know them, then?

Laer. To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms,

And, like the kind life-rendering pelican
 Repast them with my blood.

King. Why, now you speak
 Like a good child and a true gentleman.]

That I am guiltless of your father's death,
 And am most sensibly in grief for it, 150

It shall as level to your judgment pierce
 As day does to your eye.

Danes. [Within] Let her come in.

Laer. How now! what noise is that?

Re-enter OPHELIA.

O heat, dry up my brains! tears seven-times
 salt,

Burn out the sense and virtue of mine eye!
 By heaven, thy madness shall be paid by weight,
 Till our scale turn the beam. O rose of May!
 Dear maid, kind sister, sweet Ophelia!

¹ A murdering-piece, a cannon loaded with case-shot.

² List, boundary.

³ Head, armed force.

O heavens! is't possible a young maid's wits
Should be as mortal as an old man's life? 160
Nature is fine¹ in love; and, where 'tis fine,
It sends some precious instance of itself
After the thing it loves.

Oph. [Sings]

They bore him barefaced on the bier;
Hey non nonny, nonny, hey nonny;
And in his grave rain'd many a tear;—

Fare you well, my dove!

Laer. Hadst thou thy wits, and didst persuade revenge,

It could not move thus.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance.—(Act iv. 5. 175, 176.)

Oph. You must sing, "Down a-down, an you call him a-down-a." O, how the wheel becomes it! It is the false steward, that stole his master's daughter. 173

Laer. This nothing's more than matter.

Oph. There's rosemary, that's for remembrance; pray you, love, remember: and there is pansies,² that's for thoughts.

Laer. A document³ in madness; thoughts and remembrance fitted. 179

Oph. There's fennel for you, and columbines: there's rue for you; and here's some for me: we may call it herb of grace o' Sundays: O, you must wear your rue with a difference. There's a daisy: I would give you some violets, but they withered all when my father died:—they say he made a good end,— [Sings] For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.

Laer. Thought and affliction, passion, hell itself,

She turns to favour and to prettiness.

Oph. [Sings]

And will he not come again?
And will he not come again?

190

¹ Fine, delicate, tender.

² Pansies, Fr. pensées, thoughts.

³ Document, instruction.

192

No, no, he is dead,
Go to thy death-bed,
He never will come again.
His beard was as white as snow,
All flaxen was his poll:
He is gone, he is gone,
And we cast away moan:
God ha' mercy on his soul!

And of all Christian souls, I pray God.—God be wi' ye. [Exit.

Laer. Do you see this, O God? 201

King. Laertes, I must commune with your
grief,

Or you deny me right. Go but apart,
Make choice of whom your wisest friends you
will,

And they shall hear and judge 'twixt you and
me:

If by direct or by collateral hand
They find us touch'd, we will our kingdom give,
Our crown, our life, and all that we call ours,
To you in satisfaction; but if not, 209
Be you content to lend your patience to us,
And we shall jointly labour with your soul
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be so;
His means of death, his obscure burial,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rite nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from heaven to earth,

That I must call't in question.

King. So you shall;
And where the offence is let the great axe fall.
I pray you, go with me. [Exeunt.

[SCENE VI. The same. Another room in the same.

Enter HORATIO and a Servant.

Hor. What are they that would speak with
me?

Serv. Sea-faring men, sir: they say they have letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in. [Exit Servant.
I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Sailors.

First Sail. God bless you, sir.

Hor. Let him bless thee too.

First Sail. He shall, sir. an't please him.
There's a letter for you, sir,—it comes from the ambassador that was bound for England,
—if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is. 11

Hor. [Reads] "Horatio, when thou shalt have overlooked this, give these fellows some means¹ to the king: they have letters for him. Ere we were two days old at sea, a pirate of very warlike appointment gave us chase. Finding ourselves too slow of sail, we put on a compelled valour; and in the grapple I boarded them: on the instant they got clear of our ship; so I alone became their prisoner. They have dealt with me like thieves of mercy: but they knew what they did; I am to do a good turn for them.
Let the king have the letters I have sent; and repair thou to me with as much haste as thou wouldst fly death. I have words to speak in thine ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the bore of the matter. These good fellows will bring thee where I am. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern hold their course for England: of them I have much to tell thee. Farewell. 30

"He that thou knowest thine, HAMLET."

Come, I will make you way for these your letters;

And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The same. Another room in the same.

Enter KING and LAERTES.

King. Now must your conscience my acquit-
tance seal,

And you must put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing ear,
That he which bath your noble father slain
Pursued my life.

Laer. It well appears: [but tell me]
Why you proceeded not against these feats,
So crimeful and so capital in nature,
As by your safety, wisdom, all things else,
You mainly were stirr'd up.

King. O, for two special reasons,
Which may to you, perhaps, seem much un-snew'd, 10
And yet to me they are strong. The queen his mother

¹ Means, i.e. means of access.

Lives almost by his looks; and for myself,—
 My virtue or my plague, be it either which,— She's so conjunctive¹ to my life and soul,
 That, as the star moves not but in his sphere,
 I could not but by her. The other motive,
 Why to a public count I might not go,
 Is the great love the general gender² bear
 him;

Who, dipping all his faults in their affection,
 Would, like the spring that turneth wood to stone, 20

Convert his gyves to graces; so that my arrows,
 Too slightly timber'd for so loud a wind,
 Would have reverted to my bow again,
 And not where I had aim'd them.]

Laer. And so have I a noble father lost;
 A sister driven into desperate terms,
 Whose worth, if praises may go back again,
 Stood challenger on mount of all the age
 For her perfections: but my revenge will come.

King. Break not your sleeps for that: you must not think 30

That we are made of stuff so flat and dull
 That we can let our beard be shook with danger

And think it pastime. You shortly shall hear
 more:

I lov'd your father, and we love ourselves;
 And that, I hope, will teach you to imagine—

Enter a Messenger.

How now! what news?

Mess. Letters, my lord, from Hamlet:
 This to your majesty; this to the queen.

King. From Hamlet! who brought them?

Mess. Sailors, my lord, they say; I saw them
 not:

They were given me by Claudio; he receiv'd
 them 40

Of him that brought them.

King. Laertes, you shall hear them.
 Leave us. [Exit Messenger.]

[Reads] "High and mighty, You shall know I am set naked on your kingdom. To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes: when I shall, first asking your pardon thereunto, recount the occasion of my sudden and more strange return."

"HAMLET."

What should this mean? Are all the rest come back? 50

Or is it some abuse,³ and no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlet's character. "Naked!"

And in a postscript here, he says, "alone."

Can you advise me?

Laer. I'm lost in it, my lord. But let him
 come;

It warms the very sickness in my heart,
 That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
 "Thus didst thou."

King. If it be so, Laertes,—
 As how should it be so? how otherwise?—
 Will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. Ay, my lord; 60
 So you will not o'errule me to a peace.

King. To thine own peace. If he be now
 return'd,

As checking at his voyage, and that he means
 No more to undertake it, I will work him

To an exploit, now ripe in my device,
 Under the which he shall not choose but fall:

And for his death no wind of blame shall breathe;

But even his mother shall uncharge⁴ the practice,⁵

And call it accident.

Laer. My lord, I will be rul'd;
 The rather, if you could devise it so, 70
 That I might be the organ.

King. It falls right.

You have been talk'd of since your travel
 much,

And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
 Wherein, they say, you shine: your sum of parts
 Did not together pluck such envy from him,
 As did that one; and that, in my regard,
 Of the unworthiest siege.⁶

Laer. What part is that, my lord?

King. A very riband in the cap of youth,
 Yet needful too; for youth no less becomes
 The light and careless livery that it wears 80
 Than settled age his sables and his weeds,
 Importing health and graveness. Two months since,

³ Abuse, deception.

⁴ Uncharge, make no accusation against.

⁵ Practice, stratagem.

⁶ Unworthiest siege, lowest rank.

¹ Conjunctive, closely united.

² General gender, common race.

Here was a gentleman of Normandy:— ss
 [I have seen myself, and serv'd against, the French,
 And they can well on horseback: but this gallant
 Had witchcraft in't; he grew unto his seat;
 And to such wondrous doing brought his horse,
 As had he been incorp'd¹ and demi-natur'd
 With the brave beast: so far he topp'd² my thought,
 That I, in forgery of shapes and tricks, 90
 Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't?

King. A Norman.

Laer. Upon my life, Lamond.

King. The very same.

Laer. I know him well: he is the brooch,³
 indeed,
 And gem of all the nation.]

King. He made confession of you;
 And gave you such a masterly report,
 For art and exercise in your defence,
 And for your rapier most especially,
 That he cried out, 't would be a sight indeed,
 If one could match you: the scrimers⁴ of their nation, 101
 He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
 If you oppos'd them. Sir, this report of his
 Did Hamlet so envenom with his envy
 That he could nothing do but wish and beg
 Your sudden coming o'er, to play with him.
 Now, out of this—

Laer. What out of this, my lord?

King. Laertes, was your father dear to you?
 Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
 A face without a heart?

Laer. Why ask you this?

[King. Not that I think you did not love your father; 111

But that I know love is begun by time,
 And that I see, in passages of proof,
 Time qualifies the spark and fire of it.
 There lives within the very flame of love
 A kind of wick or snuff that will abate it;
 And nothing is at a like goodness still,
 For goodness, growing to a pluriy,⁵

Dies in his own too-much: that we would do,
 We should do when we would; for this
 "would" changes, 120

And hath abatements and delays as many
 As there are tongues, are hands, are accidents;
 And then this "should" is like a spendthrift
 sigh,
 That hurts by easing. But, to the quick o'
 the ulcer:

Hamlet comes back:] what would you undertake,

To show yourself your father's son indeed
 More than in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i' the church.

King. No place, indeed, should murder sanctuarize;⁶

Revenge should have no bounds. But, good Laertes,

Will you do this, keep close within your chamber. 130

Hamlet return'd shall know you are come home:

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence
 And set a double varnish on the fame
 The Frenchman gave you; bring you, in fine
 together

And wager on your heads: he, being remiss,⁷
 Most generous, and free from all contriving,
 Will not peruse the foils; so that, with ease,
 Or with a little shuffling, you may choose
 A sword, unbated,⁸ and, in a pass of practice,⁹
 Require him for your father.

Laer. I will do't: 140

And for that purpose I'll anoint my sword.
 I bought an unction of a mountebank,¹⁰
 So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
 Where it draws blood no cataplasm¹¹ so rare,
 Collected from all simples that have virtue Under the moon, can save the thing from
 death

That is but scratch'd withal: I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
 It may be death.

King. Let's further think of this;

¹ Incorp's'd, incorporate. ² Topp'd, surpassed.

³ Brooch, an ornamental buckle worn in the hat.

⁴ Scrimers (Fr. escrimeurs), fencers.

⁵ Pluriy, plethora.

⁶ Sanctuarize, afford sanctuary to; probably a self-coined verb. ⁷ Remiss, careless.

⁸ Unbated, unblunted.

⁹ A pass of practice, a treacherous thrust.

¹⁰ Mountebank, quack-doctor.

¹¹ Cataplasm, salve.

[Weigh what convenience both of time and means 150
May fit us to our shape: if this should fail,
And that our drift look through our bad performance,
'T were better not assay'd: therefore this project
Should have a back or second, that might hold,

If this should blast in proof.¹ Soft! let me
see:]
We'll make a solemn wager on your cunnings;
I ha't:
When in your motion you are hot and dry,—
As make your bouts more violent to that end,—
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd
him 160
A chalice for the nonce; whereon but sipping,

Queen. Her clothes spread wide,
And mermaid-like awhile they bore her up.—(Act iv. 7. 176, 177.)

If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,²
Our purpose may hold there. But stay, what noise?

Enter QUEEN.

How now, sweet queen!

Queen. One woe doth tread upon another's heel,

So fast they follow: your sister's drown'd,
Laertes.

Laer. Drown'd! O, where?

Queen. There is a willow grows aslant a brook,

That shows his hoarleaves in the glassy stream;
There with fantastic garlands did she come
Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples, 170

[That liberal³ shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call
them:]

There, on the pendent boughs her coronet weeds
Clambering to hang, an envious sliver⁴ broke;
When down her weedy trophies and herself Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide,

And mermaid-like awhile they bore her up;
Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable⁵ of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indu'd 180
Unto that element: but long it could not be Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

¹ Blast in proof, i.e. in proving, like badly-tempered cannon.

² Struck, i.e. thrust.

³ Liberal, free-spoken.

⁴ Sliver, a branch stripped from the tree.

⁵ Incapable, insensible.

Laer. Alas, then, she is drown'd?
Queen. Drown'd, drown'd. 185
Laer. Too much of water hast thou, poor
 Ophelia,
 And therefore I forbid my tears: but yet
 It is our trick;¹ nature her custom holds,
 Let shame say what it will: when these are gone,

The woman will be out. Adieu, my lord: 190
 I have a speech of fire that fain would blaze,
 But that this folly douts it.² [Exit.
King. Let's follow, Gertrude:
 How much I had to do to calm his rage!
 Now fear I this will give it start again;
 Therefore let's follow. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I. Elsinore. A churchyard.

Enter two Clowns, with spades, &c.

First Clo. Is she to be buried in Christian burial that wilfully seeks her own salvation?

Sec. Clo. I tell thee she is; and therefore make her grave straight;³ the crowner hath sat on her, and finds it Christian burial.

First Clo. How can that be, unless she drowned herself in her own defence?

Sec. Clo. Why, 'tis found so.

First Clo. It must be se offendendo;⁴ it cannot be else. For here lies the point: if I drown myself wittingly, it argues an act: and an act hath three branches; it is, to act, to do, to perform: argal,⁵ she drowned herself wittingly. 18

Sec. Clo. Nay, but hear you, Goodman deliver,—

First Clo. Give me leave. Here lies the water; good: here stands the man; good: if the man go to this water and drown himself, it is, will he, nill he, he goes; mark you that; but if the water come to him and drown him, he drowns not himself: argal, he that is not guilty of his own death shortens not his own life.

Sec. Clo. But is this law? 23

First Clo. Ay, marry, is 't; crowner's quest law.

Sec. Clo. Will you ha' the truth on't? If this had not been a gentlewoman, she should have been buried out of Christian burial.

First Clo. Why, there thou sayst: and the more pity that great folk should have countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more than their even Christian.⁶ Come, my spade. There is no ancient gentlemen but gardeners, ditchers, and grave-makers: they hold up⁷ Adam's profession.

Sec. Clo. Was he a gentleman?

First Clo. He was the first that ever bore arms.

Sec. Clo. Why, he had none. 39

First Clo. What, art a heathen? How dost thou understand the Scripture? The Scripture says, Adam digged: could he dig without arms? I'll put another question to thee: if thou answerest me not to the purpose, confess thyself—

Sec. Clo. Go to.

First Clo. What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?

Sec. Clo. The gallows-maker; for that frame outlives a thousand tenants. 50

First Clo. I like thy wit well, in good faith: the gallows does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that do ill: now, thou dost ill to say the gallows is built stronger than the church: argal, the gallows may do well to thee. To't again, come.

Sec. Clo. "Who builds stronger than a mason, a shipwright, or a carpenter?" ✓

First Clo. Ay, tell me that, and unyoke. 60

Sec. Clo. Marry, now I can tell.

First Clo. To't.

Sec. Clo. Mass, I cannot tell.

¹ Trick, habit.

² Douts it, puts it out.

³ Straight, straightway.

⁴ Se offendendo, i.e. se defendendo, a finding of the jury in justifiable homicide.

⁵ Argal, the Clown's form of ergo.

⁶ Even Christian, fellow Christian. ⁷ Hold up, maintain.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO, at some distance.

First Clo. Cudgel thy brains no more about it, for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating; and when you are asked this question next, say "a grave-maker:" the houses that he makes last till doomsday. Go, get thee to Yaughan; fetch me a stoop of liquor.

[Exit Sec. Clown.]

[He digs, and sings.]

In youth when I did love, did love,
Methought it was very sweet, 70
To contract, O, the time, for, ah, my behove,
O, methought there was nothing meet.

Ham. Has this fellow no feeling of his business, that he sings at grave-making?

Hor. Custom hath made it in him a property of easiness.

Ham. 'T is e'en so: the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense.

First Clo. [Sings]

But age, with his stealing steps,
Hath claw'd me in his clutch, 80
And hath shipped me intil the land,
As if I had never been such.

[Throws up a skull.]

Ham. That skull had a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the knave jowls it to the ground, as if it were Cain's jaw-bone, that did the first murder! It might be the pate of a politician,¹ which this ass now o'er-reaches; one that would circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my lord. 89

[Ham. Or of a courtier, which could say "Good morrow, sweet lord! How dost thou, good lord?" This might be my lord such-a-one, that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it; might it not?

Hor. Ay, my lord.

Ham. Why, e'en so: and now my Lady Worm's; chapless, and knocked about the mazzard² with a sexton's spade: here's fine revolution, an we had the trick to see 't.] Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with 'em? mine ache to think on 't. 101

First Clo. [Sings]

A pickaxe, and a spade, a spade,
For and a shrouding-sheet:

O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet.

[Throws up another skull.]

Ham. There's another: why may not that be the skull of a lawyer? Where be his quiddits³ now, his quillets,⁴ his cases, his tenures, and his tricks? why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action of battery? [Hum!] This fellow might be in 's time a great buyer of land, with his statutes,⁵ his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries: is this the fine of his fines, and the recovery of his recoveries, to have his fine pate full of fine dirt? will his vouchers vouch him no more of his purchases, and double ones too, than the length and breadth of a pair of indentures? The very conveyances of his lands will hardly lie in this box; and must the inheritor himself have no more, ha? 121

Hor. Not a jot more, my lord.

Ham. Is not parchment made of sheep-skins?

Hor. Ay, my lord, and of calf-skins too.

Ham. They are sheep and calves which seek out assurance⁶ in that.] I will speak to this fellow. Whose grave's this, sirrah?

First Clo. Mine, sir.

[Sings] O, a pit of clay for to be made
For such a guest is meet. 130

Ham. I think it be thine, indeed; for thou liest in 't.

First Clo. You lie out on 't, sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part, I do not lie in 't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lie in 't, to be in 't, and say it is thine: 't is for the dead, not for the quick; therefore thou liest.

First Clo. 'T is a quick lie, sir; 't will away again, from me to you. 140

Ham. What man dost thou dig it for?

First Clo. For no man, sir.

Ham. What woman, then?

First Clo. For none, neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in 't?

³ Quiddits, equivocations. ⁴ Quillets, nice distinctions.
⁵ Statutes, mortgages.

⁶ Assurance, a play on the legal meaning, a conveyance of lands or tenements by deed.

¹ Politician, schemer.

² Mazzard, skull.

First Clo. One that was a woman, sir; but, rest her soul, she's dead. 147

Ham. How absolute¹ the knave is! we must speak by the card, or equivocation will undo us. By the Lord, Horatio, these three years I have taken note of it; the age is grown so picked,² that the toe of the peasant comes so near the heel of the courtier, he galls his kibe.³ How long hast thou been a grave-maker?

First Clo. Of all the days i' the year, I came to 't that day that our last king Hamlet o'er-came Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that since? 158

First Clo. Cannot you tell that? every fool can tell that: it was the very day that young

Ham. I knew him, Horatio: a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy.—(Act v. 1. 203, 204.)

Hamlet was born; he that is mad, and sent into England. 162

Ham. Ay, marry, why was he sent into England?

First Clo. Why, because he was mad: he shall recover his wits there; or, if he do not, it's no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

First Clo. 'T will not be seen in him there; there the men are as mad as he. 170

Ham. How came he mad?

First Clo. Very strangely, they say.

Ham. How strangely?

First Clo. Faith, e'en with losing his wits.

Ham. Upon what ground?

First Clo. Why, here in Denmark: I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.

Ham. How long will a man lie i' the earth ere he rot? 179

First Clo. I' faith, if he be not rotten before he die,—[as we have many pocky corpses now—] a-days, that will scarce hold the laying in,—} he will last you some eight year or nine year: a tanner will last you nine year.

Ham. Why he more than another?

First Clo. Why, sir, his hide is so tanned

¹ Absolute, positive.

² Picked, smart.

³ Kibe, chilblain.

with his trade that he will keep out water a great while; and your water is a sore decayer of your [whoreson] dead body. Here's a skull now; this skull has lain in the earth three-and-twenty years.

Ham. Whose was it?

First Clo. A whoreson mad fellow's it was: whose do you think it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

First Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad rogue! 'a poured a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. This same skull, sir, was Yorick's skull, the king's jester.

Ham. This?

First Clo. E'en that.

Ham. Let me see. [Takes the skull.] Alas, poor Yorick! I knew him, Horatio: a fellow of infinite jest, of most excellent fancy: he hath borne me on his back a thousand times; and now, how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Here hung those lips that I have kissed I know not how oft. Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table on a roar? Not one now, to mock your own grinning? quite chap-fallen? Now get you to my lady's chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thick, to this favour¹ she must come; make her laugh at that. Prithee, Horatio, tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that, my lord?

Ham. Dost thou think Alexander looked o' this fashion i' the earth?

Hor. E'en so.

Ham. And smelt so? pah!

[Puts down the skull.]

Hor. E'en so, my lord.

Ham. To what base uses we may return, Horatio! Why may not imagination trace the noble dust of Alexander till he find it stopping a bung-hole?

Hor. 'T were to consider too curiously, to consider so.

Ham. No, faith, not a jot; but to follow him thither with modesty enough, and likelihood to lead it: as thus: Alexander died, Alexander was buried, Alexander returneth into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam whereto he was converted might they not stop a beer-barrel? Imperious² Cæsar, dead and turn'd to clay, Might stop a hole to keep the wind away: O, that that earth which kept the world in awe Should patch a wall to expel the winter's flaw!³ But soft! but soft! aside: here comes the king,

Enter Priests, &c. in procession; the Corpse of OPHELIA, LAERTES and Mourners following; KING, QUEEN, their trains, &c.

The queen, the courtiers: who is that they follow?

And with such maimed rites? This doth betoken

The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Fordo its own life: 't was of some estate.
Couch⁴ we awhile, and mark.

[Retiring with Horatio.]

Laer. What ceremony else?

Ham. That is Laertes, A very noble youth: mark.

Laer. What ceremony else?

First Priest. Her obsequies have been as far enlarged

As we have warranty: her death was doubtful; And, but that great command o'ersways the order,

She should in ground unsanctified have lodg'd Till the last trumpet; for charitable prayers, Shards, flints, and pebbles, should be thrown on her:

Yet here she is allow'd her virgin crants,⁵ Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home

Of bell and burial.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

First Priest. No more be done: We should profane the service of the dead To sing a requiem, and such rest to her As to peace-parted souls.

Laer. Lay her i' the earth; And from her fair and unpolluted flesh May violets spring! I tell thee, churlish priest, A ministering angel shall my sister be, When thou liest howling.

Ham. What, the fair Ophelia!

¹ Favour, complexion.

² Imperious, imperial.

⁴ Couch, lie close.

³ Flaw, blast of wind.

⁵ Crants, garland.

Queen. Sweets to the sweet; farewell! 266

[Scattering flowers.]

I hop'd thou shouldst have been my Hamlet's wife;

I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid,

And not have strew'd thy grave.

Laer.

O, treble woes

Fall ten times treble on that cursed head 270

Whose wicked deed thy most ingenious¹ sense

Depriv'd thee of! Hold off the earth awhile,

Till I have caught her once more in mine arms:

[Leaps into the grave.]

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,

Ham. What is he whose grief
Bears such an emphasis?—(Act v 1 277, 278.)

Till of this flat a mountain you have made
T' o'ertop old Pelion or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Ham. [Advancing] What is he whose grief Bears such an emphasis? whose phrase of sorrow

Cónjures the wandering stars and makes them
stand 279

Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane. [Leaps into the grave.]

Laer. The devil take thy soul!

[Grappling with him.]

Ham. Thou pray'st not well.

I prithee, take thy fingers from my throat;
For, though I am not splenitive and rash,

Yet have I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wisdom fear: hold off thy hand!

King. Pluck them asunder.

Queen.

Hamlet, Hamlet!

All. Gentlemen,—

Hor.

Good my lord, be quiet.

[The Attendants part them, and they come out of the grave.]

Ham. Why, I will fight with him upon this theme

Until my eyelids will no longer wag. 290

Queen. O my son, what theme?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia: forty thousand brothers

Could not, with all their quantity of love,
Make up my sum. What wilt thou do for her?

King. O, he is mad, Laertes.

¹ Ingenious, keen in apprehension.

Queen. For love of God, forbear him.

Ham. 'S wounds, show me what thou 'lt do:
Woo't weep? woo't fight? woo't fast? woo't tear thyself?

Woo't drink up eisel? eat a crocodile?
I'll do't. Dost thou come here to whine? 300
To outface me with leaping in her grave?
Be buried quick with her, and so will I:
And if thou prate of mountains, let them throw
Millions of acres on us, till our ground,
Singeing his pate against the burning zone,
Make Ossa like a wart! Nay, an thou 'lt mouth,
I'll rant as well as thou.

Queen. This is mere madness:
And thus awhile the fit will work on him;
Anon, as patient as the female dove 300
When that her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Hear you, sir;
What is the reason that you use me thus?
I lov'd you ever: but it is no matter;
Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, and dog will have his day.

[Exit.

King. I pray you, good Horatio, wait upon him.— [Exit Horatio.

[To Laertes] Strengthen your patience in our last night's speech;

We'll put the matter to the present push.¹
Good Gertrude, set some watch over your son.
This grave shall have a living monument:
An hour of quiet shortly shall we see; 321
Till then, in patience our proceeding be.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The same. A hall in the castle.

Enter HAMLET and HORATIO:

Ham. So much for this, sir: now shall you see the other;

You do remember all the circumstance?

Hor. Remember it, my lord!

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,

That would not let me sleep: methought I lay
Worse than the mutines² in the bilboes.³
Rashly,⁴—

And prais'd be rashness for it, let us know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serves us well
When our deep plots do fail; and that should teach us

There's a divinity that shapes our ends, 10
Rough-hew them how we will,— Hor. That is most certain

Ham. Up from my cabin,
My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark
Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire,
Finger'd their packet, and, in fine, withdrew
To mine own room again: making so bold,
My fears forgetting manners, to unseal
Their grand commission; where I found,
Horatio,—

O royal knavery!—an exact command,— 10
Larded with many several sorts of reasons,
Importing Denmark's health, and England's
too,

With, ho! such bugs⁵ and goblins in my life,—
That, on the supervise, no leisure bated,⁶
No, not to stay the grinding of the axe,
My head should be struck off.

Hor. Is't possible?

Ham. Here's the commission: read it at more leisure.

But wilt thou hear me how I did proceed?

Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus be-netted round with villanies,— 29

Ere I could make a prologue to my brains,
They had begun the play,—I sat me down;
Devis'd a new commission; wrote it fair:
I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning; but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service: wilt thou know
Th' effect of what I wrote?

Hor. Ay, good my lord.

Ham. An earnest conjuration from the
king,—
As England was his faithful tributary,
As love between them like the palm might flourish, 40
As peace should still her wheaten garland wear
And stand a comma 'tween their amities,
And many such-like "as'es" of great charge,—

¹ Present push, instant test.

² Mutinas, mutineers.

³ Bilboes, fetters used on board ship.

⁴ Rashly, hastily.

⁵ Bugs, bugbears.

⁶ No leisure bated, i.e. without any abatement or intermission of time.

That, on the view and knowing of these contents,
Without debatement further, more or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death,
Not shriving-time allow'd.

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordinant.

I had my father's signet in my purse, 49
Which was the model of that Danish seal;
Folded the writ up in the form of the other;
Subscrib'd it; gave't the impression; plac'd it safely,

The changeling never known. Now, the next day

Was our sea-fight; and what to this was sequent
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guildenstern and Rosencrantz go
to't.

Ham. Why, man, they did make love to this employment;

They are not near my conscience; their defeat
Doth by their own insinuation grow: 50
'Tis dangerous when the baser nature comes
Between the pass and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites.¹

Hor. Why, what a king is this!

[Ham. Does it not, thinks't thee, stand me now upon?²—

He that hath kill'd my king, and whor'd my mother;

Popp'd in between the election and my hopes;
Thrown out his angle for my proper life,

And with such cozenage,—is't not perfect
conscience

To quit him with this arm? and is't not to be damn'd

To let this canker of our nature come

In³ further evil?]

Hor. It must be shortly known to him from England

What is the issue of the business there.

Ham. It will be short: the interim is mine;
And a man's life's no more than to say "one."
But I am very sorry, good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot myself;
For, by the image of my cause, I see

The portraiture of his: I'll court his favours:
But, sure, the bravery⁴ of his grief did put me into a towering passion.

Hor. Peace! who comes here?

Enter OSRIC.

Osr. Your lordship is right welcome back to Denmark. 82

Ham. I humbly thank you, sir. [Aside to Horatio] Dost know this water-fly?

Hor. [Aside to Hamlet] No, my good lord.

Ham. [Aside to Horatio] Thy state is the more gracious; for 'tis a vice to know him.
[He hath much land, and fertile: let a beast be lord of beasts, and his crib shall stand at the king's mess: 'tis a chough, but, as I say, spacious in the possession of dirt.] 90

Osr. Sweet lord, if your lordship were at leisure, I should impart a thing to you from his majesty.

Ham. I will receive it, sir, with all diligence of spirit. Put your bonnet to his right use; 'tis for the head.

Osr. I thank your lordship, it is very hot.

Ham. No, believe me, 'tis very cold; the wind is northerly. 90

Osr. It is indifferent cold, my lord, indeed.

Ham. But yet methinks it is very sultry and hot for my complexion.

Osr. Exceedingly, my lord; it is very sultry,—as't were,—I cannot tell how. But, my lord, his majesty bade me signify to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: sir, this is the matter,—

Ham. I beseech you, remember— 108

[Hamlet moves him to put on his hat.

Osr. Nay, in good faith; for mine ease, in good faith. Sir, here is newly come to court Laertes; believe me, an absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences,⁵ of very soft society and great showing: indeed, to speak feelingly of him, he is the card or calendar of gentry,⁶ for you shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see.

[Ham. Sir, his refinement suffers no perdition in you; though, I know, to divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of

¹ Opposites, opponents.

² Does it not, stand me upon, i.e. is it not imperative on me?

³ In, into.

⁴ Bravery, ostentatious display.

⁵ Differences, distinctions from others; probably an allusion to the term in heraldry.

⁶ Gentry, gentility.

memory, and yet but yaw¹ neither, in respect of his quick sail. But in the verity of extolment, I take him to be a soul of great article, and his infusion² of such dearth³ and rareness, as, to make true diction of him, his semblable is his mirror, and who else would trace⁴ him, his umbrage, nothing more.

Osr. Your lordship speaks most infallibly of him.

Ham. The concernancy, sir? why do we wrap the gentleman in our more rawer breath?

Osr. Sir? 130

Hor. Is't not possible to understand in another tongue? You will do't, sir, really.]

Ham. What imports the nomination of this gentleman?

Osr. Of Laertes?

Hor. [Aside to Hamlet] His purse is empty already: all's golden words are spent.

Ham. Of him, sir.

Osr. I know you are not ignorant— 139

Ham. I would you did, sir; yet, in faith, if you did, it would not much approve me.⁵ Well, sir.

Osr. You are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is—

Ham. I dare not confess that, lest I should compare with him in excellence; but, to know a man well, were to know himself.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; [but in the imputation⁶ laid on him by them, in his meed he's unfellowed.] 150

Ham. What's his weapon?

Osr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons: but, well.

Osr. The king, sir, hath wagered with him six Barbary horses: against the which he has imposed,⁷ as I take it, six French rapiers and poniards, with their assigns, as girdle, hangers,⁸ and so: three of the carriages, in faith, are very dear to fancy, very responsive to the hilts, most delicate carriages, and of very liberal conceit.⁹ 160

Ham. What call you the carriages?

¹ Yaw, to move unsteadily (nautical term).

² Infusion, essential qualities. ³ Dearth, dearthness.

⁴ Trace, follow. ⁵ Approve me, be to my credit.

⁶ Imputation, repute.

⁷ Imposed, staked (perhaps=impawned).

⁸ Hangers, straps by which the sword was attached to the girdle. ⁹ Liberal conceit, lavish ornamentation.

[Hor. [Aside to Hamlet] I knew you must be edified by the margent ere you had done.]]

Osr. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would be more germane to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides: [I would it might be hangers till then. But, on: six Barbary horses against six French swords, their assigns, and three liberal-conceited carriages; that's the French bet against the Danish. Why is this "imposed," as you call it?] 171

Osr. The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits: he hath laid on twelve for nine; and it would come to immediate trial, if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.

Ham. How if I answer no?

Osr. I mean, my lord, the opposition of your person in trial. 179

Ham. Sir, I will walk here in the hall: if it please his majesty, 't is the breathing time of day with me; let the foils be brought, the gentleman willing, and the king hold his purpose, I will win for him an I can; if not, I will gain nothing but my shame and the odd hits.

Osr. Shall I re-deliver you e'en so?

Ham. To this effect, sir, after what flourish your nature will.

Osr. I commend my duty to your lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours. [Exit Osr.] He does well to commend it himself; there are no tongues else for's turn. 192

[Hor. This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did comply¹⁰ with his dug, before he sucked it. Thus has he, and many more of the same breed that I know the drossy age dotes on, only got the tune of the time, and outward habit of encounter; a kind of yesty collection, which carries them through and through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and do but blow them to their trial, the bubbles are out. 202

Enter a Lord.

Lord. My lord, his majesty commended him

¹⁰ Comply, use ceremony.

to you by young Osric, who brings back to him, that you attend him in the hall: he sends to know if your pleasure hold to play with Laertes, or that you will take longer time.

Ham. I am constant to my purposes; they follow the king's pleasure: if his fitness speaks, mine is ready; now or whensoever, provided I be so able as now. 211

Lord. The king and queen and all are coming down.

Ham. In happy time.¹

Lord. The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainment to Laertes before you fall to play.

Ham. She well instructs me. [Exit Lord.]

Hor. You will lose this wager, my lord.

Ham. I do not think so; since he went into France, I have been in continual practice; I shall win at the odds. But thou wouldst not think how ill all's here about my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my lord,—

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving² as would perhaps trouble a woman.

Hor. If your mind dislike any thing, obey it. I will forestall their repair hither, and say you are not fit. 229

Ham. Not a whit, we defy augury; there's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 't is not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all: since no man has aught of what he leaves, what is't to leave betimes? Let be.

Enter KING, QUEEN, LAERTES, Lords, OSRIC, and Attendants with foils, &c.

King. Come, Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

[The King puts Laertes' hand into Hamlet's.]

Ham. Give me your pardon, sir: I have done you wrong;

But pardon't, as you are a gentleman.

[This presence knows,

And you must needs have heard, how I am punish'd 240

With sore distraction. What I have done, That might your nature, honour, and exception³ Roughly awake, I here proclaim was madness. Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet:

If Hamlet from himself be ta'en away, And when he's not himself does wrong Laertes, Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it. Who does it, then? His madness: if't be so, Hamlet is of the faction that is wrong'd; His madness is poor Hamlet's enemy. 250 Sir, in this audience,] Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd evil Free me so far in your most generous thoughts, That I have shot mine arrow o'er the house, And hurt my brother.

Laer. I am satisfied in nature, Whose motive, in this case, should stir me most To my revenge: but in my terms of honour I stand aloof; and will no reconciliation Till by some elder masters, of known honour, I have a voice and precedent of peace, 260 To keep my name ungor'd. But till that time I do receive your offer'd love like love, And will not wrong it.

Ham. I embrace it freely; And will this brother's wager frankly play. Give us the foils. Come on.

Laer. Come, one for me.

Ham. I'll be your foil, Laertes: in mine ignorance Your skill shall, like a star i' the darkest night, Stick fiery off indeed.

Laer. You mock me, sir.

Ham. No, by this hand.

King. Give them the foils, young Osric. Cousin Hamlet, 270

You know the wager?

Ham. Very well, my lord; Your grace hath laid the odds o' the weaker side.

King. I do not fear it; I have seen you both: But since he's better'd, we have therefore odds.

Laer. This is too heavy, let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well. These foils have all a length? [They prepare to play.]

Os. Ay, my good lord.

¹ In happy time, à la bonne heure.

² Gain-giving, misgiving.

³ Exception, objection, as in the phrase "to take exception."

Here, Hamlet, take my napkin,¹ rub thy brows:
The queen carouses to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good madam!

King. Gertrude, do not drink.

Queen. I will, my lord; I pray you, pardon me. [Drinks.]

King. [Aside] It is the poison'd cup; it is too late. 303

Ham. I dare not drink yet, madam; by and by.

Queen. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My lord, I'll hit him now.

King. I do not think 't.

Laer. [Aside] And yet it is almost 'gainst my conscience.

Ham. Come, for the third, Laertes: you but dally;

I pray you, pass with your best violence;
I am afeard you make a wanton of me. 310

Laer. Say you so? come on. [They play.]

Osr. Nothing, neither way.

Laer. Have at you now!

[Laertes wounds Hamlet; then, in scuffling, they change rapiers, and Hamlet wounds Laertes.]

King. Part them; they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay, come, again. [The Queen falls.]

Osr. Look to the queen there, ho!

Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is it, my lord?

Osr. How is 't, Laertes?

Laer. Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe, Osrice;

I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.

Ham. How does the queen?

King. She swoons to see them bleed.

Queen. No, no, the drink, the drink,—O my dear Hamlet,— 320

The drink, the drink! I am poison'd. [Dies.]

Ham. O villainy! Ho! let the door be lock'd:

Treachery! seek it out.

Laer. It is here, Hamlet: Hamlet, thou art slain;

No medicine in the world can do thee good,
In thee there is not half an hour of life;

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd: the foul practice

Hath turn'd itself on me; lo, here I lie, 329

Never to rise again: thy mother's poison'd:

I can no more: the king, the king's to blame.

Ham. The point envenom'd too!

Then, venom, to thy work. [Stabs the King.]

All. Treason! treason!

King. O, yet defend me, friends; I am but hurt.

Ham. Here, thou incestuous, murderous damned Dane,

Drink off this potion: is thy union here?

Follow my mother. [King dies.]

Laer. He is justly serv'd;

It is a poison temper'd by himself. 339

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet:

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,

Nor thine on me! [Dies.]

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it! I follow thee.

I am dead, Horatio. Wretched queen, adieu!

You that look pale and tremble at this chance,

That are but mutes or audience to this act,

Had I but time—as this fell sergeant, death,

Is strict in his arrest—O, I could tell you—

But let it be. Horatio, I am dead; 349

Thou liv'st; report me and my cause aright
To the unsatisfied.

Hor. Never believe it:

I am more an antique Roman than a Dane:

Here's yet some liquor left.

Ham. As thou'rt a man,

Give me the cup: let go; by heaven, I'll have't.

O good Horatio, what a wounded name,

Things standing thus unknown, shall live behind me!

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicity awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain,

To tell my story.

[March at some distance, and shot within.]

What warlike noise is this?

Osr. Young Fortinbras, with conquest come from Poland, 361

To the ambassadors of England gives

This warlike volley.

Ham. O, I die, Horatio;

The potent poison quite o'er-crows² my spirit:

² O'er-crows, triumphs over (as a cock over his beaten antagonist).

¹ Napkin, handkerchief

I cannot live to hear the news from England;
But I do prophesy the election lights
On Fortinbras: he has my dying voice;
So tell him, with the occurrents,¹ more and less,
Which have solicited²—The rest is silence.

[Dies.

Hor. Now cracks a noble heart. Good night, sweet prince, 370
And flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!

[Why does the drum come hither?

[March within.

Enter FORTINBRAS, the English Ambassadors, and others.

Fort. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it ye would see?

If aught of woe or wonder, cease your search.

Fort. This quarry³ cries on havoc. O proud
Death,

What feast is toward⁴ in thine eternal cell,
That thou so many princes at a shot

So bloodily hast struck?

First Amb. The sight is dismal;

And our affairs from England come too late:

The ears are senseless that should give us
hearing, 380

To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd,

That Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are dead:

Where should we have our thanks?

Hor. Not from his mouth,

Had it the ability of life to thank you:

He never gave commandment for their death.

But since, so jump⁵ upon this bloody question,

You from the Polack wars, and you from England,

¹ Occurrents, occurrence.

² Solicited, prompted, brought on.

³ Quarry, the game killed

⁴ Toward, at hand.

⁵ Jump, exactly

Are here arriv'd, give order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view; 380
And let me speak to the yet unknowing world
How these things came about: so shall you hear

Of carnal, bloody, and unnatural acts;
Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;
Of deaths put on by cunning and forc'd cause;
And, in this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall'n on th' inventors' heads: all this can I Truly deliver.

Fort. Let us haste to hear it,
And call the noblest to the audience.
For me, with sorrow I embrace my fortune:
I have some rights of memory in this kingdom,
Which now to claim my vantage doth invite
me. 401

Hor. Of that I shall have also cause to
speak,
And from his mouth whose voice will draw on
more:

But let this same be presently perform'd,
Even while men's minds are wild; lest more mischance,
On plots and errors, happen.

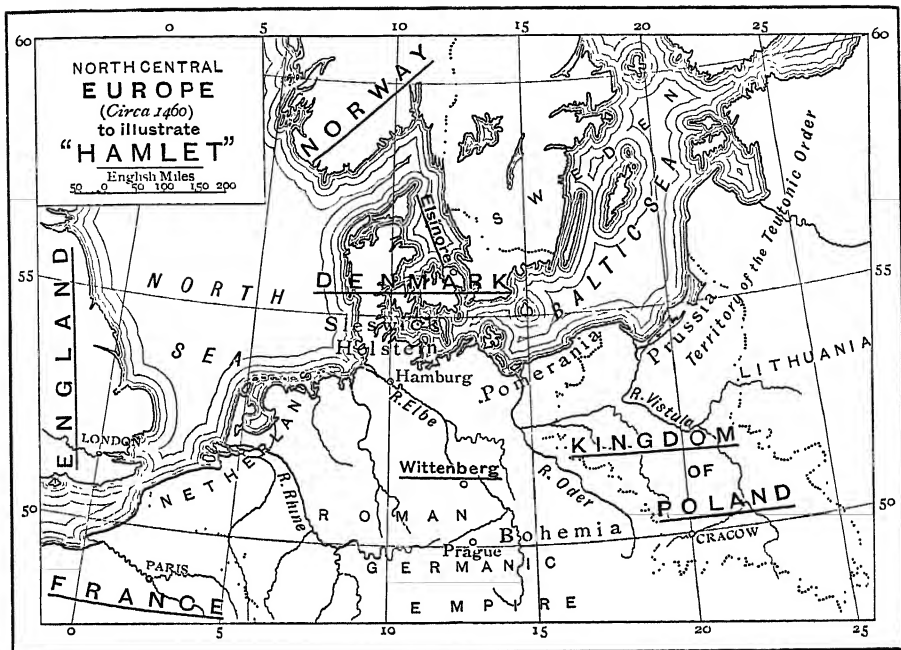

Fort. Let four captains
Bear Hamlet, like a soldier, to the stage;
For he was likely, had he been put on,
T' have prov'd most royally: and, for his passage,

The soldiers' music and the rites of war 410
Speak loudly for him.—

Take up the bodies:—such a sight as this Becomes the field, but here shows much amiss.—

Go, bid the soldiers shoot.

[A dead march. Exeunt, bearing off the dead bodies; after which a peal of ordnance is shot off.]

NOTES TO HAMLET.

PREFATORY NOTE.

In the notes to this play, which is considerably the longest of Shakespeare's plays,¹ all the minute differences of reading will not be given, but only the more important ones; Q. 2 and F. 1 being taken as the two chief authorities for the text. Where the reading of any other text, or any emendation, is adopted, it will be stated in the notes. In quoting the Qq. we have adopted the same principle as the edd. of the Cambridge Shakespeare, that is to say, the term Qq. does not include Q. 1 (1603) unless it is expressly so stated.

NOTE ON THE DIVISION INTO ACTS AND SCENES.

This play is not divided into acts and scenes at all in the Quarto, and in the Folio only as far as the second scene of act ii. The modern divisions are therefore perfectly arbitrary, except in as far as they are taken from the divisions in what are called the Players' Quartos, the earliest of which was printed in 1670; but these, judging from the Quarto of 1695, are divided only into acts and not into scenes. As to the manner in which the acts are divided, it is pretty clear that act ii. should terminate with the soliloquy of Hamlet; but commentators are not agreed as to where act iii. should end. As the play is acted, it always terminates with what is called the Closet Scene between the Queen and Hamlet; but it seems clear, according to both Q. 2 and F. 1, that the author did not intend the act to terminate there. The events which occur in the last scene of act iii. (as at present arranged), and in the first and second scenes of act iv., take place, evidently, on the same night. In F. 1, after the stage-direction Exit Hamlet tugging in Polonius, we have Enter King, which shows that the next scene is merely a continuation of the one before. It is only in Q. 2 that we have the stage-direction after Hamlet's exit Enter King and Queen with Rosencrantz and Guildenstern; but it will be noticed that there is no Exeunt marked, even in Q. 2. At the end of the scene between Hamlet and his mother in Q. 1, the stage-direction, after Hamlet's exit with the dead body, is Enter King and Lords, when the King inidentally addresses Gertrude. There is no doubt that, in that version at least, the two scenes were continuous; and if we look at scene 2 of act iv. (according to the general division of the scenes), we shall see that, evidently, Hamlet has just returned from stowing away the body of Polonius; so that this scene must take place on the same night as the interview with his mother and the accidental killing of Polonius. The same is true of scene 3, act iv., in which the King is waiting for the return of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern with Hamlet, to fetch whom the King has sent them; nor between scenes 3 and 4 can there be an interval of any length; for the King says in his speech, act iv. scene 3, "Follow him;" and therefore when Hamlet meets Fortinbras it is on the same night as, or rather in the early morning after, the interview with his mother. But after scene 4, act iv. there must be a considerable interval, during which Laertes has had time to get from Paris to Elsinore, and Hamlet has evidently been away for several days, during which he was captured by the pirates, with whom he appears to have remained some little time. When this tragedy is played on the stage, and any portions of scenes 1, 2, 3, 4 of act iv. are retained, we cannot help being struck by the abruptness of Ophelia's madness, and the remarkable expedition with which Laertes has reached Denmark from Paris; nor can we help wondering how, in an age when news travelled slowly, he could possibly have heard of his father's death in so short a time. In fact the modern division into acts and scenes—at least as far as acts iii. and iv. are concerned—is a very lame one. But as act iii. is, even at present, of preposterous length, it would be impossible to divide the play, consistently with probability, without making it in six acts. It may be interesting to see which of the tragedies in F. 1 are divided into acts and scenes; we therefore give a list of them in the order in which they are printed, showing how far they are so divided:

¹ The longest plays of Shakespeare seem to be Hamlet, Richard III., Coriolanus, Cymbeline, Othello, and Antony and Cleopatra. According to the Globe edition the number of lines contained in each of these six plays respectively is as follows: 3928, 3505, 3407, 3342, 3303, 3067. But it must be remembered that Richard III. has no prose in it, while Coriolanus has a good deal; so that the latter play is probably, as far as words go, the next longest play to Hamlet.

- Troilus and Cressida (Q. and F.); not divided into acts and scenes
- Coriolanus (F.); divided into acts only.
- Titus Andronicus (Q. and F.); no division in Q.; divided into acts only in F.
- Romeo and Juliet (Q. and F.); act i. scene 1; no other division.
- Timon of Athens (F.); not divided into acts and scenes.
- Julius Cæsar (F.); divided into acts only.
- Macbeth (F.); divided into acts and scenes.
- Lear (Q. and F.); no division in Q.; divided into acts and scenes in F.
- Othello (Q. and F.); in Q. the only divisions marked are acts ii. iv. and v.; divided into acts and scenes in F.
- Antony and Cleopatra (F.); not divided into acts or scenes.
- Cymbeline (F.); divided into acts and scenes.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

1. Lines 1, 2:

Ber. Who's there?

Fran. Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold yourself.

It would seem that only one of the commentators,

Tschischwitz, has noticed the significance of the fact that Bernardo, who is going to relieve guard, challenges Francisco, who is a sentinel still on duty, and who, of course, should challenge him, as he points out in his answer:

Nay, answer me: stand, and unfold yourself.

This is one of the many dramatic touches in this opening scene, which, so far from being unnecessary—as Seymour, in his Remarks, with a singular obtuseness, declared it to be—is one of the most remarkable examples of Shakespeare's skill in construction. Coleridge, whose subtle and eloquent remarks on this scene should be read in their entirety, fully perceived its dramatic force. The author here puts before us a vivid picture of the state of vague disquiet and alarm which existed in Denmark at the time the action of the play commences; the rapidity with which events had succeeded one another in the last month or so; the sudden death of the elder Hamlet, so quickly followed by the marriage of his widow with her late husband's brother; and the accession of the latter to the throne instead of the young heir-apparent; the mysterious warlike preparations and rumours; and last, but not least, the alarming whispers of the appearance of the late king's spectre near the scene of his mysterious death; all these circumstances form a fitting prologue to the tragedy that is to follow. The nervous anxiety of Bernardo, who is afraid to be left alone on his watch, and the simple and reverent faith in the apparition which Marcellus shows, are contrasted with the scepticism of Horatio; whose attitude towards the Ghost is that of doubt, exactly as we should have expected in the chosen intimate of Hamlet. But Horatio, once having seen the Ghost, is thoroughly convinced, and doubts no more; while Hamlet, though he has much more reason to be thoroughly convinced of the genuineness of the apparition, yet is persecuted with doubts almost to the very last.

We should naturally expect the challenge here to come from Francisco; but Q. 2 and F. 1 both agree in giving the line to Bernardo; and as, in both cases, the question Who's there? is printed as a separate line, we are scarcely justified in supposing that it was intended to be given to Francisco. In Q. 1 the scene opens thus:

Enter two Centinels.

1. Stand; who is that?

2. 'T is I.

3. O you come most carefully upon your watch.

It is clear that there the challenge is given by the sentinel on duty, and not by the one coming to relieve him. It would be interesting to know if the alteration, found in Q. 2 and F. 1, was made deliberately by Shakespeare himself. Tschischwitz suggests that "in thus representing Bernardo as so forgetful of all military use and wont as to challenge Francisco who is on guard" there was a "psychological motive;" but if we imagine the scene a dark night, and that Francisco, pacing on his watch, sees the dim outline of a figure advancing, challenges it, pauses for an answer, then impatiently says, Nay answer me, the "psychological motive" is, perhaps, quite as intelligible.

2. Line 3: Long live the king!—Malone suggested that this might be a watchword; but, as Delius pointed out, in line 15, below, Horatio and Marcellus make each a different answer to the challenge. Furness (vol. i. p. 4) quotes from Pye's Comments on the Commentators, 1807, a very probable conjecture; the writer "believes that it corresponds to the former usage in France, where, to the common challenge Qui vive? the answer was Vive le Roi, like the modern answer 'A friend' "

3. Line 6: You come most carefully UPON your hour.—We have given to upon the sense of "exactly" or "just at." The Clarendon editors notice this as an unusual phrase, and explain it "just as your hour is about to strike," and compare Richard III. iii. 2. 5: "Upon the stroke of four," and iv. 2. 111 in the same play, "Upon the stroke of ten." We may also compare Measure for Measure, iv. 1. 34-36:

There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him,

and the curious expression in Romeo and Juliet, i. 3. 71-73, where Lady Capulet says:

by my count,
I was your mother much upon these years
That you are now a maid.

4. Line 13: The RIVALS of my watch.—Rivals is used here in its primitive sense of "partners," which is the word employed by Q. 1. The word is derived from Latin rivalis, "one who uses the same stream or brook with another," so, "a near neighbour" Compare Heywood's Rape of Lucrece:

Tullia. Aruns associate him.
Aruns. A rivall with my brother in his honour.

—Works, vol. v. p. 203

Shakespeare uses rivalry in a similar sense in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 5. 6-9: "Cæsar, having made use of him in the wars 'gainst Pompey, presently denied him rivalry; would not let him partake in the glory of the action."

5. Line 21: What, has THIS THING appear'd again to-night?—The Ff and Q. 1. give this speech to Marcellus, the Qq to Horatio. Surely it should belong to Horatio. Bernardo addresses in the previous line and welcomes Horatio first, then Marcellus. It is natural Horatio should answer first, and the line is characteristic of his sceptical attitude at this time with regard to the Ghost. Marcellus would never use such a vague and contemptuous expression as this thing of that which is always to him a dreaded sight, an apparition. It appears to me that much of the wonderful dramatic force of this opening scene, noticed in note 1 above, would be missed if Horatio does not speak this line in a tone of polite incredulity, an incredulity which is soon to be changed for reverent horror when with his own eyes he beholds the spectre whose existence he now doubts.

6. Line 33: What we two nights have seen.—So Ff. Qq (including Q. 1) read What we have two nights seen. The reading of Ff. here seems preferable, because it is better not to separate the auxiliary verb from the participle if possible, and because the speaker particularly wishes to emphasize the fact that the sight has been seen by them not once but twice before (line 25 above). As to the construction, it is rather awkward, but the sense is quite intelligible. We may either take What to equal "With what" or "Concerning what;" or we may take the whole sentence to be the explanation of the story in the preceding line. Hamner gave this line to Marcellus, as if in his eagerness to tell the story he interrupted Bernardo; an arrangement which, perhaps, makes the next speech of Horatio more forcible, wherein he declares that he wants to hear Bernardo's version of the story, and not that of Marcellus.

7 Line 42: Thou art a SCHOLAR; speak to it, Horatio—The supposed power of Latin over ghosts is a very familiar superstition, arising doubtless from the Church's exorcisms being in Latin Tschischwitz, quoted by Furness, says: "Evil spirits were not exorcised by the sign of the cross alone, but cried out to the exorciser the Latin hexameter Signa te signa, temere me tangis et angis, a verse which being a palindrome reveals its diabolic origin" Compare Much Ado, ii. 1. 264: "I would to God some scholar would conjure her." Reed quotes Beaumont and Fletcher's Night-Walker, ii. 1:

Let's call the butler up, for he speaks Latin,
And that will daunt the devil.

—Works, Edn. Dyce, vol. v. p. 143.

8 Line 44: it HARROWS me with fear and wonder.—This is substantially the reading of Ff.; F. 1, F. 2 print the word harrows Qq. all read horroves The Players' Quarto, 1676, coolly alters it to startles Q. 1 has a peculiar reading, horrors, which has not, I think, received the attention it deserves. There is no other instance, that I am aware of, of the use of horror as a verb; but it certainly is a most forcible expression, especially if we remember the original meaning of the Latin word horreo, from which horror is derived. The substantive is frequently used of "that which causes horror," so that there is no reason why a verb coined from that word should not be used in a transitive sense. As to harrows, Shakespeare only uses the verb three times; twice in this play, figuratively in both cases, and in a quibbling sense in Coriolanus, v. 3. 33, 34:

Let the Volscies

Plough Rome, and harrow Italy.

In the other passage of this play where it occurs, i. 5. 16, in the speech of the Ghost, it is used with up; and here I think it is used in a similar sense, and that there is no idea of referring to haro, a cry of distress. Johnson thought that the word should be written harry, and should have the same sense as in the well-known phrase, "the harrowing of hell;" but if harrow be the right reading, there can be little doubt, though it occurs here without the preposition, that it is used, as in the passage below, in a sense derived from its ordinary and agricultural meaning. It would be a bold measure, in the text of a play so familiar as this, to introduce any innovation; but certainly the reading of Q. 1, if a misprint, is a singularly felicitous one; for it exactly describes that effect of fear which makes the skin "bristle" as it were, that peculiar feeling which, in vulgar parlance, is called "goose flesh."

Nearly all the commentators quote Milton's use of the word harrow, in a similar figurative sense, in Comus, line 565:

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and fear.

9 Line 45: Question it.—This is the reading of Ff. and Q. 1; Qq have Speake to it.

10. Lines 62, 63:

when, in an angry PARLE,

He smote the SLEDDED POLACKS on the ice.

Sledded (formed from sled or sledge) is so spelt in Ff; all the Qq print sleaded. Polacks is Malone's conjecture Q 1, Q 2, Q 3, Q 4 have pollax; Q 5, F 1, F 2, Q 6 Pollax; F 3 Polax; and F 4 Poleaxe, which Rowe adopted, changing its form to pole-axe. Dyce remarks that it would seem that Pollax of the old editions was intended for the plural of the word, as when the word occurs in the singular number—as it does in ii. 2 63, 75—it is spelt there Polacke (Q 1), Pollacke (Qq.), Poleak (F 1), Polak (F 2, F 3, F 4), but never with x. As to the derivation of the word, Caldecott quotes Giles Fletcher's Russe Commonwealth, 12mo. 1591, fo. 65: "The Polonian, whom the Russe calleth Laches, noting the first author or founder of the nation, who was called Laches or Leches, whereunto is added Pol, which signifieth people, and so is made Polaches; that is, the people or posteritie of Laches: which the Latines, after their manner of writing, call Polanos" (Caldecott's edn. of Hamlet, note 3) Malone's emendation Polacks has been very generally accepted; but there is much to be said on the other side. In the first place the word parle clearly points to a peaceful conference and not to a battle. Shakespeare uses the word in the sense of parley several times; and once in the sense of mere conversation, in The Two Gent. of Verona, i. 2. 5. True, the word is here qualified in the text by the epithet angry; but it is very unlikely that the elder Hamlet, who is represented as a man of great dignity and self-restraint, should have struck at a number of the enemy at a parley, however angry. As to the use of the word smite, Shakespeare seems never to use it in what may be called its Scriptural sense. He generally uses it of a single sharp blow; and we may compare with this passage one in Lucrece, line 176:

His falchion on a flint he softly *smite*th.

Nor, when we look at the whole passage, does it seem to refer so much to the brave and passionate attack of one man on a number of the enemy, as to the rare expression of anger on the part of one who generally had his temper under complete control. Compare also what Horatio says in describing the countenance of the Ghost to Hamlet, i. 2. 232:

A countenance more in sorrow than in anger

The chief difficulty in accepting pole-axe lies in the word sledded, the reading of Ff.; Qq. (including Q 1) read sleaded, which might easily be a misprint for leaded; but we should have expected, in this case, his instead of the. The final s of his might easily have got attached to leaded. It is true that Shakespeare does not use the word leaded anywhere; but then he does not use sledded; so that it is only the choice between two apax-legomena. The word leaded occurs in Baret's Alvearie, 1573 (sub Lead): "a vessel or other thing that is leaded or tinned." What we want to find is, first, some early use of the word leaded—"weighted with lead," and, secondly, some mention of the fact that the poleaxe so weighted was a weapon used by the Northern peoples of Europe. On this point it is worth noticing Boswell's quotation from Milton's Brief History of Moscovia: "After that the same day he sent a great and glorious Duke, one of them that held the golden pole-ax, with his retinne, and sundry sorts of meath to drink merrily with the ambassador" (Var. Ed. vol vii p. 177)

11 Line 65: JUMP at this dead hour.—All the Qq. have jump, the Ff. just, which means precisely the same—"a familiar word," as Malone notes, "substituted for the more ancient." But jump is decidedly the more significant word of the two. It is used again, v. 2. 386 below, and in Othello, ii. 3. 392. Steevens quotes Chapman's May-Day: "Your appointment was jump at three." Compare Scot, Discoverie of Witchcraft: "wherein they meete and agree junpe with the papists;" and "so that they fall junpe in judgement and opinion, though verie erroneouslie, with the foresaid Psellus" (Reprint, Nicholson, 1886, pp 413, 416).

12 Line 75: Why such IMPRESS of shipwrights?—Some commentators have endeavoured to twist the line in the text into an argument for supposing that, in the reign of Elizabeth, shipwrights as well as seamen were liable to a forcible impressment; but Steevens points out that impress was merely giving the men "pr est money (from pret Fr)" as an earnest of their being engaged, and he quotes from Chapman's Homer's Odyssey, bk. ii., where press could hardly bear the sense of "a forcible impressment:"

I, from the people straight, will press for you,
Free volunteers.

Tschischwitz says that "the word must be imprest (Ital. impresto), equivalent to 'handsel'" (Furness, vol. i p. 14). This may be all perfectly true; but it is an undoubted fact that, in the only two other passages in which Shakespeare uses the word impress, he uses it in a sense of forcible or involuntary impressment; viz. in Troilus and Cressida, ii. 1. 106, 107: "Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress;" and Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 7. 35-37:

Your ships are not well mann'd,—
Your mariners are muleters, reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress.

Perhaps the latter passage may justify us in explaining the word impress, not in the sense of forcible impressment in the modern sense, by a press-gang, but as simply used for enrolment under an emergency such as a sudden war.

13. Lines 93, 94:

the same CO-MART,

And carriage of the ARTICLE DESIGN'D.

Co-mart is the reading of Qq., and is both a more vivid word and better for the rhythm of the line than the co'want of Ff. Co-mart would mean, as Malone says, "a joint bargain," and may have been coined by Shakespeare, who uses mart as a verb = to traffic, in Cymbeline, i. 6. 151:

to mart

As in a Romish stew.

In the latter part of the sentence we follow in the text the reading of F. 2, F. 3, F. 4. F. 1 prints Article designe, Q 2, Q 3 article desseigne, Q 4 articles desseigne, Q 5, Q 6 Articles designa. The phrase means, "the import of the article drawn up between them."

14. Line 96: UNIMPROVED mettle hot and full.—The word unimproved may be taken here in any one of several senses, all of which apply well enough to the context, and have more or less authority—untutored, unquestioned, untried. The Clarendon Press edd. consider that the first meaning "seems to accord best with the context, 'young,' 'hot,' 'full.'" Q. 1 has unapproved, a very probable reading.

15. Line 98: SHARK'D up a LIST of lawless resolute — On shark compare S Rowley, When you see me, you know me [D 4, verso]: "I thunke if a fat purse come ith' way, thou wouldst not refuse it Therefore leave the Court and sharke with mee" Q. 1 has a reading here "a sight of landless resolute" which deserves to be noticed. The use of sight=quantity, was quite a legitimate use of the word in the sixteenth century. For instance, we find that Andrew Boorde (in his Boke of Knowledge), speaking of St. Sophia's Church at Constantinople, says: "the church is called Saynte Sophyes Churche, in the whyche be a wonder-full syght of prestes: they say that there is a thousande prestes that doth belong to the church" (Reprint, 1870, p. 172). Sight, in this sense, is now accounted a vulgarism. It certainly was not so in Shakespeare's time, and Hunter is perhaps right when he prefers the reading of Q. 1 to that of any older copy.

16. Line 103. terms COMPULSATIVE.—Qq. print compulsatory.—Neither form of the word appears anywhere else in Shakespeare. Compulsive occurs iii. 4. 86 below.

17. Line 107: romage.—Furness, New Variorum Ed. p. 17, quotes Wedgwood's Dictionary, s v Rummage: "Two words seem confounded. 1. Rummage, the proper stowing of merchandise in a ship, from Dutch ruim, French rum, the hold of a ship. Hence to rummage, to search among the things stowed in a given receptacle. 2. But in addition to the foregoing the word is sometimes used in the sense of racket, disturbance [as here]." Nares derives the word from "room," "roomage."

18. Lines 108-125.—This passage is, unfortunately, found only in Qq.

19. Line 112: A MOTHE it is to trouble the mind's eye.—Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4 print moth, which Q. 5, Q. 6 modernized into mote. The two spellings were formerly interchangeable. Compare Florio: "Festucco, a little sticke, a fease-strawe, a tooth-picke, a moth, a little beame."

20. Lines 113-120.—Compare Julius Cæsar, ii. 2, and especially lines 18 and 24:

And graves have yawn'd and yielded up their dead;

And ghosts did shriek and squeal about the streets.

The description, in both cases, seems to have been suggested by passages in North's Plutarch. See note 127 to Julius Cæsar.

21. Lines 117, 118:

AS, STARS with trains of fire, and dews of blood,
DISASTERS in the sun.

It is pretty clear that one line, if not more, preceding this passage has been omitted; for by no manner of twisting the words can one make anything but an imperfect sentence of the lines as they stand. The fact is, this speech was never spoken on the stage so far as we know. It is not in Q. 1, nor in Ff., and it is marked for omission in the Players' Quarto of 1695. Singer proposed, for the missing line:

And as the earth, so portents fill d the sky.

I think that Shakespeare would have avoided the word portents, because of the occurrence of portentous in line 109 above. Perhaps the missing line might have been something like

The sky itself was fill'd with prodigies;

or he may have used the word firmament=sky. Some commentators would substitute for disasters in some verb or other. It is much more probable that a line was overlooked by the transcriber, and that, the passage never being spoken, the want was not supplied. Malone, who is followed by some other commentators, thought that the corruption lay in the words As stars, for which he proposed to substitute Asters or Astres=stars, and he refers to an old collection of poems called Diana, by John Southern, 1580, where this word is used; but there it is evidently only taken from the French astre, a star. Furness quotes from Florio's Dictionary: "Stella a starre, an aster, a planet." Malone is wrong in saying that stars occurs in the next line; because the word in Qq. is distinctly starre (the singular); nor do any of the other Qq. read the plural, so that we may reject the affected word astres as unnecessary. As for the other emendations, I do not see that the sense of the passage is at all improved by changing Disasters in to Disastering, or to "Disasters dimm'd the sun," because, as a fact, these fiery stars and dews of blood would not affect the sun, while Disasters in the sun has a very natural sense if we take it to mean that there were peculiar appearances on the sun's face that were held to indicate disasters. In that curious book, Lycosthenes De Prodigis, there are many illustrations of such phenomena as fiery stars, rains or dews of blood, and singular appearances in the sun. We have therefore followed most editors in leaving a vacant space between lines 116 and 117, supposing a line to have dropped out.

22. Line 118: the moist star.—Compare Winter's Tale, i. 2. 1:

Nine changes of the watery star hath been.

23. Line 122: AS HARBINGERS preceding still the fates.—Compare Comedy of Errors, iii. 2. 12; Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2. 380; and Macbeth, i. 4. 45, and see note 50 of that play.

24. Line 125: climatures.—Perhaps we should read the singular, climature, so Dyce. The word does not occur again in Shakespeare, nor can we find any instance of its occurrence elsewhere in Elizabethan literature. Even the French word climature is not given in Cotgrave, and it is at present doubtful whether Shakespeare invented the word or whether he had met with it in some out-of-the-way book of his time. The Clarendon Press edd. suggest that "possibly it is used for those who live under the same climate."

25. Line 127: I'll cross it, though it blast me.—"The person," says Blakeway (Variorum Ed. vol. vii. p. 186), "who crossed the spot on which a spectre was seen, became subjected to its malignant influence. Among the reasons given in a curious paper, printed in the third volume of Mr. Lodge's Illustrations of British History, p. 48, for supposing the young Earl of Derby (Ferdinando, who died April, 1594) to have been bewitched, is the following: 'On Fryday, in his chamber at Knowsley, aboute 6 of clocke at nighte, there appeared a man talle, as hee thoughte, who twise crossed him swiftly, and when hee came to the place where hee sawe him, hee fell sycke."

26. Lines 136-139:

*Or if thou hast uphoarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
For which, they say, YOU spirits oft walk in death,
Speak of it: stay, and speak!*

Steevens quotes Dekker's Knight's Conjuring. "If any of them had bound the spirit of gold by any charmes in caves, or in iron fetters under the ground, they should for their own soules quiet (which questionlesse else would whine up and down) if not for the good of their children, release it."

In line 138 the Qq. read your.

27. Line 150: The cock, that is the trumpet to the MORN—Ff., instead of morn, read day. Q. 1 has morning.

28. Lines 154, 155:

*The EXTRAVAGANT and ERRING spirit hies
To his confine.*

Compare "extravagant and wheeling stranger," Othello, i. 1. 137; and the General Confession in the Prayer-book: "We have erred and strayed from thy ways like lost sheep." The similarity of this passage to one in St Ambrose's hymn in the Salisbury service has been pointed out:

*Proeco diei jam sonat—
Hoc excatus Lucifer—
Hoc omnis Errorum chorus
Viam nocendi deserit,
Gallo canente.*

Douce thought that Shakespeare had seen these lines, and that his use of them here implies that he was a Latin scholar. Steevens points out that Chapman, in his translation of the Odyssey, uses the word erring—"wandering" in two passages, viz. where Telemachus calls Ulysses "My erring father" (bk. iv. line 435); and again in bk. ix line 362: "Erring Grecians"

29. Line 163: No FAIRY TAKES.—On the question of malignant fairies see Comedy of Errors, note 103. For the use of take in this peculiar sense compare Merry Wives, iv. 4. 32:

And there he blasts the tree, and takes the cattle.

And see taking, as an adjective in the same sense, in Lear, ii. 4. 165, 166:

*Strike her young bones,
You taking airs, with lameness!*

And, as a substantive, Lear, iii. 4. 60, 61: "Bless thee from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking!"

The Clarendon edd. explain takes here as—"infects;" but the sense given in our foot-note seems to be the nearest one can get for this very singular use of the verb take. In Baret's Alvearie, 1573, we have among the numerous uses of this word the following: "To be blasted: to be taken: to haue a member sodenly benumbed, dead, and mortified. Afflari sydere;" and also: "The ague taketh. Febris aliquem occupat;" and "A taking or benumbing when one is sodenly deprived of the use of his limmes, a totall putrefaction of any member. Synderatio." Halliwell (Archaic and Provincial Dict.) quotes from Palsgrave (sub voce) "Taken, as chyldernes lymmes be by the fayries, faée," (Cotgrave has under Fée: "taken, betwitched"), and this explanation of the word is further borne out by a passage from Markham: "Of a horse that is taken. A horse that is bereft of his feeling, mooving, or styring, is said to be taken, and in sooth so hee is, in that he is arrested by so villanous a disease; yet some farriers, not well understanding the ground of the disease, conster the word taken to be striken by some planet or evil spirit, which is false" (Treatise on Horses, ch. viii. ed. 1595); take (sub.), in the Dorsetshire dialect, means a sudden illness, and is also a vulgar name for sciatica.

These two latter meanings are connected with the common meaning of the verb "to seize suddenly;" but from all the passages quoted it is evident that the special malignant effect supposed to be produced, whether by stars or by fairies, was a numbing effect upon the limbs.

30. Line 164: So hallow'd and so gracious is THE time.—All the Qq. have that.

31. Lines 166, 167:

*But, look, the morn, in RUSSET mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon high EASTERN hill.*

For russet—not "rosy," as Hunter explains it, but "grey"—see Midsummer Night's Dream, note 173. Every-one who has kept watch out of doors all through the night knows that grey light which is the first precursor of morning, after which comes, if it comes at all, the red and golden colour. Shakespeare refers to this characteristic of early dawn in Much Ado, v. 3. 24-26:

*the gentle day,
Before the wheels of Phœbus, round about Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey;*

and in Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 19:

I'll say yon grey is not the morning's eye.

Qq. read eastward; but Steevens very aptly cites from Chapman's Odyssey, bk. xiii. lines 49, 50:

Ulysses still An eye directed to the Eastern hill;

and Staunton quotes from Spenser:

*Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill.*

32. Line 175: Where we shall find him most CONVENIENT.—This is the reading of Qq; Ff. and Q. 1. have conveniently. Shakespeare often uses the adjective adverbially; and here it seems to suit the rhythm better not to have the weak double ending which the reading of Ff. necessitates.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

33. Line 11: With ONE auspicious and ONE dropping eye.—So Ff., which most editors follow. Qq. have:

With an auspicious and a dropping eye.

My coadjutor, Mr. Symons, says of the reading of Ff.: "This to my ear is mere burlesque. The antithesis in this and the next two lines is certainly strained, purposely, but I do not think Shakespeare intended Claudius to say anything quite so ridiculous as the Ff. and their followers would have us suppose. Compare a very similar passage in Winter's Tale, v. 2. 80-82 (which is a piece of mere sprightly fancifulness, very different in spirit from the cold balancing of the hypocritical King): "She had one eye declin'd for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfill'd." There is much good sense in this; but is not the antithesis clearly indicated by the context; and does not the reading of Qq. unnecessarily weaken the characteristic artificiality of the passage? Compare below, line 13, "in equal scale," which also points at the more definitive one and one rather than the vague an and a.—F. A. M.

34. Line 24: all bands of law.—This is the reading of Qq; Ff. print bonds. The two words were spelt the same, or interchanged at pleasure. See note 28 to Richard II.

35. Line 38: these DILATED articles.—This is the spelling of the Ff.; Qq. have delated; Q. 1. related. Shakespeare uses the word dilate in Othello, i. 3. 153:

That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
in the sense of "narrate at length;" and again in Comedy of Errors, i. 1. 123: "to dilate at full." There seems to be no reason to retain the spelling of Qq. here, more especially as delate does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare. That word had a special legal sense = "to accuse," "to denounce," a sense still retained in the judicatories of the Scottish Church (see Imperial Dict. sub voce). The Clarendon Press edd. say that, according to Minshew, delate is only another form of dilate, meaning "to speak at large." Bacon uses delate = "to carry," "to convey." The King, of course, refers here to the letters given to the ambassadors. See above, lines 27, 28.

36. Line 45: And LOSE your voice.—Ff. have loose, which was synonymous with lose.

37. Line 50: Dread my lord.—This is the reading of the Ff., and it seems more spirited than My dread Lord of the Qq.

38. Line 56: leave and PARDON.—This is merely a polite way of begging for leave to go; as, later (in iii. 2. 328-330): "your pardon, and my return shall be the end of my business."

39. Lines 53-60.—These three expressive lines are omitted in Ff.

40. Lines 64: But now, my COUSIN Hamlet, and my son.—On the general use of the word cousin for almost any blood-relationship, see Twelfth Night, note 13.

41. Line 65: A little more than kin, and less than KIND.—Compare W. Rowley, Search for Money, 1602 (Percy Soc. ed. p. 5): "I would he were not so neere to us in kindred, then sure he would be neerer in kindnesse." Some would take kind here = the German kind, i. e. child, pronouncing it as if it were written kinm'd, and a play upon the words were intended. Mr. Wilson Barrett adopts this reading;¹ but it is not effective. No doubt there is a double meaning here in kind, as Shakespeare is rather fond of the word in the sense of race. Compare Richard II. iv. 1. 141:

Shall kin with kin and kind with kind confound;

¹ Mr. C. Ribton-Turner, in the preface to his arrangement of the tragedy for Mr. Barrett, ingeniously defends this reading; but, I believe, he is mistaken in connecting kind in the sense of son (of which he says kind is but the vulgar form) with A. Sax. cygn, which means rather a race or tribe.

and Julius Cæsar, ii. 1. 32, 33:

And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which hatch'd would, as his kind, grow mischievous.

Compare also Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 3. 2, 3, where Launce says "all the kind of the Launces have this very fault;" so that Hamlet may mean to say he is something more than a mere kinsman to his uncle, yet that the treatment he receives from him is less than that which one would show to any of one's own species or race. Compare also Hamlet's use of kindless = unnatural applied to the king in the soliloquy, ii. 2. 609:

Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!

42. Lines 66, 67:

King How is it that the clouds still hang on you?

Ham. Not so, my lord; I am too much i' THE SUN.

Qq. read Not so much (an evident misprint), and, in the latter part of the line, in the sonne, which some have wished to interpret as a quibble on sun and son. A great deal of commentary has been written on this line. There is no doubt that there is an allusion to the proverb which Johnson mentions: "Out of heaven's blessing into the warm sun." Compare Lear, ii. 2. 187-169:

Good king, that must approve the common saw,— Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun!

Dyce points out that this proverbial expression is found in various authors from Heywood down to Swift. In Furbess will be found quoted a very apt passage from the Preface to Grindal's Profitable Doctrine, 1555: "they were brought from the good to the bad, and from Goddes blessing (as the proverbe is) into a warme sonne" (vol. i. p. 34). To be in the Sun would seem therefore to be a colloquial expression for "to be in misery." Hunter tries to make out that it distinctly meant "to have no home;" but his long remarks on this passage are more ingenious than convincing. Dr. Brinsley Nicholson points out, in Notes and Queries, 25th May, 1867, that Hamlet may use the words i' the sun as equivalent to "in the sunshine of your favour," uttering them as an ironical compliment to the king.

43. Line 68: Good Hamlet, cast thy NIGHTED colour off.—So Qq; Ff. read nightly; but compare Lear, iv. 5. 10-14:

It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live: where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us: Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life.

44. Line 77: good mother.—Q. 2, Q. 3 have the absurd misprint could mother, which led the person or persons responsible for the emendations in the so-called Players' Quartos to print the line:

'T is not alone this morning cloke could smother.

What the cloke was to smother does not appear. It is a grand instance of an aposiopesis. How Betterton could have ever spoken such rubbish passes one's comprehension.

45. Line 79: Nor WINDY SUSPIRATION of forc'd breath.—Caldecott quotes a somewhat parallel expression from the Spanish Tragedy, act iv.:

By force of windy sighs thy spirit breathes.

—Hawkins, vol. ii. p. 92.

46. Line 82: Together with all forms, MOODS, SHOWS of grief.—So Ff. substantially. 'F. 1, F. 2 shewes; F. 3, F. 4 shews. Q. 1 has no parallel here. Q. 2, Q. 3 read chapes, and Q. 4, Q. 5 shapes. For moods Q. 1695 substituted modes (an alteration which is generally attributed to Capell); but both Qq. and Ff. substantially agree here, though Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4 print moodes, and not moods. Dyce prints modes, observing that moodes and moods are but "an old spelling of modes; nothing can be plainer than that Hamlet, throughout this speech, is dwelling entirely on the outward and visible signs of grief." But are not moods the outward moral signs of grief, the affectation of sighs and tears and downcast looks to which Hamlet alludes above in lines 78–80? As for shows, it is surely preferable to shapes, which jars on one's ear rather here; though the word shape is constantly used in the sense of "a costume," "a disguise" (See Love's Labour's Lost, note 112).

47. Line 85: But I have that within which PASSETH show.—Qq. read passes; but the reason for the reading of F. 1 is obvious; it was in order to avoid the cacophony of the final s in passes and show. The repetition of the word show here (see line 82 above) is, I think, emphatic.

48. Line 92: OBSEQUIOUS sorrow.—Compare Titus Andronicus, v. 3. 152:

To shed obsequious tears upon this trunk;

and Sonnet xxxi. 5–7:

How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear-religious love stol'n from mine eye,
As interest of the dead.

The only other passage in Shakespeare where obsequious is used in this sense is III. Henry VI. ii. 5. 118. Obsequiously is used in a similar sense in Richard III. i. 2. 3.

49. Lines 110–112:

And with no less nobility of love
Than that which dearest father bears his son,
Do I impart toward you.

Schmidt explains this phrase: "with no less nobility of love than this: I bestow upon you the love of the fondest father. Toward is partly governed by love" Theobald proposed to read with 't, i.e. "with the declaration of you as next heir to the throne," &c.

50. Line 113: In going back to SCHOOL in WITTENBERG.—The University of Wittenberg was not founded till 1502, so that its mention in Hamlet is a startling anachronism. But in an age which was careless of such things, Shakespeare was doubtless justified in bringing into his play a name so well known as Luther and Faustus had then made Wittenberg. Besides, having once made Hamlet and all the Danes of his time Christians, no anachronisms could have had any terror for him.

This is one of the passages which bears upon the difficult question of Hamlet's age. For school=university, compare As You Like It, note 4. Tschischwitz says that at the German universities men of mature age often attended lectures, and instances Humboldt (See Furness, vol. i. p. 390). But was it the custom, in Shakespeare's time, for adults to frequent the universities?

51. Line 129: O, that this too too SOLID flesh would melt.—All the Qq. for solid read sallied, which led some anonymous critic to suggest sullied as the reading. But though there is no reference here (as there is, perhaps, later, in the "He's fat and scant of breath") to the stoutness of Burbage, yet the reading of Ff. is the right one.

52. Line 130: Thaw, and RESOLVE itself into a dew.—Caldecott cites Baret's Alvearie: "To thaw or resolve that which is frozen, regelo." Compare Lyly's Euphues, p. 38 (quoted by Nares): "I could be content to resolve myself into tears, to rid thee of trouble." See Timon, iv. 3. 442, 443:

The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears.

53. Lines 131, 132:

Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
His CANON 'gainst SELF-SLAUGHTER! O God! God!

Qq. and Ff. print canon, which was a customary spelling for both words. Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4, Q. 5 read scale slaughter, an evident misprint. Ff. have O God, O God! which many editors adopt. To me it seems less emphatic, less direct a cry of the soul than as the Qq. give it. Possibly the reason for the reading of Ff. was to emphasize the fact that the actor must pause some little time after self-slaughter and not continue with the next words as if part of the line; and for that reason it would be preferable to print the words O God! God! or O God! O God! as a broken line by themselves.

54. Line 140: HYPERION to a satyr.—Hyperion (always used by Shakespeare as a name of the sun) is invariably accented on the antepenultimate. The error is a common one in English poetry. Even Gray (Progress of Poetry) writes of—

Hyperion's march and glittering shafts of war.

Tennyson gives the correct accentuation in Lucretius, and the Aldine editor of Gray cites other examples from Drummond of Hawthornden and Akenside. See Henry V. note 214.

55. Line 141: betwene.—See Midsummer Night's Dream, note 22. The Ff. here read beteene.

56. Line 146: Frailty, thy name is woman!—Compare Ford, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, iv. 3:

My reason tells me now, that "'tis as common
To err in frailty as to be a woman."

57. Line 150: discourse of reason.—Compare Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2. 116, and see note 120 of that play. Compare also below, iv. 4. 36. The expression "discourse of reason" is used by Florio in his translation of Montaigne's 19th Essay, and of the Apologie of Raimond Sebond.

58. Line 155: Had left the FLUSHING in her GALLED EYES.—Schmidt, who is followed by some editors, explains flushing as referring to the redness of the eyes caused by much weeping; but the Clarendon Press edd. remark that the verb to flush is still used transitively, and therefore I suppose that they would interpret it "filling the eyes with water." We constantly use the expression nowadays "to flush a drain;" that is to say, to pour a quantity of water down it. Compare above (line 80): "the fruitful river in the eye." Galled eyes are eyes sore with weeping, as in Richard III. iv. 4. 53: "galled eyes of weeping souls." Ff. for in read of, which would seem to confirm the meaning given to flushing by the Clarendon edd.

59. Lines 160, 161:

*I am glad to see you well:
Horatio,—or I do forget myself.*

It is evident that Hamlet is so overcome with emotion, after his soliloquy that he does not at first recognize the voice of his one intimate friend. This is a most effective and dramatic touch. With the instinct of courtesy, which is never wanting in him, he says mechanically, "I am glad to see you well." Then turning round and recognizing him, with a note of joy in his voice he greets him by his name. Mark also the subtle gradations of treatment which Hamlet shows towards Marcellus and Bernardo. The former is a friend, but not an intimate friend of his heart like Horatio; so he greets him cordially (see line 167): "I am very glad to see you;" and then turning to Bernardo, who is a comparative stranger, with a courteous bow, "Good even, sir;" which duty of politeness discharged, he turns again to Horatio, in the next line, with the same warm and hearty manner. Trivial as the beginning of this scene may seem to the reader, the actor has here the greatest opportunity of marking the characteristics of Hamlet's nature. So much does he hunger for sympathy, that the sight of the friend in whom he feels that he can confide makes him, for a moment at least, forget his great sorrow. But it is only for a moment; for he will not suffer even Horatio to speak lightly, as it were, of what is to him such a horrid profanation of all love and duty as his mother's marriage.

60. Line 164: And what MAKE you from Wittenberg, Horatio?—See ii. 2. 278 below: "what make you at Elsinore?" The expression is of constant recurrence in the Elizabethan writers. Compare the German "Was machen Sie?"

61. Line 167: GOOD EVEN, sir.—Hammer changed this to Good morning, and Johnson, defending the text, supposed that it was now literally come to evening. But afternoon was not recognized by the Elizabethans, and Good even became due immediately after the stroke of noon. The point is left without any doubt by Romeo and Juliet, ii. 4. 115-119, and the following passage in Samuel Rowley's chronicle play, When You See Me, You Know Me [sig. G 4]:

Tie. God morrow to your Grace.

Pro. God morrow Tutors at Noone, 'tis God even, is it not?

Cris. We saw not your Grace to day.

62. Line 170. I would not HAVE your enemy say so.—So Ff. Qq. read hear, which rather clashes with ear in the next line.

63. Lines 180, 181:

*the funeral bak'd meats
Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables.*

The custom of funeral festivities was once very prevalent. The practice, says Douce, was certainly borrowed from the caena feralis of the Romans. Caldecott quotes a very apposite passage from "The boke of mayd Emlyn that had v husbundes & all kockoldes: she wold make theyr berdes whether they wold or no, and gyve them to were a praty hooode full of belles" (4to, Signat. B. II. without date. "Imprinted by John Skot in saynt Pulkers parysshe"):

When the seconde husband was dede,
The thyrd husbande dyde she wedde

In full goodly araye—
But as the devyll wolde,
Or the pyes were colde.

—Caldecott's Hamlet, Notes, p. 25.

64. Line 182: my DEAREST foe.—Dear is constantly used in old writers for anything intensely felt, whether of joy or sorrow. See note 78 to Richard II. and compare I. Henry IV. iii. 2. 123:

Which art my near'st and dearest enemy.

65. Line 183: OR EVER I HAD seen that day.—So Qq. Ff. have Ere I had ever. This slight variation is worth noticing, because we should certainly have expected that the Folio—if it is supposed to be taken from the theatre copy—would have retained the much more rhythmical reading of the Quarto and not have substituted such an awkward and cacophonous sentence as Ere I had ever, a sentence which it would be very difficult for an actor to speak effectively. Very likely this was one of the gratuitous corrections of the printer.

66. Line 190: Saw who?—There can be little doubt that this is the right punctuation; who being used here, as frequently in Shakespeare, for the accusative. Ff. read Saw? Who? Qq., including Q. 1: Saw, who? The Players' Quartos print as in our text. It seems an absurd piece of pedantry to alter who to whom, as Johnson did. The colloquial form of the question, however opposed to strict grammatical rules, is much more natural; and any pause between the two words is essentially undramatic, considering how excited Hamlet is by Horatio's statement.

67. Line 198: an ATTENT ear.—Compare Pericles, iii. 11 (of Prologue): "Be attent." The word is nowhere else used by Shakespeare. Some of the Qq. and Ff. have attentive.

68. Line 198: In the dead VAST and middle of the night.—Vast is the reading of Q. 1, Q. 5, Q. 6; Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4, F. 1 have wast, and F. 2, F. 3, F. 4 waste. Compare Tempest, i. 2. 327: "at vast of night," where vast is used for void or vacancy, as in Winter's Tale, i. 1. 83: "shook hands, as over a vast." Malone very absurdly reads waist—an absurdity none the less absurd because it occurs in a preposterous line of Marston's Malcontent, ii. 5:

T is now about the immodest wast of night

The reading of F. 2 is equally objectionable, because it sounds like a pun on waste and waist, a verbal pleasantry quite out of keeping with the rest of Horatio's speech.

69. Line 200: Arm'd at point.—Ff. have Arm'd at all points. Compare Macbeth, iv. 3. 135, and see note 223 of that play.

70. Line 204: distill'd.—Ff. read (with varying spelling) bestill'd. Distill'd is of course used in the sense of "melted." Singer quotes from Sylvester's Du Bartas (4th ed. p. 704):

Melt thee, distill thee, turne to wax or snow;

and Dyce compares Addison's rendering of a passage of Claudian (De Sexto Cons. Hon. v. 345):

liquefactaque fulgure cuspi

Conduit, et subtilis fluxure vaporibus enses—

by the very much condensed line:

Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd.

71. Line 214: Did you not speak to it?—This line is generally spoken upon the stage

Did not you speak to it?

with the emphasis on you, as if the question were addressed especially to Horatio, and not to all three. Steevens has a long note to prove that the emphasis should be on speak and not on you. The important question, as he says, was whether the Ghost was spoken to, and not whether Horatio in particular spoke to it. Steevens adds that "spectres were supposed to maintain an obdurate silence till interrogated by the people to whom they appeared" (Var. Ed. vol. vii. p. 211); or, in plainer language, ghosts never spoke unless they were spoken to. He also says that the vulgar notion that a ghost could only be spoken to by a scholar, i.e. one who knew Latin (see above, note 7), was one that would have disgraced the Prince of Denmark. But in answer to this it may be said that Hamlet would have expected Horatio to speak to the apparition, not because he was a scholar, but because he was his own particular friend, and would know how anxious he must be to learn the meaning of this appearance of his father's spirit. The difficulty as to the emphasis may be got over by distributing the emphasis between you and speak so as to make it clear that the question is addressed particularly to Horatio, but without any apparent discourtesy to the others; and also showing that Hamlet's anxiety was not confined to the question whether Horatio individually had spoken to the Ghost, but whether it had been spoken to at all.

72. Line 216: It lifted up ITS head.—The earlier Qq. and Ff. all have it (the older form of the possessive) except Q. 1, which has his. No editors have had the courage to preserve the archaic form except the Cambridge editors in their Clarendon Press ed. (and in the later editions of the Globe), Grant White, Keightley, and Furness. See Craik's note on Julius Caesar, i. 2. 124, quoted by Furness, in which a very interesting history of the possessive form its is given.

His was originally used for the possessive of both masculine and neuter, as it often is by Shakespeare. Its, for a long time, was not recognized as an admissible word; when it occurs in Shakespeare it is generally printed in F. 1 it's. The Saxon personal pronoun was he masculine, heo feminine, and hit neuter. The aspirate was afterwards dropped in the neuter, though Craik says it is still often heard in the Scottish dialect. The genitive of heo was hære, hence her; his would be the natural form of the genitive for both masculine and neuter. When Shakespeare wrote, its was beginning to displace the form his as the possessive of it.

73. Line 224: Indeed, indeed.—Qq. (except Q. 1) omit the second indeed, as they do the repetition of very like in line 237. The repetitions were probably made by the actor, and adopted (wisely, I think) in the Folio. Hamlet is here reflecting on what has been told him, and the repetition of the word marks the preoccupation of his mind

74. Line 229: [Abruptly] Then saw you not his face.—This line is generally printed as a question; but Q. 2, Q. 3 have a full stop at the end of the line, which seems more in accordance with the sense. Hamlet is questioning them very closely, cross-examining them in fact, as to the details of the appearance of the Ghost, in the identity and genuineness of which he does not yet entirely believe. He is particularly anxious to find out whether they had certain means of recognizing the apparition as that of his father. If he was armed from head to foot, and with his vizor down, they could not have seen his face, and therefore could not have been sure whose spectre it was or appeared to be. If Hamlet speaks this line, as indicated in our text, abruptly, Horatio's answer seems more appropriate than if he had spoken it as a tentative question; and there is an effective contrast between the lawyerlike manner in which Hamlet strives to detect them in a contradiction, and the tender feeling with which he puts the next question—

What, look'd he frowningly?

75. Lines 240–242:

Ham.

His beard was grizzled,—no?

Hor. It was, as I have seen it in his life,

A sable silver'd.

This passage has given rise to some ingenious fancies on the part of commentators; Moberly holding that grizzled is the same as gristly—"foul and disordered," a meaning which neither grizzled nor gristly has in any passage in Shakespeare. [Compare Mids. Night's Dream, v. 1. 140, where the Prologue refers to the Lion as "This gristly beast;" and Lucrece, line 920, "carrier of gristly care."] On this conjectural meaning he founds the explanation that Hamlet, in asking the question, wishes to find out whether his father showed signs of a violent death, like Gloster in II. Henry VI. iii. 2. 175. Grizzled is only used once in Shakespeare, in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 17, where Antony says:

To the boy Cesar send this grizzled head.

It is manifest that the meaning there is "growing grey." There is a passage in the Prologue to act iii. of Pericles, lines 47, 48:

the grizzled north

Disgorges such a tempest forth, in which grizzled is simply identical in meaning with gristly in its ordinary sense of "grim," "terrible;" grizzled is the reading of Q. 1; but F. 3, F. 4 have gristly. The meaning of grizzled here then is simply "getting grey;" and Hamlet seems to put this question with the same motive already alluded to above in note 74. Horatio's answer is scrupulously particular, and it is with regard to the exact colour implied by the word sable that the passage is interesting. Does sable mean "black" here? It is difficult to think of the elder Hamlet, a typical Dane, as a man with black hair; but the history of the word sable seems to give one no choice of meaning but that of a dark colour. It was derived from the animal sable undoubtedly, and adopted into heraldry as the equivalent of black. Shakespeare uses the adjective sable in Lucrece, line 117, as an epithet of night, and in the same poem, line 1074, in a figurative sense:

My sable ground of sn I will not paint;

here the writer is evidently thinking of the heraldic sense of the word. In the Sonnets, xii. 3, 4, sable is used in a very similar passage to the one in our text:

When I beheld the violet past prime,
And sable curls all silver'd o'er with white.

With the exception of the Prologue to act v. of Pericles, line 19, the epithet sable is not used in any place by Shakespeare, except in this play, ii. 2. 474, below; and in Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1. 233, sable-coloured is applied to melancholy. It seems, then, we must take sable here to mean at least "dark-coloured," if not "black." It is possible that the word, being originally derived from the animal, whose fur is frequently a light brown—though the darker shades are more valuable—sable may have been used, like black, in a lax sense as = any shade of darkness. That sable was used in somewhat a vague way seems to be proved by the following passage in Chapman. Odyssey, bk. ix. lines 215-217:

At entry of the haven, a silver ford
Is from a rock-pressing fountain pour'd,
All set with sable poplars.

It is difficult to see how poplars could ever be called sable in the sense of black.

76. Line 243: I WARRANT it will.—This is the reading of Q 1. The other Qq. print warn't, which, as the Clarendon Press edd. note, is still the provincial pronunciation of the word. Ff. have I warrant you. Compare All's Well that Ends Well, note 133

77. Line 248: Let it be TENABLE in your silence still.—The Ff. read treble, a misprint which Caldecott, Knight, and other ingenious persons defend as the orthodox text.

78. Line 254: Your LOVES, as mine to you.—Ff. read love. Q 1 has your loves, your loves, which Staunton thinks expresses well Hamlet's "perturbation," and "feverish impatience to be alone." It is very important to notice here that Hamlet corrects them all without distinction in their ceremonious expression of their duty. "No, not duty," he says practically, "but your loves;" and certainly the plural is preferable here, especially as it has been used just above, in line 251. The repetition of the Quarto might have been meant to enforce this correction; but, as a matter of fact, it is more effective on the stage when the two words your loves are not repeated, the emphasis on loves answering all the purpose required. Just as Hamlet makes no distinction between his intimate friend, Horatio, and Marcellus, who is also a friend but not an intimate one, and Bernardo, who is a comparative stranger; so afterwards, in scene 5 of this act, when he swears them both to secrecy, he makes no distinction between Horatio and Marcellus.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

79. Line 8: And CONVOY is assistant, do not sleep.—Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4 read:

And convey, in assistant do not sleep;

The Players' Quartos read:

And convey in assistant, do not sleep;

but they marked the first sentence as omitted in representation, evidently because they could not make much sense of it. Our text is that of Ff., which seems to make fair sense; the meaning being "the means of conveyance are ready." Compare All's Well, iv. 3. 103: "entertained my convey;" i.e. "Taken into service guides;" &c.

80 Lines 7, 8:

*A violet in the youth of PRIMY nature,
FORWARD, not permanent.*

Primy is a peculiar word, and is only used in this passage; at least no instance of its occurrence elsewhere has yet been discovered. We may compare, perhaps, the peculiar use of prime, the adjective, in Othello, iii. 3. 403:

Were they as prime as goats, as hot as monkeys;
though, of course, Laertes does not use it here in so gross a sense, but more in the sense of the substantives in the Sonnet, iii. 9, 10:

and she in thee
Calls back the lovely April of her prime

The first Players' Quarto, 1676, altered the passage to "youth, a prime of nature," which the Quarto of 1695 improved by reading "youth and prime of nature." Shakespeare uses the expression "prime of youth" in III. Henry VI. ii. 1. 23, and again in Richard III. i. 2. 246: "the golden prime of this sweet prince." But, as the form pryny is found in all the old copies, both Qq. and Ff., we cannot alter it. It is very possible that the form pryny was coined by Shakespeare to represent the adjective prime pronounced as a dissyllable. F. 1, F. 2, by a strange misprint, have forward for forward.

81. Line 9: The PERFUME AND SUPPLIANCE of a minute.—So Qq.; Ff. omit perfume and, perhaps because the word perfume might have seemed out of place; but it refers, as Johnson pointed out, to the phrase sweet, not lasting in the line above. The same critic expressed himself dissatisfied with supplianee, suggesting some such word as soffiance, referring to the process of fumigation. But, surely, though supplianee only occurs in this passage, it is a very expressive word. It means "that which fills up a minute of our leisure time." Chapman uses it, Iliad, book viii. line 321 = assistance; Pallas is speaking of Hercules looking up for help to heaven:

Which ever, at command of Jove, was by my supplianee giv'n
This word must not be confounded with suppliance = supplication, which is only found in comparatively modern writers.

82. Line 12: in THEWS and bulk.—This word thews, which is nearly always used in the plural, has rather a singular history. Shakespeare uses it in all the three passages in which it occurs, viz. here, II. Henry IV. iii. 2, 277, and Julius Caesar, i. 3. 81, in its physical sense of "muscles and sinews;" but in most of our old writers thews (generally spelt theves) is used of "manners, qualities, dispositions." In Nares, sub voce, will be found quoted five passages from Spenser, Ben Jonson, Thomas Heywood, and the Mirror for Magistrates, in all of which it is used in the sense of mental qualities, as it is by Chaucer in the Canterbury Tales, line 9416. In Ancren Riwle (about 1230), the word is spelt theaves, and is used in the sense of virtues; in Layamon's Brut, about 1200 (verse 6361), the singular, spelt theawe, occurs in the sense of "sinew or strength," but that is, as Sir Frederick Madden notes, "the only instance in the poem of the word being applied to bodily qualities." Some etymologists would derive thews, in its physical sense, from the A. Sax. theôð or thed, the thigh, and thews = manners from the A. Sax. thedw = "habit, custom, behaviour;" but, as Skeat points out, the physical sense of the word is really the older one, the base being thaw, from Teutonic thu, derived from the root tu—"to be strong, to swell;" and he adds that the word is quite distinct from thigh though the root is the same.

83. Line 15: cautel—This word is only used elsewhere by Shakespeare in A Lover's Complaint, 302, 303:

In him a plennitude of subtle matter,
Applied to cautels, all strange forms receives

Cauteulous (meaning crafty) occurs in Coriolanus, iv. 1. 33, and Julius Cæsar, ii. 1. 129. Cotgrave has "Cauteille: A wile, cauteill, sleight; a craftie reach, or fetch, guileful deuisse or indeuor; also, craft, subtiltie, trumperie, deceit, couesnage."

84. Line 16: The virtue of his WILL.—So Qq. Ff. print feare, evidently caught, by mistake, from the end of the line. Qq. omit line 18 altogether, perhaps accidentally.

85. Line 21: The SAFETY and the health of the whole state—This line has caused a good deal of discussion. Q. 2, Q. 3 read saftey; Q. 5 reads safete; Q. 4, Q. 6 read as in the text, and Ff. sanctity, which Hamner changed to santy, adopting the conjecture of Theobald. The is omitted before health in all the old copies, so that the line reads in Qq. as deficient in one syllable. Collier got over the difficulty by dogmatically asserting, without producing any proof, that saftey was frequently pronounced as a trisyllable; but, unfortunately, the word occurs in Shakespeare in some hundred passages, in no one of which is it anything but a dissyllable. The reading of Q. 2, Q. 3, saftey, goes most decidedly against Collier's statement. Sanctity, the reading of Ff., would not make by any means bad sense if we could take it to mean "religious preservation of;" but the word seems always to be used by Shakespeare as—"holiness" or "the quality of a saint." Sanity is only used once by Shakespeare; in this very play, below, ii. 2. 214, where it means "a sound state of mind." We have therefore preferred, after all, the very simple emendation first made by Warburton of inserting the before health. It is very likely that before a word commencing with he, the might have dropped out; but, on the other hand, it is only fair to say that the the might have been purposely omitted by the poet, in order to avoid the close recurrence of th in four words, "the health of the;" but this difficulty is easily got over by the speaker; while, if saftey be pronounced as a dissyllable, it is very difficult to get over the rhythmical deficiency of the line. It is scarcely necessary to point out that any public reader or speaker who pronounced saftey as a trisyllable, sa-fe-ty, would find a considerable tax on his time in defending his pronunciation against adverse critics.

86. Line 26: particular act and place.—So Qq.; Ff. have peculiar set and force, which might have given rise to some interesting explanations and interpretations, had the words come to us only in this form.

87. Line 30: If with too CREDENT ear you LIST his songs.—It is almost incredible, but in the Quarto of 1695 this line is printed thus:

If with too credulous ear you hear his Songs.

As it is not one of those marked for omission on the stage, it is clear that the alteration must have been made in the theatre after the Restoration; but to whom the credit is due of substituting such a wretchedly commonplace, ill-sounding line for that in the original we do not know.

88. Lines 39, 40:

*The canker galls the INFANTS OF THE SPRING,
Too oft before their BUTTONS be disclos'd*

Compare Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1. 100, 101:

an envious sneaping frost

That bites the first-born infants of the spring; and compare Mids. Night's Dream, note 130. Button is a literal Englishing of the French bouton, bud, and is used by Shakespeare only here. It occurs, however, in The Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 1. 4-7:

O Queene Emilia,

Fresher than May, sweeter

Than hir gold buttons on the bowes, or all

Th' enamell'd knacks o' th' meade or garden

—Ed. Littledale (N. Shak. Soc.), p. 43

Cotgrave has "Bouton: m. A button;" also, a bud of a Vine, &c." Instead of their, Ff. have the.

89. Lines 49-51:

*WHILST, LIKE A puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself THE PRIMROSE PATH of dalliance treads,
And RECKS not his own rede.*

Whilst like a is the reading of Ff.; Qq. have Whiles a; and below Qq. and Ff. alike read reakes or reaks, which Pope first altered into recks. Rede is reed in Qq., reade in Ff. The primrose path may be compared with the primrose way of Macbeth, ii. 3. 21. Rede is not used anywhere else by Shakespeare. The Clarendon Press edd. compare Chancer, Canterbury Tales, 1218:

Ther was noon other remedye ne reed.

The same editors quote Burns, Epistle to A Young Friend (last two lines):

And may ye better reck the rede
Than ever did th' Adviser.

—Ed. Macmillan, vol. i p. 249.

90. Lines 59-72.—It is possible that these sententious precepts, given by Polonius to his son, were suggested by the advice of Euphues to Philautus. Mr. Rushton, in his Shakespeare's Euphuism (pp. 45, 46), has indicated the points of resemblance, but they are not very close. Shakespeare was no doubt thinking more of Lord Burleigh than of Euphues. In fact Polonius was a satire, not upon the empty-headed old courtier, but upon one who, picking up most of his wisdom from books, was under the delusion that he was a very Machiavel in politic cunning. In Q. 1 these precepts of Polonius, or as much of them as are given, are printed with two inverted commas (") before each line, that is to say, lines 61-67, and lines 70-72, and line 78. In Q. 2 these lines have no such mark before them; but, in the speech of Laertes, lines 38 and 39-39 are so distinguished. Dyce, in "Remarks, &c.," maintained that there was nothing remarkable in this; but, with due deference to him, one may be allowed to think that there is. Dyce points out that in Qq., except Q. 1 (which does not contain it), the speech of the Queen (iv. 5. 17-20) "is printed with inverted commas;" but this is not quite accurate, as that speech of four lines, containing two rhymed couplets, is thus printed:

"To my sicke soule, as sinnes true nature is, &c

There is only one inverted comma before each line, which may have been intended to show that it was omitted in representation: it is so marked in all the Players' Quartos. Dyce says that in various early plays "the Gnomie portions" are thus distinguished, and he produces instances; but it must be confessed that the marking of these passages, as far as Q. 1 and Q. 2 of Hamlet are concerned, is erratic and almost inexplicable. In this scene there are three other lines so marked in Q. 1, lines which are peculiar to that edition; they occur in the last speech of Corambis in this scene, which is as follows:

Ofelia, receive none of his letters,
"For loners lines are snares to intrap the heart;
"Refuse his tokens, both of them are keyes
To vnlocke Chastitie, vnto Desyre,
Come in Ofelia, such men often proue,
"Greate in their wordes, but litle in their loue.

In line 59 see is the reading of Ff; Qq. have look; in line 62 "we have adhered to the reading of Qq. Those friends," instead of "The friends" of Ff.

91. Line 63: Grapple them To thy soul with HOOPS of steel.—So Q. 1 and Ff; Qq. read unto instead of to. Pope substituted hooks for hoops, as more suitable to the word grapple, with which it is connected. But the Clarendon Press edd. very well say "this makes the figure suggested by grapple the very reverse of what Shakespeare intended; for grappling with hooks is the act of an enemy and not of a friend." Compare Macbeth, iii. 1. 106:

Grapples you to the heart and love of us.

92 Lines 64, 65:

But do not DULL THY PALM with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd, unpledg'd comrade.

Johnson explains this phrase, "Do not make thy palm callous by shaking every man by the hand;" but of course it is used figuratively for "Do not make friends with everybody" Compare v. 1. 77, 78: "the hand of little employment hath the daintier sense;" Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 201: "stale his palm;" and Cymbeline, i. 6. 106, 107:

Joum gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood.

93. Lines 73, 74:

And they in France of the best rank and station
Are most select and generous, chief in that.

The readings of the old copies differ very much in line 74. Q. 1 has:

Are of a most select and generall chiefe in that;

Q. 2 has:

Are of a most select and generous chief in that;

F. 1:

Are of a most select and generous chieff in that.

The reading and punctuation adopted in our text is that given first by Rowe, and followed by most editors. Collier's MS. has:

Are of a most select and generous choice in that.

Staunton printed sheaf instead of chief, justifying this, at first sight, eccentric emendation by quoting two passages from Ben Jonson, in which sheaf is used figuratively—"class" or "clique." The late Dr. Ingleby approved of Staunton's conjecture, and warmly defended it on the ground that it was another instance of Euphuism in Polonius's speech. "Gentlemen of the first sheaf" was an expression, according to Dr. Ingleby, taken from a sheaf of arrows, used by Euphuists and borrowed from archery; the sheaf being twenty-four arrows. Grant White got out of the difficulty by simply omitting chief altogether and reading:

Are most select and generous in that

This emendation the Cambridge edd. approved of by anticipation; they give it in their Preface, vol. viii. pp. viii, ix, as "what Shakespeare probably wrote," taking the words of and chief in the MS. as alternative readings of in and best in the line above. According to this conjecture the transcriber must have inserted a before most on his own account.

The fact that both Qq. and Ff. agree with Q. 1 in retaining the words of a makes one hesitate to adopt the very simple emendation of Rowe. Tschischwitz thought that the words in that were a portion of a lost line; but it is quite possible that Shakespeare wrote the line with two extra syllables, and omitted to draw his pen through the words of a. In support of Staunton's conjecture it may be added that a sheaf (of arrows) was sometimes written chefe according to Halliwell's Archaic and Provincial Dictionary, though no instance is given of it.

94. Line 83: The time INVITES you; go, your servants TEND—Qq. read invests. Compare iv. 3. 46, 47, below:

The bark is ready, and the wind at help,
The associates tend.

95. Line 106: you have ta'en these tenders for true pay.—Moberly (quoted by Furness, New Variorum Ed. p. 71) says: "In the Dutch war of 1674, Pepys tells us that many English seamen fought on the enemy's side, and were heard during an action to cry, 'Dollars now, no tickets,' the latter being the only pay they had received in their own service. This seems to explain the opposition intended here between tenders and true pay."

96. Line 107: TENDER yourself more dearly; i. e. regard, as in Romeo and Juliet, iii. 1. 74, 75:

And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender
As dearly as my own,—be satisfied.

97. Line 100: RUNNING it thus.—Ff. read Roaming, Qq. have (and are) Wrong. The emendation in the text—an excellent and unquestionable one—is Collier's, first adopted by Dyce.

98. Line 114: With almost all the holy vows of heaven.—Ff. read with all the vows of Heaven, probably a correction made in the course of the play's representation by Shakespeare himself.

99. Line 115: ay, springes to catch woodcocks.—The Clarendon Press edd. quote Gosson, Apologie of the Schoole of Abuse (ed. Arber, p. 72): "When Comedie comes vpon the Stage, Cupide sets vpp a Springe for Woodcookes, which are entangled ere they descrie the line, and caught before they mistrust the snare." Compare Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 92: "Now is the woodcock near the gin."

100. Line 117: Lends the tongue vows: these blazes, daughter.—Two syllables would seem to have dropped out from this line. Coleridge proposed "Go to, these blazes, daughter," or "these blazes, daughter, mark you," either of which might do excellently well—but then, how do we know it is Shakespeare? So many other things would do excellently well too.

101. Line 120: From this time.—So Qq.; Ff. have "For this time Daughter."

102. Line 127: Do not believe his vows; for they are BROKERS.—Cotgrave has "Maquignommer. To play the Broker . . . also, to play the bawd."

103. Line 128: that dye.—So (with varying spellings, dye and dye) the Qq.; Ff. read the eye, using the word, say the Clarendon Press edd., "in the same sense in which it occurs in the Tempest, ii. 1. 55: 'With an eye of green in it,' where it signifies a dash of colour."

104. Line 130: Breathing like sanctified and pious BONDS.—So Qq. Ff. unanimously. In what may be called an unhappy paroxysm of critical ingenuity, Theobald pounced upon this passage, asking indignantly "what idea we can form of a breathing bond being sanctified or pious?" With one wave of his wand he has transformed the innocent and appropriate bonds into the coarse and pleonastic bawds. In this he has been followed by the very wariest of editors; even those miracles of purism, the Cambridge edd., printed bawds without a murmur. Dyce, Singer, Grant White, and Dr. Furness are amongst those who have adopted Theobald's conjecture, and all those, except Dr. Furness, will not even hear of bonds. Malone had the good sense to perceive that the old copies were right; and though, carried away by the general consensus in its favour, we had absolutely printed bawds, a little consideration made us pause. Shakespeare's text, especially in a play for which there are two such good authorities as there are for this in the shape of Q. 2 and F. 1, ought not to be altered unless the sense or rhythm absolutely demands it. Theobald's question is infinitely more ridiculous, when one comes to analyse it, than the old reading could possibly be. Shakespeare is very fond of the word bond, and he uses it constantly as = those sacred ties of affection which exist between two engaged lovers, or husband and wife, or brother and sister. What can be more properly called sanctified and pious than the bond which is hallowed by a sacrament? Among the many passages which could be quoted, we may take Troilus and Cressida, v. 2. 154-156:

Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven:
Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself;
The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd.

As for breathing, it has here, as often in Shakespeare, the sense of "speaking," e.g. Merchant of Venice, iii. 4. 27: "breath'd a secret vow;" King John, iv. 3. 66, 67:

And breathing to his breathless excellence
The incense of a vow.

Again, the very reasons brought forward to support Theobald's emendation, that Polonius has just compared Hamlet's vows to brokers, and called them "mere importations of unholy suits," surely militate against any alteration in the text; for why should Polonius be so careful to use to his daughter polite periphrases, or synonyms for the word bawd, and then in the very next line employ the very word itself? Hamlet (iii. 1. 111-113) uses this word to Ophelia: "for the power of beauty will sooner transform honesty from what it is to a bawd," &c.; but, after his assumed madness, his language towards her is not over-delicate; while Polonius seems always careful to avoid any coarse expression to her. Even when he is big with his wonderful jest about tender (see above, lines 107-109) he avoids putting his meaning into anything like rude language; and throughout the scene of which this passage forms part, he scrupulously avoids any coarse phrase. Lastly, the word brokers might surely suggest the word bonds. It is quite true that bawds might have been written bawds, and might easily have been mistaken for bands, the two words bands and bonds being more or less interchangeable; but there is no need to suppose that there was a gratuitous misprint where all the old copies are unanimous, and where the reading, as printed, makes excellent sense.

105. Line 133: so SLANDER any MOMENT'S leisure — Slander is here evidently used for misuse. Note conversely the use of misuse for revile or slander, as in Taming of the Shrew, ii. 1. 159, 160:

with twenty such vile terms,

As she had studied to misuse me so;

As You Like It, iv. 1. 205, 206: "You have simply misus'd our sex in your love-prate." Q. 2, Q. 3, and Ff. read moment—the most obvious of misprints, corrected in the later Qq., and piously preserved by a few later editors.

ACT I. SCENE 4.

106. Line 1: The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.—So Qq.; F. 1 reads is it very cold? This reading was accepted by Mr. Irving in his representation of Hamlet, and raised some discussion at the time, not generally in favour of the innovation.

107. Line 2: It is A nipping and an EAGER air.—Qq. omit a. Eager is the French aigre, here meaning sharp; it is used again in i. 5. 69, where it means sour. (See note 154 below.) Cotgrave has: "Aigre: Eagre, sharpe, tart, biting, sourer."

108. Lines 8, 9:

The king doth WAKE to-night, and takes his rouse, Keeps WASSAIL, and the swaggering UP-SPRING reels.

Wake means to hold a late revel, to drink late; wassail is a drinking-bout. Both words (as substantives) occur in Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 318: "at wakes and wassails." Up-spring, says Elze (ed. of Chapman's Alphonsus, p. 144, where the word occurs), was "the 'Hüpfaut,' the last and consequently the wildest dance at the old German merry-makings." The English word is a literal rendering of the German. Schmidt, in his Shakespeare Lexicon, characterizes the "Hüpfaut" as "an apocryphal dance," and thinks that this German name "may as well be translated from upspring" as the reverse. Dr. Elze replies conclusively in his edition of Hamlet, p. 133, showing that the English word (which is not known to occur in any but the two passages cited) is more than half a century younger than the German name. Caldecott thinks the term is connected with upsy-freeze, so familiar to us in Elizabethan comedies. See his edition, pp. 28-30 of the notes, where several interesting extracts from contemporary accounts of Danish drinking customs will be found.

109. Line 11: The KETTLE-DRUM and trumpet thus bray out.—Douce (Illustrations of Sh. ii. 205) quotes Cleaveland's Fuscara, or the Bee Errant:

Tuning his draughts with drowsie hums
As Danes carowse by kettle-drums

The kettle-drum, says Elze (Hamlet, p. 184), "seems originally to have been a Danish instrument, and to have been introduced into England either by Queen Anne, or by the King of Denmark, who came twice to London on a visit to K. James I."

110. Line 14: But—So Qq; Ff. have And.

111. Lines 17-38 are omitted in Ff.

112. Line 19: They CLEPE us DRUNKARDS.—Clepe is found in Q. 6; the earlier Qq. print clip. The word is from Anglo-Saxon "cleopian," to call. The spelling of the earlier Qq. probably represents the common pronunciation of the word. Compare Forby, Vocabulary of East Anglia, 1830: "Clepe, v. to call. The word is used by our boys at play, who clepe (or, as they commonly pronounce it, clip) sides, or opposite parties, at ball, &c." There is most likely a side-glance here at the drinking habits of the English. The Danes, however, did enjoy the reputation of being famous tipplers. Compare Othello, ii. 3. 78-88, and see note 105 to that play. The Clarendon Press edd. quote a passage from Beaumont and Fletcher (The Captain, iii. 2), in which the English and the Danes are cited as apparently the most notorious drunkards of their time:

Loe, Are the Englishmen
Such stubborn drinkers?
Piso, Not a leak at sea
Can suck more liquor: you shall have their children
Christen'd in mull'd sack, and at five years old
Able to knock a Dane down

113. Line 32: Being nature's livery, or fortune's STAR.—Theobald, unnecessarily, suggested that star was a misprint for scar. Rutson takes the word star to be used in the sense in which we apply the word to horses: "the white star or mark so common on the forehead of a dark coloured horse, is usually produced by making a scar on the place." Compare Cymbeline, v. 5. 364:

Upon his neck a mole, a sanguine star.

114. Lines 36-38:

the DRAM OF EALE
DOTH ALL THE NOBLE SUBSTANCE OF A DOUBT
To his own scandal.

This is the reading of Q. 2, Q. 3; Q. 4, Q. 5 substitute ease for eale. The Cambridge edd. chronicle forty conjectural emendations of this passage, which they themselves, in common with many editors, regard as hopelessly corrupt. Furness, in his New Variorum Ed., fills more than six pages with conjectures and comments. If the lines are, as seems most probable, corrupt, it can at least be said that nothing convincing or final has yet been proposed in the way of emendation. When every new commentator on Shakespeare has a new reading of this passage to offer, and no commentator has succeeded in impressing his own view on any, or many, of his fellows, it would be preposterous to make any variation in the text, such as it is, of the earlier Qq, which, in the unlucky absence of a Folio text, remains our only approach to original authority. Something, however, may be done to explain this puzzling reading. In the Qq. of ii. 2 627-629, where the Ff. print:

The Spirit that I have seen
May be the Duell, and the Duel hath power
T' assume a pleasing shape—

we read

The spirit that I have seen
May be a deale, and the deale hath power, &c

If devil may be misprinted deale, may not emi be misprinted eale? The error in both cases probably came from a slipshod and hasty pronunciation, perhaps a colloquialism. The remainder of the passage admits of at least two explanations. One is, that doth is used, transitively, as a verb, not as an auxiliary; thus doth it of a doubt would mean "affects it with a doubt." Dr. George Mac Donald, who takes this view, compares Measure for Measure, i. 3. 40-43:

I have on Angelo impos'd the office;
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the fight
To do in slander

That is, says Dr. Mac Donald, to affect it (my nature) with slander, to bring it into slander. "Angelo may punish in my name, but, not being present, I shall not be accused of cruelty, which would be to slander my own nature" (Hamlet, 1885, p. 45). The passage quoted, however, is no very certain support. The Cambridge edd. obelize it, and Hamner's emendation (it instead of in) is generally adopted. Strachey, Shakespeare's Hamlet, 1848, apparently understands the passage in Hamlet in the same sense; in a note to p. 44, on which he has quoted the lines as they stand in the Qq. (only replacing eale by ill), he says: "This it appears is the genuine text: the editors all adopt Steevens's conjectural emendation 'often dout,' i.e. often do out, quench. But the old text seems to me better: the noble substance is not quenched or destroyed, but 'soiled,' 'o'er-leavened,' 'corrupted,' and so its proper excellence brought into doubt." The other explanation is brought forward by Professor Hiram Corson, of Cornell University, in his Jottings on the Text of Hamlet (Ithaca: privately printed, 1874), pp. 13, 14: "All the difficulty of the passage is removed, I think, by understanding 'noble,' not as an adjective, as all commentators have understood it, qualifying 'substance,' but as a noun opposed to 'eale,' and the object of 'substance,' a verb of which 'doth' is its auxiliary. Thus: 'the dram of eale doth all the noble, substance of [i.e. 'with,' a sense common in the English of the time,] 'a doubt' [which works] 'to his own scandal.' 'Substance' is used in the sense of 'imbue with a certain essence'; 'his' is a neuter genitive, standing for 'noble,' and = 'it.' The dram of ill transubstantiates the noble, essences it to its own scandal. In regard to the use of 'of' and 'to,' see Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, rev. and enl. ed. §§ 171 and 186.

"The use of 'substance,' in the sense of 'essence,' was, of course, sufficiently common, and had been for more than two centuries, to justify the interpretation given. In Macbeth, i. 5. 50, we have 'sightless substances' = 'invisible essences,' 'sightless' being used objectively. 'Being of one substance with the Father.' Book of Common Prayer. Chaucer, in The Prologe of the Nonne Prestes Tale (l. 14809 of Tyrwhitt's edition, l 16289 of Wright's) uses the word to express the essential character or nature of a man. The Host objects to the Monk's Tale, as being too dull for the occasion; and, that the fault may not be thought to lie with himself, says,

'And wel I wot the substance is in me,
If eny thing schal wel reported be'

That is, I am so substantiated, so constituted, so tempered, such is my cast of spirit, that I can appreciate and enjoy, as well as the next man, a good story well told." This is decidedly ingenious, but it is a pity that Mr. Corson is unable to show us any example of the verb to substantiate. That, he says, rather rashly, "matters not. The free functional application of words which characterized the Elizabethan English, allowed, as every English scholar knows, of the use of any noun, adjective, or neuter verb, as an active verb."

115 Line 42: Be thy INTENTS wicked or charitable.—So Qq.; Ff. read events, which some fancifully defend as = issues

116. Lines 44, 45:

*I'll call thee Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me!*

This is, practically, the punctuation of Qq and Ff. An anonymous writer in the St. James's Chronicle, Oct 15, 1761 (quoted in Pye's Comments on the Commentators, 1807, p 312), suggested that the pause should come after the word father. There is much plausibility in this conjecture.

117. Line 48: cerements.—F. 1 has cerments; the later Ff. cearments. Compare Merchant of Venice, ii. 7. 51:

To rib her ceredloth in the obscure grave;
and the note 178 to that play.

118 Line 49: Wherein we saw thee quietly IN-URN'D.—The beautiful word in-urn'd comes to us from the Ff.; all the Qq reading merely interr'd.

119. Line 52: That thou, dead corpse, again, IN COMPLETE STEEL.—Compare S. Rowley, When You See Mee, You Know Mee, l 3 back:

Set forwards there, regard the Emperors state,
First in our Court weele banquet merrily,
Then mount on steeds, and girt in complete steels,
Weele tugge at Barriers, Tilt and Tournament.

120. Line 61: It WAVES you to a more removed ground.—So all the Qq; Ff. read wafts (as in line 78), which is not a misprint, but another form of the same word. Compare Comedy of Errors, ii. 2. 111: "who wafts us yonder?"

121. Line 63: then I WILL follow it.—Ff. have will I.

122. Line 70: SUMMIT of the cliff.—This obvious correction of the sonnet of Qq., sonnet of Ff., is due to Rowe. The Qq. spell cliff, cleefe.

123. Line 71: That BETTLES.—So Ff.; Qq. have bettles and bettes.

124. Line 72: assume.—Ff. have assumes.

125. Line 73: Which might DEPRIVE YOUR SOVEREIGNTY OF REASON.—This means, deprive your reason of its sovereignty or supreme control. Warburton well compares the Eikon Basilike: "at once to betray the sovereignty of reason in my soul." For the peculiar construction compare Lucrece, 1186:

'T is honour to deprive dishonour'd life

Compare, too, Marston, Antonio and Melinda, part i. iii 1:

What son, what comfort that she can deprive!

126. Lines 75-78 are omitted in Ff., possibly, as Delius suggests, because Shakespeare had afterwards elaborated the substance of them in Lear, iv. 6 11-24

127 Line 80: Hold off your HANDS.—So. Qq.; Ff. print hand.

128 Line 82: artery—This is the spelling of Q 6 Q 2, Q. 3 have arture; Q. 4 artyre; Q. 5, F. 4 attire; F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 Artire. Dr. George Mac Donald suggests that the right word is arture, and that it was coined by Shakespeare from "artus, a joint—arcere, to hold together, adjective arctus, tight. Arture, then, stands for juncture. This perfectly fits. In terror the weakest parts are the joints, for their artures are not hardy" (Hamlet, p 49). Artery, however, is spelt artyre in Drayton's Elegies, ed 1631, p. 298

129. Line 83: As hardy as the NEMEAN lion's nerve.—The same incorrect accentuation of Nemean occurs in Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 1 90:

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar.

130 Line 89: Have after.—Compare Richard III. iii 2. 92: "Come, come, have with you." The Clarendon Press edd. quote from Foxe's Book of Martyrs, Latimer's saying to Ridley on the way to the stake: "Have after, as fast as I can follow."

ACT I. SCENE 5.

131. Line 1: WHERE wilt thou lead me?—So Ff.; Qq have Whether; and the Q. of 1676, Whither, which some editors adopt.

132. Line 11: confind to FAST in fires.—Compare Chaucer, The Persones Tale (ed. Tyrwhitt, p. 291): "And moreover the misese of helle shall be in defeaute of mete and drink." Steevens quotes Nash, Pierce Penniless his Supplication to the Devil: "Whether it be a place of horror, stench and darkness, where men see meat, but can get none, or are ever thirsty," &c.

133. Line 18: knotted.—So all the Qq.; Ff. have knotty.

134 Line 19: on end—Qq. and Ff., except Q. 1, have an end, a more archaic form of the same particle. Pope adopted the customary modern form from the spurious Q.

135. Lines 19, 20:

*And each particular hair to stand on end,
Like quills upon the FRETFUL PORPENTINE.*

Porpentine is the reading of Qq. and Ff., as it is invariably in Shakespeare. Both forms of the word were in use. Compare the closely parallel passage in The Merry Devil of Edmonton, Induction, 2-4:

O, what a trémbling horror strikes my hart!
My stiffned haire stands vpright on my head,
As doe the bristles of a porcapine.

Milton uses the same figure in Samson Agonistes, 1188:

Though all thy hairs
Were bushes rang'd like those that ridge the back
Of chaft wild boars, or ruff'd porcupines

Qq read fearfull instead of the fretfull of the Ff, and have been followed by one or two editors. The word, however applicable, seems to me more commonplace than the F reading

136 Lines 21, 22:

But this ETERNAL BLAZON must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.

Eternal blazon seems to be used in the sense of a revelation or description of eternity. Some understand it in the sense of "infernal," as in Julius Cæsar, i. 2. 160: "The eternal devil;" and Othello, iv. 2. 130: "some eternal villain." With this sense Rolfe amusingly compares the Yankee slang "'tarnal." Blazon is used as here in Much Ado, ii. 1. 307. See note 128 to that play.

137. Line 22: List, list.—So Qq; Ff have list Hamlet.

138. Line 24.—Ff, as usual, substitute Heaven for God.

139 Line 29: HASTE ME to know't.—This is Rowe's emendation. Qq. print Hast me, F. 1 Hast, hast me; F. 2, F. 3, F. 4 Haste, haste me. Ff. have know it.

140. Lines 29-31:

that I, with wings as swift
As meditation or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge

Compare Willy Beguiled, Prologue: "I'll make him fly swifter than meditation;" and Dekker, The Honest Whore, part i. 1. 10:

I was, on meditation's spotless wings,
Upon my journey thither

—Works, ed. Dyce, vol. viii. p. 79.

141. Line 38: That ROOTS itself in ease on Lethe wharf.—All the Qq have rootes, Ff rots, which is, to say the least, as good a word. There does not seem much to choose between them. Each has a beauty and aptness of its own. Stevens quotes from Beaumont and Fletcher, The Humorous Lieutenant, iv. 3, a confirmation of the Ff. reading: "This dull root pluck'd from Lethe flood" (Works, ed. Dyce, vol. vi. p. ?), and Caldecott compares with the Qq. reading Antony and Cleopatra, i. 4. 47: "To rot itself with motion"

142. Line 35: 'T is given out that, sleeping in MY orchard.
—Ff. read It's and mine.

143. Line 41: MY uncle!—Ff., as usual, print mine.

144. Line 43: With witchcraft of his WIT, WITH traitorous gifts.—Wit is Pope's emendation of the wits of Qq. Ff., a misprint evidently derived from the plural gifts just following. F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 have hath instead of with; F. 4 reads and.

145 Line 45: to his.—So Qq., F. 3, F. 4, F. 1 prints to this; F. 2 to this.

146. Line 47: what a falling-off.—Qq. omit a.

147. Line 50: decline.—See note 79 to Comedy of Errors.

148. Line 55: So LUST, though to a radiant ANGEL link'd.—Ff. and Q. 1 read Lust; the other Qq have but. Qq. misprint angle.

149 Line 56: sate.—So F. 1, F. 2; F. 3, F. 4 have seat, and Qq. sort.

150 Line 60: My custom always in the afternoon.—So Ff. and Q. 1; the other Qq. have of, which is a quite correct expression, and as likely to come from Shakespeare as in.

151. Line 61: my SECURE hour.—Secure is here used in the sense of the Latin securus, unguarded, careless. Staunton quotes More's Life of Edward V.: "When this lord was most afraid, he was most secure; and when he was secure, danger was over his head." Sécure is accented on its first syllable in Othello, iv. 1. 72.

152. Lines 61-64:

Upon my sécure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed HEBENON in a vial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distilment

Hebenon is the reading of Ff.; all the Qq print hebona. No such word as hebenon or hebona has ever been met with elsewhere, but the word "hebon" (from which hebenon might have been corrupted) is found in Marlowe's Jew of Malta, iii. 4:

As fatal be it to her as the draught
Of which great Alexander drunk, and died:
And with her let it work like Borgia's wine,
Whereof his sire, the Pope, was poisoned.
In few, the blood of Hydra, Lerna's bane:
The juice of Hebon, and Cocytus' breath,
And all the poisons of the Stygian pool
Break from the fiery kingdom.

—Works, ed. Cunningham, pp. 104, 105; ed. Dyce, p. 164

"Heben" is found in Spenser, i. 3 (Introduction), and ii. 7. 52, and "ebene" in Holland's Pliny, xxv. 4, in both cases meaning ebony, while (as Douce notes) the chapter on the wood ebony in the English ed. by Batman of Bartholomæus de Proprietatibus Ribus, is entitled "De Ebena." We have no reason, however, to suppose that ebony was ever regarded as poisonous. Grey understood hebenon to be used by metathesis for henebon, or henebane, of which Pliny says: "An oil is made of the seed thereof, which if it be but dropped into the eares, is ynough to trouble the braine" (Holland's translation, ad loc. cit.) Elze suggests that Shakespeare may have derived the device of poisoning through the ears from Marlowe's Edward II. v. 4:

'T is not the first time I have killed a man:
I learn'd in Naples how to poison flowers:
To strangle with a lawn thrust down the throat;
To pierce the wind-pipe with a needle's point;
Or, whilst one is asleep, to take a quill,
And blow a little poison in his ears:
Or open his mouth, and pour quicksilver down

—Works, ed. Dyce, p. 217.

It may be noted that in the old German play on the subject of Hamlet, of which an account is given in the Introduction, the word ebeno occurs in sc. v. vi., as the name of the poison by which the murder had been effected. I quote from Furness's translation: "behold, my brother came, thirsty for the crown, and had with him the subtle [subtilen] juice of so-called Hebenon [ebeno].¹ This oil, or juice, has this effect: that as soon as a few drops of it mix with the blood of man, they at once clog the veins and destroy life" (vol. II. p. 125)

¹ Dr. Latham renders this: "the subtle (subtilen) juice of ebenon (ebeno)"

153. Line 68: posset.—So Ff.; Qq. read possessa.

154. Line 69: EAGER droppings into milk.—Ff. print Aygre, which is nearer the French form of the word, aigre. See note 147 above. Compare Scot, Discoverie of Witchcraft, p. 249: "[A charme against vineager. That wine wax not eager, write on the vessell, Gustate & videte, quoniam suavis est Dominus."

155. Line 71: bark'd.—Ff. read bak'd.

156. Line 77: Unhouse'll'd, disappointed, unanel'd.—Unhouse'll'd=without having taken the sacrament; it is from the Anglo-Saxon husel, the sacrament. Disappointed=unappointed, unprepared. Compare Measure for Measure, iii. 1. 60:

Therefore your best appointment make with speed;

i.e. preparation for death. Unanel'd=without having received extreme unction. Nares cites Sir Thomas More, Works, p. 345: "The extreme vnccion or anelynge and confirmation, he sayed be no sacraments of the church." Compare Morte d'Arthur (vol. iii. p. 350, ed. Wright): "So when hee was houseled and eneled, and had all that a christian man ought to have, hee prayed the bishop that his fellows might beare his body unto Joyousgard."

157. Line 80: O, horrible! O, horrible! most horrible!—Some have conjectured that this line should be given to Hamlet, and Knight states that it was always so spoken by Garrick. I do not see the slightest reason for the change, but many against it—this in chief, that the course of the versification would be broken, very awkwardly, if this line were spoken as an interruption of the speech in which it occurs. There may be, however, a slight shade of evidence in favour of the change in the reading of Q. 1, where Hamlet is made to utter an exclamation, though not the one in the text.

158. Line 84: But, HOWSOEVER thou PURSU'ST this act.—Qq. print housomever (now the usual vulgarism), and all but Q. 6 read pursues.

159. Line 89: The glow-worm shows the MATIN to be near.—Matin, used here for morning, is usually in the plural, matins, and the Clarendon Press edd. say that they can find no instance of this word in the sense here used. Elze, however, quotes Milton, L'Allegro, 114:

Ere the first cock his matin rings;

and Paradise Lost, vi. 525, 526:

and to arms

The matin-trumpet sung.

Neither of these passages is an absolutely precise parallel; in the former, matin being used in the common sense of matins, in the latter adjectively.

160. Line 91: Adieu, adieu! Hamlet, remember me.—The reading and punctuation in the text are Rowe's. Ff. read as above, but with a colon after Hamlet. Qq. print Adieu, adieu, adieu, remember me, which seems to me less expressive than the reading of the Ff.

161. Line 95: stiffly.—Qq. print swiftly.

162. Line 96: while.—Qq. have whiles.

163. Line 104: yes.—Ff. read yes, yes.

164. Lines 107–110:

My tables,—meet it is I set it down,

That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;

At least I'm sure it may be so in Denmark: [Writing.
So, uncle, there you are

Tables (i.e. tablets, memorandum-books) are frequently alluded to in Elizabethan literature, and seem to have been in very general use. Compare II. Henry IV. iv. 1. 201, 202:

And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,

And keep no tell-tale to his memory

Opinions are divided as to what Hamlet wrote on his tables, and why he is represented as writing at all. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 128, says: "The stage direction (Writing), which follows here, shows that Hamlet was intended to record something of what proceeded on his tablets, and the very fact of his doing so is a proof of the nervous agitation under which he laboured; his furious indignation against his uncle found vent in this mere act of writing him down a 'smiling villain.'"

165. Line 109: I'm.—So Ff.; Qq. have I am.

166. Line 113: HEAVEN secure him!—Qq. have Heavens

167. Line 114: Ham. So be it!—This is given to Hamlet in Qq., and to Marcellus in Ff. Editors have generally decided in favour of the latter, but the former seems to me much more effective. I take it to be spoken by Hamlet in a low tone to himself, as he hears Horatio's benediction—a moment's solemn earnestness in secret before he assumes the mask of levity before his friends. Taken in this sense, the words have a very significant weight of meaning.

168. Line 115: Már. Illo, ho, ho, my lord!—Ff., and many editors, give this line to Horatio. But I think it agrees much better with Marcellus, and comes in the dialogue more naturally from him, so that I have adopted the reading of Qq.

169. Line 116: Hillo, ho, ho, boy! come, BIRD, come.—Q. 1 prints boy, the other Qq. and. Hamlet mocks the shouts of his friends with terms of falconry. Compare the Birth of Merlin, ii. 1. (Tauchnitz ed. p. 292), where the clown shouts "So ho, boy, so ho, so ho!" and is answered by Prince Uter (within) "So ho, boy, so ho, illo, ho, illo, ho!" Hamlet's behaviour in the remainder of this scene is well described by Strachey (Shakespeare's Hamlet, pp. 45, 46): "His head is, as he himself says, distracted; his words are 'wild and hurling;' he tries to relieve his overstrained mind by passing from the terrific to the ludicrous, taking out his note-book to make a memorandum that 'a man may smile and smile, and be a villain, at least in Denmark;' answering his friends with a falconer's hillo; and interrupting the solemnity of swearing secrecy with jokes at the 'fellow in the cellarage,' and the 'old mole that works i' the ground so fast.' It is, [as Coleridge says] 'a sort of cunning bravado, bordering on the flights of delirium: for you may, perhaps, observe that Hamlet's wildness is but half false; he plays that subtle trick of pretending to act only when he is very near really being what he acts." I may quote here some of the brilliant and expressive sentences in which Mr George Meredith sums up the character of Hamlet (The Tragic Comedians, vol. 1. p. 84). "Before the ghost walked he was an elementary hero; one puff of action would have whiffed away his melancholy. After it, he was a dizzy moralizer, waiting for the winds to blow him to his deed—or out. The apparition of his father to him poisoned a sluggish run of blood, and that venom in the blood distracted a head steeped in Wittenberg philosophy. With metaphysics in one and poison in the other, with the outer world opened on him and this world stirred to confusion, he wore the semblance of madness; he was throughout sane; sick, but never with his reason dethroned."

170. Line 133: These are but wild and WHIRLING words, my lord—Qq (except Q 1, which has wherling) print whurling; Ff hurting.

171. Line 136: Horatio—Ff, by a natural confusion with the line above, read my Lord

172. Line 147: Upon my sword—In chivalrous times oaths were very generally taken on the cross of the sword. References to the custom are often met with in the Elizabethan dramas and old poems. See Caldecott, notes, pp. 88, 89. Elze quotes, very aptly, Kyd's Spanish Tragedy, act ii sc. 1, where Lorenzo makes Pedringano swear in the same manner. Lorenzo says "Swear on this cross, that what thou say'st is true," and after Pedringano has done so, adds:

In hope thine oath is true, here's thy reward:
But if I prove thee perjur'd and unjust,
This very sword, whereon thou took'st thine oath,
Shall be the worker of thy tragedy

—Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. v. p. 41.

173. Line 150: Ah, ha, boy! say'st thou so? art thou there, TRUE-PENNY?—This line is evidently parodied or plagiarized in Marston's Malcontent, 1604, iii. 3:

Illo, ho, ho, ho! arte there, olde true penny?

The word true-penny, says Collier, "is (as I learn from some Sheffield authorities) a mining term, and signifies a particular indication in the soil of the direction in which ore is to be found. Hence Hamlet may with propriety address the Ghost underground by that name." Forby, in his Vocabulary of East Anglia, gives it as "hearty old fellow; staunch and trusty; true to his purpose or pledge." The word was colloquially used in a familiar sense, and thus, no doubt with a recollection of Hamlet, Congreve represents Valentine, counterfeiting madness, as addressing his father, Love for Love, iv. 10. "A ha! Old True-penny, say'st thou so: thou hast nick'd it" (ed. 1735, p. 92).

174. Line 156: Hic et ubique?—See note 7 in reference to the courteous mediæval practice of addressing ghosts in Latin—probably, though I have not met with the suggestion in print, because one is not always sure of the nationality of ghosts, and it was therefore both polite and sensible to speak to them in the language of general communication, which in the middle ages was Latin.

175. Lines 157–160.—The arrangement in the text is that of the Ff. Lines 159, 160 are transposed in Qq.

176. Line 161: Swear.—So Ff. and Q. 1; the other Qq. have Swear by his sword.

177. Line 162: Well said, OLD MOLE! canst work i' the EARTH so fast?—Elze compares Ford, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, ii. 2: "Work you that way, old mole? then I have the wind of you" (ed. Hartley Coleridge, 1840, p. 31), an evident allusion to the passage in the text. Earth is the reading of all the Qq; Ff. have ground

178. Line 167: your philosophy—So Qq.; Ff. read our, which seems less effective than the half-colloquial, half-personal your.

179. Lines 169–188.—It has always seemed to me singular, that anyone who has read these lines can be found to defend the notion that Hamlet was really mad. Let mad-doctors say what they please, here is Shakespeare's own account of the matter, and anything more clear and definite could not be imagined. Hamlet here, once for all, defends himself against all misconstruction, by expressly intimating that he intends, for reasons of his own, to bear himself oddly and strangely, "To put an antic disposition on." I am quite aware that persons who are really mad can be found to express themselves, at times, quite sanely, even on the subject of their own malady—like the half-witted pauper who confessed to Thoreau that he was "deficient in intellect." But a possible symptom in insanity, and a positive fact in a play, are two quite different things; it must be remembered that we are reading a play, constructed to be understood; and it is obvious that Shakespeare has introduced this passage at the beginning of his play in order that the purport of what was to come might be quite clearly understood. To say, after carefully considering this passage, that Hamlet was really mad, is equivalent to saying that Shakespeare did not know what he was about in his own work.

180. Line 174: this head-shake.—So all the Qq. except Q. 6; Ff. have thus, head shake.

181. Line 177: "There be, an if THEY might."—So all the Qq.; Ff. print there—the word being doubtless caught from the earlier part of the line.

182. Lines 179–181:

this not to do,
So grace and mercy at your most need help you,
Swear.

This, practically, is the reading of Ff; Qq. print this doe swear in place of this not to do, and omit the subsequent Swear.

183. Line 186: friending.—This word, apparently a mere variant of friendship or friendliness, does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

184. Line 3: marvell's, an abbreviation of marvellous.—Q. 2, Q. 3 have marvells; Q. 4 marvelous; F. 1 maruels; F. 2, F. 3, F. 4 marvels. For the sake of the metre, the word was pronounced as a dissyllable by the actor.

185. Line 4: to make inquiry.—This is the correction of Q. of 1676; the earlier Qq. read to make inquire, an elliptical expression which Shakespeare might have used; the Ff. you make inquiry = (if) you make inquiry. Shakespeare only uses inquiry in one other passage, in Measure for Measure, v. 1. 5, 6:

We have made inquiry of you, and we hear
Such goodness of your justice.

186. Line 7: Inquire me first what DANSKERS are in Paris.—The word Dansk (of Danish origin) occurs in Webster's White Devil, ii. 1: "like a Danske drummer."

187. Line 25: fencing.—The mention of fencing among the "wanton, wild, and usual slips" of youth has puzzled some editors, but no doubt, as Malone remarks, the meaning of Polonius is, that quarrelling and brawling which was of frequent occurrence at the fencing-schools, and a common consequence of too boastful a skill in the art; he quotes Gosson, Schoole of Abuse, 1579: "The cunning of fencers is now applied to quarrelling: they think themselves no men, if for stirring of a straw, they prove not their valure upon some bodies fleshe." Elze quotes Marston's Insatiate Countesse, act iv (Works, ed Halliwell, vol. iii. p. 164), where "Fencer" is used, side by side with "dogg-killer" and "monster," as a term of abuse

188. Line 28: no.—Omitted in Qq.

189. Line 31: but breathe his faults so QUAINLY.—Quaintly is used here for "artfully," as in Merchant of Venice, ii. 4. 6:

"T is vile, unless it may be quaintly ordered
See Midsummer Night's Dream, note 132.

190. Line 34: A savageness in UNRECLAIMED blood.—Compare with this use of unreclaimed=untamed, that of reclaimed (in the corresponding sense of "tamed") which occurs in Romeo and Juliet, iv. 2. 47:

Since this same wayward girl is so reclaim'd;
and II. Henry VI. v. 2. 54, 55:

And beauty that the tyrant oft reclaims
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax

191. Line 38: a fetch of WARRANT.—So Ff.; Qq. read wit, which makes excellent sense. A fetch of warrant would mean a warranted device; a fetch of wit would mean an artful one

192. Line 44: breathe.—This is Rowe's correction of the breath of Qq. Ff.

193. Line 50: By the mass.—Omitted in Ff.

194. Lines 52, 53: at "friend or so," and "gentleman."—This is omitted in Qq.

195. Line 55: closes with you thus.—So Ff.; Qq. omit with you.

196. Line 63: carp.—So Qq.; Ff. have Cape.

197. Line 65: With WINDLASSES and with assays of bias.—Windlass, or windlace, as it should be spelt, was a word used in Shakespeare's time meaning "a circuit," "a circuitous way." Hunter (vol. ii. p. 227) quotes a passage from the 7th book of Golding's Ovid:

And like a wily fox he runs not forth directly out,
Nor makes a windlasse over all the champion fields about,
But doubling and indenting still avoids his enemy's lips,
And turning short, as swift about as spinning wheel he whips,
To disappoint the snatch.

Skeat says that this word was distinct from the word windlass, "a machine for raising heavy weights." The latter word is found in Baret's Alvearie, 1573: "A windlasse or pulley to drawe wy heavy thinges;" no other form of the word being given. Minshew, 1599, has "Windlas or pulley, vide Carillo;" and under the latter "Also the truckle, pully or windle wherwith a thing is easily drawn wy on high." The true Middle English form of this word, according to Skeat, was windas, while windlace is compounded of wind and lace, the latter word being used in its older sense of a snare, or a bit of twisted string.

Assays of bias, a metaphor taken from the game of bowls, referring to the "twist" which is communicated to the bowl by the lead in one end of it, by the skilful use of which a player makes the bowl curve in whichever direction he wishes to send it.

198. Line 69: God be wi' you!—Qq. have "God buy ye," and F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 "God buy you," which mode of contracting be wi' into buy is frequent in Shakespeare and in the writers of his time. It occurs below, in the next scene, line 575, when Hamlet dismisses Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. It is only worth noticing as being one of the last stages in the transition of the common phrase God be with ye before it assumed its present form Good bye.

199. Line 71: Observe his inclination in yourself.—Surely it is needless to take this in any but the most obvious sense—"do you yourself observe his inclination." Both the meanings given by the Clarendon Press edd seem to me very far-fetched: "Judge of his temptations by your own," or possibly, "Conform your own conduct to his inclinations." Polonius has just been instructing Reynaldo how he is to find out about Laertes from others; he now calls him back to add, Observe his inclination, too, on your own account. The use of the word in does not seem to me to present any real difficulty.

200. Line 75: O my lord, my lord.—So Qq.; Ff. have the weaker reading Alas, a change made for the sake of the metre.

201. Line 77: chamber—So Ff.; Qq. have closet, a word which was already becoming obsolete in the sense in which it is used in the New Testament, e.g. in Matthew vi. 6: "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet."

202. Line 95: As it did seem to shatter all his BULK.—Ff. have That. For bulk compare Richard III. i. 4. 40, and see note 166 to that play. Cotgrave has: "Buste: the whole bulke or body of a man from his face to his middle."

203. Line 97: And, with his head over his SHOULDER turn'd.—So Q. 2, Q. 3; all the other Qq. and the Ff. have shoulders. In line 101 below Ff. omit come (the syllable probably being supplied by a pause on the part of the actor) In line 111 Ff. have (probably by a blunder) speed instead of heed.

204. Line 112: quoted.—So Ff.; Qq. have coted (Q. 6 coated). Cotgrave has "Quoter. To quote, or marke in the margint, to note by the way." Compare Romeo and Juliet, i. 4. 31:

What curious eye doth quote deformities?

On the verb to cote, as distinguished from to quote, see Love's Labour's Lost, note 116. In this same line feard is the reading of Qq., preferable to the fear of Ff.

205. Line 114: By heaven.—So all the Qq.; Ff. read It seems, probably in order to avoid the oath

206 Line 115: To CAST beyond ourselves in our opinions—To cast is explained by the Clarendon edd. as to "contrive," "design," "plan," and they quote Spenser's Faerie
Queene, i. 5. 12:

Of all attonce he cast aveng'd to be,

but can cast be separated here from beyond, and is not the meaning rather "to get out of our depth," "to overreach ourselves," with the idea perhaps of casting or throwing a quoit or a dart beyond the mark, as well as the idea of "calculation," which we have in the compound word forecast, still in use, and in such a well-known expression, now out of date, as "to cast a nativity?" Baret (1573) gives a number of meanings for to cast, such as "to-muse and consider upon" (=versare animo), "to conjecture," "to devine," &c.

207 Lines 118, 119:

*This must be known; which, being kept close, might move
More grief to hide than hate to utter love*

The Clarendon Press edd. well say: "In the couplets which conclude scenes the sense is frequently sacrificed to the rhyme. The sense here seems to be—Hamlet's mad conduct might cause more grief if it were hidden than the revelation of his love for Ophelia would cause hatred, i.e. on the part of the King and Queen. Yet the Queen afterwards expresses her approval of the match, iii. 1. 88. Compare also, v. 1. [260-280]." Whatever the sense may be, Shakespeare seems to have taken very little trouble to make it clear 208. Line 120: Come.—So Qq.; the word is omitted in Ff.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

209. Line 1: Welcome, dear Rosencrantz and Guilden-stern!—"The poet, no doubt," says Elze (pp. 149, 150), "learnt these names from some of his friends who had been in Denmark, either as players or in some other capacity, such as the two actors Pope and Bryan, the celebrated musician Dowland, the no less celebrated architect Inigo Jones, and others. See Cohn, Shakespeare in Germany, p. xxiii, seq., and my Biography of Shakespeare, p. 162 and 175, seq. At a later date a Danish courtier or ambassador of the name of Rosencrantz is reported to have attended the coronation of James I. For curiosity's sake it may be added that two young Danish noblemen of the names of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern were students at Padua in Shakespeare's time; the former in 1587-9, the latter in 1603. See Jahrbuch der Deutschen Shakespeare-Gesellschaft, xiii, 155." The form Rosencrantz is due to Malone; the Qq. read Rosenercrans (no doubt by a misprint for Rosenercrans), and F. 1 has Rosin-crance, F. 2 Rosineros, F. 3, F. 4 Rosineros.

210. Line 6: SITH NOR the exterior nor the inward man.—Ff. have Since not. Shakespeare uses sith and since indifferently. In line 12 it is the Qq. that have sith, the Ff. since.

211. Line 10: dream of.—So Qq.; Ff. have deem, which gives good sense. With the superfluous of, compare Richard III. i. 3. 6: "what would betide of me?"

212 Line 12: And sith so NEIGHBOUR'D to his youth and HUMOUR.—Neighbour'd is similarly used in Lear, i. 1. 120-122.

shall to my bosom
Be as well neighbour'd, putted, and reliev'd,
As thou my sometime daughter.

Humour is the reading of Ff.; Qq. print (in one or another form of spelling) haviour, which occurs in i. 2. 81 and makes excellent sense here, but seems on the whole more commonplace than humour, which, of course, means "mental disposition."

213. Line 17: Whether aught to us unknown afflicts him thus.—Omitted in Ff.

214. Line 22: To show us so much GENTRY; i.e. courtesy. Compare v. 2. 114: "he is the card or calendar of gentry." Singer quotes from Baret's Alveare: "Gentlemanliness, or gentrie, kindelnesse, natural goodness. Generositas."

215. Line 29: BUT we both obey.—Ff. omit But; and below, in line 31, read Servuces instead of service.

216 Line 43: Assure you, my good liege.—So Ff.; Qq. read I assure my good liege.

217. Line 45: Both to my God AND to my gracious king—So Qq.; Ff. print one.

218. Line 48: it hath.—So Qq.; Ff. read I have

219. Line 52: My news shall be the FRUIT to that great feast.—So Qq.; Ff. print Nerves, which is an evident misprint arising out of the accidental repetition of the word from the earlier part of the line. Elze compares Marston, The Malcontent, Induction:

Sly. What are your additions?

But Sooth, not greatly needfull, only as your sallet to your great feast.

—Works, ed. Halliwell, vol. ii p. 202.

220. Line 54: He tells me, MY DEAR GERTRUDE, he hath found.—So (substantially) Qq.; Ff. read:

He tells me my sweet Queene, that he hath found.

221. Line 56: I doubt it is no other but the MAIN.—The main is here an elliptical expression for the main source (compare similar construction in Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 273). II. Henry VI. i. 1. 208:

Then let's away, and look unto the main is usually given as an example of the same form of ellipsis; but see the note on that passage, no. 48.

222 Line 67: borne in hand.—See Taming of the Shrew, note 146.

223. Line 73: Gives him THREE thousand crowns in annual fee.—So Ff. and Q. 1; the other Qq. have three-score thousand. Probably the larger sum was inserted because the copyist thought three thousand not enough; but considering the value of money at the time, it was a good addition to Fortinbras's income; taking the gold crowns=4s. 6d., it would be equivalent to £900.

224. Line 85: this business is WELL ended.—Ff. have very well, perhaps in order to mark it as a sentence of prose.

225. Line 86: expostulate.—That is, "discuss in full." Expostulate occurs five times in Shakespeare, which are all inserted in Schmidt under the meaning of discuss. But in Richard III. iii. 7. 192 ("More bitterly could I expostulate") the word is evidently used in pretty much the customary sense; in Othello, iv. 1. 217 it may be taken either way. Caldecott quotes Stanley's Aurore, 1650, p. 44: "Pausanias had now opportunity to visit her and expostulate the favourable deceit, whereby she had caused his jealousy."

226. Line 105: Perpend—This word is only used in Shakespeare as a sign of affectation or mockery; it is put into the mouth of the braggadocio Pistol, of the pedantic Polonius, and of the clowns in As You Like It and Twelfth Night.

227. Line 110: the most BEAUTIFIED Ophelia.—The word beautified occurs again, but participially, in Two Gent. of Verona, iv. 1. 55. It was not uncommon, however, as an adjective, and used in no affected sense. Nash dedicated his Christ's Tears over Jerusalem, 1594, "to the most beautiful lady, the lady Elizabeth Carey;" and Caldecott quotes another dedication (of Certaine Sonnets adjoined to the amorous Poeme of Diego and Gineura by R. L. Gent., 1596) "to the worthily honoured and vertuous beautified Lady, the Ladie Anne Glemnham." It is evident, however, that in the passage in the text beautified is used either with a double meaning or else to emphasize the euphuism of the whole letter. In the Q. of 1603 we read "To the most beautiful Ophelia," and the change has evidently been made deliberately.

228. Lines 112, 113:

but you shall hear.

Thus: "In her excellent white bosom, these," &c.

This is the reading of Malone, adopted substantially from Jennens, who follows, except for the punctuation, the Qq. F 1 has but you shall heare these in her excellent white bosome, these, which Corson would print but you shall hear: "these in her excellent white bosom, these," taking the repetition of the word these for a part of the "studied oddness" of the letter.

229. Line 137: Or given my heart a WINKING, mute and dumb.—Qq. have working, which looks like a misprint. Compare Henry V. v. 2. 331, 332: "Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking." In Winter's Tale, i. 2. 317, the word wink is used in a somewhat similar sense:

To give mine enemy a lasting wink— where wink signifies a closing of the eyes, not temporarily, but for ever. The tautology, mute and dumb, is found again in Lucrece, 1123:

And in my hearing be you mute and dumb.

230. Line 139: No, I went ROUND to work.—Round is here used in the sense of roundly, i.e. directly, straightforwardly, as in iii. i. 192, and iii. 4. 5. The Clarendon Press edd. quote Bacon, Essay vi.: "A shew of fearfulness, which in any business doth spoil the feathers, of round flying up to the mark."

231. Line 140: And my young mistress thus I did BESPEAK.—Bespeak, in the sense of speak to, is used several times in Shakespeare. Compare Twelfth Night, v. 1. 192: "But I bespoke you fair;" and Richard II. v. 2. 18-20:

Whilst he, from the one side to the other turning,
Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespoke them thus

232. Line 141: Lord Hamlet is a prince, OUT OF THY STAR.—Compare Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 55: "In my stars I am above thee." The word star, used as it is here for position—"the position in which fortune has placed you"—has no doubt some connection with the astrological significance of the stars. Especially after the confirmation afforded by the parallel passage in Twelfth Night, the emendation of F. 2—sphere—seems quite unnecessary.

233. Line 142: and then I PRESCRIBTS gave her—Ff. print precepts. The durior lectio of the Qq. seems to me to give the better sense of the two, and it is found again in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 8. 4, 5:

Do not exceed

The prescript of this scroll

234. Line 151: And all we MOURN for.—Ff. print waile

235. Line 160: You know, sometimes he walks FOUR hours together.—Hammer printed "for hours together." But the expression four hours together was a common one, four and forty being used loosely for an indefinite number. Compare Winter's Tale, v. 2. 148: "Ay, and have been so any time these four hours;" and Webster, Duchess of Malfy, iv. 1. 9: "She will muse four hours together." See Elze's list of similar expressions in the Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, bd. xi. Compare v. 1. 292: "forty thousand brothers"

236. Line 174: you are a FISHMONGER.—The word fishmonger is no doubt used in sous-entendre, but there are several meanings which can be assigned to it. Coleridge understands Hamlet to mean: "You are sent to fish out this secret." Malone cites a slang meaning of the word from Barnabe Rich's Irish Hubbub: "Senex fornicator, an old fishmonger." Whiter (apud Furness) gives a passage from Jonson's Masque at Christmas (vol. vii. p. 277, ed. Gifford), where Venus says she was "a fishmonger's daughter," and observes that "probably it was supposed that the daughters of these tradesmen, who dealt in so nourishing a species of food, were blessed with extraordinary powers of conception." Probably the joke arose rather from the prolific nature of fish.

237. Lines 181-183: For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being A GOOD KISSING CARRION.—Have you a daughter?—This is the reading of Qq. and Ff., generally abandoned in favour of Warburton's brilliant and plausible emendation: "a god, kissing carrion." This makes admirable sense, but it may be questioned whether the change is necessary. Caldecott tentatively suggested that the passage "may mean that the dead dog is good for the sun, the breeder of maggots, to kiss for the purpose of causing putrefaction, and so conceiving or generating anything carrion-like, anything apt quickly to contract taint in the sunshine." This explanation is more elaborately and more convincingly worked out in Corson's Jottings on the Text of Hamlet, pp. 18-20. "The defect," he says, "in the several attempted explanations of this passage is due to one thing, and one thing only, and that is, to the understanding of 'kissing' as the present active participle, and not as the verbal noun."

In the following passages, for example, the present active participle is used: "Life's but a walking shadow," Macbeth, v. 5. 24; . . . 'the dancing banners of the French,' King John, ii. 1. 308; 'labouring art can never ransom nature,' All's Well, ii. 1. 121, &c. But in the following passages the same words are verbal nouns used adjectively: 'a palmer's walking-staff,' Richard II. iii. 3. 151; 'you and I are past our dancing days,' Romeo and Juliet, i. 5. 32; 'you ought not walk upon a labouring day,' Julius Cæsar, i. 1. 4, &c; and now we are all ready for 'kissing.' In the following passages it is the participle: 'a kissing traitor,' Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 603; 'the greedy touch of common-kissing Titan,' Cymbeline, iii. 4. 166:

O, how ripe in show
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!

—Midsummer Night's Dream, iii. 2. 139, 140.

'Kissing,' in the last passage, might be taken for the verbal noun, meaning, for kissing, or, to be kissed; but it must here be understood as the participle. Demetrius speaks of the lips of Helena, as two ripe cherries that kiss, or lightly touch, each other. But to say of a pair of beautiful lips that they are good kissing lips,¹ would convey quite a different meaning, a meaning, however, which nobody would mistake: 'Kissing,' in such expressions, is the verbal noun used adjectively, and equivalent to 'for kissing.' And so the word is used in the passage in question: 'For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dogge, being a good kissing carrion'—that is, a dead dog being, not a carrion good at kissing, as Mr. Knight and others understood it, and which would be the sense of the word, as a present active participle, but a carrion good for kissing, or, to be kissed, by the sun, that thus breeds a plentiful crop of maggots therein, the agency of 'breed' being implied in 'kissing.' In reading this speech, the emphasis should be upon 'kissing,' and not upon 'carrion,' the idea of which last word is anticipated in 'dead dog;' in other words, 'kissing carrion' should be read as a compound noun, which in fact it is, the stress of sound falling on the member of the compound which bears the burden of the meaning. The two words might, indeed, be hyphenated, like 'kissing-comfits' in the Merry Wives of Windsor, v. 5. 23." With this passage compare King Edward III. ii. 1. 438, 439:

The freshest summers day doth soonest taint
The loathed carrion that it seems to kiss.

—Ed. Warnke and Froescholdt, p. 27.

238 Line 197: I mean, the matter that you READ, my lord.—This is the reading of all the Qq.; Ff., by an obvious misprint, have meane.

239 Line 198: the satirical ROGUE.—Ff. print slave.

240. Line 233: On Fortune's CAP we are not the very button.—Qq. print lap, a misprint for Cap, as the Ff. spell it, with an initial capital. Elze, pp. 156, 157, has an interesting note on this allusion. "In Mr. Halliwell-Phillips' Folio edition," he says, "this passage has been illustrated with a cut copied from tapestry of the time of Henry VII., and showing a cap the flaps of which are turned up and secured by a strap and a button. 'It is obvious,' observes Mr. Halliwell-Phillips, 'that such a button might be of the most costly material, according to the wealth of the wearer.' This, however, is not to the point, as our poet does not introduce the button as the most costly, but as the uppermost part of the cap, in contrast to the soles as the nethermost part of dress. In Mr. Halliwell-Phillips' illustration the button of the cap is, and from its destination must be, placed at the side, and it seems, therefore, most unlikely that the poet should have alluded to this kind of cap. The prototype of 'Fortune's cap' may rather be recognized in the flat round cap worn by citizens in the XV. and XVI. centuries. The most eloquent praise of this citizens' cap, in contradistinction to the square cap of the scholar on the one hand and the new fangled long hat on the other, is sung by Candido in Dekker's Honest Whore, Part II. i. 3 (Middleton, ed. Dyce, iii. 147). 'The citizens of London,' remarks Dyce on Part I. iii. 1 of the same play (Middleton, iii. 58), 'both masters and journeymen, continued to wear flat round caps long after they had ceased to be fashionable, and were hence in derision termed flat-caps [or simply caps; see Part II. of The Honest Whore, passim].' Although Dyce does not say that this round cap was crowned by a button at the top, yet this seems so much the more likely as the scholars' cap is distinguished by the same ornament; perhaps both of them resembled in this respect the well-known Tam-o'-Shanter of the Scotch."

241. Lines 269-271: Then are our beggars bodies, and our monarchs and outstretched heroes the beggars' shadows.—Furness quotes several attempts to assign its precise meaning to this passage, which Coleridge confesses himself unable to understand. The best seem to me those of Hudson and Bucknill. The former observes: "Hamlet loses himself in the riddles he is making. The meaning, however, seems to be: our beggars can at least dream of being kings and heroes; and if the substance of such ambitious men is but a dream, and if a dream is but a shadow, then our kings and heroes are but the shadows of our beggars." Bucknill, more briefly and better still, says: "If ambition is but a shadow, something beyond ambition must be the substance from which it is thrown. If ambition, represented by a king, is a shadow, the anti-type of ambition, represented by a beggar, must be the opposite of the shadow, that is, the substance."

242. Line 283: my thanks are too dear a halfpenny.—Theobald printed "of a halfpenny," and Hamner "at a halfpenny;" but the phraseology of the Folio was not unusual. Compare As You Like It, ii. 3. 74: "too late a week." The Clarendon Press edd. compare Chaucer, Canterbury Tales, 8875: "dere y-nough a jane" (i.e. a small coin of Genoa); and 12723, "dere y-nough a leeke."

243. Line 316: What a piece of work is man!—This reading was first introduced in Q. 6. Ff. and Qq. have "a man." The reading of the Qq., however, supplies an obvious explanation of the misprint; they have: What peece of work is a man—the a having been accidentally transposed.

244. Line 329: what LENTEN entertainment the players shall receive from you.—Lenten is used again in the sense of poor and scanty (like fare in Lent) in Twelfth Night, i. 5. 9: "A good lenten answer." Compare Browning, The Twins, stanza v.:

¹ Compare the very similar expression in Mr. Swinburne's translation of Villon's Regrets de la belle Heaulmière, stanza 6, "And sweet red splendid kissing mouth" (Poems and Ballads, 2nd Series, p. 197).—A. S.

While Date was in good case
Dabitur flourished too:
For Dabitur's lenten face
No wonder if Date rue

—Works, 1878, vol. iv p 217.

245. Line 330: we COTED them on the way.—The word cote is from the French côtoyer, which Boyer, after giving its primitive meaning, “to coast along, to go along or keep close to the Shore,” translates “to go by the Side, or along.” The word cote is found again in Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 87:

Her amber hair for foul hath amber coted

See note 116 to that play. Steevens quotes The Return from Parnassus: “marry, we presently coted and outstript them.” Furness quotes from an article, New Shakespearean Interpretations, in the Edinburgh Review, October, 1872: “Cote, in the language of venery, is applied to a brace of greyhounds slipped together at the stag or hare, and means that one of the dogs outstrips the other and reaches the game first. Thus we find in Turberville: ‘In coursing at a Deare, if one Greyhound go endways by [that is beyond] another, it is accounted a Cote.’ Again, ‘In coursing at the Hare, it is not materiall which dog kyleth her (which hunters call bearing of a Hare), but he that giveth most Cotes, or most turnes, winneth the wager. A Cote is when a Greyhound goeth endways by his fellow and giveth the Hare a turn (which is called setting a Hare about), but if he coast and so come by his fellow, that is no Cote. Likewise, if one Greyhound doe go by another, and then be not able to reach the Hare himselfe and turne her, this is but stripping, and no Cote.’ To cote is thus not simply to overtake, but to overpass, to outstrip, this being the distinctive meaning of the term. Going beyond is the essential point, the term being usually applied under circumstances where overtaking is impossible,—to dogs who start together and run abreast until the cote takes place. So Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, having coted the players in their way, reach the palace first, and have been for some time in conversation with Hamlet before the strolling company arrives.”

246. Lines 337, 338: the clown shall make those laugh whose lungs are TICKLE O' THE SERE.—This clause is omitted in Qd.; Ff. print tickled, for which Staunton substituted tickle. The phrase was a proverbial one, which, however, has been generally misunderstood. The convincing interpretation was made by Dr. Brinsley Nicholson in Notes and Queries, July 22, 1871. He writes: “The sear, or, as it is now spelt, sear (or seare) of a gun-lock is the bar or balance-lever interposed between the trigger on the one side, and the tumbler and other mechanism on the other, and is so called from its acting the part of a serre, or talon, in gripping that mechanism and preventing its action. It is, in fact, a paul or stop-catch. When the trigger is made to act on one end of it, the other end releases the tumbler, the mainspring acts, and the hammer, flint, or match falls. Hence Lombard (1596), as quoted in Halliwell's Archaic Dictionary, says, ‘Even as a pistole that is ready charged and bent will file off by-and-by, if a man doe but touch the seare.’ Now if the lock be so made of purpose, or be worn, or be faulty in construction, this sear, or grip, may be so tickle or ticklish in its adjustment that a slight touch or even jar may displace it, and then, of course, the gun goes off. Hence ‘light,’ or ‘tickle of the sear’ (equivalent to, like a hair-trigger), applied metaphorically, means that which can be started into action at a mere touch, or on the slightest provocation, or on what ought to be no provocation at all.” The Clarendon Press edd. (1872) independently hit on the same explanation. They remark: “In old matchlocks the sear and trigger were in one piece. This is proved by a passage from Barret's Theorike and Practike of Modern Warre (1598), p. 33 [35]: “drawing down the serre with the other three fingers. He has given directions for holding the stock between the thumb and forefinger.”

247. Lines 346, 347: I think their inhibition comes by the means of the late innovation.—The Variorum Ed has four pages, the New Variorum two pages and a half, on this interesting and long-debated passage. The explanation of the allusion given by the Clarendon Press edd. in their Preface (pp. xli-xv) seems to be, as Furness styles it, conclusive. After quoting the readings of the Q. of 1603 and of the later Qq, they say: “In the earlier play the tragedians are driven to strolling because the public taste was in favour of the private plays and the acting of children; in the later, they are represented as being prohibited from acting in consequence of what is darkly called an ‘innovation.’ Both these causes are combined in the play as it stands in the Folios, where the ‘inhibition’ and the ‘aery of children’ are introduced to account for the tragedians having forsaken the city. Steevens explains the ‘inhibition’ in this way: ‘Their permission to act any longer at an established house is taken away, in consequence of the new custom of introducing personal abuse into their comedies,’ and then asserts that ‘several companies of actors in the time of our author were silenced on account of this licentious practice.’ But it is not clear that this is the reference intended. For a very long period there had been a strong opposition in the city to theatrical performances. . . .

“It is difficult, therefore, to see at what precise period the explanation offered by Steevens could be true. In 1604 the indulgence of the actors in personal abuse could hardly be called an ‘innovation’; on the contrary, it was a practice from which the stage had never been entirely free. If we were to add to the conjectures upon this point we should be disposed to suggest that the ‘innovation’ referred to was the license which had been given on 30th Jan., 1603-4 to the Children of the Queen's Revels to play at the Blackfriars Theatre and other convenient places. The Blackfriars Theatre belonged to the company of which Shakespeare was a member, formerly the Lord Chamberlain's, and at this time His Majesty's servants. The popularity of the children may well have driven the older actors into the country, and so have operated as an ‘inhibition,’ though in the strict sense of the word no formal ‘inhibition’ was issued. If by ‘inhibition’ Shakespeare merely meant, as we think most probable, that the actors were practically thrown out of employment, it seems also likely that by ‘innovation’ he meant the authority given to the children to act at the regularly licensed theatres. It must be borne in mind, in reference to this, that nothing is said either of ‘inhibition’ or ‘innovation’ in 1603, but that the sentence containing both is first introduced in 1604. It is to the interval therefore that we must look for the explanation. In offering this conjecture we have not lost sight of the fact that after all, remembering how chary Shakespeare is of contemporary allusions, no special occurrence may be hinted at, although in what follows in the Folio edition a satire upon the children's performances was clearly intended."

248. Line 354: an aery of children.—This relates, says Steevens, "to the young singing-men of the chapel royal, or St. Paul's, of the former of whom perhaps the earliest mention occurs in an anonymous puritanical pamphlet, 1589, entitled The Children of the Chapel Stript and Whipt: 'Plaies will neuer be suppress, while her maiesties unfledged minions flaunt it in silkes and sattens They had as well be at their popish service in the deuils garments,' &c. Again (ibid.): 'Euen in her maiesties chapel do these pretty upstart youthes profane the Lorde's day by the lasciuious writhing of their tender limbes, and gorgeous decking of their apparell, in feigning bawdie fables gathered from the idolatrous heathen poets,' &c.

"Concerning the performances and success of the latter in attracting the best company, I also find the following passage in Jack Drum's Entertainment, or Pasquil and Katherine, 1601:

I saw the children of Powles last night;
And troth they pleased me pretty, pretty well,
The apes, in time, will do it handsomely,
—I like the audience that frequenteth there
With much applause—a man shall not be choak'd
With the stench of garlick, nor be pasted
To the barmy jacket of a beer-brewer.
—'T is a good gentle audience, &c

It is said in Richard Flecknoe's Short Discourse of the English Stage, 1664, that 'both the children of the chapel and St. Paul's, acted plays, the one in White-Friers, the other behinde the Convocation-house in Paul's; till people growing more precise, and plays more licentious, the theatre of Paul's was quite suppress, and that of the children of the chappel converted to the use of the children of the revels.'

249. Line 355: little EYASES.—Cotgrave has "Niais: A neastling, a young bird taken out of a neast; hence a youngling, noice," &c. The word eyas should more probably be nias, as it is given in Boyer's French Dictionary: "A Nias hawk (a young hawk taken out of the Nest, that has not yet prey'd for her self) Un faucon niais." The Ff. print Fases.

250. Lines 355, 356: cry out on the top of question.—A great many explanations of this phrase have been put forward. Perhaps it merely means, as Steevens says: "Children that perpetually recite in the highest notes of voice that can be uttered;" or, in Elze's words: "The 'top of the question' means the top of conversation; namely, that point where the dialogue is most lively, where question and answer follow each other stroke on stroke, and the speakers are most excited. These 'little eyases,' therefore, continually cry out as though they were at the very height of conversation." Perhaps it had a further sense, such as that indicated by Staunton: "The phrase, derived perhaps from the defiant crowing of a cock upon his midden, really meant, we believe, like—'Stood challenger on mount of all the ages,' to crow over or challenge all comers to a contention. In line [459] Hamlet uses the phrase 'cried in the top,' where it evidently means crowed over. Again, in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, the author, alluding to fencers or players at single-stick, talks of 'making them expert till they cry it up in the top of question' [p. 55, Sh. Soc. vol. x.]."

251. Lines 356, 357: most TYRANNICALLY clapped for't.—Tyrannically is used for outrageously, after the manner of a stage-tyrant. Elze compares The Puritan, i 4: "I warrant my kinsman's talking of me, for my left ear burns most tyrannically."

252. Line 362: how are they ESCOTED?.—Escoted is from the French escotter, which Cotgrave renders: "Every one to pay his shot, or to contribute something towards it."

253. Lines 362-364: Will they pursue the QUALITY no longer than they can sing?.—The word quality was formerly the technical name of players, as its modern equivalent, profession, still is. Malone quotes Gosson's Schoole of Abuse: "I speake not this, as though every one that professeth the qualitie so abused him selfe" (ed. Arber, p 39) Compare Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. i. 58, where quality is used of the company of brigands.

254. Line 365: common players; i.e. strolling players. Staunton quotes J. Stephens, Essays and Characters, 1615, p. 301: "I prefix an epithete of common, to distinguish the base and artlesse appendants of our City companies, which often times start away into rusticall wanderers, and then (like Proteus) start backe again into the City number."

255. Lines 377-379:

Ham. Do the boys CARRY IT AWAY?

Ros. Ay, that they do, my lord; Hercules and his load too.

Hamlet, in asking the question, uses the words carry it away in the sense, common then, of "carrying off the prize." Rosencrantz takes it literally, and perhaps alludes, as Steevens suggests, to the Globe playhouse, the sign of which was Hercules carrying the globe. "This is humorous," says Warburton solemnly.

256. Line 381: make mows.—Qq. print mouthes; see Tempest, note 123.

257. Line 396-398: I am but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly I know a hawk from a handsaw.—F. A. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, pp. 187, 188, has the following note on this passage: "No adequate explanation of this passage appears to me to be offered by any of the commentators: the proverb 'he doesn't know a hawk from a handsaw,' that is, from a heron, is said to have been a common one, and is found in Ray's Proverbs, p. 196, and in other collections; but the only passage quoted is from Langston's 'Lusus Poeticus,' 1675 (see Pennant's British Zoology, 'The Heron,' quoted in Richardson's Dictionary, sub voce Heron). The corruption of heronshaw into handsaw may have originated in a vulgar mistake, or in a stupid attempt to be funny on the part of some person¹

"Of the first part of this, in all the old commentators, I can find no explanation,² and yet I cannot help thinking that the words 'I am but mad north-north-west' must have had some inner meaning, or conveyed a reference to some well-known expression. The only attempt to throw any light on this obscure passage is to be found in the Notes to the 'Clarendon' Hamlet (Oxford, 1872); and for this explanation the editors acknowledge their indebtedness to Mr. J. C. Heath, formerly Fellow of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. I take leave to insert it here:—"The expression obviously refers to the sport of hawking. Most birds, especially one of heavy flight, like the heron, when roused by the falconer or his dog, would fly down or with the wind, in order to escape. When the wind is from the north the heron flies towards the south, and the spectator may be dazzled by the sun, and be unable to distinguish the hawk from the heron. On the other hand, when the wind is southerly, the heron flies towards the north, and it and the pursuing hawk are clearly seen by the sportsman, who then has his back to the sun, and without difficulty knows the hawk from the heron. A curious reader may further observe that a wind from the precise point north-north-west would be in the eye of the sun at half-past ten in the forenoon, a likely time for hawking, whereas 'southerly' includes a wider range of wind for a good view."

"This explanation is very ingenious; but I should like to have seen it supported by some passages from any of the books on Falconry to which Shakespeare might have had access. I have always thought that Hamlet here meant to intimate to Rosencrantz and Guildenstern that he was only mad in one direction (i.e. before the King and Court), and that possibly by some gesture he may have indicated his meaning. The hawk and heron are certainly as unlike as any two birds can be; the only point of resemblance between them being that they are both mischievous, for the heron is quite as destructive to fish as the hawk is to game. In the proverb the sense undoubtedly is, 'he does not know a hawk from its prey;' and Hamlet's meaning may be thus expressed: 'I am not so mad but I know a knave from a fool, even if that fool be a mischievous one.'"

258. Line 412: Buz, buz!—This was an interjection, much used at Oxford, intended to interrupt a tiresome or twice-told story. It is found in Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 5. 79 (ed. Littledale, p. 55). Elze notes that in Johnson's Staple of News the collector of mercantile intelligence is called Emissary Buz.

¹ This corruption, Nares says, had taken place before the time of Shakespeare. Hermeshaw is explained by Cotgrave as a "shaw of wood where hermes breed," Harmonière; so that Dr. Johnson had better authority for giving this interpretation than Nares supposed Shaw is an old Saxon word for "shady place."

² The quotation given by Steevens does not help us much:—

But I perceive now, either the winde is at the south,
Or else your tongue cleaveth to the roofof your mouth.

—Damon and Pythias, 1582.

He might just as well have quoted the proverb:—

When the wind is in the south,
It blows the bait into the fishes' mouth.

259. Lines 418, 419: Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light.—A translation of the whole of Seneca's tragedies (Seneca his Tenne Tragedies, translated into English) was published in 1581; a version of the Menæchmi of Plautus appeared in 1595. See note on iii. 2. 93. The first English tragedy, Gorboduc, was formed on the Senecan model; the first English comedy, Ralph Roister Doister, somewhat on the model of Plautus, as the writer avows in his Prologue:

Suche to write neither Plautus nor Terence dyd spare,
Whiche among the learned at this day beares the bell:
These with such other therein dyd excell

260. Lines 419-421: For the law of writ and the liberty, these are the only men.—The sense of these lines has been much debated, and its very existence has even been called in question. But while the phrase is intentionally fanciful, it seems pretty obviously to mean, that the players were equally excellent at written and at extemporary plays. The Q. of 1676 reads wit, which some editors adopt.

261. Line 422: Jephthah.—Jephthah was a popular subject for both tragedies and ballads. In the Stationers' Register there are two entries of ballads, or of the same ballad: the first is in 1567-68—"a ballet intituled the songe of Jesphas Dowgther at his death"—the second, Dec. 14, 1624, "Jeffa Judge of Israel." This ballad was communicated to Percy by Steevens, and inserted in the second edition of the Reliques, 1757. Halliwell gives a facsimile of A proper new ballad, intituled, Jephthah Judge of Israel, of which the first stanza is as follows:

I read that many yeare agoe,
When Jephthah Judge of Israel,
Had one fair Daughter and no more,
Whom he loved so passing well.
And as by lot God wot,
It came to passe most like it was,
Great wars there should be,
and who should be the chiefe, but he, but he.

262. Line 437: the pious chanson.—This is the reading of Qq. (further confirmed by the parallel passage in Q. 1: "the first verse of the godly Ballet") F. 1 has Pons Chanson, an obvious misprint, which some editors have endeavoured to torture into a meaning. Hunter (New Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 232) flatly declares that the French term for a trivial ballad, chanson du Pont Neuf, is also used in the form pons chanson, which, however, no one but himself seems to have met with.

263. Lines 438, 439: for look, where my ABRIDGMENT COMES.—Ff. print Abridgements come. The sense is probably a mixed one. Hamlet means (or at least expresses by his words) that the players abridge his present talk, and also refers to them by a term used of dramatic entertainments. Compare Midsummer Night's Dream, v. 1. 39, 40:

Say what abridgment have you for this evening?
What masque? what music?

Johnson noted that abridgment might also be used in the sense of "brief chronicles of the time."

264. Lines 442, 443: thy face is VALANCED since I saw thee last.—Ff. misprint valiant. Valanced of course means, "fringed with a beard."

265 Line 447: a chopine.—Chopine, chapine, or chapi-ney, was the name given to a high shoe, worn chiefly in Italy. Douce and Fairholt give illustrations. The best account we have of them is in Coryat's Crudities, 1611, p. 262: "There is one thing used of the Venetian women, and some others dwelling in the cities and townes subject to the signiory of Venice, that is not to be observed (I thinke) amongst any other women in Christendome: which is common in Venice, that no woman whatsoever goeth without it, either in her house or abroad, a thing made of wood and covered with leather of sundry colors, some with white, some redde, some yellow. It is called a chapiney, which they wear under their shoes. Many of them are curiously painted; some also of them I have seen fairly gilt: so uncomely a thing (in my opinion) that it is pitty this foolish custom is not cleane banished and exterminated out of the citie. There are many of these chapineys of a great height, even half a yard high, which maketh many of their women that are very short, seeme much taller than the tallest women we have in England. Also I have heard it observed among them, that by how much the nobler a woman is, by so much the higher are her chapineys. All their gentlewomen and most of their wives and widows that are of any wealth, are assisted and supported eyther by men or women, when they walke abroad, to the end they may not fall. They are borne up most commonly by the left arme, otherwise they might quickly take a fall." Elze observes that though Evelyn, in his journal (i. 190), says that at Venice courtesans or citizens might not wear chopines, it is evident from the cuts in Cesare Vecelli's Habiti Antichi e Moderni, 1590, that by this time the custom of wearing them had passed from the ladies to the courtesans. The custom seems to have been introduced from the East. Compare Ram Alley, v. 1:

O, 't is fine
To see a bride trip it to church so lightly,
As if her new chopines would scorn to bruise
A silly flower. —Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. x. p. 367.

266. Lines 448, 449: cracked within the ring.—"There was a ring or circle on the coin," says Douce, "within which the sovereign's head was placed: if the crack extended from the edge beyond the ring the coin was rendered unfit for currency." Compare Johnson's Magnetic Lady, and Gifford's note (Works, vol. vi. p. 76). The expression, which is used in sous-entendre, may be largely illustrated from Elizabethan plays.

267. Lines 449, 450: We'll e'en to't like French falconers, fly at any thing we see.—This is sometimes taken for a skit at the French "sportman" of that time, who may have been as indiscriminate as his descendant of the present day. But it may rather have been meant as a compliment, for Sir Thomas Browne, Miscellany Tracts, p. 116, says that "the French artists" "seem to have been the first and noblest falconers in the western part of Europe," and on p. 118 refers to a falcon of Henry of Navarre, "which Scaliger saith, he saw strike down a buzzard, two wild geese, divers kites, a crane and a swan."

268. Line 457: 't was CAVIARE to THE GENERAL.—Caviare seems to have been an object of wonder and almost of dread in Shakespeare's day. Elze quotes Cartwright, The Ordinary, i. 1:

Twelve yards of sausage by, instead of match,
And caveary then prepar'd for wild-fire.

—Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. xii. p. 236.

Reed quotes Giles Fletcher, who in his Russe Commonwealth, 1591, p. 41, says that in Russia they have "divers kinds of fish very good and delicate: as the Bellouga and Bellougina of four or five elnes long, the Ositrina and Sturgeon, but not so thick or long. Then four kind of fish breed in the Wolgha and are caught in great plenty, and served thence into the whole realme for a good food. Of the roes of these four kinds they make very great store of scary or caveary." For the general, in the sense of the general public, compare Measure for Measure, ii. 4 27, 28:

The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part.

269. Lines 462-464: there were no SALLETS in the lines to make the matter savoury.—Sallet is simply another form of salad (used again in II Henry VI. iv. 10. 9; see also All's Well, iv. 5. 18) Boyer gives it as the English of "une salade." Pope altered sallets to salts and then to salt, which Gifford approved of, on the strength of a line in one of Jonson's epigrams:

I have no salt, no bawdry he doth mean.

—Works, vol. viii. p. 177.

But there is no need for any change. Cotgrave defines Vinagrettes: "Sallets or sawces which be seasoned with much vinegar; any hearbs or fruits in pickle"—showing that a sallet was not necessarily wanting in piquancy.

270. Line 469: Eneas' tale of Dido.—Very different opinions have been expressed by the commentators as to the lines that Hamlet quotes, and his evident admiration of them. Pope very naturally took the view that "this whole speech of Hamlet is purely ironical; he seems to commend the play to expose the bombast of it." Warburton lengthily, and on the whole admirably, argues to the contrary, thinking "that Hamlet spoke with commendation to upbraid the false taste of the audience of that time, which would not suffer them to do justice to the simplicity of the sublime of this production." This he reasons, "first, from the character Hamlet gives of the play from whence the passage is taken. Secondly, from the passage itself. And, thirdly, from the effect it had on the audience." The really final words on the subject have been said by Coleridge: "This admirable substitution of the epic for the dramatic, giving such a reality to the impassioned dramatic diction of Shakespeare's own dialogue, and authorized too by the actual style of the tragedies before his time (Porrax and Ferrex, Titus Andronicus, &c.), is well worthy of notice. The fancy that a burlesque was intended sinks below criticism; the lines, as epic narrative, are superb. In the thoughts, and even in the separate parts of the diction, this description is highly poetical: in truth, taken by itself, this is its fault, that it is too poetical!—the language of lyric vehemence and epic pomp, and not of the drama. But if Shakespeare had made the diction truly dramatic, where would have been the contrast between Hamlet and the play in Hamlet!" It is probable that the lines in Hamlet were composed with some reference to a passage in Marlowe and Nashe's Dido, Queen of Carthage, which Steevens discovered. The passage is in ii. 1:

Æneas. At last came Pyrrhus, fell and full of ire,
His harness dropping blood, and on his spear
The mangled head of Priam's youngest son;
And, after him, his band of myrmidons,
With balls of wildfire in their murderous paws,
Which made the funeral-flame that burnt fair Troy,
All which hemmed me about, crying "This is he!"

Dido. Ha! how could poor Æneas scape their hands?

Æn. My mother, Venus, jealous of my health,
Conveyed me from their crooked nets and bands;
So I escaped the furious Pyrrhus' wrath:
And, at Jove's altar finding Priamus,
About whose withered neck hung Hecuba,
Folding his hand in hers, and jointly both
Beating their breasts, and galling on the ground,
He with his falchion's point raised up at once,
And with Megæra's eyes stared in their face,
Threatening a thousand deaths at every glance;
To whom the aged king thus trembling spoke:—
"Achilles' son, remember what I was,
Father of fifty sons, but they are slain;
Lord of my fortune, but my fortune's turned
King of this city, but my Troy is fired!
And now am neither father, lord, nor king!
Yet who so wretched but desires to live?
Oh, let me live, great Neoptolemus!"
Not moved at all, but smiling at his tears,
Thus butcher, whilst his hands were yet held up,
Treading upon his breast, struck off his hands.

Dido. O end, Æneas, I can hear no more.

Æn. At which the frantic queen leaped on his face,
And in his eyelids hanging by the nails,
A little while prolonged her husband's life.
At last, the soldiers pulled her by the heels,
And swung her howling in the empty air,
Which sent an echo to the wounded king:
Whereat, he lifted up his bed-ridden limbs,
And would have grappled with Achilles' son,
Forgetting both his want of strength and hands;
Which he, disdainful, whisked his sword about,
And with the wind thereof the king fell down;
Then from the navel to the throat at once
He ripped old Priam, at whose latter gasp,
Jove's marble statue 'gan to bend the brow,
At loathing Pyrrhus for this wicked act.
Yet he, undaunted, took his father's flag,
And dipp'd it in the old king's chill-cold blood,
And then in triumph ran into the streets,
Through which he could not pass for slaughtered men;
So, leaning on his sword, he stood stone still,
Viewing the fire wherewith rich Ilium burnt.

—Works, ed. Dyce (Moxon), p. 258.

On this Strachey observes, I think justly, that "though there is not a line, hardly a thought of it, the same as the passage which the player recites, and which is of course Shakespeare's own, still the style is so like, that the audience would probably have been reminded of Marlowe's play, and so have experienced the sensation of hearing real men quoting a real play; nay, if they retained only a general recollection of the original, might have supposed that the quotation was actually from Marlowe's 'Tragedie of Dido, Queen of Carthage.'"

271. Line 472: the Hyrcanian beast.—See note 176 to

1 This very close parallel with Shakespeare's "whiff and wind of his fell sword" rests on the authority of an emendation (certainly most probable) made by Collier. The original has wound.

Merchant of Venice. Compare the play cited above, Dido, Queen of Carthage, v. 2:

But though art sprung from Scythian Caucasus,
And tigers of Hyrcania gave thee suck.

—Marlowe's Works, ed. Dyce (Moxon), p. 272

272. Line 479: Now is he total GULES.—Gules signifies red, in what Steevens calls "the barbarous jargon peculiar to heraldry." The word is from the French gueules, a spelling apparently hinted at in the misprint of F 1: to take Gueules. The word occurs again in Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 59:

With man's blood paint the ground, gules, gules.

273 Line 479: trick'd.—This is another heraldic term, meaning literally, to describe in drawing. Boyer has: "To trick in Painting, Croquer, ébaucher, dessiner grossièrement." Here of course it is used figuratively for smeared.

274. Line 481: impasted.—William Thomas, Italian Grammar, 1567, has: "Impastato, impasted or raied with dirte." Caldecott compares Richard II. iii. 2. 153, 154:

And that small model of the barren earth
Which serves as paste and cover to our bones

275. Lines 495, 496:

*But with the whiff and wind of that fell sword
The unnerved father falls.*

Compare Troilus and Cressida, v. 3. 40, 41:

When many times the captive Grecians fall,
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword

276. Lines 508, 509:

*anon the dreadful thunder
Doth rend the REGION.*

Boyer has: "The three Régions (or Parts) of the Air, Les trois régions de l'air." The word is used by Shakespeare in the general sense of the upper air in Son. xxxiii. 12:

The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now;

Romeo and Juliet, ii. 2. 20-22:

her eyes in heaven
Would through the airy region stream so bright
That birds would sing and think it were not night.

Compare, too, ii. 2. 806 below.

277. Line 512: On MARS HIS armour, forg'd for proof ETERNE.—Qq. have Marses, Ff. Mars his, but misprint Armours. Eterne is used by Shakespeare in Macbeth, iii. 2. 38:

But in them nature's copy's not eternè.

278. Line 522: he's for a JIG.—Jig was formerly used, not only for a dance, but for "a ludicrous metrical composition." The word is from the Italian giga, originally meaning a fiddle; the word was thus at first spelt gigge in English. Cotgrave has: "Farce: f. A (fond and dissolute) Play, Comedy, or Enterlude; also, the Jyg at the end of an Enterlude, wherein some pretie knauerie is acted." Florio has: "Frotola, a countrie gigge, or round, or countrie song, or wanton verse."

279. Line 525: the MOBBLED queen.—F. 1, by a misprint corrected in F. 2, reads inboded. The word was probably archaic in Shakespeare's time. It seems to have been a corruption of "muffled." Warburton quotes Sandys, Travels, vol. i. p. 69, ed. 1637, who says, speaking of the Turkish women: "their heads and faces are so mabled in fine linen, that nothing is to be seen of them but their eyes." Farmer quotes Shirley's Gentleman of Venice:

The moon does moble up herself

It seems generally to be used in the sense of muffling roughly or untidily. Below we are told that the Queen had a "clout" upon her head.

280. Line 529: With BISSON rheum; a clout UPON that head.—Bisson, blind, used here for blinding, occurs again in Coriolanus, ii. 1. 70: "bisson conspectuities," where it is besomes in Ff. See note 104 to that play.—The Ff., and many editors after them, read about instead of upon (the reading of Qq.); but it is past belief that Shakespeare should have made such a wretched jingle as "a clout about." Q 1 has a kercher on that head.

281. Line 536: When she saw Pyrrhus, &c.—Elze compares Marston's Insatiate Countesse, i. 1, where, as he says, "there is a remarkable allusion, not only to this passage, but to the whole of Æneas' tale."

Count Arsena Sancta Maria! what thinkest thou of this change?

A players passion ile beleve hereafter,
And in a tragicke sceane weep for old Priam,
When fell revenging Pirhus with supposde
And artuficall wounds mangles his breast,
And thinke it a more worthy act to me,
Than trust a female mourning ore her love.

282. Line 540: Would have made MILCH the burning eyes of heaven.—Dryden, in his Preface to Troilus and Cressida, 1679, says: "His making milch the burning eyes of Heaven was a pretty tollerable flight too; and I think no man ever drew milk out of eyes before him: yet to make the wonder greater, these eyes were burning." The word milch was, however, used in a free sense for moist, as in Drayton's Polyolbion, xiii. 171: "exhaling the milch dewe" (quoted by Stevens). Douce compares the expression "milche-hearted" in Hulst's Abecedarum, 1552, rendered "lemosus;" and cites Bibliotheca Eliotæ, 1545: "lemosi, they that weep lyghtly."

283. Lines 565-568: You could, for a need, study a speech of some dozen or sixteen lines, which I would set down and insert in't, could you not?—Did Hamlet write his dozen or sixteen lines, and if so, where are they to be found? This question has been largely, but, as I think, fruitlessly discussed. Mr. and Mrs. Cowden Clarke held that Hamlet's lines are to be found in iii. 2. 196-225, on the ground that the diction is different from that of the remainder of the dialogue, and signally like Hamlet's own argumentative mode. Professor Seeley (and, on a hint from him, Mr. Furnivall) independently decided on the same passage. A very elaborate discussion of the subject will be found in the New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1874, pp. 465-498. A great many cobwebs were brushed away by a subsequent paper of Ingleby's, read before the New Sh. Soc. on Feb. 9, 1877. A summary of it is given in Furness, vol. i. pp. 250, 251, from which I quote. Dr. Ingleby maintains his view that "the court play is but a part of Hamlet; that Hamlet writes no speech at all, whether of six, twelve, or sixteen lines, nor recites such a speech; Shakespeare simply wrote the entire play, not writing any additions in personâ Hamleti; still less writing an addition to a play which he had previously written in the character of the author of an Italian morality. . . . In real life a Hamlet might compose and insert a few lines to add point and force to an ordeal, like that of the court-play, to which the fictitious Hamlet subjects the supposed criminal; . . . [but] to suppose that Shakespeare in composing Hamlet followed out the exact course that a real living prince would have followed, is to impute to him a lack of the simplest art of the playwright, and a neglect of the artifices which the drama places at his command." Dr. Ingleby hereupon argues that Shakespeare's reason for making the allusion to certain lines to be inserted was to give himself an opportunity of bringing in the scene in which Hamlet instructs the players; this opportunity once provided, nothing more is heard of the lines, or need be. Furness adds, in one of his too infrequent notes: "It is to task the credulity of an audience too severely to represent the possibility of Hamlet's finding an old play exactly fitted to Claudius's crime, not only in the plot, but in all the accessories, even to a single speech which should tent the criminal to the very quick. In order, therefore, to give an air of probability to what every one would feel to be thus highly improbable, Shakespeare represents Hamlet as adapting an old play to his present needs by inserting in it some pointed lines. Not that such lines were actually inserted, but, mindful of this proposal of Hamlet's, the spectator is prepared to listen to a play which is to unkenneel the King's occulted guilt in a certain speech: the verisimilitude of all the circumstances is thus maintained. . . . The discussion, therefore, that has arisen over these 'dozen or sixteen lines' is a tribute to Shakespeare's consummate art."

284. Line 580: That, from her working, all his vision WANN'D.—Qq. print wand; Ff. warn'd, which makes a good sense of its own, and has been followed by several editors. Wann'd, however, is decidedly the more expressive word. The same word occurs, in all probability, in Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 1. 20, 21:

But all the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wann'd lip—where the Ff. print wand, generally printed, in modern editions, waned. See note 90 to the play.

285. Line 594: peak; i.e. pine away; here used more in the sense of mope. Compare Macbeth, i. 3. 22, 23:

Weary se'nights nine times nine
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine.

286. Line 595: John-a-dreams.—This seems to have been a coinage of Shakespeare's on the lines of the numerous John and Jack nicknames current in his time, such as John-a-droyne (a nickname for a sleepy, apathetic fellow), Jack-a-lent, Jack-a-lantern, &c. The only other mention of John-a-dreams that has been found is in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, 1608: "His name is John, indeede, saies the cinnick; but neither John a nods, nor John a dreames, yet either as you take it" (Sh. Soc. vol. x. p. 49).

287. Line 598: A damn'd DEFEAT was made.—Defeat is used here in the sense of destruction. Stevens compares Chapman's Revenge for Honour:

That he might meane while make a sure defeat
On our good aged father's life.

For the word in this sense as a verb, compare Othello, iv. 2. 160, and see note 217 to that play.

288. Lines 602, 603: ha? 'S wounds—F. 1 has Ha? Why; Q. 1, Sure. Elze very reasonably suggests that Ha and Why are both “substitutions for the objectionable oath ‘S wounds, the elimination of which has caused an evident confusion in the text, in so far as Q. 2 contains the oath as well as its substitute, and F. 1 offers two substitutes at one and the same time.”

289. Line 612: That I, the son of a dear FATHER murderer'd.—This is (but for variations of spelling) the reading of Q. 4; the earlier Qq. and the Ff. omit the word father—a construction which Halliwell attempts, very lamely, to defend on the analogy of our common phrase “the dear departed” Q. 1 confirms the reading of Q. 4: that I the sonne of my deare father.

290. Lines 617–623:

I have heard

That guilty creatures sitting at a play, &c.

Compare Massinger, The Roman Actor, ii. 1:

I once observed,

*In a tragedy of ours, in which a murder
Was acted to the life, a guilty hearer
Forced by the terror of a wounded conscience,
To make discovery of that which torture
Could not wring from him;*

and A Warning for Faire Women, 1599 (quoted by Todd):

*He tell you, sir, one more to quite your tale.
A woman that had made away her husband,
And sitting to behold a tragedy
At Lunne a towne in Norfolke,
Acted by players traueelling that way,
Wherein a woman that had murderd hers
Was euer haunted with her husband's ghost:
The passion written by a feeling pen,
And acted by a good tragedian,
She was so moued by the sight thereof,
As she cried out, the play was made for her,
And openly confest her husband's murder.*

Heywood, in his Apology for Actors (Sh. Soc. vol. vii. p. 57–59), refers to this incident, and to another which took place at Amsterdam.

291. Lines 632, 633:

I'U have grounds

More relative than this.

The best comment which has been made on these lines is to be found in Mr. Irving's acting. As Marshall says, Study of Hamlet, p. 153: “He takes his tablets out of his pocket before speaking the words—

I'U have grounds

More relative than this.

The precise meaning of the word ‘this’ and what it refers to never seemed very clear: but this action explains it. In the first act, after the Ghost has left him, it will be remembered that Hamlet has written down in his tablets that Claudius was a villain. These same tablets he holds now in his hand; in them he is going to put down some ideas for the speech which he intends to introduce into the play to be performed before Claudius, with the object of making—his occulted guilt itself unkenneled

(Act III. scene 2, lines 85, 86.)

Can there be any more natural action than this, that he should touch these tablets with the other hand while he says—

I'U have grounds

More relative than this,

i.e. ‘than this record of my uncle's guilt which I made after the interview with my father's spirit?’”

ACT III. SCENE 1.

292. Line 1: drift of CIRCUMSTANCE—This is the reading of Ff. Qq. have conference. The Clarendon Press edd. refer to a somewhat similar use of the words drift and circumstance in Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 113, 114. Compare also ii. 1. 10 of this play:

By this encompassment and drift of question, and i. 5. 127: “without more circumstance at all.”

293. Line 3: grating.—This word is only used in its present sense (that of “disturbing”) in one other passage of Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra, i. 1. 18.

294. Lines 13, 14:

*Niggard of question, but of our demands
Most free in his reply*

Much needless trouble has been taken to square this courtly speech with the real facts of the case. Rosencrantz (who, it will be noticed, was better treated by Hamlet than was his companion) is evidently trying, in all his speeches here, to counteract the unfavourable reports of Guildenstern.

295. Line 17: o'er-raught; i.e. overreached, and thus overtook, as indeed (o're-took) F. 3 reads here. In all the other passages where Shakespeare uses the verb “to overreach” he uses it in its more ordinary sense of “to trick.” Compare v. 1. 87 of this same play. Steevens quotes from Spenser, Faerie Queene, book vi. canto iii.:

*Having by chance a close advantage view'd
He over-raught him.*

296. Line 19: they are ABOUT the court.—Qq. have heere about. Probably here may have been originally written, and omitted on account of the word hear earlier in the line.

297. Line 27: And drive his purpose ON to these delights.—So Ff. Qq. have into, and the reading is followed in some of the older editions.

298. Lines 30, 31:

*That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
AFFRONT Ophelia.*

Affront is used here in the sense of confront, encounter, as it always is in Shakespeare. Compare the three other instances in which the word occurs: Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2. 172–174:

*That my integrity and truth to you
Might be affronted with the match and weight
Of such a winnow'd purity in love,*

Cymbeline, iv. 3. 29, 30:

Your preparation can affront no less Than what you hear of;

and Winter's Tale, v. 1. 73–75:

*Unless another,
As like Hermione as is her picture,
Affront his eye.*

Elze quotes Greene's Tu Quoque: “Only, sir, this I must caution you of, in your affront or salute, never to move your hat" (Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. xi. p. 265). It may be mentioned that one of the quotations for this word given by Nares is incorrect. Nares quotes Fairfax's Tasso, ix. 89:

A thousand hardy Turks affront he had.

Reference to the context will show that affront is not here used as a verb meaning to encounter, but adverbially in the sense of in front. Tasso merely says: "Mille Turchi avea qui."

299. Line 32: lawful espials.—These words are not in Qq. On espials Singer quotes Baret's Alvearie: "An espiall in warres, a scoutwatch, a beholder, a viewer" See I. Henry VI. note 98.

300. Line 43: Gracious.—This very peculiar mode of addressing the King is, I fancy, intentionally peculiar. Coming from the over-familiar Polonius it is characteristic—a feebly jocose familiarity.

301. Lines 59, 60:

*Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them.*

This rapid and commingled metaphor has given rise to a great deal of commentary. I do not think that any of the numerous attempts which have been made to reduce the expression to a literal consistency—desperate special pleadings which reach a climax in Hackett's profound suggestion, "The 'sea' here is the heart," &c.—can be accepted really as explanations. Shakespeare's idea, as the Clarendon Press edd very sensibly say, "would be fully expressed by 'take arms against a host of troubles which break in upon us like a sea.'" Shakespeare's metaphors are the result, not of careful seeking, but of intuitive flashes; and for swift expressiveness they are unrivalled. Swift and subtle expressiveness is the first requirement of a metaphor; minute accuracy comes a long way after, and can be dispensed with, as Shakespeare saw, if by so doing the effect on the mind of the hearer or reader be increased. Theobald has noted that the expression a sea of troubles is the equivalent of the Greek καὶ ὅς τε θάλασσα. Since this was written, a very interesting letter from Dr. Furnivall has appeared in the Academy. May 29, 1889, on the metaphor, a sea of troubles, and its bearing on Hamlet's argument. I give the main part of it, though I doubt whether Shakespeare's "small Latin and less Greek" was equal to so much research in the quest of so far-fetched a metaphor. The passage from Aelian and those from Aristotle are quoted by Ingleby in The Still Lion, 1874, pp. 88, 89. Dr. Furnivall writes: "Shakspeare critics and students have hitherto failed to make clear the meaning of Hamlet's

*Or to take Armes against a Sea of troubles,
And by opposing, end them,*

because they have not been able to show that the Kelts, Gauls, and Kimbri, who were said to take arms against the oncoming billows and resist them, fought till they themselves were drowned, so that the lines above must be equivalent to Hamlet's 'not to be.' The reason is, that the said critics and students have, in their pride, not had recourse to that most helpful refuge for the destitute—those who have forgotten the little classics they once knew—Bohn's Library translations, and found in

Strabo's Geography, Book VII., ch. ii § 1, englished by Falconer (Bohn, 1854, p. 449):

Neither is it true, as has been related,¹ that the Cimbr² take arms against the flood-tides, or that the Kelts, as an exercise of their intrepidity, suffer their houses to be washed away by them, and afterwards rebuild them—with the notes:

"On turning up the Nicolas-of-Damascus passage in the 'Excerpts and Fragments from the Histories of the Greek Nicolas of Damascus, with a Latin Version, Leipsic, 1804,' p. 144-5, I find that it runs thus . . . [in English]

Kelts living near the sea think it disgraceful to fly from a falling wall or house.

When a high wave [or tide] comes upon them from the sea, they meet it and withstand it till they are washed down [destroyed], that they, flying [taking to flight], may not be thought to fear death.

"The fair inference from this passage is, that Hamlet's words, 'by opposing, end them,' mean 'die,' though they seem to mean 'fight evils and conquer them.' It also follows that 'To be, or not to be,' applies to this life, as most folks hold, and not to the future life; and that 'Whether 'tis Nobler to 'end them' is in apposition to, and expands 'To be, or not to be,' and is not an introductory adverb-clause to it, as some able men think, as if the sense was, 'Whether it is nobler to suffer ills here, or resist them, the question is, is there a future life. Shakspeare, no doubt, got his sea-metaphor—first, from an after continuer of Holinshed: 'A Registre of Hystories written in Greeke by Aelianus, a Romane, and deliuered in Englishe . . . by Abraham Fleming.' London, 1576, the Twelfth Booke, leaf 127, back:

OF THE AUDACITIE AND BOULDNES OF THE PEOPLE CELTAE. The people Celtæ are most ready, and able, to take any kinde of dangerous adventure, and are not afrayde of any blustering storme.

. . . They count runninge away so reprochfull, that oftentimes they will skarce moue when a house is ruinous, and ready to fall vpon their heades, or when it burneth eagerly in euery corner, and is in a bright flame rounde about them: Moreouer some of them are so boulede, or rather desperate, that they throw themselves into y^e fomye floudes with their swordes drawne in their handes, and shaking their sauelnes, as though they were of force and violence to withstand the rough waues, to resist the strength of the streame, and to make the floudes affraide least they should be wounded with their weapons.

"But Shakspeare might also well have seen the passage above from Nicolas of Damascus (born 64 B.C.), for it had appeared in print in 1593—at Heidelberg, says the Museum Catalogue; Geneva, the Bibliog. Univ.—both in its original Greek and a Latin translation opposite, by N. Cragius. . . .

"The first Quarto of 'Hamlet' (1608) has not the allusion to the Celtic custom, but only reads in sc. vi. (after II. ii. 169):

Ham. To be, or not to be, I there's the point,
To Die, to sleepe, is that all? I all.

"Aristotle, says Mr. W. A. Harrison, refers to the Kelts

¹ Aristotle, Ethics, Eudem., lib. iii., cap. 1, Nicolas of Damascus, and Aelian, Var. Hist., lib. xii., cap. 23, have attributed the like extravagant proceedings to the Kelts or Gauls. Nicolas of Damascus, Kelts, pp. 272, 273, says that the Kelts resist the tides of the ocean with their swords in their hands, till they perish in the waters, in order that they may not seem to fear death by taking the precaution to fly.

² The Cimbrî inhabited Denmark and the adjacent regions, p. 292.

in the Nicomachean as well as in the Eudemian Ethics (Book III., cap 1) The latter passage is.

He is not a brave man who exposes himself to danger knowingly, in consequence of fury [ἐκ θυμῆος], like the Celts who take up arms and rush upon the waves of the sea . . .

"The former passage is in the Nicomachean Ethics (Book III., cap. 4, vii.):

But the man who, like the Celts, fears nothing, neither earthquake nor waves, may be called, not courageous, but rather mad or insensate.

Mr. Irving sends the following note, giving a somewhat different view of the passage, from "God in Shakspeare," by "Clelia," 1890:

"In modern editions there is always a note of interrogation (?) where in the 1623 edition there was a colon (:). . . . If a note of interrogation (?) in the fifth line were correct, we should have the question asked, 'Is it nobler in the mind to consent to life or to consent to suicide?' And the question would be thus answered: 'It is nobler in the mind to consent to suicide, because death is more desirable than life, and because a brave man should risk the mere possibility that the soul may be immortal, and that present conduct may affect injuriously happiness in another world.' But if this be, as indeed it is, completely unsatisfactory as an answer to the question supposed, then surely it will be our bounden duty to the poet to examine the opening lines as originally printed not as a question, and to accept the meaning they shall then appear to have, if any, and if less in conflict with the soliloquy as a whole. Is it noble in the mind at all to do what is simply desirable? And when the mind acknowledges the possibility of immortality, acknowledges a portentous risk in suicide, can it be considered noble in the mind to be reckless of this risk? No, to both questions. . . .

"My final reason for not accepting this 'emendation, this grotesque protest against itself—?, is that there was never any need to change the colon in the 1623 edition, even if a question was asked. But no question was asked, and so the change entirely destroyed the sense of this whole soliloquy. I will now restore the sense, so long lost. Here it is in paraphrase: 'Whether it is nobler in the mind to bear evil or resist it, after all the great question is, Is there a life after death? If there be not, let death come and end all. If there be,—ah, that is the thought which makes men endure the ills of life. Conscience makes cowards of them. They dare not die. And thus, conscience, and thinking generally, stand as with me in the way of action.'"

302. Line 65: ay, there's the RUB.—See Richard II. note 242. The word is a technical term in the game of bowls.

303. Line 67: When we have shuffled off this mortal COIL.—The word coil is often used by Shakespeare in its old sense (not yet quite evaporated) of turmoil or troublesome confusion. This mortal coil might thus mean what Poe terms "the fever called living." There is also the other sense of coil, as in a coil of ropes; so that with the general idea of turmoil there may be a special reference to something coiled round the body, entangling and fettering it, or to the body as what Fletcher (Bonduca, iv. 1) calls the "case of flesh."

304. Line 70: the whips and scorns of TIME.—It is not perhaps necessary to take time as necessarily meaning "the times," but the word had formerly that signification. Hunter (Illustrations of Shakespeare, ii. 240) quotes the following example from Taylor the Water-Poet:

Mock'd in rhyme,
And made the only scornful theme of time;
and the Clarendon Press edd., giving the quotation, add another from Southwell, Saint Peter's Complaint, stanza v. l. 4, p. 12, ed Grosart:

The scorn of Time, the infamy of Fame.

305. Line 71: the PROUD man's contumely.—The Ff. have poore in place of the proud of Qq. The latter seems decidedly the most expressive, and has been adopted all but universally. The two expressions are of course really synonymous, only, as Corson remarks (Jottings on the Text of Hamlet, p. 24) "the genitive is differently used: in the first, it is objective, 'the poor man's contumely,' meaning the contumely or contemptuous treatment the poor man suffers; in the second, it is subjective, 'the proud man's contumely,' meaning the contumely or contemptuous treatment the proud man exercises." Johnson acutely remarks that "Hamlet, in his enunciation of miseries, forgets, whether properly or not, that he is a prince, and mentions many evils to which inferior stations only are exposed." To Mr. Furness it is "evident that Shakespeare is speaking in his own person," but why? Surely it is not necessary to suffer all "the thousand natural shocks that flesh is heir to" in order to record them burningly in a dramatic soliloquy.

306. Line 72: The pangs of DESPIS'D love.—This is the reading of Q. 2 and Q. 3.; the Ff. have dispriz'd, i. e. undervalued, which a few editors adopt, including Furness, who defends the reading not only on sentimental grounds, but as durior lectio. The word disprize occurs once elsewhere in the Folio, Troilus and Cressida, iv. 5. 74: disprizing the Knight oppos'd," where the Q. has misprizing. Either reading gives an admirable sense, and Corson throws out an ingenious suggestion on behalf of the Ff. by saying that "a disprized or undervalued love, a love that is only partially appreciated and responded to, would be apt to suffer more pangs than a despised love." This subtle point in love's casuistry can only be elucidated by the help of those whom it particularly concerns.

307. Line 75: quietus.—This is a legal term, from the writ beginning Quietus est, for an acquittance or settlement of account. Compare the Italian form of receipt, "per quietanza." Cotgrave has: "Descharge: f. A discharge; acquittance; Quietus est." Compare Sonnet cxxvi. ll. 12:

Her audit, though delay'd, answer'd must be,
And her quietus is to render thee;
and see also Webster, Duchess of Malfy, i. 1:
And 'cause you shall not come to me in debt,
Being now my steward, here upon your lips
I sign your Quietus est. —Works, vol. i. p. 198.

308. Line 78: a bare BODKIN.—Bodkin is an old word for a dagger. Chaucer uses it in speaking of the murder of Cæsar (Monkes Tale, l. 714, ed. Morris):

And in the capitoll anon him hent
This false Brutus, and his other foon,
And stiked him with bodekyne anon.

Randolph uses the word in the same connection in The Muses' Looking Glass, 1638, ii 2:

App A rapier's but a bodkin
Det. And a bodkin

Is a most dangerous weapon: since I read
Of Julius Cæsar's death, I durst not venture
Into a barber's shop for fear of bodkins.

—Works, ed. W. C. Hazlitt, 1875, p. 202.

In Scott's Discoverie of Witchcraft (Nicholson's Reprint, p. 291) there is a cut of these bodkins used in juggling tricks. Perhaps, however, as Mr. Marshall says in his Study of Hamlet, "bodkin here does not mean dagger, but a woman's bodkin, or perhaps a 'writing steel,' or 'stylus' (See the passage quoted in Richardson's Dictionary sub 'Bodkin,' from Holland's translation of Suetonius—'doe nothing else but catch flies, and with the sharp point of a bodkin or writing-steel prick them through.'). I think there is no doubt that Hamlet wishes to mention the most contemptible instrument which could take away his life" (p. 156, n.).

309. Line 76: who would FARDELS bear.—Ff. have these fardels, which is perhaps right, as, though the metre is not improved, the sense gains somewhat by the massing together of all the evils specified, under the contemptuous term, these fardels. The word means a bundle or burden. Cotgrave has "Fardeau: a fardle, burthen, trusse, packe, bundle." Furness quotes Acts xxi. 15, version of 1581: "after these days we trussed up our fardels and went vp to Jerusalem." Shakespeare uses the word only here and in The Winter's Tale, where it recurs many times in the 4th and 5th acts, always in reference to the bundle found with Perdita (see note 203).

310. Line 77: To GRUNT and sweat under a weary life.—The word grunt has seen better days. Stevens quotes several testimonies to its respectability; but neither Turberville nor Stanyhurst is a great authority. The latter translates "supremum congemuit"—"for sighing it grunts"—but then Stanyhurst's translation of the first four books of the Æneid (Leyden, 1582) is probably the most outrageous specimen extant of printed English. Chaucer, however, has (Monkes Tale, line 718, ed. Morris):
But never grout he at no strook but oon.

And Cotgrave defines gronder, ". . . also to grunt, groane, grumble, &c." In Tottel's Miscellany, 1557, in Nicholas Grimald's The death of Zoroas, &c., we have:

Here grunts, here grones, echwhere strong youth is spent.
—Arber's Reprint, p. 120.

And in Armin's Nest of Ninnies, 1608, we find:

"the fat foolcs of this age will gronte and sweat under this massie burden," &c.

—Sh. Soc. ed. Collier, p. 26.

Pope of course altered grunt into groan, having a certain colour for his linguistic prudery in the following line in Julius Cæsar, iv. 1. 22:

To groan and sweat under the business.

Groan was first introduced into the text in the Q. of 1676

311. Lines 79, 80:

*The undiscover'd country from whose bourn
No traveller returns.*

It certainly seems strange that Hamlet should give utterance to this sentiment when he has just had "ocular demonstration" to the contrary. Malone ingeniously remarks: "Our poet without doubt in the passage before us intended to say, that from the unknown region of the dead no traveller returns with all his corporeal powers; such as he who goes on a voyage of discovery brings back, when he returns to the port from which he sailed." Perhaps this may be so; but it seems to me quite possible that the passage had been written by Shakespeare on another occasion—jotted down perhaps on his "tables"—and that in introducing it here he overlooked the contradiction which the words as they stand certainly do imply. The thought here expressed is, one need hardly say, the common property of all writers, as it must be the inevitable reflection of all thinkers. Douce compares Job x. 21 and xvi. 22, and Malone cites Marlowe, Edward II. v. 6:

weep not for Mortimer,
That scorns the world, and, as a traveller,
Goes to discover countries yet unknown.

—Works, ed. Dyce (Moxon), p. 221

Stevens makes the inevitable comparison with Catullus, iii. 11, 12:

Qui nunc it per iter tenebicosum
Illuc, unde negant redire quemquam.

312. Line 83: Thus conscience does make cowards of us all—Compare Richard III. i. 4. 137, et seq., where the thought is further developed. Of us all is omitted in the Qq.

313. Line 85: the pale cast of THOUGHT—Shakespeare probably had in mind both meanings of the word thought, its customary one, and the other meaning, of anxious care, familiar to us from Matthew vi. 34: "Take therefore no thought for the morrow," which the Revised Version renders, "Be not anxious for the morrow."

314. Line 86: And enterprises of great PITH and moment.—Qq. here read pitch, and the Cambridge editors prefer this reading, stating in a note: "In this doubtful passage we have retained the reading of the Quartos, although the players' Quartos of 1676, 1683, 1695, 1703, have, contrary to their custom, followed the Folios, which may possibly indicate that 'pith' was the reading according to stage tradition." "Pith and marrow" occurs in i. 4. 22; pitch is used in Twelfth Night, i. 1. 12, &c. Either word is quite appropriate, and if one is a printers' error for the other, it is impossible to tell, or even to conjecture, which is the true reading. On the whole pith seems to me preferable. Corson (Jottings on the Text of Shakespeare's Hamlet, pp. 24, 25) gives a number of quotations from Shakespeare in defence of this reading.

315. Line 87: With this regard their currents turn AWRY.—Ff. have away, doubtless a printers' error, in any case a weaker reading.

316. Line 97: My honour'd lord, you know right well you did.—All the Qq. print you, the Ff. I. Corson defends the latter reading by suggesting that Ophelia's meaning is "The remembrances you gave me may have been trifles to you, such trifles as left no impression on your mind of your having given them; but I know right well they did, as they were most dear to me at the time" (Jottings, p. 25). The Qq. reading, however, still seems to me the more natural of the two.

317. Lines 106-108: That if you be honest and fair, YOUR HONESTY should admit no discourse to your beauty.—This is the reading of Ff.; the Qq. print you. Caldecott well explains the passage, which has sometimes been misunderstood: “‘If you really possess these qualities, chastity and beauty, and mean to support the character of both, your honesty should be so chary of your beauty as not to suffer a thing so fragile to entertain discourse, or to be parleyed with.’ The lady, ‘tis true, interprets the words otherwise, giving them the turn that best suited her purpose.”

318. Lines 130, 131: What should such fellows as I do crawling between HEAVEN AND EARTH?—This is the reading of Ff. and of Q. 1; the other Qq. have earth and heaven. There is not much to choose between the two readings. The Cambridge editors follow the Ff. in the Cambridge edition, the Qq. in the Globe and Clarendon Press editions.

319. Line 135: no where.—Ff. print no way.

320. Lines 149-153: I have heard of your PAINTINGS too, well enough; God has given you one FACE, and you make yourselves another: you JIG, you AMBLE, and you lisp, and NICKNAME God's creatures.—F. 1 has prattlings for paintings, and instead of face, pace. Both readings I take to be mere misprints, though a faint defence has been set up on the ground that lispe, in the succeeding clause, gives countenance to prattlings, and jig and amble to pace. Jig is spelt gig in the Qq., gidge in the Ff.; and the former read and amble instead of you amble. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iii. 1. 11, 12: “to jig off a tune at the tongue's end;” and Julius Caesar, iv. 3. 137:

What should the wars do with these jugging fools!

See note 350 below, where jig is spelt gidge in the quotation from Florio. Amble is used of an affected smoothness of gait. (See note 41 to Richard III.) Nickname is used as a verb only here and in Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 349; as a substantive only in Romeo and Juliet, ii. 1. 12.

321. Line 159: The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue, sword.—This is very likely a misprint, soldier's and scholar's having been accidentally transposed; and several editors have adopted the more precise reading, which is indeed that of Q. 1. But Farmer quotes in defence of the reading of Qq. and Ff., Lucrece, 615, 616, in which a similar transposition occurs, perhaps, however, for the sake of the rhyme:

For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

322. Line 166: Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh.—This is the reading of Ff., which I prefer to Capell's usually followed emendation: Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh. Qq. have jangled out of time, no doubt a misprint.

323. Line 174: the hatch and the DISCLOSE.—Disclose is a technical term, explained in the passage quoted by Stevens from Randle Holme, Academy of Armory and Blazon, bk. ii. ch. ii. p. 238: “Disclose is when the young just peeps through the shell. It is also taken for the laying, hatching, or bringing forth young: as ‘she disclosed three birds.’” See below, v. 1. 310.

324. Line 192: To show his GRIEF.—Ff. have griefs, which is followed by Furness, who cites Corson's explanation that griefs=grievances, as it does in iii. 2. 352.

325. Line 194: If she FIND him not—Compare All's Well, ii. 3. 216, 217: “I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not;” where found is used, in double entendre, for found out. as it is, entirely, here.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

326.—François-Victor Hugo, in the Introduction to his translation of the play (ed. 1873, p. 77, translated in Furness, New Var. Ed. vol. ii. p. 390), has the following admirable note on the strict dramatic relevancy of the Players' scenes: “Erudite critics, while acknowledging the fine wisdom of Hamlet's counsels to the players, have nevertheless stoutly denied the dramatic propriety of introducing these counsels at all. The two scenes, in which Hamlet makes the actors rehearse, have been regarded by these critics as hors-d'œuvre, very magnificent, it is true, but none the less as hors-d'œuvre. Herein lies, in my opinion, a very grave error. Hamlet wishes to have a piece acted, the sight of which will force the guilty King to reveal his crime. It is readily perceived that the manner in which this piece is to be interpreted is of great importance to him. Hamlet has before him mere strolling players, buffoons addicted to low clap-trap or grotesque contortions, decked out in ridiculous costume. Wherefore, if the scene to be acted before Claudius has not due decorum, if one of the actors mouths it like a town crier, if another has his periwig befronzled, if the clown, just at the most important point, cuts some of the wretched jokes that clowns are so fond of, why then, forsooth, the whole effect that Hamlet is aiming at is ruined. The terrible tragedy, whereof the last scene is to be acted off the stage, will end like a farce in a market-place amid peals of laughter. But if, on the other hand, the acting proceeds smoothly, the result is sure. The more natural the actor, the deeper will be Claudius's emotion; the truer the acting of the fictitious murderer, the more manifest will be the panic of the real one. It is therefore essential that Hamlet should have the piece rehearsed with the greatest care before it is performed in public.

327. Line 7: the whirlwind of passion.—This is the reading of Ff., and is followed by many editors. Qq. have “whirlwind of your passion.” It is difficult to decide between the two readings, but the Qq. reading is held by some to be more characteristic in its cumulative vehemence.

328. Line 10: to HEAR a ROBUSTIOUS PERIWIG-PATED fellow.—Instead of hear, Ff. have see, which some defend. But, as Furness says: “the ‘ears of the groundlings’ are not ‘split’ by what they see.”—Robustious is used again by Shakespeare in Henry V. iii. 7. 158, 159: “the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on.” It occurs in the quotation from Taylor given in note 273 to Henry VIII. Mr. Browning has the word in his Parleyings (1887), p. 219:

Join in, give voice robustious rude and rough.

Periwig-pated, used of players, is explained by Stevens' quotation from Every Woman in her Humour (1609): "As none wear hoods but monks and ladies; and feathers but fore-horses, &c.—none periwigs but players and pictures."

329. Line 12: the groundlings.—This was a common term of contempt for "the understanding gentlemen of the ground" (Ben Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, Induction, p. 366, ed. Gifford), or that part of the audience who paid a penny for admission, and stood on the unfloored ground in the pit of the theatre. See Dekker's Gull's Hornbook, ch. vi.: "your groundling and gallery-commoner buys his sport by the penny, and, like a haggler, is glad to utter it again by retailing." Nares cites Lady Alimony, i. 1: "Besides, sir, all our galleries and ground-stands are furnished, and the groundlings within the yard grow infinitely unruly."

330. Line 15: I WOULD have such a fellow whipped.—So Qq.; Ff. have could, which seems a little more considerate.

331. Line 15: Termagant.—Termagant, so frequently alluded to in the plays of the period, is represented in the early metrical romances as the god of the Saracens; as in Guy of Warwick, where the Soudan says:

So helpe me Mahoune of might
And Termagant my God so bright.

Ritson quotes Bale's Acts of English Octarines, Reliques, i. 77: "Grennyng upon her lyke Termagantes in a play." His character, from all accounts, must have been extremely outrageous and violent. Shakespeare uses the word in one other place, but as an adjective, I. Henry IV. v. 4. 114: "that hot termagant Scot."

332. Line 16: it out-herods Herod—Herod was the typical tyrant of the mystery-plays. Furness gives some specimens of his diction (Var. Ed. p. 227), with the significant stage-direction (Coventry miracle-play of the Nativity, Marriott, p. 83): "Here Erode ragis in thys pagond, and in the strete also." Compare Chaucer, The Miller's Tale (Harl. MS. lines 3383, 3384):

Som tyme to schewe his lightnes and maistrye
He playeth herody on a scaffold hye.

333. Line 27: pressure.—Shakespeare only uses the word pressure in one other place, ante, i. 5. 100:

All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past.

334. Line 36: nor man.—The Ff. have or Norman, which is an evident misprint of the reading in the text, that of the Qq., nor man. Q. 1 has nor Turk.

335. Line 38: had made MEN.—Theobald's suggestion, adopted by Rann and Furness, "had made them," is ingenious, and may very possibly be right. But I do not think the reading of Qq. and Ff. must necessarily give bad sense; for Hamlet is merely recording his sensations on looking at certain actors, who had made him wonder at men being so unlike humanity. Compare Lear, ii. 2. 59-65:

Kent. nature disclaims in thee: a tailor made thee.

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir: a stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours o' the trade.

336. Lines 42-50: And let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them, &c.—The advice which Hamlet here gives to the comic actors who insist upon giving their own "gag" in place of, or in addition to, the words "set down for them," is not inapplicable to-day; in Shakespeare's time it was greatly needed. "The clown," says Malone, "very often addressed the audience, in the midst of the play, and entered into a contest of raillery and sarcasm with such of the audience as chose to engage with him"—after the manner, one may suppose, of some modern "artists" of the music-hall

337. Lines 59, 60:

Horatio, thou art e'en as just a man

As EER my CONVERSATION COP'D WITHAL.

Elze notes the imitation of this in Nat. Field's A Woman is a Weathercock: "One-and-thirty good morrows to the fairest, wisest, richest widow that ever conversation coped withal."

338. Line 66: And crook the PREGNANT hinges of the knee.—Furness admirably defines the word pregnant, in its present use, as "pregnant, because untold thrift is born from a cunning use of the knee."

339. Line 67: fawning.—So Qq. Ff. have faining, which, says Stratmann (Dictionary of Old English, s v "fainen," apud Furness), is not a misprint, but another form of fawning, just as good, if not better.

340. Lines 68-70:

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,

And could of men distinguish, her election

Hath seal'd thee for herself.

This is the reading of Ff. Qq. have:

—distinguish her election,

S' hath [she hath] seal'd thee for herself;

which here and there an editor has been found to prefer.

341. Line 74: Whose blood and judgment are so well COMMINGLED.—Qq. print commled. The word commingled was in use in the sense of commingled. Compare Webster, The White Devil, iii. 1: "Religion, O, how it is commingled with policy!" (Works, p. 25).

342. Line 84: the very comment of THY soul.—Ff. here read my, a pretty evident misprint, which Knight endeavours to defend on psychological grounds. The defence seems to me extremely weak. "Hamlet," he says, "having told Horatio the 'circumstances' of his father's death, and imparted his suspicions of his uncle, entreats his friend to observe his uncle 'with the very comment of my soul,'—Hamlet's soul." Surely Dyce is right in replying, that what Hamlet wanted was for Horatio to observe the king on his own account, quite independently—

And after we will both our judgments join
In censure of his seeming.

343. Line 89: stithy.—Stithy (as also stithe, the reading of Ff.) is and was used both for a smith's anvil and for his shop. Here it evidently means the latter. Shakespeare employs the word as a verb in Troilus and Cressida, iv. 5. 255: "the forge that stithied Mars his helm."

344. Line 95: I must be IDLE.—Compare iii. 4. 12:

Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue:

and Lear, i. 3. 16: "Idle old man," used of the crazy king. The Clarendon Press editors state that idle is still used in Suffolk for foolish, light-headed, crazy. It is more than once used emphatically in this sense in Q. 1.

345. Lines 98, 99: the chameleon's dish; i.e. air, teste Sir Thomas Browne, Pseudodoxia Epidemica: or, Enquiries into very many received Tenets, and commonly presumed Truths, 1646 Bk. iii. chap. xx. "Of the Cameleon," pp. 157-163, begins thus: "Concerning the Chameleon there generally passeth an opinion that it liveth onely upon ayre, and is sustained by no other aliment; thus much is in plaine termes affirmed by Selinus, Pliny, and divers other, and by this periphrasis is the same described by Ovid; All which notwithstanding upon enquiry, I finde the assertion mainly controvertible, and very much to falle in the three inducements of beliefe." Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 1. 178, 179: "though the chameleon Love can feed on the air;" and Nat. Field, A Woman is a Weathercock: "I do live like a chameleon upon the air, and not like a mole upon the earth" (Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. xi. p. 45).

346 Line 104: you played i' THE UNIVERSITY, you say?—The Cambridge editors, who should be authoritative on the subject, say in their Clarendon Press edition: "The halls of the colleges at Oxford and Cambridge were the scenes of theatrical performances on special occasions, such as Commencement at Cambridge, or the visit of royal or distinguished personages. In 1564, on Sunday evening, August the 6th, Queen Elizabeth saw the Aulularia of Plautus in the antechapel of King's College Chapel. On the occasion of the visit of James I. and Prince Charles to Cambridge in 1614 plays were performed in the hall of Trinity College; among them the comedies of Ignoramus and Albumazar, which have escaped oblivion. On the title-page of the quarto of Hamlet, 1603, it is said, 'As it hath bene diuerse times acted by his Highnesse seruants in the Cittle of London: as also in the two Vniuersities of Cambridge and Oxford, and else-where.'"

347. Line 108: I did enact Julius Cæsar.—Possibly an allusion by Shakespeare to his own play of Julius Cæsar, which probably appeared in 1601. A play called Cæsar's Fall (by Webster, Middleton, Drayton, and others) was acted in 1602. A Latin play on the subject of Cæsar's death was performed at Christ Church, Oxford, in 1582; and perhaps it was in this that Polonius did enact Julius Cæsar.

348. Line 119: in your lap—Steevens thinks it was a common act of gallantry to lie at a mistress' feet "during any dramatic representation." Douce, however, reasonably limits the custom to masques and entertainments in private houses. See Beaumont and Fletcher, The Queen of Corinth, i. 2:

Ushers her to her coach, lies at her feet
At solemn masques.

—Works, p. 26.

Lines 121, 122 are omitted in Qq.

349. Line 123: Do you think I meant COUNTRY MATTERS?—Elze compares Greene, Dorastus and Fawnia (Hazlitt's Sh. Library, part i. vol. iv. p. 58): "delighting as much to talke of Pan and his cuntrye pranks, as Ladies to tell of Venus and her wanton toizes;" and Marston's Malcontent, ii. 3 (Works. ed. Halliwell. vol. ii. p. 229).

350 Line 132: your only jig-maker.—The Clarendon Press edd. quote Cotgrave: "Farce: f. A (fond and dissolute) Play, Comedie. or Enterlude; also, the Igg at the end of an Enterlude, wherein some pretie Knauerie is acted." Florio has: "Frottole, a country gygge, or round, or countrie song, or wanton verse." Collier says that a jig "seems to have been a ludicrous composition, in rhyme, sung, or said by the clown, and accompanied by dancing and playing upon the pipe and tabor" (History of English Dramatic Poetry, iii. 380).

351. Lines 137, 138: let the devil wear black, for I'll have a suit of SABLES.—It is not clear whether by sables Shakespeare meant mourning garments or robes trimmed with sable fur; or whether, as the Clarendon Press editors plausibly suggest, he intended an equivocal on the two meanings of the word, as in Massinger and Middleton, The Old Law, ii. 1:

A cunning grief,
That's only faced with sables for a show,
But gawdy-hearted

—Massinger's Works, p. 427.

Malone quotes a number of passages to show the high estimation in which sable-trimmed robes were held in England in the time of Shakespeare, as much as a thousand ducats being sometimes given for "a face of sables," and the statute of apparel, 24 Henry VIII. c. 13, having ordained that sables might be used by no one under the degree of an earl. A suit of sables may therefore be equivalent to rich and gaudy attire, and thus the greatest possible contrast to a mourning suit of black. Capell (Notes, vol. i. p. 136, apud Furness) says: "It is scarce worth remarking, being a fact of such notoriety, that 'sables,' the furs so called, are the finery of most northern nations; so that Hamlet's saying amounts to a declaration, that he would leave off his blacks, since his father was so long dead."

352. Lines 144, 145: For, O, for, O, the hobby-horse is forgot.—See note 59 to Love's Labour's Lost (iii. 1. 30, where the same quotation is made). Compare Beaumont and Fletcher's Women Pleased, iv. 1: "Shall the hobby-horse be forgot then?" and Ben Jonson's Entertainment of the Queen and Prince at Althorpe: "the hobby-horse is forgot."

353. Line 145: The dumb-show enters.—The necessity for this dumb-show is not very obvious. As Pye remarks, in his Comments on the Commentators (quoted in Furness, iv. 1. 241), "there is no apparent reason why the Usurper should not be quite as much affected by this mute representation of his crimes as he is afterwards when the same action is accompanied by words." Caldecott attempts an explanation by suggesting that "Hamlet, intent on 'catching the conscience of the king,' would naturally wish that his 'mouse-trap' should be doubly set, and could never be supposed willing to relinquish any one of those engines, the use of which custom had authorized." This last statement, however, is far from correct, for, as Hunter says (vol. ii. p. 249): "To represent the story of a play in dumb-show when the play itself is going to be performed appears a most extraordinary mode of procedure, and nothing like it has been traced in the usages of the English theatre, or, I believe, in the theatres of the more polished nations of Europe. What nearest approach to it, and may be by some mistaken for it, are the Dumb-shows in Sackville's Gorboduc and Gascoign's Jocasta. But whoever considers these shows attentively will perceive that they are something essentially different from the exhibition of the very action which is immediately to follow with the accompanying dialogue. They are, in fact, but so many moralizations, resembling the choruses of the Greek drama, the moral lessons being read in action rather than in words. I do not recollect any other English play with a dumb-show even of this kind; and Ophelia's question, 'What means this, my lord?' and 'Will he tell us what this show meant?' prove that shows such as these made no part of the common dramatic entertainments of England." Hunter then proceeds to state his theory, that "such strange and unsuitable anticipations were according to the common practice of the Danish theatre." His argument, however, is founded on a totally mistaken inference, as Elze conclusively points out in his edition, pp 187, 188. The fact remains that dumb-shows of this sort were unknown to the stage, and that Shakespeare must therefore have had a very definite reason for introducing this one—perhaps the reason thrown out by Caldecott, and also given by Knight.

354. Lines 147, 148: Marry, this is MICHING MALLECHO; it means mischief.—Miching mallecho is Malone's universally-received rendering of the Miching Malicho of Ff; munching Mallico of Qq. Mallecho is probably the Spanish malhecho, which it is convenient to render mischief. The meaning is, more literally, a wicked deed. Micher occurs in I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 451, in the sense which it still has among boys, a truant: "Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micber and eat blackberries?" (a turn of phrase which recalls the French idiom for the same thing, faire l'école buissonnière). Minshew has: "To Miche, or secretly to hide himself out of the way, as Truants doe from schoole;" and Florio, coming somewhat nearer to the sense we want, defines Accipinare: "To miche, to shrug or sneake in some corner." Miching mallecho may therefore not unreasonably be taken to mean underhand wickedness, or, as the Clarendon Press edd. put it, sneaking or skulking mischief. Maginn suggested in Fraser's Magazine, Dec. 1839, that the true reading was indicated in the Qq., and was mucho malhecho, much mischief.

355. Line 162: Is this a prologue, or the posy of a ring?—Ff. print Poesie. See Merchant of Venice, v. 1. 147-150, and note 355. These posies, or mottoes, chiefly for rings, are frequently referred to in Elizabethan plays. Compare Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 1. 88-91:

Rings she made
Of rushes that grew by, and to 'em spoke
The prettiest posies.—"Thus our true love's tide,"
"This you may loose, not me," and many a one.

—Ed. Littledale (N. Shak. Soc.), p. 72.

In his notes to the play Mr. Littledale refers to several plays of Beaumont and Fletcher for references to these posies—Knight of the Burning Pestle, v. 3; Loyal Subject, ii. 2 ("the jewels set within"); Pilgrim, i. 2 ("Be constant, fair, still?" "Tis the posy here, and here without, "Be good"); Woman Hater, iv. 1 ("posies for chimneys"); Rule a Wife, iv. 1 ("a blind posy in 't, 'Love and a mill-horse should go round together'") Compare Browning, The Ring and the Book, bk. 1. line 1390:

A ring without a posy, and that ring mine?

—Vol. i, p. 72.

356. Line 165: Enter a King and a Queen—Strachey observes in reference to the interlude, that its introduction, as in other plays, "heightens our feeling of the main Play being a real action of men and women, while the rhyme, &c., and the whole structure of the Interlude, distinguish it from the real dialogue, in a way corresponding with that which has been pointed out in reference to the player's recital of the speech of Æneas" (p. 66)

357. Line 165: Phæbus CART.—For the archaism, cart for chariot, compare Chaucer, Knights Tale, l. 1188:

The statue of Mars upon a carte stood, where carte, occurring as it does in the tremendous description of the temple of Mars armypotente, unquestionably means a chariot, though in line 1164 above—

The cartere over-ryden with his carte—

I think it is equally evident that carte means the same as it does now, and that Boswell is right in rebuking Steevens for his citation of it.

358. Line 176.—After this line Qq. have a line not in Ff

For women fear too much, even as they love;

And the next line begins with And. Many editors conjecture that a line has dropped out either before or after this line, which is without a rhyme, and thus obviously imperfect. The Cambridge editors suggest (what indeed had been my instinctive impression before turning to their note) that the Qq. give us Shakespeare's first thought, incomplete, as well as the lines which he finally adopted as they stand in the Ff.

359. Line 180: And as my love is siz'd, my fear is so—Compare Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 15. 4-6:

our size of sorrow,
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it

360. Line 184: My OPERANT powers.—Compare the one other use in Shakespeare of the word operant, Timon, iv. 3. 24, 25:

sauced his palate
With thy most operant poison!

361. Line 191: Wormwood, wormwood.—Qq. have, in the margin, That's wormwood, which seems just as good a reading as that of the Ff. given in the text, and adopted by almost all the editors.

362. Line 214: The great man down, you mark his FAVOURITE flies.—F. 1 has favourites, which Abbott defends and Furness adopts, considering flies one of the numerous instances of the third person plural in s. The sense is certainly much better in this reading, for it expresses (better than the singular would do) the defection of the diminished great man's swarm of favourites and flatterers. I should adopt it were it not for the hideous sound produced by the sequence favourites flies—an effect on the ear so grating that I cannot for a moment believe that Shakespeare would have tolerated it.

363. Line 229: AN ANCHOR'S cheer in prison be my scope!—This and the preceding line are omitted in Ff. The reading in the text (an for the and of Qq.) is Theobald's, universally adopted and most probably right, though I think that and is not necessarily wrong. Anchor is of course anchorite, or hermit, from Anglo-Saxon ancor, an abbreviation of Greek ἀγκυραπότης, one who is withdrawn. Compare The Vision of Piers Ploughman, l. 55:

And ancres and heremites
That holden hem in lure selles;

and the Romance of Robert the Devil, printed by Winkyn de Worde: "We have robbed and killed nonnes, holy auinkers, preestes," &c.

364. Line 249: Gonzago is the DUKE's name.—Elze points out a similar confusion of duke and king in the tragedy of Gorboduc: in the argument and the names of the speakers Gorboduc is styled Kyng of Britayne and Kynge of great Brittain, whereas in "The Order of the dôme shewe before the firste Acte" we read: "As befell vpon Duke Gorboduc deuinding his Lande to his two Sonnes." Walker, Crit. Exam. ii. 280-282, Article CIV points out that in Love's Labour's Lost the King is sometimes styled Duke; in Twelfth Night, Orsino is sometimes Duke, sometimes Count; in Two Gent. of Verona, Duke and Emperor are confounded; in Titus Andronicus, Emperor and King; in Beaumont and Fletcher, Cupid's Revenge, the Duke and his consort are styled Duke and Queen, and the heir to a dukedom talks of becoming a king; in Sidney's Arcadia, Basilius is sometimes called King, sometimes Duke. He winds up with: "king, count, and duke, were one and the same to the poet, all involving alike the idea of sovereign power; and thus might easily be confounded with each other in the memory."

365. Line 253. let the galled jade wince.—A proverbial expression. Steevens quotes Edwards, Damon and Pythias, 1582: "I know the gall'd horse will soonest wince;" and the Clarendon Press editors refer to Mother Bombie, i. 3, and Lyly's Euphues, p. 119 (ed. Arber): "For well I know none will wince except she be gawled."

366. Lines 256, 257: I could interpret between you and your love, if I could see the PUPPETS dallying.—Compare Two Gentlemen of Verona, ii. 1. 100, 101: "O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! Now will he interpret her." An interpreter, in the old puppet-shows, was the person who had charge of the dialogue. Steevens quotes Greene's Groatsworth of Wit, 1621: "It was I that penned the moral of man's wit, the dialogue of Dives, and for seven years' space was absolute interpreter of the puppets;" and Elze cites Nash, Pierce Pennilesse, ed. Collier, p. 21: "the pulling accent of her voyce is like a fained treble, or ones voyce that interprets to the puppets."

367. Line 262: So you MUST TAKE your husbands.—Qq. read So you mistake your husbands; Ff. So you mistake Husbands; the reading in the text (that of Pope) is derived from Q 1: So you must take your husband. It seems to me decidedly preferable; indeed, the arguments in favour of the mistake can only be qualified by the word which they prefer.

368. Line 264: "the croaking raven doth bellow for re- venge"—This is a satirical condensation, as Simpson pointed out in the Academy, Dec. 19, 1874, of the following lines of the True Tragedy of Richard the Third:

238

The screeking raven sits croaking for revenge,
Whole herds of beasts comes bellowing for revenge.

—Sh. Soc. Reprint, p. 61.

369. Line 285: So runs the world away.—So F. 1 The reading Thus, adopted by many editors, seems to me much poorer.

370. Line 286: a forest of feathers.—Malone observes: "It appears from Decker's Gul's Hornbooke, that feathers were much worn on the stage in Shakespeare's time;" but the only reference that I can find to feathers on the stage (ch. vi.: How a Gallant should behave himself in a Play-house) does not refer to the actors, but to the "gallant" who takes his seat upon the stage. "But on the very rushes where the comedy is to dance, yea, and under the state of Cambyases himself, must our feathered estrich, like a piece of ordnance, be planted valiantly, because impudently, beating down the mews and hisses of the opposed rascality." Compare T. Randolph, The Muses Looking-Glass, i. 1 and 2 (Works, ed. W. C. Hazlitt, p. 182). The scene is at the Globe Theatre.

"Mrs. Flowerdew (wife to a haberdasher of small-wares). I come to sell 'em pins and looking glasses

Bird (the feather-man) I have their custom too for all their feathers

Enter Roscius, a Player

Bird Master Roscius, we have brought the things you spake for.

Roscus. Why, 'tis well.

Mrs. Flowerdew. Pray, sir, what serve they for?

Roscus. We use them in our play."

371. Line 287: if the rest of my fortunes TURN TURK with me.—Steevens cites Greene's Tu Quoque, 1614: "This it is to turn Turk, from an absolute and most compleat gentleman, to a most absurd, ridiculous, and fond lover" (Hazlitt's Dodsley, xi. 226). Compare Much Ado, iii. 4. 57.

372. Line 288: with two PROVINCIAL ROSES on my RAZED shoes.—Roses were the rosettes worn on shoes, much as they are still used, sometimes, by ladies on their slippers. The word is of very frequent recurrence in the dramatists; one of the stage-directions in Massinger's City Madam, i. 1, is: "Enter Luke, with shoes, garters, fans, and roses." Provincial roses are rosettes in the shape of roses of Provence or of Provins. Cotgrave has: "Rose de Provence. The Prouince Rose, the double Damaske Rose;" and "Rose de Provins. The ordinary double red Rose." Gerarde in his Herbal speaks of the damask rose as Rosa provincialis. Hunter (Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. p. 254) gives an extract from Peacham's Truth of our Times, 1638, showing that as much as £30 was sometimes given for a pair of roses.—Razed shoes were probably slashed shoes. See Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses, ed. 1583; p. 57, New Sh. Soc. Reprint, ed. F. J. Furnivall, 1877: "To these their nether-stocks, they have corked shooes, pins-nets, and fine pantoffes, which beare them vp a finger or two [two inches or more, ed. 1606] from the ground; wherof some be of white leather, some of black, and some of red, some of black velvet, some of white, some of red, some of green, raced, carued, cut, and stitcheed all ouer with silk, and laid on with golde, siluer, and such like." The Clarendon Press edd. quote Randle Holme, Academy of Armory,

b. iii. ch. i. p. 14: "Pinked or raised Shoes, have the over leathers grain part cut into Roses, or other devices."

373. Line 290: Half a share.—The actors in Shakespeare's time had shares in the profits of the theatre, and were paid according to the receipts, and proportionately to their merit. There is much interesting information on the subject of shares in theatres in Halliwell-Phillipps' Illustrations of the Life of Shakespeare, 1874, pp. 86-91, the substance of which is given by Furness in his Variorum ed. of Hamlet, pp. 260-262.

374. Line 295: pajock.—This is the reading of F. 3, F. 4 Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4, Q. 5 have parock; F. 1, Q. 6 parocke; F. 2 pajocke; Q. (1676) parcock; Q. (1095) pecock. A number of explanations and of emendations have been suggested, Polish, Phœnician, and Swedish being laid under contribution, though one may wonder where Shakespeare got his knowledge of these not very generally known languages. The most fascinating suggestion is that of F. Leo (Notes and Queries, Jan. 21, 1865), who calmly conjectures that the mysterious word is merely a stage-direction for "hiccups"—the said hiccup being produced by Hamlet as a polite substitution for the word, which is on the tip of his tongue. Dyce, with less originality, defends the common reading pajock, which he says is "certainly equivalent to peacock. I have often heard the lower classes in the north of Scotland call the peacock 'the pea-jock, and their almost invariable name for the turkey-cock is 'bubbly-jock.'" F. A. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 157, note, remarks that Mr. Irving, in speaking these lines, gives "a new force to the word 'pajock' or 'peacock,' which Hamlet substitutes for the manifest rhyme 'ass,' by looking at the fan of peacock's feathers which he had borrowed from Ophelia, and held in his hand during the representation of the play, as if that had suggested to him the substitution."

375. Line 303: the recorders.—The recorder was an instrument like a flageolet, or flute with a mouthpiece. It was held in great esteem on account of its "approaching nearest to the sweet delightfulness of the human voice." See Chappell's Popular Music of the Olden Time, p. 246 (quoted in Furness, p. 268), and compare Midsummer Night's Dream, v. 1. 123, 124 ("he hath play'd on his prologue like a child on a recorder"), and note 264 to that play. At line 359 below, the stage-direction is: "Re-enter Players with Recorders;" and Hamlet says: "O, the recorders! let me see one."

376. Line 315: No, my lord, RATHER with choler.—This is the reading of Ff.; rather is omitted in Qq., which many editors follow.

377. Lines 348, 349: by these pickers and stealers.—An allusion, doubtless, to the admonishment in the Church Catechism to keep our hands from picking and stealing. Elze quotes A Larum for London: "Or with my sword I'll hack your filchers off" (Simpson's School of Shakespere, 1872, p. 72). "By this hand!" is used as a mild oath in Merchant of Venice, v. 1. 161, and elsewhere in Shakespeare. In II. Henry VI. i. 3. 193, Peter, the armourer's man, swears "By these ten bones, my lords." Compare Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster, ii. 2, where Pharamond says to Galatea: "By this sweet hand."

378. Line 358: "While the grass grows."—Malone cites the whole proverb from Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra, 1578:

Whyist grass doth growe, oft sterves the seely steede;

and from the Paradise of Dainty Devices, 1578:

To whom of old this proverbe well it serves,

While grass doth growe, the silly horse he sterves.

379. Line 360: To withdraw with you.—It is a matter of still unsettled conjecture to whom these words are addressed, and what is their precise meaning. Malone added the stage-direction: "Taking Guildenstern aside;" Steevens supposed the words to be said interrogatively in response to a gesture of Guildenstern's; and emendations of the text have been proposed. It seems to me that the words are capable of either of two meanings. The players have just re-entered with recorders. Hamlet turns to them, takes an instrument, and then, turning again to Guildenstern and Rosencrantz, takes up the thread of conversation with "To withdraw with you—" moving apart with them as he speaks, so as to be out of the players' hearing. Or it may be, as the players come in, Hamlet is about to leave his friends and join them—"To withdraw with you," as he says, parenthetically; when, a thought striking him—a thought suggested by the pipe he has in his hand—he turns back to his friends with the words which follow.

380. Lines 363, 364: O, my lord, if my duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.—This is a vague compliment, which need not be forced into a special meaning. As far as any explanation is necessary, or feasible, it is given by Warburton: "If my duty to the king makes me press you a little, my love to you makes me still more importunate. If that makes me bold, this makes me even unmannerly."

381. Line 373: fingers and THUMB.—Q. 2, Q. 3 have the umber instead of thumb, an evident misprint, which Steevens tried to justify by supposing umber to be an old name for a brass key at the end of the recorder. But in the first place it is by no means certain, or even likely, that the recorders of Shakespeare's time had such a brass key; and if they had, we have no reason to suppose that umber (which is used in the Faerie Queene for "visor") was the name for them.

382. Line 375: most ELOQUENT music.—So Qq.; Ff. have excellent.

383. Lines 388, 389: though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me.—Q. 1 has "yet you cannot play upon me," which is perhaps a preferable reading, though there is not much to choose between the two. It is adopted by the Cambridge editors.

384. Lines 409, 410:

And do such bitter business as the day

Would quake to look on

So Ff.; Qq. have "business as the bitter day," which a few editors have followed. I do not see what Warburton means by saying that the expression bitter business is "almost burlesque." I see nothing burlesque in it, nor anything reasonable or admirable in his suggestion of "better day."

385. Line 416: How in my words soever she be SHENT.—The participle shent (the only part of the verb then in use) occurs in three other places: Merry Wives, i. 4. 38; Twelfth Night, iv. 2. 112; and Coriolanus, v. 2. 104.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

386. Line 6: Hazard so NEAR US.—This is the reading of Qq. (neer's); Ff. have dangerous. Editors are much at variance in their preferences, but the former text seems to me the preferable.

387. Line 7: lunacies.—So Ff.; Qq. have the evident misprint browes, a misprint, however, which may stand, as Theobald supposed, for lunes. See, on that word, note 65 to Winter's Tale.

388. Line 9: To keep those MANY MANY bodies safe.—Compare "too too solid flesh," i. 2. 129 above; "A very little tittle let us do," Henry V. iv. 2. 83; and the Italian doubling of adjectives for emphasis, as molto molto.

389. Line 14: That spirit upon whose WEAL depends and rests.—Ff., instead of weal, have spirit, a perfectly obvious misprint which has found favour in a few quarters.

390. Line 17: it is a MASSY wheel.—Massy is used by Shakespeare in four other places, "massive" not at all. See Much Ado, iii. 3. 147; Troilus and Cressida, Prol. 17, and ii. 3. 18; and Tempest, iii. 3. 87:

Your words are now too massy for your strengths.

391. Line 56: May one be pardon'd, and retain the offence?—This line, full of intense meaning, might well be affixed as motto to Browning's Red Cotton Night-cap Country. The whole book is the subtilst of commentaries on this text.

392. Line 57: the corrupted CURRENTS of this world.—On the conjecture of S. Walker, Dyce in his second edition, and Furness in his Variorum, printed 'currents,' i. e. occurents (I. Henry IV. ii. 3. 58). The conjecture is a very ingenious one, and may not improbably be right. But it is not at all necessarily right. Shakespeare has metaphors quite as hasty and elliptical as this, in all parts of his work. And in several places he uses the word current almost as if it had passed from a metaphor into a received synonym for "course." See, for example, Merchant of Venice, iv. 1. 64:

To excuse the current of thy cruelty.

393. Line 73: Now might I do it PAT, now he is praying.—Qq. have but now a is praying. This speech of Hamlet has given great concern to the commentators, and is not easily reconciled with a too amiable view of the character of a man who could utter it. A writer in the Quarterly Review (vol. lxxix. 1847, p. 333, note)—quoted in Furness, vol. ii. p. 169) interprets it thus: "His reasons for not killing the king when he is praying have been held to be an excuse. But if Shakespeare had anticipated the criticism, he could not have guarded against it more effectually. Hamlet has just uttered the soliloquy:

—Now could I drink hot blood,
And do such bitter business as the day
Would quake to look on.

In this frame he passes his uncle's closet, and is for once, at least, equal to any emergency. His first thought is to kill him at his devotions; his second, that in that case Claudius will go to heaven. Instantly his father's sufferings rise into his mind; he contrasts the happy future of the criminal with the purgatory of the victim, and the contemplation exasperates him into a genuine desire for a fuller revenge. The threat relieves him from the reproach of inactivity, and he falls back into his former self." This seems to me a very reasonable view; and the following passage from Strachey (pp. 71, 72) does something to explain the passage yet further: "Hamlet enters, and sees that now he 'might do it pat'; but only the coward or the assassin would willingly kill a sleeping, or a praying man, and when to this instinctive feeling are united Hamlet's undoubted reluctance to shed his uncle's blood, even as the just avenger of his father's murder, and his habitual disposition to procrastinate, and put off action of every kind,—these motives are enough to stay his hand for the present. And to excuse his procrastination to himself and also to gratify that inclination 'to unpack his heart with words' which impels every man who, having deep thoughts and strong feelings, does not carry them out by action, he falls into language which, if he meant what he said, would certainly be as horrible and infernal as Dr. Johnson and others have called it. The commentators show, that this thought of killing an enemy under circumstances that might destroy his soul at the same time, has not only been adopted by more than one of Shakespeare's dramatic contemporaries, but is said to have been really uttered and acted upon. And this may warn us not to think the words mere pretext, even in Hamlet's case. Though assuredly Hamlet would not have deliberately done anything to cause his uncle's damnation, he gratifies his bitter hatred by saying that he desires, and will contrive it: he gives way (as I have observed on another occasion) to evil inclinations, instead of strictly restraining them, because he feels that they are not so bad, that is, so strong, as to lead to guilt of action. To avenge his father's murder with his own hand, is, under all the circumstances of country, age, form of government, and social condition, in which Shakespeare has laid the scene of the play, a judicial act required of him by the strictest laws of public and private duty: but with the universal infirmity and sinfulness of human nature, he mixes up more or less of bad feelings with the performance of his duty."

394. Line 79: hire and salary.—There is a very amusing misprint here in Qq., which read base and silly.

395. Line 80: full of bread.—See Ezekiel, xvi. 49: "Behold, this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fullness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." Compare Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 159, 160:

and his army full
Of bread, and sloth.

396. Line 81: as FLUSH as May.—So Qq.; Ff. have the similar, but less unconventional reading, fresh. Flush occurs again, in the same sense (full of vigour), in Timon, v. 4. 8: "now the time is flush;" and in Antony and Cleopatra, i. 4. 62: "flush youth revolt."

397. Line 83: But, in our circumstance and course of thought; i. e., as the Clarendon Press edd. rightly take it, in the circumstance and course of our thought. Compare

iii. 2. 350: "your cause of distemper," i.e. the cause of your distemper. Circumstance is used, as often in Shakespeare, for details.

398. Line 88: Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid hent.—Hent is used as a verb in Measure for Measure, iv. 6. 14, and in Winter's Tale, iv. 3. 133; only here as a noun. In the latter passage,

And merrily hent the stile-a,

the word seems to be used in the sense of "lay hold of," "seize" (and thus clear the stile), as in Chaucer, Prologue, line 698: "till Jhesu Crist him hente" (spoken of Saint Peter's attempt to walk upon the water). Here, then, it may mean a hold or grip. Dyce in his Glossary explains hent, "a hold, an opportunity to be seized;" and the Clarendon Press edd. say: "Hamlet, as he leaves hold of his sword, bids it wait for a more terrible occasion to be grasped again." Theobald conjectured that hent might be a misprint for hint; and Warburton considered the word to be plainly hest. The latter is too rash a conjecture, and the former makes very bad poetry.

399. Line 89: When he is drunk asleep.—This is the pointing of Ff.; Qq. have a comma between drunk and asleep. The reading of Ff. seems the best, because Hamlet wishes to take the king in some guilty state or practice; and being asleep is surely a very innocent one, quite different from being drunk asleep, or in a drunken sleep.

400. Lines 91-93:

about some act

That has no relish of salvation in 't;

Then trip him, that his heels may kick at heaven.

We may compare with this the more mirthful malevolence of the following stanza from Browning's Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister:

There's a great text in Galatians,
Once you trip on it, entails
Twenty-nine distinct damnations,
One sure, if another fails:
If I trip him just a-dying
Sure of heaven as sure can be,
Spin him round and send him flying
Off to hell, a Manichee?

—Works, vol. iii. p. 94.

F. A. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 165, justly says that the expression in the text "recalls very forcibly some of those painfully realistic representations of the torments of the damned, which are to be found in various illustrated books of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries."

ACT III. SCENE 4.

401. Line 4: I'll sooner me even here.—Qq. read: "silence me even here;" Ff.: "silence me e'en here;" the reading in the text is Hamner's, advocated by the text of the corresponding passage in Q. 1: "I'll shroud myself behind the arras." Compare Merry Wives, iii. 3. 96, 97: "I will ensorce me behind the arras." Silence, however, is a reading not without its justifications.

402. Line 13: Go, go, you question with a wicked tongue.—So Qq.; Ff. have idle, which in its precise echo of the preceding line seems more likely to have been a misprint—such printers' errors being very common—than an intentional effect of sound.

403. Line 18: budge.—Used only here and in Tempest, v. 1. 11.

404. Line 23: Dead, FOR A DUCAT, dead!—Elze compares Dekker's Honest Whore, part I. i. 1 (Works, vol. ii. p. 5): "Wrestle not with me; the great fellow gives the fall, for a ducat."

405. Lines 28-30:

Ham. *A bloody deed! almost as bad, good mother,
As kill a king, and marry with his brother.*

Queen. As kill a king!

This passage, indefinite as it is, affords the most definite ground that we get in the play for argument as to the queen's guilt or innocence in connection with the murder of her first husband. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 49, remarks that Hamlet's words are "most probably a tentative reproach uttered by Hamlet as an experiment on his mother's conscience; the Queen's answer—must, I think, be held to be entirely free from any taint of hypocrisy, and should be uttered with simple earnestness." It may be observed, however, that the matter is entirely left open by Shakespeare, and no doubt deliberately, as in Q. 1 the Queen declares her innocence in the most unmistakable terms:

As kill a king!—

But as I have a soule, I sweare by heauen,
I neuer knew of this most horrid murder

In the Hystorie of Hamblet (ch. iii., Furness, vol. ii. p. 100) the Queen is equally distinct in her disavowal. May not Shakespeare have left the point in doubt for the sake of adding a vague impressiveness to the character, otherwise uninteresting, of the Queen?

406. Line 36: penetrable.—This word is used in only two other places, Lucrece, 559, and Richard III. iii. 7. 225: "penetrable to your kind entreats."

407. Line 37: If damned custom have not BRAZ'D it so.—Compare Lear, i. 1. 10, 11: "I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd to 't." Boyer, French Dictionary, has "To Braise, V. A. Couvrir de Cuivre, Bronzer." Compare Chapman's part of Hero and Leander, iii. 267:

Yet braz'd not Hero's brow with impudence.

408. Line 44: And sets a blister there.—An allusion to the practice of branding harlots on the forehead. Compare Comedy of Errors, ii. 2. 138, and see note 48.

409. Line 46: contraction.—This word seems evidently to be used in the sense of the marriage contract: no similar use of it in this sense has been met with.

410. Line 48: A Rhapsody of words.—The Clarendon Press edd. rightly say that the meaning of the word rhapsody is well illustrated by the following passage from Florio's Montaigne, p. 68, ed. 1603: "This concerneth not those mingle-mangles of many kindes of stuffe, or as the Grecians call them Rapsodies."

411. Line 50: With TRISTFUL visage, as against THE DOOM.—Tristful (i.e. sorrowful) occurs in only one other part of Shakespeare, I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 434: "my tristful queen." The doom occurs again in Macbeth, ii. 3. 88: "The great doom's image," for the day of judgment, doomsday.

412. Lines 50, 51:

Queen. *Ay me, what act,
That rours so loud, and thunders in the INDEX?*

The latter line is given in the Qq. to Hamlet; in the Ff. the two lines are correctly attributed to the queen, but are printed as prose. Index is used five times in Shakespeare, always in the sense of preface or prologue. Compare Othello, ii. 1. 282, 263: "an index and obscure prologue." In Shakespeare's time the index was frequently placed at the beginning of a book. The name generally implies merely a table of contents. Compare Pericles, ii. 3 3-5:

To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Were more than you expect, or more than 's fit.

413. Line 53: Look here, upon this picture, and on this—Marshall, in his Study of Hamlet, has a long note on "the two pictures in the closet scene," pp. 166-173. He quotes Davies, Dramatic Miscellanies, vol. iii. pp. 106, 107: "It has been the constant practice of the stage, ever since the Restoration, for Hamlet, in this scene, to produce from his pocket two pictures in little, of his father and uncle, not much bigger than two large coins or medallions. . . . But, if the scantiness of decorations compelled the old actors to have recourse to miniature pictures, why should the playhouse continue the practice when it is no longer necessary; and when the same scene might be shown to more advantage by two portraits, at length, in different panels of the Queen's closet?" Steevens and Malone both express their approval of whole lengths rather than miniatures, on the ground that Hamlet could not, in the latter case, have referred to "a station, like the herald mercury," &c. It also seems obvious that Hamlet would not be likely to have with him a miniature of his uncle. Fechter, indeed, gets out of that difficulty by tearing the miniature of Claudius from the queen's neck, and flinging it away; Rossi tears off the miniature, dashes it to the ground, and tramples on the fragments. Mr. Irving and Salvini suppose the pictures to be seen with the mind's eye alone, a conclusion which Mr. Marshall strongly, and, as I think, conclusively, argues against in his note. "The very first line—

Look here upon this picture, and on this—seems to me totally inconsistent with anything but two actual pictures then before the Queen's eyes. If the portraits existed but in 'the mind's eye' of Hamlet, what sense is there in his using the two demonstrative pronouns?—how could he point out any contrast between two portraits which he had not yet drawn? He might have said, 'Look upon this picture—that I am now going to draw in imagination,' but he could not say, 'Compare it with this which I am going to draw afterwards.' The word 'counterfeit' seems to me inapplicable to a mere ideal representation; it is always used by Shakespeare of some actual imitation" (p. 170).

414. Line 54: The COUNTERFEIT presentment of two brothers.—Counterfeit is often used in Shakespeare for portrait, as in Timon, v. 1. 83, 84:

Thou draw'st a counterfeit
Best in all Athens.

Cotgrave has: "Pourtraitet. m. A pourtrait, image, picture, counterfeit, or draught of."

415. Line 58: A STATION like the herald Mercury—Station is used for an attitude in standing in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 3. 22:

Her motion and her station are as one;
and perhaps in Macbeth, v. 8. 42: "the unshrinking station where he fought;" but, though given by Schmidt in his Lexicon under the same heading as those previously mentioned, I think it more properly means "post."

416. Line 59: New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.—Malone suggests that Shakespeare may have had in his mind three lines of Phaer's Aeneid, 1558, bk. iv. l. 246 et seq:

And now approaching neere, the top he seeth and mighty lims
Of Atlas Mountain tough, that Heaven on boystrous shoulders beares,
There first on ground with wings of might doth Mercury arrive.

417. Line 67: batten; i. e. feed oneself fat. The word is used both transitively and intransitively; in Shakespeare only transitively. It is found in one other passage. Coriolanus, iv. 5. 35: "go and batten on cold bits." Compare Marlowe, The Jew of Malta, iii. iv.: "Why, master, will you poison her with a mess of rice porridge? that will preserve life, make her round and plump, and batten more than you are aware" (ed. Dyce, 1862, p. 163). The Clarendon Press edd. quote Cotgrave, who gives "to battile" as equivalent to "Prendre chair." They add: "The word 'battels' is no doubt derived from the same root."

418. Line 69: hey-day.—Hey-day occurs as an exclamation in the Qq. of Troilus, v. 1. 73 (Ff. hoyday), and is given by many editors for the hoyday of Richard III. iv. 4. 468, and Timon, i. 2. 137, and the high-day of Ff. in Tempest, ii. 2. 190. Steevens quotes from Ford, "Tis Pity She's a Whore (or, as the Clarendon Press edd. say, "a play of Ford"), iv. 3:

Must your hot itch and pleurisy of lust,
The heyday of your luxury, be fed
Up to a surfeit?

Heyday perhaps comes from, and means, "high day." It is given in French dictionaries as the equivalent of beaux jours.

419. Lines 71, 72:

SENSE, sure, you have,

Else could you not have MOTION

Compare Measure for Measure, i. 4. 59:

The wanton stings and motions of the sense.

420. Line 73: apoplex'd.—The Clarendon Press edd. compare Ben Jonson, The Fox, i. 1: "How does his apoplex?" (Works, p. 188); and Beaumont and Fletcher, Philaster, ii. 2: "She's as cold of her favour as an apoplex."

421. Line 77: hoodman-blind.—Hoodman-blind is the old name for blindman's-buff. Shakespeare has Hoodman in All's Well, iv. 3. 136. There is a very entertaining scene of hoodman-blind in Day's Humour out of Breath, 1608, iv. 3 (ed. Bullen, pp. 58 et seq.). Baret's Alvearie has: "The Hoodwinke play, or hoodmanblinde, in some places called the blindmanbuf." Compare The Merry Devil of Edmonton, i. 3 (ed. Warnke and Proescholdt, p. 15).

422. Line 81: Could not so MOPE.—The word is used again in this sense—to be dazed, or to act blindly, perhaps from myope—in Tempest, v. 1. 240. Compare Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 2. 25: "I am mop't." Little-dale, in his note on the line in his edition, compares Fletcher, The Humorous Lieutenant, iv. 6:

Sure, I take it,
He is bewitch'd, or mop'd, or his brains melted,

and the Queen of Corinth, ii. 3:

How am I tranced and moped!

423 Line 83: mutine—Mutine, here used as a verb, is found in v. 2. 6, and in King John, ii. 1. 378, as a substantive. Cotgrave has "Mutiner: to mutine." The Clarendon Press edd quote Jonson's Sejanus, iii. 1:

Had but thy legions there rebell'd or mutin'd.

Mutineer occurs in Tempest, iii. 2. 40, and mutiner in Coriolanus, i. 1. 254.

424 Line 90: such black and GRAINED spots—Cotgrave has: "Graine: f. The seed of herbs, &c., also, grain, wherewith cloth is dyed in graine, Scarlet dye, Scarlet in graine." Grain was originally used only of scarlet dye, but came afterwards to be applied to any fast colour. The word comes from the Latin granum, a seed, a term which was used of the seed-like form of the ovium of the coccus insect, from which red dyes were obtained. In Spanish the word grana is used for grain in general, and also for scarlet grain, cochineal. Thus Isaiah i. 18 is in Valera's version: "si vuestros pecados fueran como la grana," &c.

425 Line 92: enseamed.—Steevens quotes Randle Holme's Academy of Armory and Blazon, bk. ii. ch. ii. p. 238: "Enseame is the purging of a hawk from her glut and grease." Enseamed is used by Beaumont and Fletcher, The Triumph of Death (Works, ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 535), in the same sense as Shakespeare's. Compare Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 195 for a parallel use of seam (literally hog's fat).

426 Line 98: your PRECEDENT lord.—Shakespeare uses precedent (accentuated on the second syllable) in two other places in the present sense of former: Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 14. 83, and Timon, i. 1. 133. In using it as a noun he accentuates the word, as we do now, on the first syllable.

To a VICE of kings.—One of Shakespeare's several allusions to the Vice or buffoon of the moralities. Compare Twelfth Night, iv. 2. 134-136; and see Extracts from Collier's History of English Dramatic Poetry, ii. 264 et seq. in Furness, Var. Ed. pp. 295, 296. See note 305 to Richard III.

427. Line 102: Enter Ghost.—In Q. 1 the stage-direction is the rather ludicrous one, Enter the Ghost in his nightgown. But nightgown no doubt means a dressing-gown ("his habit as he liv'd"), as in Macbeth, ii. 2. 70, 71:

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers.

428. Line 104: What would YOUR gracious figure?—Ff. have you instead of your, and a few editors read (after Knight) What would you, gracious figure?

429. Line 118: incorporal.—Corporeal (for corporeal) occurs a good many times in Shakespeare; incorporal (for incorporeal) only here. Corporeal and incorporeal do not occur at all. The Clarendon Press edd (note on Macbeth, i. 3. 81) cite examples of both forms from Milton; as, for instance, Paradise Lost, iv. 585:

To exclude spiritual substance with corporeal bar;
and Samson Agonistes, 616:

Though void of corporeal sense.

430 Line 121: Your bedded hair, like life in EXCREMENTS.—In five out of the six instances of this word in Shakespeare, excrement is used for hair—a meaning commonly (and, in strict etymology, correctly) given to it at the time, as in the passage quoted by the Clarendon Press edd from Bacon, Natural History, cent. 1, sect. 58: "Living creatures put forth (after their period of growth) nothing that is young but hair and nails, which are excrements and no parts." See Love's Labour's Lost, note 159, and Winter's Tale, note 205.

431. Lines 152-155.—Staunton considers these lines as an aside, addressed by Hamlet to his "virtue," and points: "Forgive me this, my virtue." This view is followed by many editors, though few even of those who profess to believe have had the courage to adopt it. It is a view that does not commend itself to me. I think Hamlet is still speaking to his mother.

432. Line 155: Yea, CURB and woo for leave to do him good.—Curb (spelt courb in Ff., and by some later editors for distinctness' sake) is from the French courber, to bend or bow. Steevens quotes the Vision of Piers Ploughman, l. 617 (ed. Wright):

Thanne I courbed on my knees
And cried hire of grace.

433. Lines 161-165:

*That monster, custom, who all sense doth eat,
Of habits devil, is angel yet in this,
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock or livery
That aptly is put on.*

This passage is not in Ff. In Qq. (except in that of 1676) there is no stop between eat and of. Many emendations have been suggested, and many far-fetched explanations put forth. The passage is certainly a difficult one. Who all sense doth eat is well paraphrased by the Clarendon Press edd.: "who destroys all natural feeling, and prevents it from being exerted;" Of habits devil, is rendered by the same edd.: "and is the malignant attendant on habits." Might not devil possibly stand as a sort of adjective to habits, meaning that custom is a monster of diabolical habits?

434. Line 169: And either LAY the devil, or throw him out.—This line is not in Ff.; Q. 2, Q. 3 read and either the devil, an evident misprint, which the printer of Q. 4 changed to and Maister the devil, which makes no sort of metre, and is doubtless a mere conjecture, without authority. A word is evidently wanting, and that word is evidently a single syllable, or something which by the help of elision will be equivalent to a single syllable. So much we know, and no more; though it seems probable (by no means certain) from the alternative word either, that the lost verb is one which would contrast with throw him out. The field for guess-work is thus illimitable, and to me it seems scarcely worth guessing when the most brilliant guess will be a guess only. I have inserted in the text the word lay (Cartwright's conjecture), not because I have any confidence that that is the right word, but because some insertion is necessary in order to fill up the hiatus, and lay will at least do as well as anything else. Dr. Ingleby, naming the five conjectures which do not seem to him "utterly imbecile," says very reasonably (The Still Lion, 1874, pp. 115-119): "It is not easy to see why the five verbs, curb, quell, lay, aid, and house found more favour than a score of others, apparently as well suited to the sense and measure of the line as any of these. How soon are the resources of the conjectural critics exhausted! how meagre is the evidence adduced in favour of any single conjecture! yet the requirements of the passage are by no means severe, nor are the means for complying with them either narrow or recherché. It is rather an embarras des richesses that hinders our decision. To call over a few of the candidates for admission into the text: curb suggests rein, rule, thrall, bind, chain, &c., quell and lay suggest charm, worst, quench, foil, balk, cross, thwart, daunt, shame, cow, &c.; while aid and house suggest fire, rouse, stir, serve, lodge, feed, &c. Besides which there are many dissyllables that would answer the purposes of sense and measure, as abate, abase, &c." The whole passage is very interesting and acute, and seems to me the most sensible consideration that has been made of the subject. Dr. Ingleby's conclusion is that the missing word "must at least import the subduing of the devil of habit," and that, while it is obviously impossible to come to a positive decision, lay and shame are perhaps the best of the innumerable conjectures. It is impossible to leave this subject without mentioning Dr. George MacDonald's note on this passage in his edition of the play, p. 179: "I am inclined to propose a pause and a gesture, with perhaps an inarticulation!" The italics are the author's, the note of admiration mine.

435. Line 182: the BLOAT king.—Bloat is Warburton's extremely probable emendation of the Qq. blowt. FF. have blunt. Bloat (i.e. bloated) is adopted by almost all the editors. Compare (for the form) deject, iii 1. 163; hoist, iii 4. 207; distract, iv. 5. 2. Nothing could be more appropriate, as to the sense. The numerous references to drinking leave no doubt that Claudius is intended to be somewhat of a drunkard.

436. Line 183: call you his MOUSE.—This was used as a term of endearment. See Twelfth Night, note 49; and compare Beaumont and Fletcher, The Knight of the Burning Pestle, i. 2: "What is it, mouse?" and "I prithee, mouse, be patient."

437. Line 184: a pair of REECHY kisses.—Reechy means, literally, smoky. Compare Coriolanus, ii. 1. 224, 225:

the kitchen malkin pins

Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck.

It is used here, as in Much Ado, iii. 3. 143, for 'dirty, filthy, in the more general sense. The Clarendon Press edd. suggest that "in the present passage the word may have been suggested by 'bloat,' two lines before, which has also the meaning 'to cure herrings by hanging them in the smoke.'"

438. Line 185: Or PADDLING in your neck with his damn'd fingers—Compare Othello, ii. 1. 259, 260: "Diddst thou not see her paddle with the palm of his hand?" and Winter's Tale, i. 2. 115:

244

But to be paddling palms and pinching fingers

439. Line 190: a paddock, . . . a gib.—Compare Macbeth, i. 1. 9: "Paddock calls," and see note 3 to that play. On gib compare I Henry IV. i 2. 58: "I am as melancholy as a gib cat." Gib, the contraction of Gilbert, was the equivalent to our tom-cat. Steevens quotes Chaucer Romaunt of the Rose, 6207:

Gibbe our cat,

That awaiteth mice and rattes to killen—

where the original has "Thibert le cas"—Tib, from Thibert, being also, as Nares observes, a common name for a cat. (See Nares, s v.) Boyer, French Dictionary, has "Gib, Subst. (a gib-cat) Un chat;" and Coles, Latin Dictionary, has "Gib, for Gilbert," and below, "A gib cat, catus, felis mas."

440. Line 194: like the famous ape.—This ape has not yet been identified. Warner (Var. Sh. vol. vii. p. 405) thinks that Sir John Suckling, in one of his letters, may possibly allude to the same story: "It is the story of the jackanapes and the partridges; thou starest after a beauty till it be lost to thee, and then let's out another, and starest after that till it is gone too." The Clarendon Press edd. say: "The reference must be to some fable in which an ape opened a basket containing live birds, then crept into it himself, and 'to try conclusions,' whether he could fly like them, jumped out and broke his neck."

441. Line 200: I must to England.—Malone (Var. Ed. vol. vii. p. 405) says: "Shakespeare does not inform us how Hamlet came to know that he was to be sent to England. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern were made acquainted with the King's intentions for the first time in the very last scene; and they do not appear to have had any communication with the Prince since that time. Add to this, that in a subsequent scene, when the King, after the death of Polonius, informs Hamlet he was to go to England, he expresses great surprise, as if he had not heard anything of it before.—This last, however, may, perhaps, be accounted for, as contributing to his design of passing for a madman." Marshall, Study of Hamlet, pp. 183, 189, has the following note on the subject: "The first mention of the scheme of sending Hamlet to England occurs in Act III. scene 1, lines 168-175. . . . The Queen apparently was not present, only Polonius: the next allusion to it is in the third scene of the same act, when the King broaches the plan to Rosencrantz and Guildenstern. The action would seem to be continuous, at any rate to the end of scene 1, if not to the end of the act. We must mark the Queen's answer: Hamlet's words are:

I must to England; you know that?

To which his mother replies—

Alack,

I had forgot: 'tis so concluded on—showing that she had heard of the proposed embassy to England. Unless we suppose that an interval of time is intended to elapse between the first and second scenes of this act, she must have been informed of his intention by Claudius, when they retired so abruptly in the middle of the play represented before the Court. Hamlet could only have heard of the project in the short interval which elapsed between his leaving the King kneeling in his closet (scene 3) and his interview with his mother (scene 4). It is quite possible that Shakespeare meant us to suppose that, while Hamlet passed through the corridors of the palace, some of the courtiers, if not Rosencrantz and Guildenstern themselves, had told him of the King's intention. I cannot conceive that it was a mere oversight on Shakespeare's part; for we must not forget that he revised the whole play, and this very scene in particular. Surely Malone is not justified in saying, as far as the text is concerned, that Hamlet expresses any surprise when (act iv. scene 3, lines 47, 48) the King tells him that everything is ready for his journey to England; he merely repeats the words, "For England;" and twice afterwards, "Come, for England" (line 51 and line 55); this very repetition might have warned the King that Hamlet was not without suspicion of his design; but he seems to have had no apprehension on this point. It is very likely that, by repeating these words, Hamlet desired to remind his mother of what he had said to her; and to assure her that she need have no fear of his incurring any danger from over-trusting the companions which the King had chosen for him."

442. Lines 206, 207:

*For 'tis the sport to have the ENGINEER
Hoist with his own PETAR.*

Q (1676) gives the modern form engineer. Compare Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 8: "Then there's Achilles,—a rare engineer." And see cognate forms, such as pioneer, Hamlet, i. 5. 163, and Othello, iii. 3. 346. Petar was formerly an alternative spelling of petard. Cotgrave has: "Petart: m. A Petard, or Petarre; an engine (made like a Bell, or mortar) wherewith strong gates are burst open" Elze compares Dekker, The Honest Whore, Part I. v. 2:

Then all our plots
Are turn'd upon our heads, and we're blown up
With our own underminings.

—Works, vol. ii. p. 75.

443. Line 212: I'll lug the GUTS into the neighbour room.—The word guts had not so vulgar a sound in Shakespeare's age as it has in ours. Steevens quotes Lyly's Mydas, 1592: "Could not the treasure of Phrygia, nor the tributes of Greece, nor mountains in the East, whose guts are gold, satisfy thy mind?" Halliwell states that he has seen a letter, written about a century ago, in which a lady of rank, addressing a gentleman, speaks of her guts with the same nonchalance with which we should now write stomach. In any case, the use of the word here is unquestionably coarse and unfeeling. Compare the other passage in which it is applied to a person, I Henry IV. ii. 4. 251: "thou clay-brain'd guts," &c.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

444. Lines 6, 7:

King. What, Gertrude? How does Hamlet?
Queen. Mad as the sea and wind, &c.

The Queen has promised her son, in lines 197–199 of the preceding scene, that she will not betray the secret of his pretended madness; she here keeps her promise, and, as

Clarke says (apud Furness, vol. i. pp. 311, 312), "with maternal ingenuity makes it the excuse for his rash deed. This affords a clue to Hamlet's original motive in putting 'an antic disposition on' and feigning insanity; he foresaw that it might be useful to obviate suspicion of his having a steadily-pursued object in view, and to account for whatever hostile attempt he should make." In Q. 1 there is a scene not found in any other edition, in which the Queen and Horatio are seen counselling together how best they can aid Hamlet in his counterplots against the plots of Claudius. This scene precedes what is now iv. 7. On the question of the Queen's character as it finally leaves Shakespeare's hands, see note 405 above.

445. Line 18: Should have kept SHORT, restrain'd and OUT OF HAUNT.—Kept short means kept in restraint, under control. Compare Henry V. ii. 4. 72. Out of haunt is out of company ("exempt from public haunt," As You Like It, ii. 1. 15). The verb is two or three times used by Shakespeare in the similar sense of frequent (as the French hanter).

446. Lines 25, 26:

*like some ORE
Among a MINERAL of metals base.*

In the English-French Dictionary annexed to Cotgrave ore is used only of gold: "Oare of gold, Balluque." Minshew defines mineral as "anything that grows in mines, and contains metals." In Hall's Satires, vi. 143, it is used for a mine ("fired brimstone in a mineral") Here it means apparently a metallic vein or lode.

447. Lines 39–44:

*And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done: SO, HAPLY, SLANDER—
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports his poison'd shot—may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air,*

So, haply, slander was first inserted by Capell, who modified Theobald's conjecture: "For, haply, slander" The words do not occur in either Ff. or Qq.; but that something is omitted is evident, and the reading adopted seems to supply the omission in a fairly satisfactory way. It has been generally followed, and there seems no reason why, in the utter absence of all original authority, it should not be accepted as a plausible enough make-shift.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

448. Line 6: COMPOUNDED IT WITH DUST, whereto 'tis kin.—Compare II Henry IV. iv. 5. 116:

Only compound me with forgotten dust.

449. Lines 12–23.—Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 190, has the following note on this passage: "In Caldecott's Edition (1819), p. 98, the following passages are given:—'When princes (as the toy takes them in the head) have used courtiers as sponges to drinke what juice they can from the poore people, they take pleasure afterwards to wringe them out into their owne cisternes.' R. C.'s 'Henr. Steph. Apology for Herodotus,' Fo. 1608, p. 81: 'Vespasian, when reproached for bestowing high office upon persons most rapacious, answered 'that he served his turn with such officers as with sponges, which, when they had drunk the fill, were then the fittest to be pressed" (Barnabe Rich's "Faulces, faults and nothing else but faults," 4to, 1606, p. 44b). (See Suetonius, Vespas. c. 16.)

This last passage bears such a remarkable similarity to the lines in the play, that it is almost certain Shakespeare, or the author of the older play of "Hamlet," must have borrowed the idea from the same source to which Barnabe Rich was indebted—viz. Suetonius.

This speech about the sponge, &c., was restored by Mr. Irving; the first time, I believe, it has been given on the stage: he spoke it in act iv., scene 2, where, as I have said in the text, it is placed in the Quarto, 1608.

450. Lines 13, 14: what REPLICATION should be made by the son of a king!—Replication, says Rushton (Shakespeare a Lawyer, p. 34, quoted by Furness), is "an exception of the second degree made by the plaintiff upon the answer of the defendant." In simple English, it is a reply; and is used in Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 2. 15, as a part of Holofernes' jargon. The word is used in Julius Caesar, i. 1. 51, in the sense of echo, reverberation.

451. Lines 19, 20: he keeps them, LIKE AN APE DOOTH NUTS, in the corner of his jaw.—Ff. have like an Ape, Qq. like an apple; the reading in the text is introduced from Q. 1 (first adopted by Singer), which reads: "As an Ape dooth nuttes." The reading of the Ff. is, of course, quite admissible as it stands, but the phrase seems to me much more expressive, much more like Shakespeare, as we find it in Q. 1. The apple of Qq., though that too makes a sense of its own, is pretty obviously a misprint for ape. Ritson gives an example of the same misprint in Peele's Arraignment of Paris, where the familiar phrase about old maids is rendered "to halter apples in hell."

452. Lines 29, 30: The body is with the king, but the king is not with the body.—See Furness' Variorum Ed. p. 316, for various conjectures as to Hamlet's meaning in this dark paradox. If any explanation is required, perhaps Jenner's is as good as any: "the body, being in the palace, might be said to be with the king; though the king, not being in the same room with the body, was not with the body." But very likely it is intentional nonsense.

453. Line 32: Hide fox, and all after.—Perhaps another name for hide-and-seek. Hammer declares definitely that "there is a play among children called, Hide fox, and all after," but no one else seems to know anything about such a game. See Much Ado, note 146.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

454. Lines 9, 10:

diseases desperate grown

By desperate appliance are relieved.

Rushton (Shakespeare's Euphuism, p. 11) quotes a passage from Lyly's Euphues (p. 67, ed. Arber) which contains a phrase not unsimilar to the one in the text ("a desperate disease is to be committed to a desperate doctor"). The juxtaposition of words is so obvious that it is a little rash to suppose that Shakespeare had this passage in mind, or owed his thought to it.

455. Line 38: you shall NOSE him.—Shakespeare uses nose as a verb in one other place, Coriolanus, v. 1. 28: "And still to nose th' offence," where the word means simply smell; here I think it has the further sense of tracking by the scent. Browning uses the word as the equivalent of συνάριον in his translation of the Agamemnon, p. 99:

And witness, running with me, that of evils
Done long ago, I nosing track the footstep.

456. Line 46: the wind AT help.—Compare Winter's Tale, v. 1. 140: "at friend." At is a corruption of a, itself the contraction of on (as in asleep: compare "fell on sleep," Acts xiii. 36). See Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, § 143. "At foot," 57 below, is a different construction, and means, apparently, at his heel.

457. Lines 64, 65:

thou mayst not coldly SET

Our sovereign PROCESS.

Set seems to be used here in the sense of set aside, set at naught. Process is, I think, unnoticed by any of the commentators, except that the Clarendon editors explain it as "procedure, action;" but it is not the king's action, it is his command which is in question, and here it seems necessary to accept the word in that sense. See note 16 to Antony and Cleopatra.

458. Line 66: By letters CONGRUING to that effect.—This is the reading of Qq.; Ff. have conjuring. It is very doubtful which of the two words is the right one, and which the misprint. On the whole congruing seems to me the better reading. The word does not occur anywhere else in Shakespeare, except in the pirated and spurious Qq. of Henry V. i. 2. 182, where the reading of Ff. is congreeing—a word not met with elsewhere, and perhaps, as Mr. Stone suggests in his edition of the play, formed by Shakespeare by analogy with agree.

459. Line 68: For like the HECTIC in my blood he rages.—Cotgrave has "Hectique: Sicke of an Hectick, or continual Feauer." The word is not used elsewhere by Shakespeare.

460. Lines 69, 70:

till I know't is done,

Howe'er my haps, my joys WERE NEER BEGUN.

Qq. read will nere begin, which, though better English, is obviously inadmissible here on account of the rhyme.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

461.—F. A. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, pp. 193, 194, has the following note on this scene: "That Shakespeare intended to refer to some particular expedition in this passage I have not the slightest doubt; but, unfortunately, I have not been able to trace the source of this description. The particulars given are very remarkable; it was a little patch of ground—not worth five ducats to farm—yet it was garrisoned by the Polack. I hoped to find the original of this unprofitable expedition in some of the 'adventures' undertaken by Sir Walter Raleigh, or by one of the Earls of Essex; but I have not succeeded to my own satisfaction. There are certain points of resemblance between the enterprise of Walter Devereux in 1573, the object of which was to conquer Ulster, or a portion of it, and this expedition of Fortinbras. An unfavourable critic might speak of the members of that adventurous body, of which Walter Devereux was the leader, as 'a list of lawless resolute' without doing them any grievous wrong. Of the apparent value of the country which these brave butchers were to conquer, some idea may be formed from the description given by Froude (vol. x., page 554):

"A few years before, Sir Henry Sidney's progress through Ulster had been gravely compared to Alexander's journey into Bactria. The central plains of Australia, the untrodden jungles of Borneo, or the still vacant spaces in our map of Africa, alone now on the globe's surface represent districts as unknown and mysterious as the north-east angle of Ireland in the reign of Elizabeth. . . . Ulster was a desert,' &c.

"One feels on reading this eloquent description that five ducats would have been a high rent to have paid for such a paradise; still the extent of it does not answer to the description in the text. In 1573 Shakespeare was only nine years old; in 1580, when Walter Raleigh joined Grey's force in the attack upon the fort of Smervick, in Dingle Bay, he was only sixteen: yet both events might have made some impression on his youthful memory. Smervick, the wretched fort in which the unhappy Spaniards and Italians held out for two days against the English butchers, answers very well to 'the officer's' description of the place against which Fortinbras was leading his 'lawless resolute.' It was 'a very small neck of land joined to the shore by a bank of sand' (Froude, vol. xi., page 224). . . . The whole of this scene (with the exception of Fortinbras' short speech) has no parallel in the Quarto of 1603; it was evidently added by Shakespeare on the revision of the play, a circumstance which confirms me in the belief that he had some enterprise of that time in his mind."

462. Lines 2-4:

Tell him that by his license Fortinbras

*CLAIMS the conveyance of a promis'd march
Over his kingdom.*

Ff. here read Claims, all the Qq. Craves. The readings have been pretty equally followed by editors; it seems to me that the former is in every way preferable. For one thing, claims agrees better than craves with the expression in the previous line, by his license.

463. Line 6: We shall express our duty in HIS EYE.—Compare Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 2. 211, 212:

Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her 't the eyes.

And see Hamlet, i. 2. 116. Steevens thinks the expression was the customary formula for "in the presence," i.e. the royal presence. He cites the expression "all such as do service in the Queen's (Prince's) eye" from The Regulations for the Government of the Queen's Household, 1627, and the Establishment of the Household of Prince Henry, 1610.

464. Line 8: Go SOFTLY on.—Softly is used in many other parts of Shakespeare for "gently," "leisurely." The Clarendon Press edd. quote Bacon, Essay vi. (ed. Wright, p. 19): "Like the going softly by one that cannot well see."

Compare the French use of doucement. The Ff., by an obvious misprint, have safely. From here to the end of the scene is omitted in Ff.

465. Line 17: Truly to speak, and with no addition.—Pope inserted it and Capell sir after the first clause of this line, which can, however, be read without difficulty.

466. Line 27: This is the IMPOSTHUME of much wealth and peace.—Cotgrave has: "Aposthume: l. An Impos-thume; an inward swelling full of corrupt matter" Shakespeare uses the word in two other places, Venus and Adonis, 743, and Troilus and Cressida, v. 1. 24.

467. Line 50: MAKES MOUTHS at the invisible event.—See note 256.

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

468.—Our text in the first twenty lines of this scene, as regards the personages and distribution of speeches, follows the Ff. In the Qq. we have "Enter Horatio, Gertrard, and a Gentleman," and to this Gentleman are given lines 2 and 3 (She is importunate . . . needs be pitied), and lines 4-13 (She speaks . . . much unapplied); while to Horatio are assigned lines 14-16 ('T were good . . . Let her come in.), the Queen's third speech being thus reduced to lines 17-20. It has been suggested that the omission in the Ff. of the "Gentleman" was made to avoid the employment of an additional actor, and where, as in this case, his lines could be at least as properly delivered by Horatio, their assignment to him and the suppression of this unknown personage must be considered on every count an improvement in the stage business. Something more, however, must be said with regard to the assignment to the Queen, in the Ff., of the only lines (14-16) given in the Qq. to Horatio. Line 16 (Let her come in.) clearly belongs to the Queen, and we agree with Mr. Grant White that lines 14, 15 [marked "aside"] are most appropriate in the Queen's mouth as a reflection by which she is led to change her determination not to admit Ophelia to her presence. Many varying attempts have been made by modern editors to improve on the Q. arrangement; but none seems to us so satisfactory as that of the F.

469. Line 6: Spurns ENVIOUSLY at straws; i.e. spitefully. In Shakespeare's time envy had not yet lost its alternative sense of ill-will, hatred. Compare Henry VIII. iii. 1. 113:

You turn the good we offer into envy.

470. Line 9: collection.—See v. 2. 199: "a kind of yesty collection," or inference. The word is used again, in the same sense as in the text—an attempt to gather meaning from something said—in Cymbeline, v. 5. 430: "I can make no collection of it." For aim in the latter part of this line, Qq. have yavne, a very intelligible misprint from ayne.

471. Line 18: Each toy seems prologue to some great AMISS.—The substantive amiss is used elsewhere by Shakespeare only in two of the Sonnets, xxxv. 7:

Myself corrupting, salving thy amiss;

and cli. 3:

Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss.

In both these places amiss means rather wrong than misfortune, the meaning of the word in the text.

472. Line 21.—Q. 1 has the stage-direction: "Enter Ofelia playing on a Lute, and her haire downe singing." The other Qq. have (after line 16): "Enter Ophelia;" the Ff.: "Enter Ophelia distracted."

473. Lines 23-26: "How should I your true love know," &c.—The traditional music to this fragment is printed in Chappell's Popular Music of the Olden Time, vol. i. p. 236, and in Furness' Variorum Ed. vol. i. p. 330. Rossetti took this stanza for the first verse of a beautiful little lyric (very modern, however) which he called "An Old Song Ended" (Poems, 1870, p. 175).

474. Lines 25, 26:

*By his COCKLE HAT and staff,
And his sandal shoon.*

"This," as Warburton remarks, "is the description of a pilgrim. While this kind of devotion was in favour, love intrigues were carried on under that mask. Hence the old ballads and novels made pilgrimages the subjects of their plots. The cockle-shell hat was one of the essential badges of this vocation: for the chief places of devotion being beyond sea, or on the coasts, the pilgrims were accustomed to put cockle-shells upon their hats, to denote the intention or performance of their devotion" (Var. Ed. vol. vii. p. 424). The word shoon occurs only here (in a ballad-fragment) and as used by Jack Cade in II. Henry VI. iv. 2. 195. This form of the plural was archaic even in Shakespeare's time.

475. Line 32: The Qq. insert here O, ho! which is probably a piece of "gag;" some editors, however, suppose it to represent sobs or sighs.

476. Line 37: LARDED with sweet flowers.—Qq. have "Larded all with sweet flowers," a reading which many editors adopt, and which is just as likely to be right as the one followed in the text. Larded is used again, metaphorically, in v. 2. 20 (the only other instance in Shakespeare). Compare Ben Jonson, Sejanus, iii. 2:

A quiet and retired life
Larded with ease and pleasure.

—Works, ed. Gifford, 1815, p. 86.

477. Line 38: Which bewept to the grave did go.—Qq. Ff. have did not go, which seems plainly an error. Pope was the first to omit the not. Keightley mentions another instance of an intruding negative in the Ff. of Much Ado, iii. 2. 28, where cannot is an evident misprint for can.

478. Line 41: God 'ild you!—This is a corruption of God yield you (used in Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 2. 33), a phrase used in returning thanks, and meaning "God reward you," or "God bless you." Compare As You Like It, iii. 3. 78: "God 'ild you for your last company." The phrase is used again in the same play, v. 4. 56, and in Macbeth, i. 6. 13. The Clarendon Press edd. quote Tennyson, Gareth and Lynette, line 18: "Heaven yield her for it."

479. Lines 41, 42: They say the owl was a baker's daughter.—"A legendary story," says Stevens, "which both Dr. Johnson and myself have read, yet in what book at least I cannot recollect.—Our Saviour being refused bread by the daughter of a baker, is described as punishing her by turning her into an owl." Douce, in a note contributed to Reed's edition, and reprinted in the subsequent Variorum editions, remarks on this:—"This is a common story among the vulgar in Gloucestershire, and is thus related: Our Saviour went into a baker's shop where they were baking, and asked for some bread to eat. The mistress of the shop immediately put a piece of dough into the oven to bake for him, but was reprimanded by her daughter, who, insisting that the piece of dough was too large, reduced it to a very small size. The dough, however, immediately afterwards began to swell, and presently became of a most enormous size. Whereupon the baker's daughter cried out, 'Heugh, heugh, heugh,' which owl-like noise probably induced our Saviour for her wickedness to transform her into that bird. This story is often related to children, in order to deter them from such illiberal behaviour to poor people." I believe no one has been fortunate enough to discover the book in which Stevens read the story, nor does Douce himself make any mention of it in his subsequent well-known Illustrations of Shakespeare, 1807 and 1839. Mr. C. G. Leland, The English Gipsies and their Language, p. 16, says: "It is, however, really curious that the Gipsy term for an owl is the Máromengro's Chavri, or Baker's Daughter, and that they are all familiar with the monkish legend which declares that Jesus in a baker's shop once asked for bread. The mistress was about to give him a large cake, when her daughter declared it was too much, and diminished the gift by one half."

'He nothing said,
But by the fire laid down the bread,
When lo, as when a blossom blows—
To a vast loaf the manchet rose;
In angry wonder, standing by,
The girl sent forth a wild, rude cry,
And, feathering fast into a fowl,
Flew to the woods a walling owl!"

480. Line 48: To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day.—Much has been written about the songs of Ophelia, and the inferences one is intended to make from them as to her character. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, pp. 128-151, has a long, interesting, and, I think, conclusive defence of her, though I cannot entirely share his enthusiasm for a somewhat colourless type of jeune fille. Coleridge has said admirably: "Note the conjunction here of these two thoughts that had never subsisted in disjunction, the love for Hamlet, and her filial love, with the guileless floating on the surface of her pure imagination of the cautions so lately expressed, and the fears not too delicately avowed, by her father and brother concerning the dangers to which her honour lay exposed. Thought, affliction, passion, murder itself—she turns to favour and prettiness. This play of association is instanced in the close:—"My brother shall know of it, and I thank you for your good counsel!" Mrs. Jameson suggested that Ophelia might have been sung to sleep in her infancy by old ballads such as those of which she sings certain snatches. And we should, of course, bear in mind, as Strachey observes (p. 85), "the notorious fact, that, in the dreadful visitation of mental derangement, delicate and refined women will use language so coarse that it is difficult to guess where they can ever have even heard such words, and certain that where-ever heard they would have always lain, unknown of, and innocuous, in the mind, unless the hot-bed of mental fever had quickened them for the first time into life."

The well-known air to the words To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day is given in Chappell, vol. i. p. 227, and in Furness, vol. i. p. 333.

481. Line 58: And DUFP'D the chamber-door.—Steevens quotes Damon and Pythias, 1582: "The porters are drunk; will they not dup the gate to-day?"

482. Lines 57, 58: INDEED, LA, WITHOUT AN OATH, I'll make an end on 't.—Elze (p. 213) notes that "Indeed la and truly la were favourite protestations with the Puritans, and served them instead of oaths. Compare The Puritan, l. 4; ii. 1; iii. 1 (Malone's Supplement, ii. 554, 564, and 573). Id., v. 4 (Malone's Supplement, ii. 624: 'Where is truly la, indeed la, he that will not swear, but lie; he that will not steal, but rob; pure Nicholas Saint-Antlings?'"

483. Line 65.—Qq. here insert, in brackets (He answers). Possibly this was an interruption of herself by Ophelia, and should stand in the text; but it is more probably an interpolation. The Cambridge edd insert it in the Cambridge edition, but not in the Globe. It is preserved by Furness.

484. Line 72: Come, my coach!—Dyce, in his edition of Marlowe, notes that Shakespeare seems to have had in mind a passage in Tamburlaine, part i. v. 2, where Zabina, raving in her madness, cries "Make ready my coach, my chair, my jewels."

485. Lines 76, 77:

*O, this is the poison of deep grief; it springs
All from her father's death. O Gertrude, Gertrude.*

These two lines are printed in Qq. as prose, and before O Gertrude, Gertrude, we have And now behold. Some editors read:

All from her father's death. And now behold,
O Gertrude, Gertrude,
When sorrows come, &c.

But this broken metre is unnecessary. The reading of Ff. is no doubt a revision of the words as they were first written; O Gertrude, Gertrude, being substituted for And now behold.

486. Line 84: IN HUGGER-MUGGER to inter him.—Florio has: "Dinascoso: secretly, hiddenly, in hugger-mugger;" and the English-French dictionary appended to Cotgrave defines In hugger mugger, "En cachette, à calimini, sous terre." Steevens quotes North's Plutarch (p. 121, ed Skeat): "Antonius thinking good . . . that his bodie should be honourably buried, and not in hugger-mugger." Compare Ford, 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, iii. 1: "There's no way but to clap-to a marriage in hugger-mugger;" and The Merry Devil of Edmonton, i. 3. 59, 60:

So neere a wife, and will not tell your friendt
But you will to this geere in hugger-mugger.

—Ed. Wamke and Froescholdt, p. 15.

Scot, Discoverie of Witchcraft, p. 433, uses the expression "doe it in hugger-mugger secretlie," which shows that the two expressions were not regarded as absolute synonyms. Pope chastened the inelegant phrase into the unexceptionable form in private.

487. Line 89: Feeds on his wonder, keeps himself in clouds.—This reading (which was first adopted by Johnson) is constructed by the help of Qq and Ff. Qq have Feeds on this wonder; Ff. keeps on his wonder; between them the right text is easily arrived at.

488. Line 98: our PERSON to arraign.—Person is the reading of Qq; Ff. have persons. The king is pretty evidently talking of himself alone.

489. Line 95: Like to a MURDERING-PIECE.—Murdering-piece is used by Beaumont and Fletcher in The Double Marriage, iv. 2. 6, 7:

like a murdering-piece, aim not at one,
But all that stand within the dangerous level.

It is the same thing as a "murderer" or meurtrière, which Nicot defines as "un petit cannoneire comme celles des tours et murailles, ainsi appellé, parceque tirant par icelle a descen, ceux ausquels on tire sont facilement meurtri" (quoted by Singer). Cotgrave has "Meurtriere: f. A murdering piece;" and again, "Visiere meurtrière, a port-hole for a murthering Peece in the fore-castle of a ship."

490. Line 97: Where are my SWITZERS? Let them guard the door.—In Shakespeare's time the Swiss formed the body-guard of the king of France, as they still do of the pope. The name Switzers came to be indiscriminately used for a king's body-guard. Compare the current French usage of the word suisses. Malone quotes Nash, Christ's Tears over Jerusalem, 1594: "Law, logicke and the Switzers, may be hired to fight for anybody."

491. Line 110: O, this is COUNTER, you false Danish dogs!—The Clarendon Press edd. quote Randle Holme's Academy of Armory, bk. ii. ch. ix. p. 1871, where counter is defined, "when a hound hunteth backwards, the same way that the chase is come." Compare Comedy of Errors, iv. 2. 39: "A hound that runs counter."

492. Lines 119, 120:

*Even here, between the chaste unsmirched BROWS
Of my true mother.*

Ff. and Qq. print brow, which many editors preserve. There seems no reason to suppose it is anything but a misprint.

493. Line 137: My will, not all the WORLD.—This is the reading of Ff.; Qq. have worlds, which, as the Clarendon Press edd. say, may be right in its extravagant hyperbole.

494. Lines 142, 143:

*That, SWOOPSTAKE, you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and loser.*

Ff. and Qq. have swoopstake. The reading in the text is derived from Q. 1, which has swoopstake-like. Swoopstake is of course a gambler who sweeps the stakes indiscriminately.

495. Lines 146, 147:

*And, like the kind life-rendering PELICAN,
Repast them with my blood.*

The belief in this curious fable about the pelican was very wide-spread. Compare Basilus Valentinus, A Practick Treatise, together with the XII. Keys and Appendix of the Great Stone of the Ancient Philosophers, 1670: "And in its own Essence is so full of blood [he is speaking of 'the Rose of our Masters wherewith all Metals wanting heat may be revived'], as is the Pelican, when she wounded her own breast, and without prejudice to her body, nourisheth and feedeth many young ones with her own blood" (p. 241). Dr. Sherwen (quoted by Furness, Variorum Ed. p. 342) explains the origin of the superstition by "the pelican's dropping upon its breast its lower bill to enable its young to take from its capacious pouch, lined with a fine flesh-coloured skin." In Richard II. ii. 1. 126, and King Lear, iii. 4. 77, Shakespeare uses the same illustration, but in a contrary sense. F. I. has a very comic misprint of Politician for pelican. I can fancy that, had not the Qq. preserved the true reading, commentators would have been found to defend the reading of F. I even on grounds of sentiment. Might not the politician become a beautiful illustration of the patriot, feeding his country with his own blood? It is still not too late for a German editor to take up the point

496. Lines 151, 152:

It shall as level to your judgment PIERCE
As day does to your eye.

Qq. here read peare, which Johnson took to be the abbreviation of "appear," and printed 'pear. There is very little doubt that the Ff. pierce is the true reading (compare iv. 1. 42: "As level as the cannon to his blank").

497. Line 152: Danes [Within] Let her come in.—Qq have the stage-direction "A noise within," and give the words Let her come in to Laertes; an evident error, as Laertes could not know who was without. In Ff. the stage-direction is: "A noise within. Let her come in." Capell first as in our text.

498. Lines 165, 166:

Hey non nonny, nonny, hey nonny;
And in his grave RAIN'D many a tear.

The refrain is not given by Qq. In and rain'd, the reading of Qq., are, in the Ff., on and rains. It is very doubtful which text is preferable. The next line, Fare you well, my dove! is printed by Ff. in italics as a part of the song; the Qq. print the whole passage in the same type; Capell, rightly as I think, printed the line as if said, not sung, by Ophelia. On the refrain, see Much Ado, note 150.

499. Lines 170, 171: You must sing, "Down a-down, an you call him a-down-a."—It is not certain whether these two lines should be printed thus, or as two lines of verse. Mrs. Quickly, in the Merry Wives, i. 4. 44, sings: "And down, down, adown-a." Florio has "Filibustacchina, the burden of a countrie song, as we say hay doune a doune doune."

500. Line 172: O, how the WHEEL becomes it!—Steevens supposed that wheel was an old word for the burden of a song, but neither he nor anyone else has adduced any trustworthy testimony to that effect. Until that is forthcoming it may be quite sufficient to suppose that Ophelia means nothing more than the spinning-wheel, to which old songs are usually sung in romances, as they doubtless were in reality.

501. Line 175: There's rosemary, that's for remembrance.—Rosemary was thought to strengthen the memory, and was carried, as an emblem of remembrance, at weddings and funerals Compare Dekker, The Honest Whore, part II., ii. 1:

Bell. O my sweet husband! wert thou in thy grave and art alive again? Oh, welcome, welcome!

Mat. Dost know me? my cloak, prithe, lay't up Yes, faith, my winding-sheet was taken out of lavender, to be stuck with rosemary. Steevens and Malone give a number of illustrative quotations from the writings of Shakespeare's time. See A Handfull of Pleasant Delites, 1584 (p. 4 Arber's Reprint):

Rosemary is for remembrance
Betweene us daie and night;
Wishing that I might always have
You present in my sight.

Shakespeare has several allusions to rosemary. Compare "Winter's Tale, iv. 4 74-76:

For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeming and savour all the winter long.
Grace and remembrance be to you both!

502. Line 178: A DOCUMENT in madness—Cotgrave has "Document; m. A document, precept; instruction, admonition; experiment, example." The meaning here is the etymological one of instruction (doceo). The word is not used by Shakespeare in any other place.

503. Line 180: There's FENNEL for you, and COLUMBINES—Fennel is emblematic of flattery. Compare A Handfull of Pleasant Delites (p. 4), quoted above: "Fenel is for flatterers." Florio has "Dare finocchio, to flatter or giue Fennell." Columbines were perhaps the emblem of thanklessness Compare Chapman, All Fools, ii. 1:

What's that? a columbine?
No: that thankless flower fits not my garden.

504. Lines 181, 182: there's rue for you, &c.—Compare Richard II. iii. 4. 105-107:

I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue, e'en for ruth, here shortly shall be seen
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.

See note 250 to that play. The plant is indiscriminately called herb of grace and herb-grace, and both variations are contained in the old copies, the Qq. having the former, and the Ff. the latter. See Furness, Variorum Ed. vol. i. pp. 347, 348 for a long note on the subject.

505. Line 184: There's a DAISY.—Henley quotes Greene, A Quip for an Upstart Courtier (Collier's reprint, p. 11): "Next them grew the dissembling daisie, to warne such light-of-love wenches not to trust every faire promise that amorous bachelors make them."

506. Lines 184-186: I would give you some VIOLETS, but they withered all when my father died.—Compare A Handfull of Pleasant Delites (p. 4), "Violet is for faithfulness."

507. Line 187: For bonny sweet Robin is all my joy.—This was a well-known song, the music of which is given by Chappell in his Popular Music of the Olden Time, vol. i. p. 334, and by Furness, Variorum Ed. vol. i. p. 349. The song is alluded to by the Gaoler's Daughter in The Two Noble Kinamen, iv. 1. 107:

I can sing The Broome,
And Bonny Robin.

508. Line 190: And will he not come again?—The music usually sung to this song is given in Chappell, vol. i. p. 237, and by Furness, vol. i. p. 350.

509. Line 190: GOD HA' MERCY on his soul!—Ff have Gramercy, which some editors adopt.

510. Line 202: Laertes, I must COMMUNE with your grief.—F. 1 has common, which Boswell erroneously supposed to mean participate, jest in common. It is a mere variation of spelling, and Steevens gives two examples of it, one from Holinshed in speaking of Jack Cade (Holinshed, 1577, vol. ii. p. 1280, col. 1): "Thus this glorious Capitaine enuironed wyth a multitude of euill, rude and rusticall people, came againe to the plaine of Blacke heathe, and there strongly encamped himselfe, to whome were sent from the Kyng, the Archbishop of Canterburye, and Humfrey Duke of Buckingham, to common with him of his greetes and requests."

511. Line 213: His means of death, his OBSOURE BURIAL.—Ff. read burial; Qq. funeral, two words of such very similar meaning that there is little to choose between them. I incline to prefer burial as the more poetical word of the two. Obscure is here used with the accent on the first syllable; Shakespeare varies the accent to suit his convenience. In poetry this and similar words are still not unfrequently accentuated on the first syllable, particularly by Browning.

ACT IV. SCENE 6.

512. Line 2: Sea-faring men.—This is the reading of Qq., much more picturesque than the sailors of Ff. Few editors but the Cambridge seem, however, to have adopted it.

513. Line 31: Come, I will MAKE you way for these your letters.—Ff. have give; Q. 2, Q. 3 omit the word. The reading in the text is introduced from the later Qq., which are followed by the Cambridge and other editors.

ACT IV. SCENE 7.

514. Line 7: crimeful.—This word is not used elsewhere by Shakespeare. The Qq. have criminal, which is less likely than crimeful to have been misprinted.

515. Line 8: As by your safety, wisdom, all things else.—Qq. have safety, GREATNESS, wisdom, which makes the line an Alexandrine. Probably greatness and wisdom were alternative readings, inserted together by mistake.

516. Line 10: unsinew'd.—This word is not used by Shakespeare elsewhere; sinew'd only in King John, v. 7. 88: "well sinew'd to our defence."

517. Line 11: AND yet to me they are strong.—This is the reading of Ff., to which is generally preferred the But of Qq., which also favours the needless contraction they're. I think that on the whole And gives a better-linked sense than But, though either has a very good sense.

518. Line 14: conjunctive.—This word occurs in only one other passage (in which, however, the Qq. have communicative), Othello, i. 3. 374: "Let us be conjunctive in our revenge."

519. Line 18: gender.—This word is used again in Othello, i. 3. 326, in speaking of herbs: "supply it with one gender of herbs."

520. Line 20. WOULD, like the spring that turneth wood to stone.—Qq. have work, which some editors have followed, thus making a different construction, and changing convert in the next line into a second indicative. The reading seems to me distinctly inferior, and may well be due to a printer's error. Reed thinks that the spring alluded to is the famous dropping-well at Knaresborough. Elze says: "According to Harrison's Description of England, ed. Furnivall, p. 334 and 349, the 'wonderful vertue' of turning wood to stone was ascribed to several springs, one of them (King's Newnham) being situated in Warwickshire, and therefore, no doubt, well known to the poet." The Clarendon Press edd. quote Lyly's Euphues (p. 63, ed. Arbery): "Would I had sipped of that ryuer in Caria, which turneth those that drinke of it to stone."

521. Lines 21, 22:

my arrows,

Too slightly timber'd for so LOUD A WIND.

Qq. here have loued arri'd, which is not too obvious and absurd a misprint to have had defenders. Steevens quotes a surely unnecessary corroboration of the Ff. reading from Ascham's Toxophilus: "Weake bowes, and lyghte shaftes can not stande in a rough wynde." A very similar misprint occurs in line 27 below, where Ff. have the impossible reading Who was instead of Whose worth of Qq.

522. Line 45: To-morrow shall I beg leave to see your kingly eyes.—See note 463.

523. Line 58-60:

If it be so, Laertes,—

As how should it be so? how otherwise?—

Will you be rul'd by me?

F. A. Marshall, Study of Hamlet, pp. 196, 197, has the following note on these lines: "This passage, as it stands, seems to me almost hopelessly obscure. In Malone's 'Shakespeare' (1821) there is absolutely no note on the passage. Caldecott does not notice it; and even that obstinate illuminator of dark passages, Mr. Collier's old annotator, passes it by without a word of comment.

"The editors of the Clarendon Hamlet have a note in which they give Keightley's conjecture, 'how should it but be so?' They say 'we should have expected, 'how should it not be so?' but they do not give the anonymous conjecture to be found in the foot-notes of the 'Cambridge Shakespeare' (vol. viii., p. 144), 'how shoul'd not be so?' which I suspect to be the right reading. They suggest an explanation of the passage as it stands—viz. 'that the first clause refers to Hamlet's return, the second to Laertes' feelings.' (See Clarendon Press Series, 'Hamlet,' p. 207.)

"I confess that this, the only attempt to explain the words, as they stand, which I can find, does not satisfy me. The fact is, no sense can be made of them, if read as printed in the text. The insertion of the 'not' makes them perfectly intelligible. It has occurred to me, that as there is no authority for this insertion, that if the word 'should' were italicized we might make sense of it, thus—

If it be so—

(i.e., if Hamlet has come back because, on consideration, he did not choose to go to England)—

As how should it be so?

(i.e., how should there be any question about it being so?)—

How (could it be) otherwise?

I admit that we should expect in this case, the word 'if' to be repeated, but I can make sense of the speech in no other manner. The general meaning is clear: the King is puzzling over this sudden return of Hamlet, and he rapidly reviews the situation. First he asks—

Are all the rest come back?

Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

Surely his trusty spaniels, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, cannot have disobeyed or deceived him! Then where are they? They would not go to England without Hamlet, and surely they would not let him escape. The writing is certainly Hamlet's; he answers to Laertes' inquiry—

'Naked!'

And in a postscript here, he says, 'alone

Can they have been wrecked and he alone saved? Hamlet cannot have discovered the plot against him. Rosencrantz and Guildenstern did not know the contents of the letter—they could not have betrayed him. No—it must be that he has on a sudden caprice refused to continue the voyage, and made the sailors turn back. Yes, it must be so—without question it must be. Then in that case how can he get rid of Hamlet and appease Laertes at one and the same time? Something like these thoughts would pass through the mind of Claudius before he succeeds in hitting upon the ingenious scheme which he now proceeds to divulge to Laertes."

524. Lines 60, 61:

Ay, my lord;

So you will not o'er-rule me to a peace.

This is Steevens' arrangement of the reading of Qq, in which Ay . . . peace is in one line. Ff. omit Ay, my lord, and read, If so you'll not o'errule me to a peace.

525. Line 63: As CHECKING AT his voyage.—Q. 2, Q 3 have the preposterous misprint the King at, altered conjecturally in Q. 4 into liking not. To check is a metaphor from falconry, applied to a hawk when she forsakes her proper game to fly after some other bird. Compare Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 124, and iii. 1. 71.

526. Line 69–82.—These lines, from My lord to graveness, are omitted in Ff.

527. Line 77: the unworthiest SIEGE—Siege, the French siege, is here used for rank, as in Othello, i. 2. 22: "men of royal siege." The word came to have that meaning from the arrangement of persons at table in order of precedence. Compare Measure for Measure, iv. 2. 101, where siege is used for seat.

528. Lines 79–82:

for youth no less becomes

The light and careless livery that it wears

Than settled age his sables and his weeds,

Importing health and graveness.

Johnson understood the last line to refer entirely to settled age, and supposed health to mean care for, or attention to, health. I think it may better be taken, as Furness suggests, as referring both to youth and to age; the light and careless livery importing (that is implying) health, and the sables and weeds importing graveness. The construction is a very common one, not only in Shakespeare but in later writers, notably Mr. Swinburne.

529. Line 85: And they CAN well on horseback—Ff. misprint ran. Shakespeare uses the word can in a few places in its absolute sense of power to do. Compare Tempest, iv. 1. 27:

the strong'st suggestion

Our worser Genius can.

The Clarendon Press edd. quote Bacon, Essay, xi. p. 40: "In evil the best condition is not to will, the second not to can."

530. Line 89: so far he TOPP'D my thought.—Topp'd is of course surpassed, as in Macbeth, iv. 3. 57: "to top Macbeth." Shakespeare seems to have been fond of metaphors derived from top, which he uses a good many times both as verb and noun. This fact was probably not remembered by the precisians whom Browning scandalized in his translation of the Agamemnon by using the word topping for anger, in the sense of surpassing. See p. 53:

Thou hast, like topping bowman, touched the target;

and p. 93:

I would not boast to be a topping critic.

531. Line 93: Lamond.—This is Pope's version of the Lamond of Ff. The Qq. have Lamord. No personage of this name is known, but Mr. C. Eliot Browne, in a letter to the Athenæum, July 29, 1876, suggests that this is "an allusion to Pietro Monte (in a Gallicized form), the famous cavalier and swordsman, who is mentioned by Castiglione (Il Cortegiano, bk. i.) as the instructor of Louis the Seventh's Master of Horse. In the English translation he is called 'Peter Mount'."

532. Line 99: especially.—This is the reading of Ff. Qq. have especial.

533. Line 101: the SCRIMERS of their nation.—Scrimers is of course intended to represent the French escrimeurs, fencers; the word has not been found elsewhere.

534. Line 106: him—Qq. print you, which seems a less suitable reading, though it can be made to express the same sense.

535. Line 107: WHAT out of this?—Ff. here have Why, which again makes very good sense.

536. Lines 115–124: There lives . . . ulcer.—This passage is omitted in Ff.

537. Lines 118, 119:

For goodness, growing to a PLURISY,

Dies in his own too-much.

Plurisy (often spelt by modern editors pleurisy) is often found in the old dramatists for plethora, or plethora, probably from an erroneous idea that the word was derived from plus, pluris. Massinger has a close imitation of the passage in The Unnatural Combat, iv. 1:

Thy pleurisy of goodness is thy ill.

—Works, p. 196, ed. Gifford.

Compare Cyril Tournear, The Atheist's Tragedy, iii. 2, and Ford, 'Tis Pity, iv. 3 (both of which have "pleurisy of lust"), Beaumont and Fletcher, Custom of the Country, ii. 1: "grow to a pleurisy and kill," &c. The word does not occur elsewhere in Shakespeare.

538. Line 123: And then this "should" is like a SPEND-THRIFT sigh—Spendthrift is the obvious and certain emendation of Q. 0, the earlier Qq. reading spendthrift's.

For the idea that sighing drew blood from the heart, see Midsummer Night's Dream, note 184; and compare Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 59.

539. Line 139. A sword, UNBATED.—Unbated means unblunted, i.e. without a button on the point. Bate, abate, and rebate are all used in Shakespeare with a similar meaning. See Measure for Measure, note 47.

540. Line 142: mountebank.—Cotgrave has: "Charlatan: m. A mountebanke, a couensing drug-seller, a prattling quack-salver" [he continues, "a tatler, babler, foolish prater, or commender of trifles"] Boyer, French Dictionary, defines mountebank as "a wandering and juggling physician, a quack." In Othello, i. 3. 61 ("medicines bought of mountebanks"), the word is used in the same sense. In the two other places in which Shakespeare uses it (Comedy of Errors, i. 2. 101, and v. 1. 238) it is less clearly limited to the special sense of medicine-seller. The Clarendon Press edd. quote Bacon (Advancement of Learning, ii. 10. § 2): "Nay, we see the weakness and credulity of men is such, as they will often prefer a mountebank or witch before a learned physician."

541. Line 144: cataplasme.—Boyer has: "Cataplasme, S. M. (espèce d'emplâtre pour fomentier,) a Cataplasme or Poultice." In Cyril Tourneur's Atheist's Tragedy one of the characters is a certain Mistress Cataplasma, "a maker of periwigs and attires" by profession.

542. Line 162: If he by chance escape your venom'd STUCK.—Stuck seems to be found only here and in Twelfth Night, iii. 4. 303, but it is no doubt the same as stock, used in Merry Wives, ii. 3. 26, which means a thrust in fencing—the Italian stoccata (from stocca, a rapier), Spanish estocada (from estoque), French estocade (from estoc, which means both a rapier and the point of a rapier). The word is often found in Elizabethan literature in the form stoccado (compare Merry Wives, ii. 1. 234: "your passes, stoccadoes," and see Nares, s.v. Stockado). Stoccado is generally defined as the Spanish term, but there is no such word in Spanish.

543. Line 163: But stay, what noise?—These words are omitted in Ff.

544. Line 164: How now, sweet queen?—Omitted in Qq.

545. Line 165: One we doth tread upon another's heel.—Ritson called attention to a rather similar line in Lo crine (one of the so-called Doubtful Plays), which Shakespeare may have seen, as it was published in 1695, but which he is as likely to have written as Mr. Swinburne's drama of the same name. Guendoline is speaking of Sabren, who has drowned herself, and she exclaims (v. 5):

One mischief follows on another's neck.
Who would have thought so young a maid as she
With such a courage would have sought her death?

546. Line 167: There is a willow grows aslant a brook, &c.—Compare with this description the description in Two Noble Kinsmen, iv. 1. 52–103, of the attempted suicide of the Jailer's Daughter. It seems curious that the Queen should be so well acquainted with all the minute particulars of the affair. Seymour (vol. ii. p. 197, apud Furness) reasonably asks why, as the Queen seems to give this description from personal observation, "she did not take steps to avert the fatal catastrophe, especially as there was so far an opportunity of saving her while she was, by her clothes, borne 'mermaid-like up,' and the Queen was at leisure to hear her 'chanting old tunes.'" Monck Mason also notes that "there is not a single circumstance in the relation of Ophelia's death, that induces us to think she had drowned herself intentionally;" to which, however, Malone plausibly enough replies, "that the account here given is that of a friend; and that the Queen could not possibly know what passed in the mind of Ophelia, when she placed herself in so perilous a situation. After the facts had been weighed and considered, the priest in the next act pronounces, that her death was doubtful."

The Qq. in this line, print ascant the brook, and they have been followed by some editors, who take ascant to be the same as Chaucer's ascance.

547. Line 168: That shows his HOAR leaves in the glassy stream.—Lowell (Among my Books, p. 185) notices Shakespeare's delicate art in drawing our attention to the silvery under-side of the willow-leaves, not "by bluntly saying so, but [by making] it picturesquely reveal itself to us as it might in Nature."

548. Line 169: There with fantastic garlands did she come.—Qq. print Therewith fantastick garlands did she make, which Elze (p. 226) strenuously defends, but I think mistakenly.

549. Line 170: CROW-FLOWERS, nettles, daisies, and LONG PURPLES.—R. C. A. Prior, Popular Names of British Plants, 1863, has: "Crow-flower, the buttercup from the resemblance of its leaf to a crow's foot, Ranunculus acris and bulbosus, L., but in old authors often applied to the Ragged Robin, Lychnis flos cuculi, L.;" and "Long Purples of Shakespeare's Hamlet, iv. 7, supposed to be the purple flowered Orchis mascula, L."

550. Line 178: Which time she chanted snatches of old TUNES.—Qq. instead of tunes print lauds, which has a rather quaint and pretty sound, but is less likely to be the right word, as Q. 1 agrees with the Ff. in reading tunes. Lauds were psalms, and Jennens (quoted by Furness) is convinced that they are the right reading, and imply that Ophelia made an edifying end.

551. Line 190: The woman will be out.—Compare Henry V iv. 6. 31: "all my mother came into mine eyes;" and Twelfth Night, ii. 1. 41–43.

552. Line 192: douts.—F 1 has doubts, which Knight, with great probability, altered into douts, i.e. extinguishes (dout=do out, as dwp=do up). In Henry V iv. 2. 10, 11 the same word is almost certainly meant, though the Ff. again spell it doubt:

That their hot blood may spin in English eyes,
And dout them with superfluous courage.

Qq. print the word in the text drowns, which the later Ff. conjecturally follow.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

553. Line 2: THAT wilfully seeks.—So Ff. Qq. have when she.

554. Line 3: AND therefore.—Qq. omit and; they are followed by some editors, but I think very unreasonably.

555. Line 24. clown's quest law—Compare Twelfth Night, i. 5 142, and see note. Sir John Hawkins supposes the passage in the text to be written in ridicule of the case of Dame Hales, reported by Plowden in his Commentaries, which were not, however, translated from the French till the eighteenth century. Malone suggests that Shakespeare may have heard of the case in conversation. "Our author's study," he adds, "was probably not much encumbered with old French Reports." See Furness, Variorum Ed. vol. i. p. 376, where the points of resemblance are given at some length.

556. Line 32: even Christian, i.e. fellow Christian. Qq have even Christen, which perhaps would be better in the text. Steevens cites Chaucer, Persones Tale (ii. 294, ed. Morris), "Despitous, is he that hath disdayn of his neighbour, that is to say, of his evencresten." The Clarendon Press edd. quote from Forshall and Madden's Glossary to the Wycliffite Versions of the Bible, such forms as "eueue-caytiff," a fellow-prisoner; "euen disciplis," fellow-disciples, &c. Furness cites The Myroure of oure Ladye (Early Eng. Text Soc. edn., p. 73): "we are enforced to haue . . . loue eche to other, and to all oure euen crystens."

557. Line 63: Go, get thee to YAUGHAN; fetch me a stoup of liquor.—The Ff. print Yaughan in italics. In Qq. the passage reads, Go, get thee in, and fetch, &c. Yaughan is a word that has puzzled all the commentators, and it is impossible to say whether it is the correctly spelt name of some local tavern-keeper (the name is no uncommon Welsh one), whether it is a misprint, or whether it is a corruption of Johan or John. Dr. Nicholson (I give his argument as condensed by Furness) writes in Notes and Queries, 29th July, 1871: "Most probably Yaughan was the well-known keeper of a tavern near the theatre; and we have three items of corroborative evidence which show: First, that a little before the time of this allusion by Shakespeare, which is not found in the Qq., there was about town 'a Jew, one Yohan, most probably a German Jew, who was a perruquier,—he is mentioned by Jonson in Every Man out of his Humour, v. 6; Second, in The Alchemist, i. 1, which was produced eleven years afterwards, Subtle speaks of 'an alehouse, darker than deaf John,' a name which sounds like that of our foreign John, anglicised, and its owner grown deaf by lapse of time; Third, that there was actually an alehouse attached to the Globe Theatre is proved by the 'Sonnet upon the Burneing' of that playhouse (see Collier's Annals of the Stage, i. 388). Is it then unlikely that our wandering Jew, either in search of a business, or as a profitable extension of his theatrical connection, set up 'the Globe Public-house,' and was thus, as the known refresher of the thirsty actors and audience, mentioned by both Shakespeare and Jonson?" Whether it is likely or not may be left to every man's judgment. The suggestion is certainly ingenious, all the more so as it arises from such very problematical data.

558. Line 68: a STOUP of liquor.—Stoup, or stoop, a drinking-vessel, is used again in Twelfth Night, ii. 3. 123, and Othello, ii. 3. 30. Qq. print scoop, which is almost certainly a misprint. Jennens suggests that it represents the clownish pronunciation of stoup. As a matter of fact, such would be the Warwickshire pronunciation among the lower classes.

559. Line 69: "In youth when I did love, did love."—The song from which three stanzas sung by the clown are taken is one of the poems contained in Tottel's Miscellany, 1557 (Arber's Reprint, pp. 173-175). It is entitled, "The aged louer renounceth loue." Its author's name is not given; but in a manuscript in the British Museum (Harleian MS. 1703), written by William Forrest, the poem is copied (fol. 100) with the heading: "A dytyme or sonet made by the lorde vaux in time of the noble quene Marye representing the Image of death." It is also attributed to Lord Vaux by George Gascoigne in the Epistle to a Young Gentleman, prefixed to his Posies. The three verses selected for maltreatment by the clown are the following (the first, third, and eighth of the song):

I Lothe that I did loue,
In youth that I thought swete:
As time requires for my behoue
Me thinks they are not mete.

For age with stelyng steppes,
Hath clawed me with his cowche [and ed. crowche]:
And lusty life away she leapes,
As there had bene non suche.

A pikeaxe and a spade
And eke a shrowdyng shete,
A house of claye for to be made,
For such a gest most mete.

The third line of the clown's second stanza is taken from the penultimate stanza of the poem:

For beauty with her bande
These croked cares hath wrought:
And shipped me into the lande,
From whence I first was brought.

The music sung to the clown's verses on the stage is that of The Children in the Wood (Chappell's Popular Music, i. 200, and Furness, p. 385).¹ The fourth line of the first stanza is printed in Qq.: O, methought, there a was nothing-a meet, which the Cambridge editors print: there-a was nothing-a meet, taking the "a" to represent the drawing notes in which the grave-digger sings (compare Winter's Tale, iv. 3. 133).

560. Line 86: a politician.—This word is used by Shakespeare in only four other places: Twelfth Night, ii. 3. 80; iii. 2. 34; i. Henry IV. i. 3. 241; and Lear, iv. 6. 175; always in a bad sense, meaning a plotter, conspirator.

561. Line 87: o'er-reaches.—Ff. (instead of the reading of Qq.) have o'er-offices, a word not elsewhere known, perhaps a misprint, perhaps Shakespeare's coinage for his thought.

562. Lines 92-94: my lord such-a-one, that praised my lord such-a-one's horse, when he meant to beg it.—Compare Timon, i. 2. 216-218:

And now I remember, my lord, you gave
Good words the other day of a bay courser
I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it.

563. Line 100: to play at LOGGATS with 'em.—A description of the game of loggats (diminutive of log) is given by the Clarendon Press edd. on the authority of the Rev. G. Gould: "The game so called resembles bowls, but with a notable difference. First it is played not on a green, but on a floor strewn with rushes. The Jack is a wheel of lignum-vitæ or other hard wood nine inches in diameter and three or four inches thick. The loggat, made of apple-wood, is a truncated cone 26 or 27 inches in length, tapering from a girth of 8½ or 9 inches at the one end to 3½ or 4 inches at the other. Each player has three loggats which he throws, holding lightly the thin end. The object is to lie as near the Jack as possible. The only place we have heard of where this once popular game is now played is the Hampshire Hog Inn, Norwich." Compare Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, iv. 6:

¹ The tune given to the song in the margin of an old copy of Tottel's Miscellany is given by Chappell at p. 216, and by Furness at p. 382.

Now are they tossing of his legs and arms
Like loggats at a pear-tree.

Boyer, French Dictionary, has Logating, "a sort of unlawful game, now disused." It is one of the unlawful games named in the statute of 33 Henry VIII. c. 9.

564. Line 103: FOR AND a shrouding-sheet.—In the original (given above, note 559) For and is represented by And eke, of which it is the equivalent. Compare Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, ii. 3:

Your spouse doth come, and with him comes the lady,
For and the squire of damsels, as I take it

See, for further instances, Furness, Variorum Ed. vol. i. p. 385.

565. Line 108: quiddits.—Qq. have quiddities, which is found in I. Henry IV. i. 2. 51: "what, in thy quips and thy quiddities?" The word is from the scholastic term quidditas, used by the mockers for equivocations. Boyer, French Dictionary, has: "Quiddity, a Term in Philosophy, the Essence, Being, or definition of a thing," also "Quiddity, or Pun," and "Quiddity, or subtle Question."

566. Line 108: quilllets.—This is a word of similar meaning, perhaps corrupted from quidlibet (see also Love's Labour's Lost, note 137). Compare I. Henry VI. ii. 4. 17: "These nice sharp quilllets of the law." Boyer gives: "Quillet, Subst. Ex. The Querks and Quilllets of the Law, Les Tours & Detours, les Subtilitez, les Chicanes, ou les Chicanneries du Palais."

567. Lines 113, 114: his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries.—Compare Dekker, Gull's Hornbook, ch. v.: "There is another ordinary, to which your London usurer, your stale bachelor, and your thrifty attorney do resort; . . . every man's eye here is upon the other man's trencher, to note whether his fellow lurch him or not: if they chance to discourse, it is of nothing but of statutes, bonds, recognizances, fines, recoveries, audits, rents, subsidies, sureties, inclosures, liveries, indictments, outlawries, forfeitures, judgments, commissions, bankrupts, amercements, and of such horrible matter."

568. Line 115: the FINE of his fines.—Fine is used here with a play upon its more remote significance of end, as in All's Well, iv. 4. 35. Rushton (Shakespeare a Lawyer, p. 10) takes fine in the expression below, his fine pate full of FINE dirt, to have the same meaning.

569. Line 149: we must speak by the card.—The origin of the familiar phrase, now become proverbial, to speak by the card, is not certain. Malone defines it thus: "we must speak with the same precision and accuracy as is observed in marking the true distances of coasts, the heights, courses, &c. in a sea-chart, which in our poet's time was called a card. So, in the Commonwealth and Government of Venice, 4to, 1599, p. 177: 'Sebastian Munster in his carde of Venice—' Again, in Bacon's Essays, p. 326, edit 1740: 'Let him carry with him also some card, or book, describing the country where he travelleth. In 1589 was published in 4to. A Briefe Discourse of Mappes and Cardes, and of their Uses—The 'shipman's card' in Macbeth [i. 3. 17], is the paper on which the different points of the compass are described."

570. Line 151: the age is grown so PICKED.—Cotgrave defines Miste: "Neat, spruce, compt, quaint, picked, minion, tricksie, fine, gay" See Love's Labour's Lost, note 145

571. Line 177: I have been sexton here, man and boy, thirty years.—This passage has roused a lively discussion on the subject of Hamlet's age. The Clown's statement is very explicit. In line 154 Hamlet says: "How long hast thou been a grave-maker?" to which he replies with considerable detail, that he "came to 't" "the very day that young Hamlet was born." The passage seems to be introduced for the special purpose of giving us a precise idea as to Hamlet's age, yet, all the same, it is difficult to imagine the Hamlet of the early part of the play a man of thirty. A long discussion of the subject will be found in Furness, vol. i. pp. 381-394; Marshall, in his Study of Hamlet, devotes pp 181, 182 to the question. He comes to the conclusion that Hamlet is really intended to be nearer twenty than thirty, but that Shakespeare "added these details, which tend to prove Hamlet to have been thirty years old, for much the same reason as he inserted the line—

He's fat and scant of breath—namely, in order to render Hamlet's age and personal appearance more in accordance with those of the great actor, Burbage, who personated him." Probably Dr. Furnivall is right in boldly asserting that Shakespeare is really inconsistent with himself (New Shak. Soc. Trans. 1874, p. 494): "We know how early, in olden time, young men of rank were put to arms; how early, if they went to a University, they left it for training in Camp and Court. Hamlet, at a University, could hardly have passed 20; and with this age, the plain mention of his 'youth of primy nature' (I. iii. 7), and 'nature crescent, . . . not . . . alone in thews and bulk' (I. iii. 11-12), 'Lord Hamlet . . . he is young' (I. iii. 123-4), &c., by Polonius and Laertes, agrees. With this, too, agrees the King's reproach to Hamlet for his 'intent in going back to school at Wittenberg.' . . . I look on it as certain, that when Shakspeare began the play he conceived Hamlet as quite a young man. But as the play grew, as greater weight of reflection, of insight into character, of knowledge of life, &c., were wanted, Shakspeare necessarily and naturally made Hamlet a formed man; and, by the time that he got to the Grave-diggers' scene, told us the Prince was 30—the right age for him then; but not his age to Laertes & Polonius when they warn Ophelia against his blood that burn'd, his youthful fancy for her—'a toy in blood'—&c. The two parts of the play are inconsistent on this main point in Hamlet's state."

572. Line 208: Yorick.—Perhaps connected with the Danish form of the name George (Jorg), the J being pronounced as y. Furness observes that "Jerick" is the name of a "Dutch Bowr" in Chapman's Alphonsus.

573. Line 211: to set the table on a roar.—The Clarendon Press edd. compare the expression "to set on fire," and Exodus xix. 18, where "on a smoke" is used for smoking.

574. Line 236: IMPERIOUS Cæsar.—This is the reading of Qq.; Ff. have Imperiall, which is of course the sense of the word. The former was quite as customary in Shakespeare's time, and is used by him six or seven times Dyce compares Fletcher's Prophetess, ii. 3: "Tis imperious Rome."

575. Line 239: the winter's FLAW.—Cotgrave has "Tourbillon de vent. A whirlwind; also, a gust, flaw, berry, sudden blast, or boisterous tempest of wind." Compare Venus and Adonis, 456:

Gusts and foul flaws to herdmen and to herds

The word is still used occasionally.

576. Line 241: who is THAT they follow?—Qq. print this in place of the Ff.'s that. The latter seems to me the more appropriate of the two.

577. Line 250: warranty; i.e. warrant, is the reading of Qq., and all the Ff., except the first, which has warrantis, altered by Dyce into warrantise. Cotgrave gives both forms: "Garentage: m. Warrantie, warrantize, warrantage." The word warranty is used again in Merchant of Venice, i. 1. 132, 133:

And from your love I have a warranty
T' unburden all my plots and purposes, and in Othello, v. 2. 58-61:

I never did
Offend you in my life; never lov'd Cassio
But with such general warranty of heaven
As I might love.

578. Line 255: Yet here she is allow'd her virgin CRANTS.—Crants is the reading of Qq. (except the 6th); Ff. and Q. 6 have rites, which looks like a conjectural alteration of a word not understood by the editors. The word crants seems to be the German krantz, a garland, which in Lowland Scotch becomes crance, but in English has never been found except in the instance in the text. Elze found in Chapman's Alphonsus, Emperor of Germany, two instances of the word—elsewhere unknown, I believe, in English—corance meaning a crown, probably of flowers. He thought it threw a light on the crants of Hamlet, and that we ought to read that word crance. The custom of bearing garlands before the bier at a maiden's funeral, and hanging them up afterwards in the church, is narrated in Brand's Pop. Antiq. ii. 302-307; but the word "crants" is not used except as a quotation from the Hamlet instance. These wreaths are still to be seen in many country churches. See N. Sh. Soc. Trans. 1888, p. 180.

579. Line 260: To sing a requiem.—Ff. print sage requiem, which some editors have endeavoured to defend, to explain, or to amend.

580. Lines 261-263:

*Lay her i' the earth;
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring!*

Compare Persius, Sat. i.:

e tumulo fortunataque favilla

Nascentur viole;

and Tennyson, in Memoriam, xviii.:

'Tis well; 'tis something, we may stand
Where he in English earth is laid,
And from his ashes may be made
The violets of his native land

581. Line 269: O, treble woes.—I have adopted here Walker's conjecture (followed by Furness). Qq. print woe (which is universally followed), Ff. woer (which is evidently wrong) But as Furness very justly remarks: "I think it likely that either the r in woer of F. 1 is a misprint for s, or else the compositor mistook the s in the MS. from which he set up. Moreover, the plural somewhat avoids the cacophony of the singular: 'O \bar{h} , treble woe.'"

582. Lines 271, 272:

Whose wicked deed thy most INGENIOUS sense Depriv'd thee of!

The Clarendon Press edd. very aptly compare Lear, iv. 6. 286-291:

how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves.

583. Line 298: Woo't.—This contraction for "wouldst thou" or "wilt thou," still used by the common people in the North, is used by Shakespeare only here (where it marks contempt); in II. Henry IV. ii. 1. 63, where it is a part of the low language of Hostess Quickly; and in two places in Antony and Cleopatra, iv. 2. 7, where it is used by Antony to Enobarbus in a tone of familiarity, and iv. 15. 59, where Cleopatra says it tenderly to the dying Antony. It occurs several times in Day's Humour out of Breath, always in familiar talk or as a vulgarity.

584. Line 299: Woo't drink up EISEL?—Furness devotes nearly five pages (pp. 405-409) of his New Variorum Ed. to this puzzling line. The Qq. print Esil, the Ff. Esile (in italics); Q. 1 has vessels. Theobald (Var. Ed. vol. vii. p. 480) has the following note, which has had the credit of starting the only two really plausible interpretations which have been suggested: "This word has through all the editions been distinguished by Italic characters, as if it were the proper name of some river; and so, I dare say, all the editors have from time to time understood it to be. But then this must be some river in Denmark; and there is none there so called; nor is there any near it in name, that I know of, but Fæsel, from which the province of Overysseel derives its title in the German Flanders. Besides, Hamlet is not proposing any impossibilities to Laertes, as the drinking up a river would be: but he rather seems to mean,—Wilt thou resolve to do things the most shocking and distasteful to human nature; and, behold, I am as resolute. I am persuaded the poet wrote:

Wilt drink up Esel? eat a crocodile!

i.e. Wilt thou swallow down large draughts of vinegar? The proposition, indeed, is not very grand: but the doing it might be as distasteful and unsavoury as eating the flesh of a crocodile. And now there is neither an impossibility, nor an anticlimax: and the lowness of the idea is in some measure removed by the uncommon term." The former conjecture—that a river is meant—is followed or defended by Hamner, Capell, Steevens, Malone, Nares, Caldecott, Knight, Elze, Halliwell, Keightley, &c.—most of them deciding in favour of Yssel. Hamner conjectured Nile, which Elze further altered into Nilus; and Steevens suggested Weissel as an alternative to Yssel. The other interpretation—that Esill and Esile stand for Eisel, or vinegar (A.S. aisil)—is followed by Warburton, Johnson, Jenner, Dyce, Staunton, the Cambridge edd. &c. The word is found in Sonnet cxi. 9-12, where the original Q. reads:

Whist like a willing patient I will drinke,
Potions of Eysell gainst my strong infection,
No bitterness that I will bitter thinke,
Nor double penance to correct correction

The Clarendon Press edd quote from a MS. Herbal in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge (O. 1. 13): "Acetosum an^e vynegre or aysel." Theobald cites Chaucer, The Romaunt of the Rose, 217:

breed
Kneden with essel strong and egre, and Sir Thomas More, Poems (ed. 1557, p. 21):
remember therewithal
How Chrst for thee tasted essel and gall.

Hunter cites the Salisbury Primer, 1555, where the eighth prayer begins: "O blessed Jesu! . . . I beseech thee for the bitterness of the aysell and gall that thou tasted;" and Florio's Italian Dictionary, 1562, where we have "Asserzio, Eysell;" and Florio renders the same word by Wormwood. But a still nearer approach in spelling to the word as we find it in Qq. and Ff. occurs in my copy of Boyer's French Dictionary, ed. 1720: "Eisil, Subst. (an old English word for vinegar) Vinaigre." Boyer marks it as obsolete. The probabilities seem to me strongly in favour of this interpretation. As Singer notes, "it was a fashion with the gallants of Shakespeare's time to do some extravagant feat as a proof of their love in honour of their mistresses, and among others the swallowing of some nauseous potion was one of the most frequent."

585. Line 307.—This speech is in the Ff. most erroneously given to the King. The Qq. attribute it to the Queen, with whom it is obviously much more in keeping.

586. Line 310: When that her golden couplets are disclos'd.—Steevens observes: "During three days after the pigeon has hatched her couplets, (for she lays no more than two eggs,) she never quits her nest, except for a few moments in quest of a little food for herself; as all her young require in that early state to be kept warm, an office which she never entrusts to the male." But here "couplets" means eggs, and "disclos'd" means revealed, not as in note 323.

587. Line 315: dog will have his day.—The origin of this proverbial expression does not seem to be known. A. O. S. in the Athenæum, Oct. 3, 1868, gives an extract from a letter of the Princess Elizabeth to her sister, Queen Mary: "as a dog hathe a day, so may I;" and in the Athenæum of

Nov 19, 1870, Mr. P. A. Daniel quotes the Interlude of New Custom, 1573, ii. 3: "Well, if it chauce that a dogge hath a day," &c. and Jonson's Tale of a Tub, ii. 1: "A man hath his hour, & a dog his day." Elze gives the same phrase from Summer's Last Will and Testament (Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. xi. p. 37)

ACT V. SCENE 2.

588. Line 6: bilboes.—Steevens, who gives a cut in illustration (Var Sh. vol. vii. p. 486), says: "The bilboes is a bar of iron with fetters annexed to it, by which mutinous or disorderly sailors were anciently linked together. The word is derived from Bilboa, a place in Spain where instruments of steel were fabricated in the utmost perfection. To understand Shakespeare's allusion completely, it should be known, that as these fetters connect the legs of the offenders very close together, their attempts to rest must be as fruitless as those of Hamlet, in whose mind there was a kind of fighting that would not let him sleep." Boyer defines Bilboes as a "Sort of Punishment at Sea."

589. Line 9: When our deep plots do FAIL.—Ff. have paule, Q. 2 has pall, the later Qq. fall. The reading in the text was introduced by Pope. It is difficult to see the sense of pall in this connection, though Malone compares Antony and Cleopatra, ii. 7. 88:

I'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more;

but it is one thing to speak of fortunes as pall'd, or become tarnished, decayed, and quite another to speak of plots in the same way. A plot succeeds or fails, it does not pall. Ingleby (The Shakespeare Fabrications, p. 115, and Littledale's ed. of The Two Noble Kinsmen, pp. 149, 150) considers that fall was used as a synonym of fail, and he compares Othello, iii. 3. 237; Comedy of Errors, i. 2. 37; Two Noble Kinsmen, iii. 6. 236 and 272; Sir John Oldcastle, iv. 1; but the instances seem to me doubtful, some not meaning fail, others more likely to be a misprint.

590. Line 11: Rough-hew.—Florio has: "Abbozzare, to rough-hew or cast any first draught." Steevens gives almost too exact a parallel to Shakespeare's phrase in a communication from Dr. Farmer, who was under the impression that a dealer in skewers had said to him of his nephew: "he could rough-hew them, but I was obliged to shape their ends."

591. Line 13: sea-gown.—Cotgrave has: "Esclavine: f. as Esclamme; or a sea-gowne; or a course, high-collared, and short-sleeued gowne, reaching downe to the mid leg, and vsed most by sea-men, and saylers."

592. Line 17: to UNSHAL.—So Ff.; Qq. by evident attraction from sold above, print unfold. Shakespeare would of course have avoided a rhyme in the middle of a passage of blank verse.

593. Line 19: O royal knavery!—The Qq. reading A royal knavery is very likely intended for Ah, royal knavery.

594. Line 20: LARDED with many several sorts of REASONS.—Compare iv. 5. 37: "Larded with sweet flowers." Ff., in place of the Qq. reasons, have reason, which a few editors, one can scarcely see why, have adopted.

595. Line 22: With, ho! such BUGS and goblins in my life.—Bug is used several times in Shakespeare for bugbear. Cotgrave renders: "Gobelin:" "A Goblin, Hob-goblin, Robin-goodfellow, Bug." See III. Henry VI note 805. In my life of course means, "in my continuing to live."

596. Lines 33–35:

*I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning.*

It seems that illegible writing has always been considered a mark of distinction. It obviously is so now; and Shakespeare, and not Shakespeare alone, is witness that it was formerly. Ritson quotes from Florio's Montaigne, 1608, p. 125: "I have in my time seene some who by writing did earnestly get both their titles and living, to disavow their apprentices age, marre their pen, and affect the ignorance of so vulgar a quality."

597 Line 36: It did me yeoman's service; i.e. such good service as the yeomen, who composed the mass of the infantry and were famous for their bravery, rendered in war.

598. Line 42. And stand a COMMA 'tween their amities.—Johnson very well defines the precise force of comma (a question to which Furness devotes two pages) as the note of connection and continuity (in sentences), as opposed to the period, or note of abruption and disjunction. The expression seems to me so natural, and its meaning so obvious, that I do not see why so much difficulty should have been foisted into a plain enough passage. Elze compares Marston, Antonio and Mellida, iv. 1:

We'll point our speech
With amorous kissing, kissing commas, and even suck
The liquid breath from out each other's hps.

—Works, ed. Halliwell, vol. i. p. 51.

599. Lines 46, 47:

*He should the bearers put to sudden death,
No shriving-time allow'd.*

In the Hystorie of Hamblet the ministers of the usurper are represented as aware of the treacherous mission on which they are sent, but there is no intimation in the play that Rosencrantz and Guildenstern knew anything about it. Was, then, Hamlet justified in having them executed, or was he guilty of a piece of merely wanton cruelty? Not justified, says Steevens (Var. Ed. vol. vii. p. 485); justified, says Strachey (Hamlet, p. 96). F. A. Marshall, in his Study of Hamlet, devotes pp. 63–69 to this question. The language of Hamlet, he says, in his narrative to Horatio, “indicates great excitement, and, as I have said before, is characterized by a childish exultation in the success of his strategy. That he should have thus craftily obtained, at the same time, such strong proofs of the King’s treachery, and so ready a means of avenging himself on the two time-serving courtiers who had been so faithless to their professed friendship for him, seems to have produced no other impression on his mind than one of delighted self-satisfaction. . . . Strange, indeed, is the contrast between his endless self-vindications, as far as the King is concerned, and his utter indifference at the sudden and fearful end he has contrived for the two courtiers.

"The malignant misrepresentation of Hamlet's character, for which Stevens is responsible, has drawn forth many able and indignant vindications of Shakespeare's favourite hero; but while unable to agree with any of Stevens' deductions, I must confess that he seems right in refusing to judge Hamlet by any other evidence than that afforded by the tragedy itself. . . .

“It is useless to deny that in the play of Hamlet there is not one line which can be fairly said to prove that Rosencrantz and Guildenstern knew what were the contents of the packet committed to their care. Hamlet himself does not say they knew it; he expresses his distrust of them in the strongest language to his mother (see act iii. scene 4, lines 202 to 210 inclusive), but all that he says to Horatio now is—

Why, man, they did make love to this employment;
 their defeat

Doth by their own insinuation grow :

and he seems to justify the terrible punishment he had inflicted on them by the very fact that their conduct throughout had been so underhand, and so cunningly false to him as their friend and prince, that although their treachery was undoubted, they had not been openly guilty of any design against his life. Hamlet declares—

They are not near my conscience :

because he considers that by laying themselves out to serve the King's ends from the very first moment they arrived at Court; by their lack of frankness towards him, their old schoolfellow, at their first meeting; by their steadily blinding their eyes to the state of affairs at Court, and by denying to the griefs of their friend any sympathy; by readily accepting the theory of his madness without trying to account for his melancholy and retirement from Court in any other manner; by accepting an embassy which their own common sense must have told them could not mean any good to Hamlet, they had been so false to the duties of friendship and to the honour of gentlemen, that they deserved the death of traitors."

600. Line 68: Does it not, thinks't thee, stand me now upon?—F. 1 has thinks't thee; F. 2, F. 3, F. 4 think'st thee; the Qq. think thee and think you. The reading in the text is the conjectural emendation of Sidney Walker, who suggested that thinks't thee should be thinks't thee, i.e. "thinks it thee." He cites another instance of a similar construction from Cartwright's Ordinary. iii. 3:

Little thinks 't thee how diligent thou art

To little purpose; —Dodsley, vol. x. p. 216.

where editors have always read, as in the passage in the text, think'st thee.—Stand me now upon means, is imperative on me. The same expression is used in Richard II. ii. 3. 138:

It stands your grace upon to do him right.

601. Lines 68-80 are omitted in Qq., a curious omission, as, according to Ff., it makes Hamlet's speech break off in the middle of a sentence.

602. Line 73: It will be short: the interim is mine.—Ff. print the interim's mine. The correction was introduced by Hammer.

603. Line 78: I'll COURT his favours.—This emendation is Rowe's—court for count. It is so very probable that I have not hesitated to introduce it into the text; but at the same time I do not deny that the original may after all be the right reading, and count mean make account of.

604. Line 88: Dost know this WATER-FLY?—Compare Trillius and Cressida, v. 1. 86-88: "Ah, how the poor world is pester'd with such waterflies,—diminutives of nature!" Johnson sensibly takes water-fly to be the emblem of a busy trifler, from its way of dancing aimlessly to and fro over the surface of the water.

605. Line 91: Sweet lord, if your LORDSHIP were at leisure.—Ff. misprint friendship.

606. Lines 101, 102: it is very sultry and hot for my complexion.—Qq. print or in place of for, which Warburton printed as an unfinished sentence, understanding "or my complexion deceives me." It seems to me that one reading is just as plausible as the other.

607. Line 108: I beseech you, remember.—It appears from Love's Labour's Lost, v. 1. 103 that the conventional phrase was "remember thy courtesy." Staunton quotes from Lusty Juventus, ed. Hawkins, p. 142: "I pray you be remembered, and cover your head;" and Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, i. 1: "Pray you remember your courts'y . . . Nay, pray you be cover'd."

608. Line 109: for mine ease—This also appears to have been a conventional phrase. The expression occurs also in the Induction to Marston's Malcontent:

Cum. I beseech you, sir, be covered
Sly. No, in good faith, for mine ease;

and in Massinger's New Way to Pay Old Debts, ii. 8:

Is't for your ease
You keep your hat off?

Malone quotes from Florio's Second Frutes, 1591, p. 111:

Why do you stand bareheaded? . . .
Pardon me, good sir, I do it for mine ease.

609. Lines 109-150.—In place of these lines the Ff. have only: "Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon."

610. Lines 114-118: he is the card or calendar of gentry, for you shall find in him the continent of what part a gentleman would see.—This is well explained by Johnson: "[He is] the general preceptor of elegance; the card by which a gentleman is to direct his course; the calendar by which he is to choose his time; that what he does may be both excellent and seasonable. You shall find him containing and comprising every quality which a gentleman would desire to contemplate for imitation."

611. Lines 118-121: to divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetic of memory, AND YET BUT YAW NEITHER, in respect of his quick sail—Q. 2 reads yaw, the later Qq. raw. Yaw is a nautical term, used of the unsteady motion made by a ship in a swell, when she does not properly answer her helm. The passage as it reads is somewhat confused, and Dyce conjectured that yet was a misprint for it, spelt yt. Hamlet intended to puzzle Osric, so why should he not puzzle the commentators? It seems to me that Abbott is right in taking the sense to be: "do nothing but lay clumsily behind neither." The ellipsis of the negative explains neither.

612. Line 124: semblable.—This word is used by Shakespeare in one other place, Timon, iv. 3. 22, as a substantive, and twice as an adjective, II. Henry IV. v. 1. 73, and Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 4. 3. As an adjective it is given in Boyer's Dictionary as the equivalent of the French semblable.

613. Line 148: HIS weapon.—Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4, Q. 5 misprint this.

614. Line 157: hangers.—Boyer, French Dictionary, has: "The hangers of a belt, Les pendans d'un baudrier, ou d'un ceinturon, les parties qui pendent au bas du baudrier & au travers desquelles on passe l'épée." Steevens compares Chapman's Iliad, c. xi:

The scaberd was of silver plate, with golden hangers grac'd.

Elze quotes Dekker, The Honest Whore, Part II. iv. 1: "I could feast ten good fellows with those hangers," as a proof of the cost and sumptuousness of them.

615. Lines 172-175: The king, sir, hath laid, that in a dozen passes between yourself and him, he shall not exceed you three hits: he hath laid on twelve for nine.—This wager is of course, as it is put, impossible; but a gentleman of Osric's fineness of speech could not be expected to be very precise in a matter of mere arithmetic. "It was impossible," says Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 199, "that Osric could state anything clearly or simply; but I think the meaning is plain. 'A dozen passes' does not mean simply twelve hits, for in a pass both might score a hit, the wager being that Laertes will not gain three more hits than Hamlet. To do this it is plain Laertes must hit his opponent twelve times at least in every twenty-one, or four times in every seven; the odds, in short, that Laertes lays on himself are twelve to nine, or four to three. It would have been quite clear if Osric had said that the King had laid that Laertes would not win best out of seven hits three times, for that is what it really comes to. I think the expression 'a dozen' was a very vague one in Shakespeare's time, and that if the text is corrupt, the corruption lies in these words. In the Quarto 1603 we find the Gravedigger, speaking of Yorick's skull, says to Hamlet, 'Looke you, here's a skull hath bin here these dozen yeare.'" In Ff. and Qq., it will be remembered, the passage reads: "Here's a skull now; this skull hath lain [hath lain you] in the earth three and twenty years."

616. Line 176: if your lordship would vouchsafe the answer.—Compare Cymbeline, iv. 2. 159-161:

I would revenges,
That possible strength might meet, would seek us through,
And put us to our answer.

617. Lines 193, 194: This lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.—Malone cites Mere's Palladis Tamia, 1598: "As the lapwing runneth away with the shell on her head as soon as she is hatched." Steevens quotes very similar words from Greene's Never Too Late, 1601. The bird thus becomes easily the symbol of a forward fellow. For the still more usual signification given to the lapwing—that of insincerity—compare Measure for Measure, i. 4. 32, and see note 169 to Much Ado.

618. Line 196: many more of the same BREED.—This is the reading of Qq. F. 1 prints mine more of the same Beauty; the later Ff. nine. Some editors have adopted the bevy of this otherwise plainly corrupt reading, to which I should hesitate to be indebted.

619. Line 200: FOND AND WINNOWNED opinions.—This is the reading of Ff. Qq. have prophane and trennowed or trennowed. Warburton conjectured fann'd and winnowed; Tschischwitz profound and winnowed, which the Clarendon Press edd. incline to. Either of these emendations may possibly be right; but fond and winnowed gives very good sense (though the metaphor is certainly mixed): fond opinions, foolish and affected ones; winnowed opinions, carefully tested, select ones—through both of which the fool's jesty collection (frothy fragments of fly-away knowledge) bears him indiscriminately.

620. Lines 203–218 are omitted in Ff.

621. Lines 234, 235: since no man has aught of what he leaves, what is't to leave betimes? Let be.—Ff. read, with slight difference of spelling, "Since no man ha's ought of what he leaves What is't to leave betimes?" Qq. have "since no man of ought he leaues, knows what ist to leaue betimes, let be" The reading in the text, which follows chiefly the Ff., was first introduced by Caldecott. The meaning seems to be: "since no man has (as a real and firm possession) aught of what he must leave behind him, what matter if he leaves it early or late?" It is very possible that Johnson's conjecture may be right, and the true reading be: "Since no man knows aught of what he leaves," &c.; the meaning being, in Johnson's own words, "Since no man knows aught of the state of which he leaves, since he cannot judge what other years may produce, why should he be afraid of leaving life betimes? Why should he dread an early death, of which he cannot tell whether it is an exclusion of happiness, or an interception of calamity?"

622. Lines 237–255.—Johnson says of these lines: "I wish Hamlet had made some other defence; it is unsuitable to the character of a good or a brave man, to shelter himself in falsehood." Strachey's reply is, I think, reasonable (Hamlet, p. 79): "Surely both assertions of Hamlet [the protestation to his mother that he is not mad 'essentially, but 'mad in craft, and this] are true—one of Hamlet, the other of the other Hamlet who is 'not himself,' but 'his madness,' and 'poor Hamlet's enemy.' His mind is diseased, but not a mere mass of disease: health is still very strong there, so strong as to keep the disease under great control, and often to suppress it altogether for a time. And these opposite assertions are not only true of Hamlet's two opposite states of mind, but true in reference to the two occasions on which they are made. His reason did lose its authority for the time at the grave of Ophelia, but his designs on the murdering usurper are quite rational, and it is his craft to make them seem madness. Nor is his ghost-seeing, ecstacy,—this is (as we learn from the distinction between madness and ecstasy in a previous speech in this scene) the excitement and delirium of the senses: it has nothing in common with the fantasies of a fever or night-mare, and if it be a delusion, it is one which leaves the head cool, and the powers of the practical understanding in full vigour."

623. Line 242: exception.—Compare All's Well, i. 2. 33–41:

his honour,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand.

624. Line 252: disclaiming from.—Cotgrave has "Desadvouement: m. A disadowning, or disclaiming from"

625. Line 255: brother.—So Qq. Ff. have mother.

626. Line 261: To keep my name UNGOR'D.—Compare Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 227, 228:

I see my reputation is at stake;
My fame is shrewdly gor'd.

627. Line 272: Your grace hath laid the odds o' the weaker side—The odds of course refers here to the king's stake as compared with that of Laertes; not to the terms of the wager, which were in favour of Hamlet.

628. Line 274: But since he's better'd—Qq. print better. Better'd probably refers to Laertes' practice in Paris.

629. Lines 285–289:

Give me the cups;
And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,
The trumpet to the cannoneer without,
The cannons to the heavens, the heavens to earth,
"Now the king drinks to Hamlet!"

Compare Stowe's Annales, 1605, p. 1436: "Thursday the 14. day [of July, 1603] . . . That afternoone the king [of Denmark] went aboard the English ship, and had a banket prepared for him vpon the vpper decks, which were hung with an Awning of cloath of Tissue: euery health reported sixe, eight, or ten shot of great Ordnance, so that, during the king's abode, the ship discharged 160 shot." This seems to have been customary in Denmark on solemn occasions; Elze cites Gfrörer, History of Gustavus Adolphus, 1852, p. 127. In 1615 King Christian IV. of Denmark gave a splendid banquet in honour of the Swedish envoy Skyth, who occupied a place at the king's right hand. "Skyth rose up, addressed Christian in Latin, and drank brotherhood to him in the name of his own sovereign. Christian arose, answered the speech of the envoy and, with the sound of cannon and kettle-drums, emptied the goblet to the bottom."

630. Line 283: union—Q. 2 prints Vnice, in the later Qq. onyz, variously spelt. Florio has "Vnione . . . a great, faire, and orient pearl" The word comes from "unio," unique, as no two pearls are exactly alike. Steevens quotes Holland's translation of Pliny, ix. 35: "And here-upon it is, that our dainties and delicates here at Rome, have devised this name for them, and call them Vniones; as a man would say, Singular, and by themselves alone" The King's announcement about the pearl was no doubt done to give him an opportunity of dropping poison into the cup. See 337 below: "is thy union here?"

631. Line 298: He's fat and scant of breath.—A generally received opinion is that this line was put in to suit the physical peculiarities of the actor who first took the part. He was, no doubt, Richard Burbage, the leading tragedian of the company when Hamlet was produced. The date of Burbage's birth is not known; but he is reasonably supposed to have been about thirty years of age in 1600. He died 13th March, 1618/19, and an Elegy on his death (printed by Collier in his Memoirs of Actors, Sh. Soc., 1846, p. 52) mentions many of the parts he played. Among those which the poet declares to have died with him is that of Hamlet:—

No more young Hamlet, though but scant of breath,
Shall cry 'Revenge!' for his dear father's death.

Further on the elegist describes him as of "stature small," and that, I believe, is all the knowledge we possess of Burbage's personage.

632 Line 314: Stage-direction: "Laertes wounds Hamlet; then, in scuffling, they change rapiers, and Hamlet wounds Laertes"—This stage-direction is Rowe's; the Qq. give none, the Ff. have "In scuffling they change Rapiers." "How this change of foils is brought about," says Marshall, Study of Hamlet, p. 200, "is not quite certain. Salvini delighted and surprised the audience, at the first representation he gave of Hamlet, by the graceful manner in which he managed this exchange. After Laertes had hit him, he put his hand up to his side, as if he felt the prick of the unbated weapon; then just as Laertes was about to take up his foil, which had been knocked out of his hand in the encounter, Signor Salvini placed his foot upon it, and, bowing gracefully, presented his antagonist with his own foil. Graceful as this undeniably is, I do not think it can be justified on a careful consideration of the scene; the action is too deliberate; it is manifest that Hamlet does not stop when he is hit, but that he continues his attack furiously till the point of each foil getting caught in the hilt of the other, both are disarmed; but they do not stop, Hamlet being too eager to hit Laertes; each snatches at the first weapon that comes to his hand, and they continue the struggle, in which Hamlet wounds Laertes. In answer to the objection that Laertes, though struck with the venomous point after Hamlet, when the virulence of the poison might be supposed to have diminished, yet dies the first—it may be observed that Hamlet's wound was probably much the slighter of the two, for the excited state in which he evidently was, and not knowing he had an unbated weapon in his hand, he would probably strike Laertes much harder than Laertes, knowing the deadly power of the poison, had struck him. Hamlet's words after the scuffle—could hardly have been spoken had he detected Laertes treachery, or had he been conscious that he was wounded. His mind is, I believe, entirely wrapped up in the trial of skill, for the time being, and his excitement arises from his eagerness to win the match."

Nay, come, again—

Furness, vol. ii. p. 333, quotes from the Jahrbuch der deutschen Shakespeare-Gesellschaft, 1869, p. 376, the following explanation by Hermann Freiherr von Friesen, which seems to me to clear up the difficulties very reasonably:—"There is only one way, I conceive, of solving this problem on the stage, and that is by reference to the Rules of the Fencing-school, and the lesson that relates to 'Disarming with the Left Hand.' The French translator possibly knew this lesson, as he paraphrases the stage-direction ('They catch one another's rapiers, and both are wounded') with the following words, 'Laerte blesse Hamlet, et dans la chaleur de l'assaut ils se désarment et changent de fleuret, et Hamlet blesse Laerte.' The lesson upon disarming, if I may depend upon the memory of my schooldays, is somewhat this: As soon as your opponent has made a pass and is about to return to his guard, you strike the most powerful battute possible

(i.e. a blow descending along the blade of your opponent), in order to throw your opponent's blade out of its position, if possible, with its point downwards, at the same instant you advance the left foot close to the outer side of the right foot of your opponent, seize with the left hand the guard of your opponent's rapier, and endeavour to wrest the weapon from his fist by a powerful pressure downwards; if this manœuvre succeeds, you put the point of your dagger to the breast of your opponent, and compel him to confess himself vanquished. When your opponent does not succeed in withstanding the battute, which makes it impossible for him to keep back his assailant with the point of his dagger, there is nothing for him to do but to meet the attack with the same manœuvre, and get his assailant's weapon in his hand in the same way. With persons of equal skill this is the usual result, whereby they change places, and the combat is continued without delay.

633 Lines 317, 318:

*Why, as a woodcock to mine own springe, Oseur;
I am justly kill'd with mine own treachery.*

F. J. V. in Notes and Queries, Aug. 8, 1874, p. 103, writes: "A woodcock is trained to decoy other birds into a springe; first, the fowler places him just outside the springe; then, while strutting about outside the springe, and calling, and by various arts alluring other birds, the woodcock incautiously places his foot in or on the springe, and so is caught." Elze, however, doubts whether the woodcock—a proverbially foolish bird—could be trained to anything; and supposes that it is simply fastened near the springe to allure other birds by its mere presence.

634 Lines 347, 348:

*as this fell sergeant, death,
Is strict in his arrest.*

Compare Sonnet lxxiv. 1:

when that fell arrest

Without all bail shall carry me away.

Sergeant is used by Shakespeare for a sheriff's officer, in which sense the word was then current. Cotgrave has "Sergeant: m. A Sergeant, Officer, Pursuivant, Apparitor." Malone compares Silvester's Du Bartas (ed. 1633, p. 30):

And Death, dread sergeant, of the eternal Judge,
Comes very late to his sole-seated Lodge.

635. Line 355: O good Horatio.—This is the reading of Ff.; the Qq. print O god Horatio, which is quite as good a reading.

636. Line 364: o'er-crows.—Johnson quotes from Spenser's View of the Present State of Ireland (Globe ed. p. 660): "A base varlett, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill beginneth nowe to overtcrows soe high mountaynes, and make himselfe greates protectour of all outlawes and rebells that will repayre vnto him." We still use the expression, though only colloquially, to "crow over" anyone.

637. Lines 363, 369:

*So tell him, with the OCCURRENTS, more and less,
Which have SOLICITED—The rest is silence.*

Occurrents is not used elsewhere by Shakespeare. Steevens quotes Drayton, Baron's War, bk. i. canto xii.:

As our occurrences happen in degree.

Solicited means prompted or brought on. Compare Macbeth, i. 3. 130.

This supernatural soliciting— incitement, that is Hamlet apparently breaks off in the midst of a sentence, feeling death upon him, and has but time to give utterance to his last sigh of relief or regret: The rest is silence. The Ff. print, after these words O, o, o, o—no doubt the absurd addition of some actor, who thought four groans would add to the effect of Hamlet's death.

638. Line 370: Now CRACKS a noble heart.—Crack is used elsewhere by Shakespeare where we should use break Compare Coriolanus, v. 3. 9 ("a crack'd heart"), Pericles, iii. 2. 77; Merry Wives, ii. 2. 301.

639. Line 375: This quarry cries on havoc.—Compare Julius Caesar, iii. 1. 273:

Cry "Havoc!" and let slip the dogs of war.

The meaning of the phrase here seems to be: "This heap of dead urges to an indiscriminate slaughter." The Clarendon Press edd. quote from Todd's ed. of Johnson's Dictionary an enactment of the Statutes of Warre, &c., by Henry VIII., 1513: "That noo man be so hardy to crye havoc, upon payne of hym that is so found begynner, to dye therefore; and the remenant to be emprysoned, and theyr bodyes punyshed at the Kynges will."

640. Line 376: What feast is TOWARD in thine ETERNAL cell.—Toward, meaning near at hand, is used once before in this play, i. 1. 77. Eternal, also, is used in i. 5. 21, with the same apparent meaning as here, i.e. infernal (See note 136.) Compare Julius Caesar, i. 2. 180, and Othello, iv. 2. 130. The Yankee, therefore, with his "tarnal," is not in such bad company after all.

641. Line 386: jump.—Compare i. 1. 65, and note 11.

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN HAMLET.

NOTE.—The addition of sub., adj., verb, adv in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb only in the passage or passages cited

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line
Abominably... iii. 2. 39	Berattle..... ii. 2. 357	Chapfallen v. 1. 212	Crab ¹⁹ ii. 2. 206
Actively..... iii. 4. 87	Bet (sub.)..... v. 2. 169	Chariest ¹⁴ i. 3. 36	Crants..... v. 1. 255
Adjoined ¹ iii. 3. 20	Betoken ⁷ v. 1. 242	Cherub..... iv. 3. 50	Crash (sub) ... ii. 2. 498
Ambiguous... i. 5. 178	Billboes ⁸ v. 2. 6	Chopine..... ii. 2. 446	Crib ²⁰ v. 2. 88
Amis ² (sub.).. iv. 5. 18	Bitter (adv.)... i. 1. 8	Circumvent.... v. 1. 88	Crimeful ²¹ ... iv. 7. 7
Anchor ³ iii. 2. 229	Blanks (verb.) . iii. 2. 230	Clemency iii. 2. 160	Crook..... iii. 2. 66
Ancle... . . . ii. 1. 80	Blastments... i. 3. 42	Climatures ... i. 1. 125	Crow-flowers.. iv. 7. 170
Annexment.... iii. 3. 21	Bloat..... iii. 4. 182	Clutch (sub.) . v. 1. 80	Definement.... v. 2. 116
Anticipation .. ii. 2. 304	Bodiless..... iii. 4. 138	Coagulate..... ii. 2. 484	Delver v. 1. 15
Apoplexed iii. 4. 73	Brainish..... iv. 1. 11	Co-mart..... i. 1. 93	Demi-natured . iv. 7. 88
Appurtenance. ii. 2. 388	Brute (adj.).... iii. 2. 110	Comical..... ii. 2. 410, 417	Diameter iv. 1. 41
Argal ⁴ v. 1. 12, 20, 55	Bung-hole..... v. 1. 226	Commingle ⁵ ... iii. 2. 74	Dicers iii. 4. 45
Arlless..... iv. 5. 19	Button ⁹ (sub.) . ii. 2. 233	Commatural... iii. 2. 170	Diction..... v. 2. 123
Aslant..... iv. 7. 167	Buttons ¹⁰ (sub.) i. 3. 40	Comply ¹⁵ { ii. 2. 390	Disappointed... i. 5. 77
Assigns (sub.).. v. 2. 157, 109	Buz (interj.)... ii. 2. 412	{ v. 2. 195	Disclose (sub.) iii. 1. 174
Assistant (adj.) i. 3. 3	Buzzers..... iv. 5. 90	Compost iii. 4. 151	Distilment i. 5. 64
Associates (sub.) iv. 3. 47	Cast ¹¹ (sub.) .. i. 1. 73	Compound ¹⁶ (adj.) iii. 4. 49	Ditchers..... v. 1. 34
*Aunt-mother. ii. 2. 394	Cast ¹² (sub.) .. iii. 1. 85	Compulsive... i. 1. 103	Document..... iv. 5. 178
Avouch (sub.) . i. 1. 57	Cataplastm iv. 7. 144	Concernancy .. v. 2. 123	*Down-gyved.. ii. 1. 80
Back ⁵ iv. 7. 154	Cautel ¹³ i. 3. 15	Congruing iv. 3. 66	Drabbing ii. 1. 26
Backed (adj.).. iii. 2. 397	Caviare..... ii. 2. 457	Considered (adj) ii. 2. 81	Droppings i. 5. 69
Barked ⁶ i. 5. 71	Cellarage i. 5. 151	Contraction... iii. 4. 46	Drossy v. 2. 197
Beautified iii. 1. 51	Cerements... i. 4. 48	Contumely iii. 1. 71	Dupped..... iv. 5. 53
Beer-barrel ... v. 1. 235	Chanson..... ii. 2. 437	Convenient (adv.) i. 1. 175	Eale i. 4. 36
Beetles (verb).. i. 4. 71		Coted ¹⁷ ii. 2. 329	Eisel ²² v. 1. 299
Behove (sub.).. v. 1. 71		Counterfeit ¹⁸ (adj.) iii. 4. 54	Emulate (adj.) . i. 1. 83
Be-netted v. 2. 29			Enactures iii. 2. 207

1 = tied to; = near to. Ant. iv. 10. 5.

2 = misfortune; = wrong. offence, Sonn. xxxv. 7; cl. 3.

3 = anchorite, hermit.

4 Clown's form of ergo.

5 = support in reserve.

6 = grown like bark.

7 Venus and Adonis, 483.

8 = fetters. Billbo = blade, sword, Mer. Wiv. i. 1. 186; iii. 3. 114.

9 = knob on a cap; used elsewhere in its ordinary sense.

10 = buds.

11 = forming in a mould; = throw of dice, I. Hen. IV. iv. 1. 47; Richard III. v. 4. 9.

12 = tinge, colouring.

13 Lover's Complaint, 303.

14 Chary occurs in Sonn. xxii. 11.

15 = to be courteous; = to yield, Othello, i. 3. 285.

16 = compact, solid; = composed, mixed, Sonn. cxxy. 7; Lover's Compl. 259.

17 = passed; = surpassed, Love's Lab. Lost, iv. 3. 87.

18 = portrayed; used repeatedly elsewhere in its ordinary sense.

19 = crawfish; elsewhere = crab-apple.

20 = manger; = hovel, II. Hen. IV. iii. 1. 9.

21 Lucrece, 970.

22 Sonn. cxl. 10.

WORDS PECULIAR TO HAMLET.

	Act Sc. Line		Act Sc. Line		Act Sc. Line		Act Sc. Line
Enseamed.....	iii. 4 92	Hoodman-blind	iii. 4 77	Mouth ⁹ (verb)	v. 2 20	Precurse.....	i. 1 121
Entreatments..	i. 3 122	Horridly.....	{ i. 4 55	Muddy-mettled	ii. 2 594	Presentment ¹⁶	iii. 4 54
Enviously.....	iv. 5 6	*Hugger-mugger	iv. 5 84	*Murdering-piece	iv. 5 95	Pressure.....	{ i. 5 100
Escoted.....	ii. 2 362	Hush (adj.)....	ii. 2 508	Mutine (verb)	iii. 4 83		{ iii. 2 87
Ever-preserved	ii. 2 366	*Ill-breeding..	iv. 5 15	Non.....	iv. 5 165	Prettiness.....	iv. 5 189
Extolment....	v. 2 120	Illo.....	i. 5 114	Northerly....	v. 2 99	Priny.....	i. 3 7
Eyases.....	ii. 2 355	Illume.....	i. 1 37	North-north-west	10 ii. 2 396	Prison-house..	i. 5 14
*Falling-off....	i. 5 47	Impartment..	i. 4 59	Note ¹¹ (verb)..	i. 5 179	Privates ¹⁷	ii. 2 288
Fanged (adj.)..	iii. 4 203	Impasted.....	ii. 2 481	Noyance.....	iii. 3 13	Profanely.....	iii. 2 34
Farm ¹ (verb)...	iv. 4 20	Impulators....	i. 3 129	Nunnery.....	iii. 1 122, 133, 142, 145	Promise-crammed	iii. 2 99
Fatness.....	iii. 4 153	Imponed.....	v. 2 156, 170	Occulted.....	iii. 2 85	Proposer.....	ii. 2 297
Fear-surprised	i. 2 203	Impotence.....	ii. 2 66	Occurments...	v. 2 368	Provincial ¹⁸	iii. 2 288
Fellies.....	ii. 2 517	Incorporal....	iii. 4 118	O'ercrows.....	v. 2 364	Purples ¹⁹	iv. 7 171
Film (verb)....	iii. 4 147	Incorpse.....	iv. 7 88	O'erdoing.....	iii. 2 14	Purport.....	ii. 1 82
Fishmonger...	ii. 2 174, 189	Incorrect.....	i. 2 95	O'ergrowth....	i. 4 27	Queen (adj.)...	iii. 1 190
Flagon.....	v. 1 197	Individable...	ii. 2 418	O'erhanging...	ii. 2 312	Questionable..	i. 4 43
Flaxen.....	iv. 5 196	Inexplicable...	iii. 2 13	O'erhasty.....	ii. 2 57	Quickness.....	iv. 3 45
Flushing.....	i. 2 155	Infusion ⁵	v. 2 122	O'erleavens...	i. 4 29	Quiddits.....	v. 1 108
Forgery ²	iv. 7 90	Inhibition....	ii. 2 346	O'ersized.....	ii. 2 484	Quietus ²⁰	iii. 1 75
Fouled.....	ii. 1 79	Inoculate.....	iii. 1 119	O'erstep.....	iii. 2 21	Rankly.....	i. 5 38
Free-footed....	iii. 3 26	Instrumental..	i. 2 48	O'erteemed....	ii. 2 531	Rareness ²¹	v. 2 122
Friending (sub.)	i. 5 186	Intil.....	v. 1 81	Omen.....	i. 1 123	Ratifiers.....	iv. 5 105
Frock.....	iii. 4 164	In-urned.....	i. 4 49	Oppressor ¹²	iii. 1 71	Really.....	v. 2 132
Frowningly....	i. 2 231	Inventorially	v. 2 118	Ordinant.....	v. 2 48	Recognizances ²²	v. 1 112
Fust.....	iv. 4 39	Jaw-bone.....	v. 1 85	Outbreak.....	ii. 1 33	Reconciliation	v. 2 258
Gain-giving...	v. 2 225	Jig-maker.....	iii. 2 132	Out-herods....	iii. 2 15	Rede.....	i. 3 51
Gait ³	i. 2 31	John-a-dreams	ii. 2 595	Overdone.....	iii. 2 22, 28	Re-deliver ²³	iii. 1 94
*Gallows-maker	v. 1 49	Joint-labourer	i. 1 78	Overhappy....	ii. 2 232	Re-deliver ²⁴	v. 2 186
Gaming (verb)	{ ii. 1 24, 53	Jointress.....	i. 2 9	Pajock.....	iii. 2 295	Relative.....	ii. 2 633
	{ iii. 3 91	Kettle.....	v. 2 236	Pale ¹³	i. 5 90	Repat (verb)...	iv. 5 147
Gentry ⁴	{ ii. 2 22	*Kettle-drum..	i. 4 11	Palmy.....	i. 1 113	Repel ²⁵	ii. 1 109
	{ iii. 2 114	Kindless.....	ii. 2 609	Panders (verb)	iii. 4 88	Repugnant.....	ii. 2 493
Gib.....	iii. 4 190	Lash ⁶ (sub.)...	iii. 1 50	Pansies.....	iv. 5 177	Repulsed.....	ii. 2 146
Gibber.....	i. 1 116	Lazar-like.....	i. 5 72	Pastoral-comical	ii. 2 418	Requiem ²⁶	v. 1 260
Goose-quills...	i. 2 300	Leperous.....	i. 5 64	Pastors.....	i. 3 47	Resolutes (sub.)	i. 1 98
Grass-green....	iv. 5 31	Life-rendering	iv. 5 146	Peace-parted..	v. 1 261	Re-speaking....	i. 2 123
Grave-maker...	v. 1 34, 66, 154	Loggats.....	v. 1 100	Periwig-pated	iii. 2 10	Responsive....	v. 2 158
Grave-making.	v. 1 74	Loudly.....	v. 2 411	Permanent....	i. 3 8	Revisit.....	i. 4 53
Graveness.....	iv. 7 82	Machine.....	ii. 2 124	Perusal ¹⁴	ii. 1 90	Re-word ²⁷	iii. 4 143
Groundlings..	iii. 2 12	Malefactions..	ii. 2 621	Petar.....	iii. 4 207	Rhapsody.....	iii. 4 48
Hangers.....	v. 2 156, 164, 167	Mallecho.....	iii. 2 147	Pickers.....	iii. 2 348	Romage.....	i. 1 107
Hatchment....	iv. 5 214	Masterly (adj.)	iv. 7 97	Pigeon-livered	ii. 2 604	Rough-hew....	v. 2 11
*Head-shake...	i. 5 174	Matin.....	i. 5 89	Plurisy.....	iv. 7 118	Round ²⁸	ii. 2 139
Heart-ache....	iii. 1 62	Mermaid-like..	iv. 7 177	Pocky.....	v. 1 181	Russet ²⁹	i. 1 166
*Heaven-kissing	iii. 4 59	Miching.....	ii. 2 147	Poem.....	ii. 2 418
Heaves (sub.)..	iv. 1 1	Mobled.....	ii. 2 525, 526, 527	Polack.....	{ i. 1 63
Heavy-headed.	i. 4 17	Moor ⁷	iii. 4 67		{ ii. 2 63, 75
Hebenon.....	i. 5 62	Mortised.....	iii. 3 20	Pole ¹⁵	{ iv. 4 21
Hectic.....	iv. 3 68	Moult.....	ii. 2 306		{ v. 2 387
Hent (sub.)....	iii. 3 88	Mouse-trap....	iii. 2 247	Pole.....	{ i. 3 101
Hey-day.....	iii. 4 69	Mouth ⁸ (verb)	{ iii. 2 247	Pooh.....	{ v. 1 221
Historical.....	ii. 2 417		{ v. 1 306	Portraiture...	v. 2 78
Honeying (verb)	iii. 4 93			Posset (verb)..	i. 5 68
				Powerfully....	ii. 2 203

1 = to take on lease; = to let on lease, Rich. II. i. 4. 45.

2 = invention; elsewhere used in its ordinary sense.

3 = proceeding; frequently used in its ordinary senses.

4 = courtesy, gentility; elsewhere used in its ordinary senses.

5 = essential qualities; = a medicinal liquor, Wint. iv. 4. 816; Pericles, iii. 2. 35.

6 = stroke of a whip; = thong of a whip, Romeo, i. 4. 63.

7 = a fen.

8 = to speak big.

9 = to take into the mouth.

10 north, north-west in F. 1.

11 = to show.

12 Lucree, 605.

13 = to make pale; used elsewhere = to inclose, encompass.

14 Son. xxxviii. 6.

15 = Polander.

16 = picture; = presentation, Timon, i. 1. 27.

17 = common soldiers; frequently used in other senses.

18 = of or belonging to Provins in France; used of an ecclesiastical province, Measure, v. 1. 318.

19 = flowers of the Orchis; = a purple dress, I. Hen. IV. iii. 3. 37.

20 Son. cxxvi. 12.

21 = excellence.

22 = acknowledgments of debt;

= badge, token, Oth. v. 2. 214.

23 = to give back.

24 = to report.

25 Venus and Adonis, 573.

26 Phoenix and Turtle, 16.

27 Lover's Complaint, 1.

28 = roundly.

29 = red, reddish; = coarse, homespun, Love's Labour, v. 2.

413.

WORDS PECULIAR TO HAMLET.

	Act	Sc	Line		Act	Sc	Line		Act	Sc	Line		Act	Sc	Line
Sable (sub.)....	i	2	242	Sledded... ..	i	1	63	Thaw (vb. intr.)	i	2	130	Unreclaimed ..	ii	1	34
Salary	iii	3	79	Sliver (sub.) ..	iv	7	174	Thereabout... ..	ii	2	468	Unrighteous ..	i	2	154
Sanctuarize....	iv	7	128	Solidity	iii	4	49	Thought-sick.	iii	4	51	Unripe ¹⁴	iii	2	200
Sandal shoon...	iv	5	26	*Something-settled	iii	1	181	Total (adj.)... ..	i	2	479	Unshaped ..	iv	5	8
Sanity.....	ii	2	214	Southerly	ii	2	897	Town-crier ...	iii	2	4	Unshaped ..	i	3	102
Satirical.....	ii	2	199	Spendthrift ⁵ (adj.)	iv	7	123	Tristful ¹⁰	iii	4	50	Unsinewed ..	iv	7	10
Satyr.	i	2	140	Splenitive.....	v	1	234	Tropically... ..	iii	2	247	Unsmirched ..	iv	5	119
Saviour	i	1	159	Spokes	iii	3	19	True-penny. ...	i	5	150	Unused ¹⁵ ..	iv	4	39
Scent (verb)...	i	5	58	Squeezing	iv	2	22	Truster ¹¹	i	2	172	Unvalued ¹⁶ ...	i	3	19
Schoolfellows ..	iii	4	202	Stalk ⁶ (sub.) ..	i	1	66	Tyrannically ..	ii	2	356	Unwatched...	iii	1	196
Scoince (verb)...	iii	4	4	Stately (adv.) ..	i	2	202	Umbrage.....	v	2	125	Unweeded ..	i	2	135
Screened (verb)	iii	4	3	Statutes ⁷	v	1	114	Uneaneled.....	i	5	77	Unwrung. ...	iii	2	253
Scrimers	iv	7	101	Stiffly.	i	5	95	Uncharge (verb)	iv	7	68	Up-spring. ..	i	4	9
Sea-gown	v	2	13	Stithy (sub.) ..	iii	2	89	*Uncle-father..	ii	2	394	Valanced	ii	2	442
*Seeming-virtuous	i	5	46	Strewments ...	v	1	256	Uncion {	iii	4	145	Validity ¹⁷ ..	iii	2	199
Seized (of) ¹	i	1	89	Sullies (sub.) ..	ii	1	39	Unction {	iv	7	142	Ventages.....	iii	2	373
Select (adj.)... ..	i	3	74	Sultry.....	v	2	101, 103	Uneffectual...	i	5	90	Waves ¹⁸ (verb)	i	4	61, 68, 78
Sere (sub.)	ii	2	338	Supervise (sub)	v	2	23	Unfellowed ...	v	2	150	Weedy	iv	7	175
Service ²	iv	3	255	Supplience....	i	3	9	Unfortified ...	i	2	96	Well-took. ...	ii	2	83
Shards ³	v	1	254	Supposal	i	2	18	Ungored	v	2	261	Wheaten.....	v	2	41
Sharked (verb)	i	1	98	Suspension....	i	2	79	Unhand.....	i	4	84	Whiff.....	ii	2	495
Shatter.....	ii	1	95	*Swaddling-clouts	ii	2	401	Unhouselled... ..	i	5	77	Wick.....	iv	7	116
Sheep-skins ...	v	1	123	Sweaty ⁸	i	1	77	Unimproved... ..	i	1	96	Windlasses... ..	ii	1	65
Shipwright.....	i	1	75	Switzers	iv	5	97	Union ¹²	v	2	383	Wonder-wounded	v	1	230
Shovel (sub.) ..	v	1	111	Swoopstake ...	iv	5	142	Unknowing....	v	2	390	Woundless... ..	iv	1	44
Shrill-sounding	i	1	151	'S wounds {	ii	2	603	Unlimited.....	ii	2	418
Sicklied o'er...	iii	1	85	'S wounds {	v	1	297	Unmask ¹³ (vr tr.)	i	3	37
Silvered ⁴	i	2	242	Tanned ⁹ (verb).	v	1	186	Unmastered .	i	3	32
Sith (adv.)	ii	2	12	Tatters.....	iii	2	11	Unmixed ...	i	5	104
Sized.....	iii	2	180	Tenable.	i	2	248	Unnerved. ...	ii	2	496
Skyish	v	1	276	Tenures.	v	1	109	Unpack	ii	2	614
				Tether.	i	3	125	Unpeg	iii	4	198

1 = possessed (of).
2 = course of dishes at table;
often used in other senses.
3 = fragments of pottery; = wing-cases of beetles, Ant. and Cleop. iii. 2. 20.
4 = tinged with gray; Son. xii. 4

5 Used as a sub. in Temp. ii. 1. 24.
6 = stately walk; = stem of a plant, in other places
7 = bonds, mortgages; used figuratively, Son. xxxiv. 9.
8 = toilsome.
9 Used figuratively, Son. lxix.
10; cxv. 7.

10 Also in I. Hen. IV. ii. 4. 334.
11 = believer.
12 = a pearl.
13 Lucrece, 940, 1602.

14 Venus and Adonis, 128, 524;
Pass. Pilgrim, 51.
15 = not employed, Son. iv. 13;
ix. 13; xlviii. 3; = not accustomed,
Oth. v. 2. 349; Son. xxx. 5
16 = not valued; = invaluable,
Rich. III. i. 4. 27.
17 = strength, efficacy; = value,
in other passages.
18 = beckons; frequently used in other senses.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

VINCENTIO, Duke of Vienna.

ANGELO, the deputy in the Duke's absence.

ESCALUS, an ancient lord, joined with Angelo in the government.

CLAUDIO, a young gentleman.

LUCIO, a fantastic.

Two other Gentlemen.

Provost.

THOMAS, } friars.
PETER, }

A Justice.

VARRIUS.

ELBOW, a simple constable.

FROTH, a foolish gentleman.

POMPEY, servant to Mistress Overdone.

ABHORSON, an executioner.

BARNARDINE, a dissolute prisoner.

ISABELLA, sister to Claudio.

MARIANA, betrothed to Angelo.

JULIET, beloved of Claudio.

FRANCISCA, a nun.

MISTRESS OVERDONE, a bawd.

Lords, Officers, Citizens, Boy, and Attendants.

SCENE—VIENNA.

HISTORIC PERIOD: The historic period is indefinite.

TIME OF ACTION.

The time of action consists of four days. Mr. Daniel thus divides them:—

Day 1: Act I. Scene 1 may be taken as a kind of prelude, after which some little interval must be supposed in order to permit the new governors of the city to settle to their work. The rest of the play is comprised in three consecutive days.

Day 2: Commences with Act I. Scene 2 and ends with Act IV. Scene 2.

Day 3: Commences in Act IV. Scene 2 and ends with Act IV. Scene 4.

Day 4: Includes Act IV. Scenes 5 and 6, and the whole of Act V., which is in one scene only.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

Measure for Measure was first printed in the Folio of 1623. No external evidence as to its date has been found, and the internal evidence is both slight and doubtful. Tyrwhitt considered that two passages in the early part of the play contain an allusion to the demeanour of James I. on his entry into England at the time of his accession in 1603. In i. 1. 68-73 the Duke says:

I'll privily away. I love the people,
But do not love to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause and Aves vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it.

Again, in ii. 4. 24-30 it is observed by Angelo:

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love
Must needs appear offence.

"I cannot help thinking," says Tyrwhitt, "that Shakspeare, in these two passages, intended to flatter the unkingly weakness of James the First, which made him so impatient of the crowds that flocked to see him, especially upon his first coming, that, as some historians say, he restrained them by a proclamation." The Old-Spelling editors quote in their notes the following corroborative passage: "But our King coming through the North (Banqueting, and Feasting by the way) the applause of the people in so obsequious, and submissive a manner (still admiring Change) was checkt by an honest plain Scotsman (unused to such humble acclama-tions) with a Prophetical expression; This people will spoyl a gud King. The King as unused, so tired with multitudes, especially in his Hunting (which he did as he went) caused an inhibition to be published, to restrain the people from Hunting Him. Happily being fearfull of so great a Concourse, as this Novelty produced, the old Hatred betwixt the Borderers not forgotten, might make him apprehend it to be of a greater extent: though it was generally imputed to a desire of enjoying his Recreation without interruption" (Arthur Wilson's History of Great Britain, 1653, p. 3). Other passages which have been conjectured to contain historical allusions are i. 2. 5: "Heaven grant us its peace;" and i. 2. 83: "What with the war, what with the sweat;" the last clause having perhaps some reference to the "sweating sickness" or plague, which in 1603 carried off more than 30,000 people in London; and the allusions to "peace" and "war" having perhaps some reference to the war with Spain, which came to an end in the autumn of 1604. All this is vague enough, but it may be said to lend a little colour to the theory which places the date of the play in 1603 or early in 1604. At all events, there can be no reasonable doubt that Measure for Measure belongs to a late, but not the latest, period of Shakspeare's work—to the period with which all its characteristics link it, the period of Hamlet, of Othello, of Troilus and Cressida.

The direct sources of the plot are Whetstone's "endless comedy," The Right Excellent and Famous Historye of Promos and Cassandra, 1578, and the prose version of the same story by the same writer in The Hep-tameron of Civil Discourses, 1582. Whetstone himself derived his story from the Hecatomithi of Giraldu Cinthio (Parte Seconda, Deca ottava, novella v.).¹ The outline of Whetstone's comedy may be given in the "Argument of the Whole History" prefixed by the author or his publisher. "In the cyttie of Julio (sometimes vnder the dominion of Corunius, Kinge of Hungarie and Boemia) there was a law, that what man so euer committed adultery should lose his head, and the woman offender should weare some disguised apparel during her life, to make her infamously noted. This seuer lawe, by the fauour of some mercifull magistrate, became little regarded vntill the time of Lord Promos auctoritie; who convicting a yong gentleman named Andrugio of incontinency, condemned both him and his minion to the execution of this statute. Andrugio had a very vertuous and beawtiful gentlewoman to his sister, named Cassandra: Cassandra to enlarge her brothers life, submitted an humble petition to the Lord Promos: Promos regarding her good behauiours, and fantasying her great beawtie, was much delighted with the sweete order of her talke; and doying good, that euill might come thereof, for a time he repryud her brother; but, wicked man, tounring his liking vnto vnlawfull lust, he set downe the spoile of her honour raunsome for her brothers life. Chaste Cassandra, abhorring both him and his sute, by no perswasion would yeald to this raunsome: but in fine, wonne with the importunitie of hir brother (pleading for life) vpon these conditions she agreeede to Promos; first that he should pardon her brother, and after marry her. Promos, as feareles in promise as carelesse in performance, with sollemne vowe sygnd her conditions: but worse then any infydel, his will satisfyed, he performed neither the one nor the other; for, to keepe his authoritie vnsported with fauour, and to preuent Cassandraes clamors, he commaunded the gayler secretly to present Cassandra with her brothers head. The gayler, with² the outcries of Andrugio, abhorryng Promos lewdenes, by the providence of God provided thus for his safety. He presented Cassandra with a felon's head newlie executed, who (being mangled, knew it not from her brother's, by the gayler who was set at libertie) was so agreeued at this trecherye, that, at the pointe to kyl her selfe, she spared that stroke to be auenged of Promos: and deuising a way, she concluded to make her fortunes knowne vnto the kinge. She (executing this resolution) was so highly fauoured of the king, that forthwith he hasted to do justice on Promos: whose iudgement was, to marrye Cassandra, to repaire her crased³ honour; which donne, for his hainous offence he should lose his head. This maryage solemnised, Cassandra, tyed in the greatest bondes of affection to her husband, became an earnest suter for his life: the kinge (tendrings the generall benefit of the common weale before her special ease, although he fauoured her much,) would not graunt her sute. Andrugio (disguised amonge the company) sorrowing the grieffe of his sister, bewrayde his safetie, and craued pardon. The kinge, to renoune the vertues of Cassandra, pardoned both him and Promos." It will be seen from this summary of the main part of the action that Shakespeare is indebted to Whetstone for the general framework of his plot; it will be seen equally that he has transformed the revolting incoherencies of the original story into a closely-knit, credible, and artistic whole. Shakespeare's debt to the comedy of his predecessor, beyond the mere framework—the ground-plan of his building—may be set down at practically nothing. Promos and Cassandra is a crude and shapeless cento of ill-digested material; a mere succession of heavy scenes set forth in jolting doggerel; bearing by no means so much relation to the play of Shakespeare as the quarries at Carrara bear to the marbles of Michelangelo. A quarry, a storehouse, we may call it: that at the very outside; but certainly nothing with any pretence to art or vitality, nothing with any right to exist on its proper merits. No hints towards the characterization of any of the dramatis personæ common to Shakespeare and to Whetstone could be found in the lifeless pages of the earlier play-

¹ Hecatommithi ouero Cento Novelle di M. Giouanbattista Giraldi Cinthio. In Venezia, Appresso Enea de Alaris, MDLXXIII. Pp. 130-135.

² Probably there is some misprint or omission here.

³ Crased, i.e. broken, damaged. See Mids. Night's Dream, note 17.

INTRODUCTION.

wright. Wherever for a moment there is the smallest similarity in thought or word—and this is very seldom indeed, considering the strong similarity of the incidents—such likeness is nothing more or less than inevitable, and exists simply in the most obvious truisms, so to speak, of natural action. In Cinthio's version of the story there are one or two natural touches, good enough, if he had seen them, to have suggested a thought to Shakespeare. Epitia, for instance, the Isabella of Measure for Measure, is spoken of as one to whom Philosophy had taught how the human soul should meet every hap ("cui la Filosofia haueua insegnato qual debbia essere l'animo humano in ogni fortuna"). Could anything truer be said of Isabella? Altogether Cinthio is very much more graphic and effective than Whetstone, either in the prose or poetry of his English imitator. Hazlitt, in his Shakespeare's Library, quotes two similar stories, told briefly and barely by Goulart, in his Admirable and Memorable Histories, 1607. Other such stories are known, some of them on historical evidence, such as the story of the governor of Flushing, in the old French chronicles. Perhaps, as has been suggested, the very story as we find it in Cinthio was based on an actual occurrence in the dark ages of the Italian despots.

STAGE HISTORY.

Of the performance of Measure for Measure we have no record before the Restoration; and when theatres were again licensed, the only form in which this play appeared on the stage was in the sadly-transformed shape of Davenant's jumble of this play and Much Ado, called The Law against Lovers, which has already been alluded to in the Introduction to Much Ado (vol. vii. p. 8). What amazing devil, as the late Charles Dickens would have said, possessed Sir William Davenant to spoil two plays, so different in their nature but each so good of its kind, by jumbling them together, it is difficult to conceive. It is possible, if the tradition that Davenant was Shakespeare's son be true, that he owed his father a grudge for begetting so extremely ill-looking an offspring. If so, it must be owned that, in this deformation of two of his father's great works, he had his revenge; for he has succeeded to a marvel in destroying all the comedy of Benedick and Beatrice, while at the same time he enfeebled the serious and almost tragical interest of Measure for Measure. It may be as well to give a list of the Dramatis Personæ of Davenant's play:

THE DUKE OF SAVOY.
 LORD ANGELO, his deputy.
 BENEDICK, brother to Angelo.
 LUCIO, } his friends.
 BALTHAZAR, }
 ESCHALUS, a counsellor.
 CLAUDIO, in love with Julietta.
 PROVOST.
 FRIAR THOMAS.
 BERNARDINE, a prisoner.
 JAILOR.
 FOOL.
 HANGMAN.
 BEATRICE, a great heiress.
 ISABELLA, sister to Claudio.
 JULIETTA, mistress to Claudio.
 VIOLA, sister to Beatrice, very young.
 FRANCISCA, a nun.

Scene: TURIN.

The first act follows the story of Measure for Measure pretty closely as far as the incidents go. The effect of the introduction of Benedick and Beatrice is that they are both entirely deprived of the wit and vivacity which characterized them in Shakespeare's Much Ado, while nearly all the beautiful poetry of Measure for Measure is ruthlessly deformed into the dreariest prose-verse.

For a specimen of Davenant's work we may take the following lines from the Duke's speech to Angelo in act i. scene 1:

That victory gives me now free leisure to Pursue my old design of travelling;
 Whilst, hiding what I am, in fit disguise,
 I may compare the customs, prudent laws,
 And managements of foreign states with ours.

The victory alluded to is that which Benedick has just won. The scraps of Shakespeare that are dragged in, whether from Much Ado or Measure for Measure, but especially from the former, seem sadly out of place. Here is a specimen of Davenant's originality. After a scene between Benedick and Beatrice, Viola,

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

who is the young sister of Beatrice, says to Benedick:

Y' are welcome home, my lord. Have you brought Any pendants and fine fans from the wars?

Ben. What, my sweet bud, you are grown to a blossom!

Vio. My sister has promised me that I shall be A woman, and that you shall make love to me, When you are old enough to have a wife.

Ben. This is not a chip of the old block, but will prove

A smart twig of the young branch.

This wretched stuff is printed as verse, though it is difficult to believe it was ever intended to be anything but prose. In the second act it is Benedick that pleads for the life of Claudio. Again the scenes between Benedick and Beatrice, that are dragged in, serve merely to encumber the action without lightening the play. Davenant preserves the scene between Isabella and Angelo, carefully injuring if not utterly destroying, wherever he can, the poetry of Shakespeare's language. The second act concludes with a mutilated version of Angelo's soliloquy in act ii. scene 4 of Shakespeare's play, the last four lines of which are thus improved by Davenant:

The numerous subjects to a well-wisht King
Quit their own home, and in rude fondness to
His presence crowd, where their unwelcome love
Does an offence, and an oppression prove.

The third act goes straight on with the same scene (from Shakespeare), beginning with the entrance of Isabella. This is followed by a long scene between Benedick and Beatrice, in which Beatrice urges Benedick to steal his brother's signet, and so seal the pardon of Juliet and Claudio. Then Viola comes in and sings a song, apropos des bottles; after which Lucio and Balthazar persuade Beatrice that Benedick is in love with her. The extraordinary dulness of this scene, compared with the one it is founded on in Much Ado, is decidedly original. Then we go back to Measure for Measure, and have a scene between Claudio and Isabella in prison; next to which comes an original scene, in which Benedick brings Beatrice the signed pardon for Juliet and Claudio, which he has obtained through Escalus. The act ends with a short scene in the prison between Viola and Juliet, her cousin. In this scene, short as it is, Davenant's genius will burst out, as witness the following description by the innocent little Viola when speaking of the Jailor:

The fellow looks like a man boil'd
In pump-water. Is he married?

The beginning of the next act is apparently original. It appears that the Friar, i.e. the disguised Duke, is thwarting Benedick's scheme for the release of Juliet and Claudio, so he and Beatrice relieve their feelings by calling in Viola, who dances; the stage-direction being Enter Viola dancing a saraband, awhile with castanietos. This is the scene which so much pleased the sapient and tasteful Pepys, who says, under date February 18th, 1661-2: "Saw 'The Law against Lovers,' a good play, and well performed, especially the little girl's (whom I never saw act before) dancing and singing; and were it not for her the losse of Roxalana would spoil the house." Then we have a scrap of Pompey in the shape of the Fool, and another scrap from Shakespeare in the shape of a scene between the Duke and Lucio; and then a scene between Juliet and Isabella in prison, quite original, in which the author bursts into poetry and, shaking off the trammels of blank verse, indulges in rhymed couplets. Juliet thinks that Isabella might make the sacrifice asked by Angelo for Claudio's sake, to which Isabella pointedly answers that she had better make it herself:

The good or ill redemption of his life
Doth less concern his sister than his wife.

Then we have more original elephantine playfulness between Benedick and Beatrice. Then, after a brief return to Shakespeare in a scene between the Duke, Provost, and Barnardine, we have an original scene in which Claudio gives the Fool a thousand pieces of gold as a bribe to help Juliet to escape in a page's dress. He declines to attempt to escape himself. Juliet, not to be outdone in generosity, sends her Maid with a proposal to Claudio to escape by a window in her room with the connivance of the Provost's wife, but she is not to escape herself. All this is, I suppose, to make the character of Claudio more sympathetic. Then we have a sort of parody in rhymed verse of the great scene between Angelo and Isabella, in which we find such gems of poetry as the following speech of Isabella:

INTRODUCTION.

Catch fools in nets without a covert laid;
Can I, who see the treason, be betray'd?

The effect of this exquisite couplet upon Angelo is to make him completely change his tone, and to become suddenly virtuous, declaring that all that had happened before was only his fun. He never meant that Claudio should die; he never meant to make naughty proposals to Isabella. All that he meant was to propose honourable marriage. But Isabella is not to be taken in with these beautiful sentiments; she remarks:

If it be true, you shall not be believ'd,
Lest you should think me apt to be deceiv'd.

Then she goes out, leaving poor Angelo in a very forlorn condition, who comes to the conclusion

Because she doubts my virtue I must die;
Who did with vicious arts her virtue try.

In the fifth act we have more singing, in which Beatrice, Benedick, and Viola all take part, supported by the Chorus; this musical entertainment being, as it appears, for the benefit of Angelo, in order to rouse him from his supposed anchoritic existence. Then we begin to get serious again, and three servants come in, one after another, exhorting Angelo to "Arm, arm, my lord!" for his brother is in open revolt and is besieging the prison where Claudio and Juliet are confined. Now we have a great deal of excitement and something like a pantomime rally by all the characters; and the play ultimately ends with the marriage of Angelo and Isabella! They are kept in countenance by two other pairs of betrothed lovers, Benedick and Beatrice, and Claudio and Juliet. Lucio, who gets very waggish towards the end, is inclined to marry the Fool's grandmother, but, finding she is dead, decides on remaining a bachelor.

I have given a full account of Davenant's play, because few persons are likely to take the trouble to read it for themselves, and, unless one does so, one might be deceived by the praises lavished on this contemptible work by contemporary and other critics.

In 1700 at Lincoln's Inn Fields the version of this play by Charles Gildon, called Measure for Measure or Beauty the best Advocate was produced with the following cast: Angelo = Betterton, Claudio = Verbruggen, Duke = Arnold, Escalus = Berry, Isabella = Mrs. Bracegirdle, Juliet = Mrs. Bowman. As in Davenant's version, the scene was laid at Turin, and Balthazar figures among the Dramatis Personæ. All the comic characters, including Lucio, are ruthlessly cut out. The title-page announces that the play was "Written originally by Mr. Shakespear; and now very much altered; With additions of several Entertainments of Musick." There were no less than four of these Entertainments, with one of which the play concluded. Charles Gildon wrote several plays, but none of them were successful. Genest quotes two lines from the second act, where Angelo tells Isabella to meet him at the opera:

Consider on it, and at ten this evening
If you'll comply, you'll meet me at the Opera.

This wretched production does not appear ever to have been revived, though the next mention of the play, under date December 8th, 1720, at Lincoln's Inn Fields, is "not acted 20 years, Measure for Measure by Shakespeare," the following members of the cast being given: Duke = Quin, Angelo = Boheme, Claudio = Ryan, Isabella = Mrs. Seymour. On this occasion it was acted eight times, and revived again on October 10th, 1721, when Genest gives C. Bullock as the representative of Lucio, which proves that it cannot have been Gildon's version, as in that Lucio is omitted altogether. We may take it, therefore, that the performance in December, 1720, was the first revival of Shakespeare's play after the Restoration.

Quin was decidedly fond of the part of the Duke, which he played excellently, and he seems to have caused the piece to be revived, pretty nearly every season, at whatever theatre he happened to be; though it never was played more than once or twice during any one season. On March 10th, 1737, Quin took his benefit as the Duke at Drury Lane, when Mrs. Cibber was Isabella, a part to which she seems to have been very partial. That wretched creature her husband, Theophilus Cibber, played Lucio at least on one occasion, January 26th, 1738, when, for the first time, Elbow is mentioned in the cast, his representative being Harper. Mrs. Cibber took her benefit as Isabella on April 12th of the same year. On January 4th, 1744, Mrs. Pritchard made her first appearance as Isabella at Covent Garden. She ultimately succeeded Mrs. Cibber in this rôle. At Covent Garden, April 11th, 1746, Measure for Measure was represented for the benefit of Havard and Berry, "not acted 6 years," when Mrs. Woffington played Isabella for the first time; and she repeated the part on more than one occasion, though it could not have been a very suitable one to her. Quin seems to have played the Duke for the last time on December 4th, 1750, when no particulars of the cast are given. It was at this theatre, Covent Garden, that he made his last appearance in 1753; the great success of Barry during the last two seasons had perhaps reminded Quin that it was time for him to retire. On February 22nd, 1755, Measure for Measure was played at Drury Lane, with Yates as Pompey, and Mrs. Cibber as Isabella, Woodward as Lucio, the Duke being Mossop. It was played once or twice during the three following seasons; but Garrick never took any part in it himself. It was about this time that a singularly tragical occurrence took place in connection with this play. Joseph Peterson, an actor of considerable ability and great versatility, who had been long attached to the Norwich company, was playing the part of the Duke in this play, one of his best parts, some time in October, 1758; when, in the scene with Claudio, played on that occasion by Moody, in the third act, just as he was speaking the lines iii. 1. 6-8:

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Reason thus with life:

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing

That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art.

he dropped dead into Moody's arms. Peterson made his first début at Goodman's Fields as Lord Foppington, and played Buckingham to Garrick's Richard on his first appearance as Richard III. He was interred at Bury St. Edmund's, with the lines he last spoke on the stage inscribed on his tomb. The next notable performance of Measure for Measure was on February 12th, 1770, for Woodward's benefit at Covent Garden. It was announced as "Not acted 20 years." Bensley was the Duke, Clarke Angelo, Wroughton Claudio, and the beneficiaire himself Lucio; Quick played Elbow; Mrs. Bellamy took the part of Isabella, apparently for the first time, and Mrs. Bulkeley was Mariana. The piece was repeated again on the 21st of the same month. At the same theatre in the next season on January 12th, 1771, Yates played Lucio to the Isabella of his wife. During this season it was played three times, and twice in the succeeding one. On March 18th, 1775, this play was revived at Drury Lane, "Not acted 16 years." King was Lucio, Palmer Angelo, Parsons Pompey. It was represented on the 20th April following for Palmer's benefit. It was again acted on January 8th, 1777, "Not acted 5 years," when Lee and Mrs. Jackson appeared for the first time as the Duke and Isabella respectively. Passing over some unimportant performances of the play, we come to October 11th, 1780, when the play was again revived at Covent Garden, with Henderson as the Duke, Lee Lewes Lucio, Clarke Angelo, Wroughton Claudio, Mrs. Yates again playing Isabella, and Mrs. Inchbald appearing in the small part of Mariana. At Bath, in the season 1779-1780, we find the first record of the performance of Mrs. Siddons as Isabella. She played the part six times during that season, and on November 3rd, 1783, she appeared at Drury Lane for the first time in this character. During this season she acted the part five times; in fact it was the only Shakespearian one she attempted in London. In speaking of Mrs. Siddons' impersonations it must not be forgotten that there was another Isabella, a very favourite part of hers. This was the heroine of South-erne's Isabella or the Fatal Marriage, altered by Garrick; but though many of her contemporaries seem to have considered this Isabella to be one of her most powerful impersonations, there is no doubt that the great actress was especially fine as the heroine of Measure for Measure, notably in the great scenes with Angelo, and in the prison scene with Claudio. The part is one which essentially requires an actress to assume moral dignity, if she has it not. The pretty pathos which serves well enough for Ophelia and Desdemona is of no avail here: indeed there is no part in any of Shakespeare's plays which requires greater elevation both of thought and of style than that of Isabella.

INTRODUCTION.

On December 30th, 1794, John Kemble appeared, at Drury Lane, for the first time as the Duke, with a strong cast which included Bannister, jun., as Lucio, Palmer as Angelo, Dicky Suett as Pompey, Parsons as Elbow; Mrs. Siddons, of course, was the Isabella; indeed no one seems to have attempted to rival her in this part for many years. The piece was acted eight times on this occasion. We pass over several performances at Drury Lane during the next eight years, till we come to November 21st, 1803, when the play was revived at Covent Garden, "not acted 20 years." Kemble and Mrs. Siddons again took their old parts, and Cooke appeared for the first time as Angelo; the Claudio was Charles Kemble, and the two comic parts of Elbow and Pompey were played by Blanchard and Emery respectively. The next memorable performance of this play was on October 30th, 1811, the beginning of Mrs. Siddons' last season at Covent Garden. The cast was much the same as on the last-mentioned occasion, except that Barrymore was the Angelo, and, according to Genest, was the only one whose part was not well acted. In this revival Liston was the Pompey, and Emery took the small part of Barnardine. George Daniel says, in his preface to the acting edition of Cumberland's British Theatre: "The few words put into the mouth of this dissolute prisoner were given with astonishing power by Emery, who, in reality, looked the wretch described by the poet, 'Unfit to live or die.'" The piece was played several times during this season; Mrs. Siddons making her last appearance in the part on June 26th, 1812. It is said that she was then so enfeebled by age that, when she knelt to the Duke, she was unable to rise without assistance. With Mrs. Siddons the popularity of Measure for Measure as an acting play seems to have died, at least for a time. No actress since has succeeded in making her mark in the character of Isabella. On February 8th, 1816, Miss O'Neill made her first appearance in the part at Covent Garden, on which occasion Yates played the Duke. The next revival of any importance was that under Elliston's management, May 1st, 1824, at Drury Lane, when it was only played twice. Liston, singular to say, was cast for Lucio, and was a dire failure. Phelps produced Measure for Measure in his third season at Sadler's Wells on November 4th, 1846; Miss Addison's Isabella was said to have been a fine performance, but the play was not often repeated; Phelps played the Duke, though he is said to have preferred the part of Angelo. In recent times the only memorable revival of this play was that at the Haymarket, when the late Miss Adelaide Neilson, whose premature death was so much regretted, played Isabella on Saturday, April 1st, 1876. The best features in the cast on this occasion were the Duke of Mr. Howe and the Lucio of Mr. Conway, the best performance in the Shakespearian drama that the latter ever gave. Charles Warner was an earnest Claudio, and Mr. Buckstone himself raised many a laugh as Pompey. Miss Neilson's Isabella was a pretty and graceful performance, and considered by many critics to be her best Shakespearian impersonation; but she scarcely fulfilled the highest requirements of the part. The play had not been represented for 25 years in London.

It was revived at the Haymarket again two years later, when Miss Neilson was supported by the graceful and poetic actor, Mr. Kyrle Bellew, as Claudio. The only actress of ability who has since played the part of Isabella in London is Miss Wallis, who, after having produced Measure for Measure in the provinces in 1883, revived the play at the Kennington Theatre, March 27th, 1899. Great interest was felt in the assumption of the rôle of Isabella by Madame Modjeska, at the Garrick, New York, Oct. 7th, 1895.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

Measure for Measure is neither the last of the comedies nor the first of the tragedies. It is tragedy and comedy together, inextricably interfused, coexistent in a mutual contradiction; such a tangled web, past hope of unraveling, as our life is, looked at by the actors in it, on the level of its action; with certain suggestions, open or concealed, of the higher view, the aspect of things from a point of tolerant wisdom. The hidden activity of the duke, working for ends of beneficent justice, in the midst of the ferment and corruption of the seething city; this figure of personified Providence, watchfully cognizant of act and motive, has been conceived by Shakespeare—not yet come to his darkest mood, in which man is a mere straw in the wind of Destiny—to give the sense of security indwelling in even such a maze as this. It is not from Isabella that we get any such sense. Her very courage and purity and intellectual light do but serve to deepen the darkness, when we conceive of her as but one sacrifice the more. Just as Cordelia intensifies the pity and terror of King Lear, so would Isabella's helpless virtues add the keenest ingredient to the cup of bitterness—but for the duke. He is a foretaste of Prospero, a Prospero working greater miracles without magic; and he guides us through the labyrinths of the play by a clue of which he has the secret.

That Measure for Measure is a "painful" play (as Coleridge called it) cannot be denied. There is something base and sordid about the villany of its actors; a villany which has nothing of the heroism of sin. In Angelo we have the sharpest lesson that Shakespeare ever read self-righteousness. In Claudio we see a "gilded youth" with the gilding rubbed off; and there is not under heaven a more pitiful sight. From Claudio's refined wantonness we sink deeper and deeper, through Lucio, who is a Claudio by trade, and without even the pretence of gilding, to the very lowest depth of a city's foulness and brutality. The "humours" of bawd and hangman and the customers of both are painted with as angry a hand as Hogarth's; bitten in with the etcher's acid, as if into the very flesh. Even Elbow, "a simple constable," a Dogberry of the lower dregs, struts and maunders before us with a desperate imbecility, in place of the engaging silliness, where silliness seemed a hearty comic virtue, of the "simple constable" of the earlier play. In the astonishing portrait of Barnardine we come to the simply animal man; a portrait which in its savage realism, brutal truth to nature, cynical insight into the workings of the contented beast in man, seems to anticipate some of the achievements of the modern realistic novel. In the midst of this crowd of evil-doers walks the duke, hooded body and soul in his friar's habit; Escalus, a solitary figure of broad and sturdy uprightness; Isabella, "a thing enskied and sainted," the largest-hearted and clearest-eyed heroine of Shakespeare; and apart, veiled from good and evil in a perpetual solitariness of sorrow, Mariana, at the moated grange.

In the construction of this play Shakespeare seems to have put forth but a part of his strength, throwing his full power only into the great scenes, and leaving, with less than his customary care (in strong contrast to what we note in Twelfth Night), frayed ends and edges of action and of characterization. The conclusion, particularly, seems hurried, and the disposal of Angelo inadequate. I cannot but think that Shakespeare felt the difficulty, nay, impossibility of reconciling the end which his story and the dramatic conventionalities required with the character of Angelo as shown in the course of the play, and that he slurred over the matter as best he could. With space before him he might have convinced us—for what could not Shakespeare do?—of the sincerity of Angelo's repentance and the rightfulness of his remission; but as it is, crowded as all this conviction and penitence and forgiveness necessarily is into a few minutes of supplementary action, one can hardly think that Coleridge expressed the natural feeling too forcibly when he said that "the strong indignant claim of justice" is baffled by the pardon and marriage of Angelo. Of the scenes in which Angelo appears as the prominent actor—the incomparable second and fourth scenes of the second act, the first the temptation of Angelo, the second Angelo's temptation of Isabella—nothing can be said but that Shakespeare may have equalled, but scarcely can have exceeded them in intensity and depth of natural truth. These, with that other scene between Claudio and Isabella, make the play.

INTRODUCTION.

It is part of the irony of things that the worst complication, the deepest tragedy, in all this tortuous action comes about by the innocent means of the stainless Isabella; who also, by her steadfast heroism, brings light and right at last. But for Isabella, Claudio would simply have died, perhaps meeting his fate, when it came, with a desperate flash of his father's courage; Angelo might have lived securely to his last hour, unconscious of his own weakness—of the fire that lurked in so impenetrable a flint. Shakespeare has sometimes been praised for the subtlety with which he has barbed the hook for Angelo, in making Isabella's very chastity and goodness the keenest of temptations. The notion is not peculiar to Shakespeare, but was hinted at, in his scrambling and uncertain way, by the writer of the old play. In truth, I do not see what other course was open to either, given the facts which were not original in Shakespeare or in Whetstone. Angelo, let us remember, is not a hypocrite: he has no dishonourable intention in his mind; he conceives himself to be firmly grounded on a broad basis of rectitude, and in condemning Claudio he condemns a sin which he sincerely abhors. His treatment of the betrothed Mariana would probably be in his own eyes an act of frigid justice; it certainly shows a man not sensually-minded, but cold, calculating, likely to err, if he errs at all, rather on the side of the miserly virtues than of the generous sins. It is thus the nobility of Isabella that attracts him: her freedom from the tenderest signs of frailty, her unbiassed intellect, her regard for justice, her religious sanctity; and it is on his noblest side first, the side of him that can respond to these qualities, that he is tempted. I know of nothing more consummate than the way in which his mind is led on, step by step towards the trap still hidden from him, the trap prepared by the merciless foresight of the chance that tries the professions and the thoughts of men. Once tainted, the corruption is over him like leprosy, and every virtue withers into the corresponding form of vice. In Claudio it is the same touchstone—Isabella's unconscious and misdirected Ithuriel-spear—that brings out the basest forms and revelations of evil. A great living painter has chosen the moment of most pregnant import in the whole play—the moment when Claudio, having heard the terms on which alone life can be purchased, murmurs, "Death is a fearful thing;" and Isabella, not yet certain, yet already with the grievous fear astir in her, of her brother's weakness, replies, "And shamed life a hateful"—it is this moment that Holman Hunt brings before us in a canvas that, like his scene from the Two Gentlemen of Verona, throws more revealing light on Shakespeare than a world of commentators. Against the stained and discoloured wall of his dungeon, apple-blossoms and blue sky showing through the grated window behind his delicate dishevelled head, Claudio stands; a lute tied with red ribbons hangs beside him, a spray of apple-blossom has fallen on the dark garments at his feet, one hand plays with his fetters—with how significant a gesture!—the other hand pinches, idly affectionate, the two intense hands that Isabella has laid upon his breast; he is thinking—where to debate means shame,—balancing the arguments; and with pondering eyes, thrusting his tongue towards the corner of his just-parted lips with a movement of exquisite naturalness, he halts in indecision: all his mean thoughts are there, in that gesture, in those eyes; and in the warm and gracious youth of his whole aspect, passionately superficial and world-loving, there is something of the pathos of things "sweet, not lasting," a fragile, an unreasonable, an inevitable pathos. Isabella fronts him, an embodied conscience, all her soul in her eyes. Her eyes read him, plead with him, they are suppliant and judge; her intense fearfulness, the intolerable doubt of her brother's honour, the anguish of hope and fear, shine in them with a light as of tears frozen at the source. In a moment, with words on his lips whose far-reaching imagination is stung into him and from him by the sharpness of the impending death, he will have stooped below the reach of her contempt, uttering those words, "Sweet sister, let me live!"

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

After all, the final word of Shakespeare in this play is mercy; but it is a mercy which comes of the consciousness of our own need of it, and it is granted and accepted in humiliation. The lesson of mercy taught in the Merchant of Venice is based on the mutual blessing of its exercise, the graciousness of spirit to which it is sign and seal.

It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath; it is twice blest;
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes.

12

Here, the claim which our fellow-man has on our commiseration is the sad claim of common guiltiness before an absolute bar of justice.

How would you be
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are?

And is not the "painfulness" which impresses us in this sombre play, due partly to this very moral, and not alone to the circumstances from which it disengages itself? For it is so mournful to think that we are no better than our neighbours.

Duke For you must know, we have with special soul
Elected him our absence to supply.—(Act 1. 1. 17, 18)

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT I

SCENE I. An apartment in the Duke's palace.

DUKE, ESCALUS, and Attendants, discovered.

Duke. [Seated] Escalus!

Escal. My lord?

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,

Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse;

Since I am put¹ to know that your own science
Exceeds in that, the lists² of all advice

My strength can give you: [then no more remains

But that, to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,

And let them work.] The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms

For common justice, you're as pregnant in³

As art and practice hath enriched any

That we remember. There is our commission,

From which we would not have you warp.

[Escalus kneels and receives his commission.

Call hither,

I say, bid come before us Angelo.

[Exit an Attendant.

What figure of us think you he will bear?

For you must know, we have with special soul

Elected him our absence to supply;

Lent him our terror, dress'd him with our love,

And given his deputation⁴ all the organs

Of our own power: what think you of it?

Escal. If any in Vienna be of worth

To undergo such ample grace and honour,

It is Lord Angelo.

Duke.

Look where he comes.

Enter ANGELO.

Ang. Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke.

Angelo,

There is a kind of character⁵ in thy life,

¹ Put, made.

² Lists, limits.

³ Pregnant in, well acquainted with.

⁴ Deputation, deputyship.

⁵ Character, i.e. writing, the primary sense of the word.

That to the observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. [Taking the other commission.]

Thyself and thy belongings 30
Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, they on thee.
Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 't were all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd

{ But to fine issues; [nor Nature never lends
The smallest scruple of her excellence
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor, 40
Both thanks and use.¹ But I do bend my speech

{ To one that can my part in him advértese;²
Hold, therefore, Angelo:—

[Tenders his commission.]

In our remove be thou at full self;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart: old Escalus,
Though first in question,³ is thy secondary.
Take thy commission.

[Rises and comes down to Angelo.]

Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure 50
Be stamp'd upon it.

Duke. No more evasion:
We have with a heaven'd and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.

[Angelo kneels and receives his commission.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition
That it prefers itself and leaves unquestion'd Matters of needful value. We shall write to
you,

As time and our concernings shall impórtune,
How it goes with us, and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hopeful execution do I leave you 60
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you⁴ something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do

With any scruple: your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand: [Angelo gives his hand to the Duke.
I'll privily away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well 70
Their loud applause and Aves⁵ vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

[Going.]

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

Escal. Lead forth and bring you back in happiness!

Duke. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit.]

Escal. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave

To have free speech with you; and it concerns me

To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature 80

I am not yet instructed.

Ang. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together,

And we may soon our satisfaction have Touching that point.

Escal. I'll wait upon your honour.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A street.

Enter LUCIO and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke with the other dukes come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

First Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's!

Sec. Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Thou concludest like the sanctimoni-ous pirate that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scrap'd one out of the table.

Sec. Gent. "Thou shalt not steal?" 10

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

First Gent. Why, 't was a commandment to

¹ Use, interest.

² Advértese, instruct.

³ Question, consideration.

⁴ Bring you, accompany you.

⁵ Aves, acclamations (Latin ave = hail).

command the captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, do relish the petition well that prays for peace.

Sec. Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for I think thou never wast where grace was said. 20 [Sec. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

First Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion or in any language.

First Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

First Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant; as there may between the lists and the velvet. Thou art the list. 31

First Gent. And thou the velvet: thou art good velvet; thou'rt a three-pil'd piece, I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersey, as be pil'd, as thou art pil'd, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own confession, learn to begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee. 40

First Gent. I think I have done myself wrong, have I not?

Sec. Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchas'd as many diseases under her roof as come to—

Sec. Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge. 49

Sec. Gent. To three thousand dolours¹ a year.

First Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

First Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impiety has made a feast of thee.]

Enter MISTRESS OVERDONE, crying.

First Gent. How now! which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? 59

Mrs. Ov. Well, well; there's one yonder arrested and carried to prison was worth five thousand of you all.

Sec. Gent. Who's that, I pray thee?

Mrs. Ov. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, Signior Claudio.

First Gent. Claudio to prison! 'tis not so.

Mrs. Ov. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested; saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head to be choppy'd off. 70

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Mrs. Ov. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promis'd to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

Sec. Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

First Gent. But, most of all, agreeing with the proclamation. 81

Lucio. Away! let's go learn the truth of it.

[Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.

Mrs. Ov. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows, and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter POMPEY.

How now! what's the news with you?

Pom. Yonder man is carried to prison.

[Mrs. Ov. Well; what has he done?

Pom. A woman.

Mrs. Ov. But what's his offence? 90

Pom. Groping for trouts in a peculiar² river.]

Mrs. Ov. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Pom. No, but there's a woman with maid by him. You have not heard of the proclamation, have you?

Mrs. Ov. What proclamation, man?

¹ Dolours, an obvious pun on dolours and dollars.

² Peculiar, i.e. belonging to an individual.

Pom. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be pluck'd down. 100

[Mrs. Ov. And what shall become of those in the city?

Pom. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgher put in for them.

Mrs. Ov. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be pull'd down?

Pom. To the ground, mistress.]

Mrs. Ov. Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Pom. Come; fear not you: good counsellors lack no clients: though you change your place,

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world? Bear me to prison, where I am committed.—(Act i. 2. 119-121.)

you need not change your trade; I'll be your tapster still. Courage! there will be pity taken on you: you that have worn your eyes almost out in the service, you will be consider'd. [Loud voices heard without.

Mrs. Ov. What's to do here, Thomas tapster? let's withdraw.

Pom. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's Madam Juliet. [Exeunt.

Enter Provost, CLAUDIO, JULIET, and Officers.

Claud. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world? Bear me to prison, where I am committed. 121

Prov. I do it not in evil disposition, But from Lord Angelo by special charge.

Claud. Thus can the demigod Authority Make us pay down for our offence by weight. The words of heaven:—on whom it will, it will; On whom it will not, so; yet still 't is just.

Re-enter LUCIO and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio! whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio, liberty:

As surfeit is the father of much fast, 130
So every scope¹ by the immoderate use

¹ Scope, license.

Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin¹ down their proper² bane,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors: and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom as the morality of imprisonment. What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claud. What but to speak of would offend again. 140

Lucio. What, is 't murder?

Claud. No.

Lucio. Lechery?

Claud. Call it so.

Prov. Away, sir! you must go.

Claud. One word, good friend. Lucio, a word with you. [Takes him aside.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good. Is lechery so look'd after?

Claud. Thus stands it with me:—upon a true contrâct

I got possession of Julietta's bed: 150

You know the lady; she is fast my wife,

Save that we do the denunciation³ lack

Of outward order: this we came not to,

Only for propagation⁴ of a dower

Remaining in the coffer of her friends;

From whom we thought it meet to hide our love

Till time had made them for us. But it chances

The stealth of our most mutual entertainment

With character too gross is writ on Juliet.

Lucio. With child, perhaps?

Claud. Unhappily, even so.

And the new deputy now for the duke—

[Whether it be the fault and glimpse of new-ness, 162

Or whether that the body public be

A horse whereon the governor doth ride,

Who, newly in the seat, that it may know

He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;

Whether the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his eminence that fills it up,

I stagger in:—but this new governor]

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties 170

Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall

So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,

And none of them been worn; and, for a name, Now puts the drowsy and neglected act Freshly on me:—'t is surely for a name.

Lucio. I warrant it is: and thy head stands so tickle⁵ on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off. Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claud. I have done so, but he's not to be found. 180

I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service:

This day my sister should the cloister enter

And there receive her approbation:

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends

To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him:

I have great hope in that; for in her youth

There is a prone⁶ and speechless dialect,

Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art

When she will play with reason and discourse, And well she can persuade. 191

Lucio. I pray she may; as well for the encouragement of the like, which else would stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack.⁷ I'll to her.

Claud. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

[Provost advances.

Lucio. Within two hours.

Claud. Come, officer, away! [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The entrance to a monastery.

Enter DUKE and FRIAR THOMAS.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought;

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee

To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends

Of burning youth.

Fri. T. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you

¹ Ravin, ravenously devour. ² Proper, own.

³ Denunciation, formal declaration.

⁴ Propagation, augmentation.

⁵ Tickle, ticklish.

⁶ Prone, appealing.

⁷ Tick-tack a sort of backgammon (French, tric-trac).

How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery¹ keeps. 10

I have deliver'd to Lord Angelo,
A man of stricture and firm abstinence,
My absolute power and place here in Vienna,
And he supposes me travell'd to Poland;
For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,
And so it is receiv'd. Now, pious sir,
You will demand of me why I do this?

Fri. T. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes and most biting laws,
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong
weeds, 20

Which for this fourteen years we have let slip;
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave,
That goes not out to prey. Now, as fond fathers,
Having bound up the threatening twigs of birch,

Only to stick it in their children's sight
For terror, not to use, in time the rod's
More mock'd than fear'd; so our decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead,
And liberty plucks justice by the nose; 29
The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
Goes all decorum.

Fri. T. It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd:

And it in you more dreadful would have seem'd
Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful:
Sith² 't was my fault to give the people scope,
'T would be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do: for we bid this be done,

When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Therefore, indeed,
my father,

I have on Angelo impos'd the office; 40
Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike
home,

And yet my nature never in the fight,
To do it slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as 't were a brother of your order,

Visit both prince and people: therefore, I prithee,

Supply me with the habit, and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear³
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action
At our more leisure shall I render you;
Only, this one: Lord Angelo is precise; 50
Stands at a guard with envy; scarce confesses
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seemers be.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A nunnery.

Enter ISABELLA and FRANCISCA.

Isab. And have you nuns no further privileges?

Fran. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring
more;

But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare.

Lucio. [Within] Ho! Peace be in this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Fran. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unsworn.
When you have vow'd, you must not speak with men 10

But in the presence of the prioress:
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face;

Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.

[Lucio calls again within.]

He calls again; I pray you, answer him.

[Exit.]

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is't that calls?

Enter LUCIO.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be,—as those cheek-roses

Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stead⁴ me
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place, and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudio? 20

¹ Bravery, finery.

² Sith, since.

³ Bear, behave.

⁴ Stead, help.

Isab. Why "her unhappy brother"? let me ask, 21
The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets you:
Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

Isab. Woe me! for what?
Lucio. For that which, if myself might be his judge,
He should receive his punishment in thanks:
He hath got his friend with child. 29
Isab. Sir, make me not your story.¹
Lucio. 'Tis true.

Lucio. All hope is gone,
Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
To soften Angelo.—(Act 1. 4. 67–69.)

I would not—though 't is my familiar sin
With maids to seem the lapwing and to jest,
Tongue far from heart—play with all virginss:
I hold you as a thing ensky'd and sainted,
By your renouncement an immortal spirit,
And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth,² 't is thus:

[Your brother and his lover have embrac'd:

As those that feed grow full, as blossoming
time 41
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison,³ even so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tilth⁴ and husbandry.]

Isab. Some one with child by him? My cousin Juliet?

Lucio. Is she your cousin?

Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their names

By vain though apt affection.

Lucio. She it is.

Isab. O, let him marry her.

¹ Your story, i.e. your jest.

² Fewness and truth, i.e. briefly and truly.

³ Foison, plenty.

⁴ Tilth, tillage.

Lucio.

This is the point.

The duke is very strangely gone from hence;
 Bore many gentlemen, myself being one, 51
 In hand and hope of action: but we do learn
 By those that know the very nerves of state,
 His giving-out were of an infinite distance
 From his true-meant design. Upon his place,
 And with full line of his authority,
 Governs Lord Angelo; a man whose blood
 Is very snow-broth; one who never feels
 The wanton stings and motions of the sense,
 { [But doth rebate¹ and blunt his natural edge
 With profits of the mind, study and fast.]

He—to give fear to use² and liberty, 62
 Which have for long run by the hideous law,
 As mice by lions—hath pick'd out an act,
 Under whose heavy sense your brother's life
 Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it;
 And follows close the rigour of the statute,
 To make him an example. All hope is gone,
 Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer
 To soften Angelo: and that's my pith of business

'Twixt you and your poor brother. 70

Isab. Doth he so seek his life?

*Lucio.*Has censur'd³ him

Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath
 A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas, what poor ability's in me
 To do him good?

Lucio.

Assay the power you have.

Isab. My power! Alas, I doubt—

Lucio.

Our doubts are traitors,
 And make us lose the good we oft might win
 By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo,
 And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
 Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel, 81

All their petitions are as freely theirs
 As they themselves would owe⁴ them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio.

But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight;
 No longer staying but to give the mother⁵
 Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you:
 Commend me to my brother: soon at night⁶
 I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab.

Good sir, adieu.

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT II.

SCENE. I. A hall in Angelo's house.

Enter ANGELO, ESCALUS, and a Justice; Provost, Officers and Attendants in waiting behind.

Ang. We must not make a scarecrow of the law,

Setting it up to fear⁷ the birds of prey,
 And let it keep one shape, till custom make it
 Their perch, and not their terror.

Escal.

Ay, but yet

Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
 Than fall, and bruise to death. Alas, this gentleman,

Whom I would save, had a most noble father!
 Let but your honour know,
 Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue,

¹ Rebate, abate, flatten, make dull.

² Censur'd, sentenced

³ The mother, i.e. the prioress

⁴ Soon at night, this very night.

⁵ Use, custom.

⁶ Owe, have.

⁷ Fear, affright.

That, in the working of your own affections,
 Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing, 11

Or that the resolute acting of our blood
 Could have attain'd the effect of your own purpose,

Whether you had not sometime in your life
 Err'd in this point which now you censure him,
 And pull'd the law upon you.

Ang. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Escalus,
 Another thing to fall. [I not deny,
 The jury, passing on the prisoner's life, 19
 May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. What's open made to justice,

That justice seizes: what knows the law
 That thieves do pass on thieves? 'T is very pregnant,⁸

⁸ Pregnant, evident.

{The jewel that we find, we stoop and take't,
 {Because we see it; but what we do not see
 {We tread upon, and never think of it.]

You may not so extenuate his offence
 For¹ I have had such faults; but rather tell me,
 When I, that censure him, do so offend, 29
 Let mine own judgment pattern out my death,
 And nothing come in partial. Sir, he must die.

Escal. Be it as your wisdom will.

Ang. Where is the provost?

Prov. [Advancing] Here, if it like your honour.

Ang. See that Claudio
 Be executed by nine to-morrow morning:
 Bring him his confessor, let him be prepar'd;
 For that's the utmost of his pilgrimage.

[Exit Provost.]

Escal. [Aside] Well, heaven forgive him!
 and forgive us all!

{[Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall;
 {Some run from breaks of ice, and answer none;
 {And some condemned for a² fault alone.] 40

Enter ELBOW, and Officers with FROTH and POMPEY.

Elb. Come, bring them away: if these be good people in a commonweal that do nothing but use their abuses in common houses, I know no law: bring them away.

Ang. How now, sir! What's your name?
 and what's the matter?

Elb. If it please your honour, I am the poor duke's constable, and my name is Elbow: I do lean upon justice, sir, and do bring in here before your good honour two notorious benefactors. 50

Ang. Benefactors! Well; what benefactors are they? are they not malefactors?

Elb. If it please your honour, I know not well what they are: but precise villains they are, that I am sure of; and void of all profan-ation in the world that good Christians ought to have.

Escal. This comes off well; here's a wise officer.

Ang. Go to: what quality are they of?
 Elbow is your name? why dost thou not speak,
 Elbow? 60

Pom. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.

Ang. What are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir! a tapster, sir; parcel³-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was, as they say, pluck'd down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house,⁴ which, I think, is a very ill house too.

Escal. How know you that?

Elb. My wife, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour,— 70

Escal. How! thy wife!

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest woman,—

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she, that this house, [if it be not a bawd's house, it is pity of her life, for it] is a naughty house. 78

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accus'd in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone's means:
 but as she spit in his face, [pointing to Froth]
 so she defied him.

Pom. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man; prove it.

Escal. [To Angelo] Do you hear how he mis-places? 90

Pom. Sir, she came in great with child;
 and longing, saving your honour's reverence, for stew'd prunes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some threepence; your honours have seen such dishes;
 they are not China dishes, but very good dishes,—

Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish,
 sir. 98

Pom. No, indeed, sir, not of a pin; you are therein in the right: but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, as I said, for prunes; and having but two in the

¹ For, because.

² A, one.

³ Parcel, part.

⁴ Hot-house, bagnio.

dish, as I said, Master Froth here, this very man, having eaten the rest, as I said, and, as I say, paying for them very honestly; for, as you know, Master Froth, I could not give you three-pence again.

Froth. No, indeed.

Pom. Very well; you being then, if you be remember'd, cracking the stones of the fore-said prunes,— 111

Froth. Ay, so I did indeed.

Pom. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remember'd, that such a one and such a one were past cure of the thing you wot of, unless they kept very good diet, as I told you,—

Froth. All this is true.

Pom. Why, very well, then,— 118

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool: to the purpose. What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her.

Pom. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet.

Escal. No, sir, nor I mean it not.

Pom. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas:—was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Froth. All-hallond eve. 130

Pom. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair,¹ sir; —'t was in the Bunch of Grapes, where, indeed, you have a delight to sit,—have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room, and good for winter.

Pom. Why, very well, then; I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there: I'll take my leave, 140

And leave you to the hearing of the cause; Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, once more?

Pom. Once, sir! there was nothing done to her once.

Elb. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Pom. I beseech your honour, ask me. 150

Escal. Well, sir; what did this gentleman to her?

Pom. I beseech you, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Doth your honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Pom. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Pom. Doth your honour see any harm in his face? 160

Escal. Why, no.

Pom. I'll be supposed² upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it? 163

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Pom. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet! the time is yet to come, that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Pom. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice or Iniquity? Is this true? 181

Elb. O thou caitiff! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have your action of slander too. 190

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What is't your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked caitiff?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some

¹ A lower chair, i.e. an easy-chair.

² Supposed, i.e. deposed.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

offences in him that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses till thou knowest what they are.

Elb. Marry, I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked varlet, now, what's come upon thee: thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue. 201

Escal. [To Froth] Where were you born, friend? [Pompey pushes Froth forward.]

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an't please you, sir.

Escal. So. [To Pompey] What trade are you of, sir? [Froth gets behind Pompey.]

Pom. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Pom. Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband? 211

Pom. Nine, sir; Overdone by the last.

Escal. Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. [Pompey pushes Froth across to Escalus] Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let me hear no more of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part, I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in. 220

Escal. Well, no more of it, Master Froth: farewell. [Exit Froth, Pompey pushing him off.] Come you hither to me, master tapster. What's your name, master tapster?

Pom. [Advancing] Pompey.

Escal. [What else?

Pom. Bum, sir. 227

Escal. Troth, and your bum is the greatest thing about you; so that in the beastliest sense you are Pompey the Great. Pompey, you are partly a bawd, Pompey, howsoever you colour it in being a tapster, are you not? come, tell me true: it shall be the better for you.

Pom. Truly, sir, I am a poor fellow that would live.

Escal. How would you live, Pompey? by being a bawd? What do you think of the trade, Pompey? is it a lawful trade?

Pom. If the law would allow it, sir. 239

Escal. But the law will not allow it, Pompey; nor it shall not be allow'd in Vienna.

Pom. Does your worship mean to geld and splay¹ all the youth of the city?

Escal. No, Pompey.

Pom. Truly, sir, in my poor opinion, they will to't, then. If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not to fear the bawds. 243

Escal. There are pretty orders beginning, I can tell you: it is but heading and hanging.

Pom. If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten year together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads: if this law hold in Vienna ten year, I'll rent the fairest house in it after² three-pence a bay:³ if you live to see this come to pass, say Pompey told you so. 257

Escal. Thank you, good Pompey; and, in requital of your prophecy, hark you:—] I advise you, let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever; [no, not for dwelling where you do:] if I do, Pompey, I shall beat you to your tent, and prove a shrewd Cæsar to you; in plain dealing, Pompey, I shall have you whipt: so, for this time, Pompey, fare you well.

Pom. I thank your worship for your good counsel: [Aside] but I shall follow it as the flesh and fortune shall better determine. Whip me! No, no; let carman whip his jade: The valiant heart's not whipt out of his trade. 267

[Exit.]

Escal. Come hither to me, Master Elbow; come hither, master constable. [Elbow advances.] How long have you been in this place of constable?

Elb. Seven year and a half, sir.

Escal. I thought, by your readiness in the office, you had continued in it some time. You say, seven years together?

Elb. And a half, sir. 278

Escal. Alas, it hath been great pains to you! They do you wrong to put you so oft upon't: are there not men in your ward sufficient to serve it?

Elb. Faith, sir, few of any wit in such matters: as they are chosen, they are glad to choose me for them; I do it for some piece of money, and go through with all.

¹ Splay, i. e. spay, castrate.

² After, at the rate of.

³ See note 67.

Escal. Look you bring me in the names of some six or seven, the most sufficient of your parish.

Elb. To your worship's house, sir?

Escal. To my house. Fare you well. [Exit Elbow.] What's o'clock, think you? 290

Just. Eleven, sir.

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Just. I humbly thank you.

Escal. It grieves me for the death of Claudio; But there's no remedy.

Just. Lord Angelo is severe.

Escal. It is but needful: Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so; Pardon is still the nurse of second woe: But yet,—poor Claudio! There is no remedy. Come, sir. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Another room in the same.

Enter PROVOST and a Servant.

Serv. He's hearing of a cause; he will come straight: I'll tell him of you.

Prov. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.] I'll know

His pleasure; may be he'll relent. Alas, He hath but as offended in a dream! All sets, all ages smack of this vice; and he To die for't!

Enter ANGELO.

Ang. Now, what's the matter, provost?

Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

Ang. Did not I tell thee yea? hadst thou not order?

Why dost thou ask again?

Prov. Lest I might be too rash: Under your good correction, I have seen, 10 When, after execution, judgment hath Repented o'er his doom.

Ang. Go to; let that be mine: Do you your office, or give up your place, And you shall well be spar'd.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon. What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet?

She's very near her hour.

Ang. Dispose of her To some more fitter place; and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd Desires access to you.

Ang. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid, 20

And to be shortly of a sisterhood,

If not already.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted.

[Exit Servant.]

See you the fornicatress be remov'd:

Let her have needful, but not lavish, means; There shall be order for't.

Enter ISABELLA and LUCIO.

Prov. Save your honour!

[Offering to retire.]

Ang. Stay a little while. [Provost withdraws.—[To Isabella]

You're welcome: what's your will?

[Lucio goes to back of stage.]

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me.

Ang. Well; what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of justice; 30

For which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will and will not.

Ang. Well; the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die: I do beseech you, let it be his fault,¹ And not my brother.

[Prov. [Aside] Heaven give thee moving graces!]

Ang. Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it?

Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done: Mine were the very cipher of a function, 35 To fine² the faults whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just but severe law! I had a brother, then.—Heaven keep your honour! [Retiring. Lucio comes down and meets her.]

¹ His fault, i.e. his fault that is condemned.

² Fine, punish.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Give't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him; 43
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown:
You are too cold; if you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire
it:
To him, I say.

Isab. [Advancing rapidly to Angelo] Must he needs die?
Ang. Maiden, no remedy.
Isab. Yes; I do think that you might pardon
him,
And neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy. 50

Isab. To-morrow! O, that 's sudden! Spare him, spare him!—(Act ii. 2. 83.)

Ang. I will not do't.

Isab. But can you, if you would?

Ang. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do.

Isab. But might you do't, and do the world
no wrong,

If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse¹

As mine is to him?

Ang. He's sentenc'd: 't is too late.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] You are too cold.

Isab. Too late! why, no; I, that do speak
a word,

May call it back again. Well, believe this,
No ceremony that to great ones longs,² 59

Not the king's crown nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace
As mercy does.

If he had been as you, and you as he,
You would have slipp'd like him; but he, like you,
Would not have been so stern.

Ang. Pray you, be gone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabel! should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

[Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Ay, touch him;
there's the vein.] 70

Ang. Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

¹ Remorse, pity.

² Longs, belongs.

Isab.

Alas, alas!

Why, all the souls that were were forfeit once;
 And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be,
 If He, which is the top of judgment, should
 But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
 And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
 Like man new made.

Ang.

Be you content, fair maid;
 It is the law, not I condemn your brother:
 Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
 It should be thus with him: he must die to-morrow. 82

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!

He's not prepar'd for death. [Even for our kitchens

We kill the fowl of season,¹ shall we serve heaven

With less respect than we do minister
 To our gross selves?] Good, good my lord,
 bethink you;

Who is it that hath died for this offence?
 There's many have committed it.

[Lucio. Aside to Isabella] Ay, well said.]

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept: 90

Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
 If the first that did the edict infringe
 Had answer'd for his deed: [now 't is awake,
 Takes note of what is done, and, like a prophet,
 Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils,
 Either new, or by remissness new-conceiv'd,
 And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,
 Are now to have no successive degrees,
 But, ere they live, to end.]

Isab. [Kneeling] Yet show some pity.

Ang. I show it most of all when I show justice; 100

For then I pity those I do not know,
 Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall;
 And do him right that, answering one foul wrong,

Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;
 Your brother dies to-morrow;—be content.

[He raises her.

Isab. So you must be the first that gives this sentence,

And he that suffers. O, it is excellent
 To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
 To use it like a giant.

Lucio. [Aside] That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder 110
 As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be quiet,

For every pelting² petty officer
 Would use his heaven for thunder;
 Nothing but thunder. Merciful Heaven!
 Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt

Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak
 Than the soft myrtle: but man, proud man,
 Drest in a little brief authority,
 Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
 His glassy essence, like an angry ape, 120
 Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven
 As makes the angels weep; [who, with our spleens,³
 Would all themselves laugh mortal.]

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] O, to him, to him, wench! he will relent;

He's coming; I perceive't.

[Prov. Aside] Pray heaven she win him!]

Isab. We cannot weigh our brother with ourself:

Great men may jest with saints; 't is wit in
 them,

But in the less foul profanation.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] Thou'rt i' the right, girl; more o' that.

Isab. That in the captain's but a choleric
 word, 130

Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

[Lucio. Aside to Isabella] Art avis'd⁴ o' that? more on't.]

Ang. Why do you put thesesayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,

Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
 That skins⁵ the vice o' the top. Go to your bosom;

Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth
 know

That's like my brother's fault: if it confess

² Pelting, paitry

³ Spleens, supposed to be the seat of mirth.

⁴ Avis'd, i.e. advised, or conscious.

⁵ Skins, covers thinly over.

¹ Of season, i.e. in its season.

A natural guiltiness such as is his, 139
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Ang. [Aside] She speaks, and 't is Such sense, that my sense breeds withit.—Fare you well. [Going.]

Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back.

Ang. I will bethink me—come again tomorrow. [Going to door.]

Isab. Hark how I'll bribe you: good my lord, turn back.

Ang. [Returning] How! bribe me!

Isab. Ay, with such gifts that heaven shall share with you.

Lucio. [Aside to Isabella] You had marr'd
all else.

Isab. Not with fond¹ shekels of the tested gold, 149

Or stones, whose rates are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers,
That shall be up at heaven and enter there
Ere sun-rise, prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maids, whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

Ang. [After a pause] Well; come to me tomorrow.

{ [Lucio [Aside to Isabella] Go to; 't is well; away! }

Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

[Retiring.]

Ang. [Aside] Amen!

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Isab. [Returning] At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

Ang. At any time 'fore noon.

Isab. 'Save your honour!

[Exeunt Isabella, Lucio, and Provost.]

Ang. From thee, even from thy virtue!
What's this, what's this? Is this her fault or mine?

The tempter or the tempted, who sins most?
Ha!

{ Not she; nor doth she tempt: [but it is I

{ That, lying by the violet in the sun,

{ Do as the carrion does, not as the flower,

{ Corrupt with virtuous season.] Can it be
That modesty may more betray our sense

Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground enough, 170

Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our evils there? O, fie, fie, fie!
What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo?
Dost thou desire her foully for those things

Ang. What's this, what's this? Is this her fault or mine?
The tempter or the tempted.—(Act ii 2. 162, 163.)

That make her good? O, let her brother live:
Thieves for their robbery have authority
When judges steal themselves. What, do I love her,
That I desire to hear her speak again,
And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream
on?

O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint, 180
With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous

¹ Fond, foolish, trifling.

Is that temptation that doth goad us on 182
To sin in loving virtue: [never could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite.] Ever till now,
When men were fond,¹ I smil'd and wonder'd
how. [Exit.

[SCENE III. A room in a prison.

Enter, severally, DUKE disguised as a friar,
and PROVOST.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so I think you are.

Prov. I am the provost. What's your will,
good friar?

Duke. Bound by my charity and my blest order,

I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison. Do me the common right
To let me see them, and to make me know
The nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly.

Prov. I would do more than that, if more were needful. 9

Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,²
Who, falling in the flaws³ of her own youth,
Hath blister'd her report: she is with child;
And he that got it, sentenc'd; a young man
More fit to do another such offence
Than die for this.

Enter JULIET.

Duke. When must he die?

Prov. As I do think, to-morrow.

[To Juliet] I have provided for you: stay awhile,

And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry? 19

Jul. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience,

And try your penitence, if it be sound,
Or hollowly put on.

Jul. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?
Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd
him.

Duke. So then it seems your most offence-ful act

Was mutually committed?

Jul. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Jul. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do repent, 30

As that⁴ the sin hath brought you to this
shame,

Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not
heaven,

Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it,

But as we stand in fear,—

Jul. I do repent me, as it is an evil,

And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest.

Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.

Grace go with you! Benedicite! [Exit.

Jul. Must die to-morrow! O injurious love,
That respites me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!

Prov. 'Tis pity of him. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A room in Angelo's house.

ANGELO discovered, seated.

Ang. When I would pray and think, I think and pray

To several⁵ subjects. Heaven hath my empty
words;

Whilst my invention,⁶ hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Isabel: Heaven in my mouth,

[As if I did but only chew his name;]

And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, whereon I studied,

Is like a good thing, being often read, 8
Grown fear'd and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein—let no man hear me—I take pride,
Could I with boot change for an idle plume

¹ Fond, foolishly fond.

² Of mine, i.e. in my custody.

³ Flaws, gusts of passion.

⁴ As that, because.

⁵ Several, separate.

⁶ Invention, imagination.

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright 78

When it doth tax itself; [as these black masks
Proclaim an enshield¹ beauty ten times louder
Than beauty could, display'd.] But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.

Isab. So.

Ang. And his offence is so, as it appears,
Accountant to the law upon that pain.²

Isab. True.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life,—
As I subscribe³ not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,—that you, his sister, 90

Finding yourself desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great
place,

Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-building law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this suppos'd, or else to let him suffer;
What would you do?

Isab. As much for my poor brother as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
The impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies, 101

And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must your brother die.

Isab. And 't were the cheaper way:
Better it were a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence

That you have slander'd so? 110

Isab. Ignomy in ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses: lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

Ang. You seem'd of late to make the law
a tyrant;

And rather prov'd the sliding of your brother
A merriment than a vice.

Isab. O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,

To have what we would have, we speak not what we mean:

I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love. 120

Ang. We are all frail.

Isab. Else let my brother die,
[If not a fedary,⁴ but only he,
Owe and succeed thy weakness.]

Ang. Nay, women are frail too.

Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view
themselves;

Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women! Help heaven! men their creation mar
In profiting by them. Nay, call us ten times frail;

For we are soft as our complexions are, 129
And credulous to false prints.

Ang. I think it well:

And from this testimony of your own sex,—
Since, I suppose, we are made to be no stronger Than faults may shake our frames,—let me be bold;

I do arrest your words. Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, as you are well express'd
By all external warrants, show it now,
By putting on the destin'd livery.

Isab. I have no tongue but one: gentle my
lord,

Let me entreat you speak the former language.

Ang. Plainly conceive, I love you. 141

Isab. My brother did love Juliet; and you tell me

That he shall die for 't.

Ang. He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Isab. I know your virtue hath a license in 't,
Which seems a little fouler than it is,
To pluck on others.

Ang. Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.

Isab. Ha! little honour to be much believ'd,
And most pernicious purpose! Seeming, seeming! [Retreating.]

I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for 't: 151
Sign me a present pardon for my brother,
Or with an outstretch'd throat I'll tell the world aloud

What man thou art.

¹ Enshield, enshielded, i.e. covered.

² Pain, penalty.

³ Subscribe, admit.

⁴ Fedary, vassal.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel?
 My unsoil'd name, the austereness of my life,
 My vouch against you, and my place i' the state,
 Will so your accusation overweigh,
 That you shall stifle in your own report,
 And smell of calumny. I have begun,

And now I give my sensual race¹ the rein:
 Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite; 161
 Lay by all nicety and prolixious² blushes,
 That banish what they sue for; redeem thy
 brother
 By yielding up thy body to my will;
 Or else he must not only die the death,

Isab. I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for't.—(Act II. 4. 151.)

But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
 To lingeringsufferance. Answermeto-morrow,
 Or, by the affection³ that now guides me most,
 I'll prove a tyrant to him. As for you,
 Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true. [Exit.]

Isab. To whom should I complain? Did I tell this, 171
 Who would believe me? O perilous mouths,
 That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
 Either of condemnation or approval;
 Bidding the law make court'sy to their will;

Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite,
 To follow as it draws! I'll to my brother:
 Though he hath fall'n by prompture of the blood,

Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
 That, had he twenty heads to tender down
 On twenty bloody blocks, he'd yield them up,
 Before his sister should her body stoop
 To such abhor'd pollution. 183

Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
 More than our brother is our chastity.
 I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
 And fit his mind to death, for his soul's rest.

[Exit.]

¹ Race, natural disposition.

² Prolixious, tiresomely prudish. ³ Affection, impulse.

ACT III.

SCENE I. A room in the prison.

Enter DUKE disguised as before, CLAUDIO, and PROVOST.

Duke. So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?

Claud. The miserable have no other medicine But only hope:

I have hope to live, and am prepar'd to die.

Duke. Be absolute for death;¹ either death or life

Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with life:

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing

That none but fools would keep: a breath thou art,

Servile to all the skyey influences, 9

That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,

Hourly afflict: merely, thou art death's fool;

For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun

And yet runn'st toward him still. Thou art not noble;

For all the accommodations that thou bear'st Are nurs'd by baseness. Thou 'rt by no means valiant;

For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork

Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,

And that thou oft provok'st; yet grossly fear'st

Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself; 19

For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains

That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not;

For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get,

And what thou hast, forgett'st. Thou art not certain;

For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,²

After the moon. If thou art rich, thou 'rt poor;

For, like an ass whose back with ingots bows,

Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,

And death unloads thee. [Friend hast thou none;

For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,

The mere effusion of thy proper loins, 30

Do curse the gout, serpigo,³ and the rheum, {
For ending thee no sooner.] Thou hast nor { youth nor age,

But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both; for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms

Of palsied eld; and when thou art old and rich, Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor
beauty,

To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this

That bears the name of life? Yet in this life

Lie hid moe thousand deaths:⁴ yet death we fear, 40

That makes these odds all even.

Claud. I humbly thank you.

To sue to live, I find I seek to die;

And, seeking death, find life: let it come on.

Isab. [Within] What, ho! Peace here; grace and good company!

Prov. Who's there? come in: the wish deserves a welcome. [Goes to door.]

Duke. Dear sir, ere long I'll visit you again.

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Isab. [Outside door] My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. [Returns from door, ushering in Isabella] Look, signior, here's your sister. 49

Duke. Provost, a word with you.

Prov. As many as you please.

Duke. Bring me to hear them speak, where
I may be conceal'd.

[Exeunt Duke and Provost; Duke is seen from time to time, listening.]

Claud. Now, sister, what's the comfort?

Isab. Why,
As all comforts are; most good, most good
indeed.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,

Intends you for his swift ambassador,

Where you shall be an everlasting leiger.⁵

¹ Be absolute for death, i. e. be certain you will die.

² Effects, expressions.

³ Serpigo, a creeping eruption of the skin.

⁴ Moe thousand deaths, i. e. a thousand more deaths.

⁵ Leiger (or lieger), resident ambassador.

Therefore your best appointment¹ make with speed; 60

To-morrow you set on.

Claud. Is there no remedy?

Isab. None, but such remedy as, to save a head,

To cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:

There is a devilish mercy in the judge,
If you'll implore it, that will free your life,
But fetter you till death.

[Claud. Perpetual durance?

Isab. Ay, just; perpetual durance, arestraint,
Though all the world's vastidity you had, 69
To a determin'd scope.]

Claud. But in what nature?

Isab. In such a one as, you consenting to't,
Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,

And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point!

Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Dar'st thou die?

[A pause. Claudio turns his face away.

The sense of death is most in apprehension;
And the poor beetle that we tread upon, 79
In corporal sufferance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this shame?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flowery tenderness? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms.

Isab. There spake my brother; there my father's grave

Did utter forth a voice! [Embracing him]

Yes, thou must die:

Thou art too noble to conserve a life
In base appliances. This outward-sainted deputy,

Whose settled visage and deliberate word 90
Nips youth i' the head, and follies doth emmew²
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;

['His filth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.]

Claud.

The prenzie³ Angelo?

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damned'st body to invest and cover
In prenzie's guards! Dost thou think, Claudio?
If I would yield him my virginity,
Thou mightst be freed.

Claud. O heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give 't thee, from this rank offence, 100
So to offend him still. This night's the time
That I should do what I abhor to name,
Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do 't.

Isab. O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin.

Claud. [Embracing her] Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death tomorrow.

Claud. [Yes. Has he affections in him, }
That thus can make him bite the law by the } nose,

When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin; }
Or of the deadly seven it is the least. 111 }

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so }
wise,

Why would he for the momentary trick }
Be perdurably fin'd?⁴—[Despairingly] O }
Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;

To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become 120
A kneaded clod; and the delighted⁵ spirit
To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and uncertain thought
Imagine howling: 'tis too horrible!
The weariest and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment

¹ Appointment, equipment.

² Emmew, mew up, inclose; and so, clutch, grip.

³ Prenzle, a word of doubtful meaning; perhaps=prince.

⁴ Perdurably fin'd, everlastingly punished.

⁵ Delighted, accustomed to delight.

Can lay on nature is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas, alas!

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live:
What sin you do to save a brother's life,
Nature dispenses with the deed so far
That it becomes a virtue.

131

Isab.

O you beast!

O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life

From thine own sister's shame? [What should
I think? 140

Heaven shield my mother play'd my father fair!

Isab. O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch!
Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?—(Act iii. l. 137, 138.)

}For such a warped slip of wilderness¹
}Ne'er issued from his blood.] Take my defiance;
Die, perish! Might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed:
I'll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,
No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!
Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. 149
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd:
'Tis best that thou diest quickly. [Going.

Claud. O, hear me, Isabella!

Re-enter DUKE, disguised as before.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one word.

Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure,
I would by and by have some speech with you:
the satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you a while. [Walks apart.

Duke. Son, I have overheard what hath pass'd between you and your sister. Angelo

¹ Wilderness, wildness.

had never the purpose to corrupt her ; only he hath made an assay of her virtue to practise his judgment with the disposition of natures : she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true ; therefore prepare yourself to death : do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible : to-morrow you must die ; go to your knees, and make ready. 172

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. [Crosses to Isabella, kneels, and kisses her hand.] I am so out of love with life, that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there : farewell. [Exit Claudio ; Duke comes down.] Provost, a word with you !

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. What's your will, father? 178

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone. Leave me a while with the maid : my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time. [Exit.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good : the goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness ; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath convey'd to my understanding ; and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling, I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother? 193

Isab. I am now going to resolve¹ him, I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. But O how much is the good duke deceiv'd in Angelo ! If ever he return, and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government. 199

Duke. That shall not be much amiss : yet, as the matter now stands, he will avoid your accusation : "he made trial of you only." Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings : to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit ; redeem your brother from the angry law ; do no stain to your own gracious person ; and much please the absent duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business. 211

Isab. Let me hear you speak further. I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful. Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words went with her name. 220

Duke. She should this Angelo have married ; was affianced to her oath, and the nuptial appointed : between which time of the contract and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wreck'd at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befell to the poor gentlewoman : there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural ; with him, the portion and sinew of her fortune, her marriage-dowry ; with both, her combinate² husband, this well-seeming Angelo. 232

Isab. Can this be so ? did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dried not one of them with his comfort ; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour : in few, bestow'd her on her own lamentation, which she yet wears for his sake ; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not. 239

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world ! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live ! But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal : and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father. 247

¹ Resolve, inform.

² Combinatè, contracted.

Duke. This forenamed maid hath yet in her the continuance of her first affection: his unjust unkindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo; answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer yourself¹ to this advantage, first, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course,—and now follows all,—we shall advise this wronged maid to stand up your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to her recompense: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled.² The maid will I frame and make fit for his attempt. If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection. 272

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste you speedily to Angelo: if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction. I will presently to Saint Luke's: there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father. [Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II. The street before the prison.

Enter, on one side, DUKE disguised as before; on the other, ELBOW, and Officers with POMPEY; the DUKE keeps, at first, in the background.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.³

Duke. O heavens! what stuff is here?

Pom. 'T was never merry world since, of two usuries, the merriest was put down, and the worse allow'd by order of law a furr'd gown to keep him warm; and furr'd with fox and lamb-skins too, to signify, that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing. 11

Elb. Come your way, sir. [Duke advances] Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father.⁴ What offence hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: [and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have found upon him, sir, a strange pick-lock, which we have sent to the deputy.]

Duke. Fie, sirrah! [a bawd, a wicked bawd!] The evil that thou caustest to be done, 21 That is thy means to live. Do thou but think What 't is to cram a maw or clothe a back From such a filthy vice: say to thyself, From their abominable and beastly touches I drink, I eat, array myself, and live. Canst thou believe thy living is a life, So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.

Pom. Indeed, it does stink in some sort, sir; but yet, sir, I would prove— 30

Duke. Nay, if the devil have given thee proofs for sin, Thou wilt prove his.] Take him to prison, officer:

Correction and instruction must both work Ere this rude beast will profit.

Elb. He must before the deputy, sir; [he has given him warning: the deputy cannot abide a whoremaster: if he be a whoremonger, and comes before him, he were as good go a mile on his errand.

Duke. That we were all, as some would seem to be, 40 From our faults, as faults from seeming, free!

Elb. His neck will come to your waist,—a cord, sir.]

Pom. I spy comfort; I cry bail. Here's a gentleman and a friend of mine.

Enter LUCIO.

Lucio. How now, noble Pompey! What,

¹ Refer yourself, i. e. have recourse to.

² Scaled, laid bare, exposed.

³ Bastard, a sweet Spanish wine.

⁴ Good brother father, a play on Elbow's father friar = father brother (frère).

at the wheels of Cæsar! art thou led in triumph? [What, is there none of Pygmalion's images, newly made woman, to be had now, for putting the hand in the pocket and extracting clutch'd? What reply, ha? What sayest thou to this tune, matter, and method? Is 't not drown'd i' the last rain, ha? What say'st thou, Trot? Is the world as it was, man?

Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? or how? The trick of it?

Duke. Still thus, and thus; still worse!

Lucio. How doth my dear morsel, thy mistress? Procures she still, ha?

Pom. Troth, sir, she hath eaten up all her beef, and she is herself in the tub. 60

Lucio. Why, 't is good; it is the right of it;

Duke. Canst thou believe thy living is a life,
So stinkingly depending? Go mend, go mend.—(Act iii. 2. 27. 28.)

it must be so: ever your fresh whore and your powder'd bawd: an unshunn'd consequence; it must be so.] Art going to prison, Pompey?

Pom. Yes, faith, sir.

Lucio. Why, 't is not amiss, Pompey. Farewell: go, say I sent thee thither. [For debt, Pompey? or how? 68

Elb. For being a bawd, for being a bawd.

Lucio. Well, then, imprison him: if imprisonment be the due of a bawd, why, 't is his right: bawd is he doubtless, and of antiquity too; bawd-born.] Farewell, good Pompey. Commend me to the prison, Pompey: you will turn good husband¹ now, Pompey; you will keep the house.

Pom. I hope, sir, your good worship will be my bail.

Lucio. No, indeed, will I not, Pompey; it is not the wear.² I will pray, Pompey, to increase your bondage: if you take it not patiently, why, your mettle is the more. Adieu, trusty Pompey. Bless you, friar.

Duke. And you. 82

¹ Husband, i.e. house-band.

² The wear, i.e. the fashion.

Lucio. Does Bridget paint still, Pompey, ha?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

[Constables advance.]

Pom. You will not bail me, then, sir?

Lucio. Then, Pompey, nor now. What news abroad, friar? what news?

Elb. Come your ways, sir; come.

[Constables seize Pompey.]

Lucio. Go to kennel, Pompey, go. [Exeunt Elbow, and Officers with Pompey.] What news, friar, of the duke? [Duke turns his face away.]

Duke. I know none. Can you tell me of any?

Lucio. Some say he is with the Emperor of Russia; other some, he is in Rome: but where is he, think you?

Duke. I know not where; but wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dukes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't. 101

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little more lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too crabbed that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied: but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking be put down. They say this Angelo was not made by man and woman, after this downright way of creation: is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made, then?

Lucio. Some report a sea-maid spawned him; [some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes. But it is certain that, when he makes water, his urine is congealed ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion¹ generative; that's infallible.] 119

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, [for the rebellion of a codpiece to take away the life of a man!] Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand: [he had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.]

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected² for women; he was not inclin'd that way. 130

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceiv'd.

Duke. 'Tis not possible.

Lucio. Who, not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was to put a ducat in her clack-dish: the duke had crotchets in him. He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Duke. You do him wrong, surely.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward³ of his. A shy fellow was the duke: and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing. 140

Duke. What, I prithee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No, pardon; 't is a secret must be lock'd within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand, the greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise! why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life and the business he hath helmed⁴ must, upon a warranted need, give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testimonied in his own bringings-forth, and he shall appear to the envious a scholar, a statesman, and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskilfully; or if your knowledge be more, it is much darken'd in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love. 160

Lucio. Come, sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest you have spoke, you have courage to maintain it: I am bound to call upon you; and, I pray you, your name?

² Detected, accused.

³ An inward, an intimate.

⁴ Helmed, i.e. steered through.

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio; well known to the duke. 170

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But, indeed, I can do you little harm; you'll forswear this again.

Lucio. I'll be hang'd first: thou art deceiv'd in me, friar. [But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to-morrow or no? 180

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Lucio. Why, for filling a bottle with a tun-dish.¹ I would the duke we talk of were return'd again: this ungenitur'd agent will unpeople the province with continency; sparrows must not build in his house-eaves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered; he would never bring them to light: would he were return'd! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrusting.] Farewell, good friar: I prithe, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee again, would eat mutton on Fridays. He's now past it; yet (and I say to thee) he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic: say that I said so. Farewell. [Exit.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality Can censure scape; back-wounding calumny The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong

Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue? But who comes here? [He retires.

Enter ESCALUS, PROVOST, and Officers [with MISTRESS OVERDONE].

Escal. [Go; away with her to prison!

Mrs. Ov. Good my lord, be good to me; your honour is accounted a merciful man; good my lord.

Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit² in the same kind? This would make mercy swear and play the tyrant.

Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour. 209

Mrs. Ov. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keepdown was with child by him in the duke's time; he promis'd her marriage: his child is a year and a quarter old, come Philip and Jacob:³ I have kept it myself; and see how he goes about to abuse me!

Duke. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

—(Act iii. 2. 244, 245.)

Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much license:—let him be called before us. Away with her to prison! Go to; no more words. [Exit Officers with Mrs. Overdone.] Provost, my brother Angelo will not be alter'd; Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnish'd with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.

¹ Tun-dish, funnel.

² Forfeit, liable to penalty.

³ Come Philip and Jacob, i.e. on the 1st of May, the feast of St. Philip and St. James (Jacobus).

Prov. [Pointing to Duke] So, please you, this friar hath been with him, and advis'd him for th' entertainment of death.

Escal. Good even, good father.

Duke. [Advancing] Bliss and goodness on you!

Escal. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is now 230

To use it for my time: I am a brother
Of gracious order, late come from the See
In special business from his holiness.

Escal. What news abroad i' the world?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a fever on goodness, that the dissolution of it must cure it: novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking: there is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security¹ enough to make fellowship accursed: much upon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This news is old enough, yet it is every day's news. I pray you, sir, of what disposition was the duke?

Escal. One that, above all other strifes, contented especially to know himself.

Duke. What pleasure was he given to? 248

Escal. Rather rejoicing to see another merry, than merry at any thing which profess'd to make him rejoice: a gentleman of all temperance. But leave we him to his events, with a prayer they may prove prosperous; and let me desire to know how you find Claudio prepar'd. I am made to understand that you have lent him visitation.

Duke. He professes to have received no sinister measure from his judge, but most willingly humbles himself to the determination of justice: yet had he framed to himself, by the instruction of his frailty, many deceiving promises of life; which I, by my good leisure, have discredited to him, and now is he resolv'd to die. 262

Escal. You have paid the heavens your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. I have labour'd for the poor gentleman to the extremest shore of my modesty: but my brother justice have I found so severe, that he hath forc'd me to tell him he is indeed Justice.

Duke. If his own life answer the straitness of his proceeding, it shall become him well; wherein if he chance to fail, he hath sentenc'd himself. 271

Escal. I am going to visit the prisoner. Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you!

[Exeunt Escalus and Provost.]

He who the sword of heaven will bear
Should be as holy as severe;
Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, and virtue go;
More nor less to others paying
Than by self-offences weighing. 280
Shame to him whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To weed my vice, and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness, made in crimes,
Making practice on the times,
To draw with idle spiders' strings
Most ponderous and substantial things! 290
Craft against vice I must apply:
With Angelo to-night shall lie
His old betrothed but despised;
So disguise shall, by the disguised,
Pay with falsehood false exacting,
And perform an old contracting. [Exit.]

¹ Security, i. e. suretyship.

ACT IV.

[SCENE. I. The Moated Grange at St. Luke's.Enter MARIANA and a Boy singing.Song.

Take, O, take those lips away,
 That so sweetly were forsworn;
 And those eyes, the break of day,
 Lights that do mislead the morn:

But my kisses bring again,
 Bring again;
 Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
 Seal'd in vain.

Mari. Break off thy song, and haste thee
 quick away:
 Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
 Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.

[Exit Boy.

Take, O, take those lips away,
 That so sweetly were forsworn.—(Act iv. 1. 1, 2)

Enter DUKE disguised as before.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish 10
 You had not found me here so musical.
 Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
 My mirth it much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duke. 'Tis good: though music oft hath such a charm

To make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
 I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here to-day? much upon this time have

 I promised here to meet.

Mari. You have not been inquired after: I have sat here all day. 20

Duke. I do constantly¹ believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Mari. I am always bound to you. [Exit.]

¹ Constantly, firmly.

Enter ISABELLA.

Duke. Very well met, and welcome.

What is the news from this good deputy?

Isab. He hath a garden circummur'd with brick,

Whose western side is with a vineyard back'd;

And to that vineyard is a planched¹ gate, 30

That makes his opening with this bigger key:

This other doth command a little door

Which from the vineyard to the garden leads;

There have I made my promise

Upon the heavy middle of the night

To call upon him.

Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isab. I have ta'en a due and wary note upon't:

With whispering and most guilty diligence,

In action all of precept, he did show me 40

The way twice o'er.

Duke. Are there no other tokens Between you greed² concerning her observance?

Isab. No, none, but only a repair i' the dark;

And that I have possess'd³ him my most stay

Can be but brief; for I have made him know

I have a servant comes with me along,

That stays upon me; whose persuasion is

I come about my brother.

Duke. 'Tis well borne up.

I have not yet made known to Mariana

A word of this. What, ho! within! come forth! 50

Re-enter MARIANA.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid;

She comes to do you good.

Isab. I do desire the like.

Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you?

Mari. Good friar, I know you do, and have found it.

Duke. Take, then, this your companion by the hand,

Who hath a story ready for your ear.

I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;

The vaporous night approaches.

Mari. Will 't please you walk aside?

[Exeunt Mariana and Isabella.]

¹ Planched, made of planks or boards

² Greed, i. e. agreed.

³ Possess'd, informed.

Duke. O place and greatness, millions of false eyes 60

Are stuck upon thee! volumes of report

Run with these false and most contrarious quests

Upon thy doings: thousand escapes⁴ of wit

Make thee the father of their idle dream,

And rack thee in their fancies.

Re-enter MARIANA and ISABELLA.

Welcome! How agreed?

Isab. She'll take the enterprise upon her, father,

If you advise it.

Duke. It is not my consent, But my entreaty too.

Isab. Little have you to say When you depart from him, but, soft and low, "Remember now my brother."

Mari. Fear me not.

Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all. 71

He is your husband on a pre-contract:

To bring you thus together, 't is no sin,

Sith that the justice of your title to him

Doth flourish⁵ the deceit. Come, let us go:

Our corn's to reap, for yet our tilth's to sow.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A room in the prison.

Enter PROVOST and POMPEY.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Pom. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches⁶ and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your gyves; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment, and your deliverance with an unpitied whipping, [for you have been a notorious bawd.]

⁴ Escapes, sallies.

⁵ Flourish, colour, varnish

⁶ Snatches, scraps of wit.

Pom. Sir, [I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind; but yet] I will be content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What, ho, Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there? 21

Enter ABHORSON.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present, and dismiss him. [He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.]

Abhor. [A bawd, sir?] fie upon him! he will discredit our mystery. 30

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale. [Exit.]

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour,—for surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery.

Pom. Painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; [and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation, using painting, do prove my occupation a mystery:] but what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Pom. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Pom. If it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief. 50

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Pom. Sir, I will serve him; [for I do find your hangman is a more penitent trade than your bawd; he doth oftener ask forgiveness.]

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. [Come on, bawd;] I will instruct thee in my trade; follow. 58

Pom. I do desire to learn, sir: and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare;¹ for, truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Barnardine and Claudio:
[Exeunt Pompey and Abhorson.]

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour,—for surely, sir, a good favour you have, but that you have a hanging look,—... your occupation a mystery?—(Act iv. 2. 33-36.)

The one has my pity; not a jot the other,
Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter CLAUDIO.

Look, here's the warrant, Claudio, for thy death:

'T is now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow

¹ Yare, ready.

Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

Claud. As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour 69

When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones:
He will not wake.

Prov. Who can do good on him?
Well, go, prepare yourself. [Knocking within.]
But, hark, what noise?

Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio.] By and by!

I hope it is some pardon or reprieve
For the most gentle Claudio.

Enter DUKE disguised as before, with a letter having a large seal.

Welcome, father.

Duke. The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night

Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late?

Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel?

Prov. No.

Duke. They will, then, ere't be long.

Prov. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy. 81

Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice:

He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself which he spurs on his power

To qualify¹ in others: were he meal'd² with that

Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just. [Knocking within.]

Now are they come.

[Exit Provost.]

This is a gentle provost: seldom when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men. 90

[Knocking within.]

How now! what noise? That spirit's possess'd with haste

That wounds the unsisting³ postern with these strokes.

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. [Speaking to one at the door] There he must stay until the officer
Arise to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But he must die to-morrow?

Prov. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more ere morning.

Prov. Happily⁴
You something know; yet I believe there comes 99

No countermand; no such example have we:
Besides, upon the very siege⁵ of justice
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger (with large sealed letter).

Duke. This is his lordship's man.

Prov. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Mes. [Giving the letter, which Provost opens and reads] My lord hath sent you this note;
and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance.
Good morrow; for, as I take it, it is almost day. 109

Prov. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger.]

Duke. [Aside] This is his pardon, purchas'd
by such sin

For which the pardoner himself is in.

Hence hath offence his quick celerity,

When it is borne in high authority:

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,

That for the fault's love is the offender friended.

Now, sir, what news?

Prov. I told you. Lord Angelo, belike thinking me remiss in mine office, awakens me with this unwonted putting-on;⁶ methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before. 121

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Prov. [Reads]

"Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and in the afternoon Barnardine: for my better satisfaction,

¹ Qualify, temper, abate.

² Meal'd, sprinkled, defiled.

³ Unsisting, perhaps=shaking.

⁴ Happily, i.e. haply.

⁵ Siege (French siège), seat.

⁶ Putting-on, incitement.

let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed; with a thought that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril."

What say you to this, sir? 131

Duke. What is that Barnardine who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Prov. A Bohemian born, but here nurs'd up and bred; one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it that the absent duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty or executed him? I have heard it was ever his manner to do so. 139

Prov. His friends still wrought reprieves for him: and, indeed, his fact,¹ till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubtful proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Prov. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison? how seems he to be touch'd? 143

Prov. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Prov. He will hear none: he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not many days entirely drunk. We have very oft awak'd him, as if to carry him to execution, and showed him a seeming warrant for it: it hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but, in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifested effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy. 172

Prov. Ray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Prov. Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest. 179

Duke. By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Prov. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.²

Duke. O, death's a great disguiser; and you may add to it. Shave the head, and tie the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bar'd before his death: you know the course is common. If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Prov. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Prov. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing? 201

Prov. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet since I see you fearful that neither my coat, integrity, nor persuasion can with ease attempt³ you, I will go further than I meant, to pluck all fears out of you. Look you, sir, [showing him the letter] here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not; and the signet is not strange to you.

Prov. I know them both. 210

Duke. The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure; where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not; for he this very day receives letters of strange tenour; perchance of the duke's death, perchance entering into some monastery, but by chance nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding star calls up the

¹ Fact, deed, crime.

² Discover the favour, recognize the face.

³ Attempt, tempt.

shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shrift, and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amaz'd; but this shall absolutely resolve¹ you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A corridor in the prison; at back door of Barnardine's cell in the same.

Enter POMPEY.

Pom. I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession: one would think it were Mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Master Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money: marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Caper, at the suit of Master Three-pile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-coloured satin, which now peaches² him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young Master Deep-vow, and Master Copper-spur, and Master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger man, and young Drop-heir that killed lusty Pudding, and Master Forthlight the tilter, and brave Master Shooty the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stabbed Pots, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now "for the Lord's sake." 21

Enter ABHORSON.

Abhor. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

Pom. [Calling outside door of cell] Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hang'd, Master Barnardine!

Abhor. What, ho, Barnardine!

[Goes up and opens door of cell.]

Bar. [Within] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

Pom. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

Bar. [Within] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy. 31

Abhor. Tell him he must awake, and that quickly too.

Pom. Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

Abhor. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Pom. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

Abhor. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

Pom. Very ready, sir. 40

Enter BARNARDINE; he comes down between Pompey and Abhorson.

Bar. How now, Abhorson! what's the news with you?

Abhor. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers; for, look you, the warrant's come.

Bar. You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for 't.

Pom. O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hang'd betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

Abhor. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father: do we jest now, think you?

[Retires up.]

Enter DUKE disguised as before.

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you, and pray with you.

Bar. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die this day, that's certain.

Duke. O, sir, you must: and therefore I beseech you 60

Look forward on the journey you shall go.

Bar. I swear I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you,—

Bar. Not a word: if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day. [Exit into cell.]

Duke. Unfit to live or die: O gravel heart! After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exeunt Abhorson and Pompey.]

¹ Resolve, convince.

² Peaches, i.e. impeaches.

Re-enter PROVOST.

Prov. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner? 70

Duke. A creature unprepar'd, unmeet for death;

And to transport him in the mind he is
Were damnable.

Prov. Here in the prison, father,
There died this morning of a cruel fever
One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate,
A man of Claudio's years; his beard and head
Just of his colour. What if we do omit
This reprobate till he were well inclin'd;
And satisfy the deputy with the visage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio? 80

Bar. I swear I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.—(Act iv. 3. 62, 63.)

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides!
Dispatch it presently; the hour draws on Prefix'd by Angelo: see this be done,
And sent according to command; whiles I
Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Prov. This shall be done, good father, presently.

But Barnardine must die this afternoon:
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To save me from the danger that might come
If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done.
Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio: 91

Ere twice the sun hath made his journal¹
greeting 92
To the under generation, you shall find
Your safety manifested.

Prov. I am your free dependant.

Duke. Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo. [Exit Provost.]

Now will I write letters to Angelo,—
The provost, he shall bear them,—whose contents
Shall witness to him I am near at home,
And that, by great injunctions, I am bound

¹ Journal, diurnal.

To enter publicly: him I'll desire 101
 To meet me at the consecrated fount,
 A league below the city; and from thence,
 By cold gradation and well-balanced form,
 We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter PROVOST with Ragozine's head in bag.

Prov. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself.

Duke. Convenient¹ is it. Make a swift return;
 For I would commune with you of such things
 That want no ear but yours.

Prov. I'll make all speed. [Exit.

Isab. [Within] Peace, ho, be here! 110

Duke. The tongue of Isabel. She's come to know

If yet her brother's pardon be come hither:
 But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
 To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
 When it is least expected.

Enter ISABELLA.

Isab. Ho, by your leave!

Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man.
 Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?

Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabel, from the world:

His head is off, and sent to Angelo. 120

Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other: show your wisdom, daughter,

In your close patience.

Isab. O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes!

Duke. You shall not² be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! wretched Isabel!
 Injurious world! most damned Angelo!

[Pacing about agitatedly.

Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
 Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.

[Isabel comes down to him.

Mark what I say, which you shall find 130
 By every syllable a faithful verity:

The duke comes home to-morrow;—nay, dry your eyes;

One of our covent,³ and his confessor,
 Gives me this instance:⁴ already he hath carried

Notice to Escalus and Angelo;
 Who do prepare to meet him at the gates,
 There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom 137

In that good path that I would wish it go;
 And you shall have your bosom⁵ on this wretch,
 Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart,
 And general honour.

Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter, then, to Friar Peter give;
 'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return:
 Say, by this token, I desire his company
 At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause and yours

I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
 Before the duke; and to the head of Angelo
 Accuse him home and home. For my poor self,
 I am combin'd⁶ by a sacred vow,
 And shall be absent. Wend you with this letter: 150

Command these fretting waters from your eyes
 With a light heart; trust not my holy order,
 If I pervert your course. Who's here?

Enter LUCIO.

Lucio. Good even. Friar, where's the provost?

Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O pretty Isabella, I am pale at mine heart to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to't. But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I lov'd thy brother: if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived. [Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou tak'st him for. 171

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee: I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.

Duke. You have told me too many of him

¹ Convenient, becoming.

² Shall not, i.e. will not.

³ Covent, convent.

⁴ Instance, intimation.

⁵ Bosom, i.e. heart's desire.

⁶ Combined, pledged.

already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child. 180

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I: but I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end: [if bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it.] Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A room in Angelo's house.

Enter ANGELO and ESCALUS, with letters.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath disvouch'd other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manner. His actions show much like to madness: pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and reliver¹ our authorities there?

Escal. I guess not. 8

Ang. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his ent'ring, that if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that; to have a dispatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, I beseech you, let it be proclaimed:

Betimes i' the morn I'll call you at your house:

Give notice to such men of sort and suit
As are to meet him. 20

Escal. I shall, sir. Fare you well.

Ang. Good night. [Exit Escalus.]

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me un-pregnant,²

And dull to all proceedings. A deflower'd maid!

And by an eminent body that enforce'd
The law against it! But that her tender shame

Will not proclaim against her maiden loss,
How might she tongue me!³ Yet reason dares her no;

For my authority bears of a credent bulk,
That no particular⁴ scandal once can touch

Lucio. Nay, friar, I am a kind of burr; I shall stick.
—(Act iv. 3. 189, 190.)

But it confounds the breather. He should have liv'd, 81
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,

Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge,
By so receiving a dishonour'd life
With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had liv'd!

Alack, when once our grace we have forgot,
Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not! [Exit.]

¹ Reliver, redeliver.

² Unpregnant, unready.

³ Tongue me, speak of me.

⁴ Particular, personal.

[SCENE V. Fields without the town.Enter DUKE in his own habit, and FRIAR PETER.

Duke. [Giving letters] These letters at fit time deliver me:

The provost knows our purpose and our plot.
The matter being afoot, keep your instruction,
And hold you ever to our special drift;
Though sometimes you do blench¹ from this to that,

As cause doth minister. Go call at Flavius' house,

And tell him where I stay: give the like notice
To Valentius, Rowland, and to Crassus,
And bid them bring the trumpets² to the gate;
But send me Flavius first.

Fri. P. It shall be speeded well. [Exit.]

Enter VARRIUS.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste: 11

Come, we will walk. There's other of our friends

Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius.

[Exeunt.]

[SCENE VI. Street near the city gate.Enter ISABELLA and MARIANA.

Isab. To speak so indirectly I am loth:
I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part: yet I am advis'd to do it;
He says, to veil full purpose.

Mari. Be rul'd by him.

Isab. Besides, he tells me that, if peradventure
He speak against me on the adverse side,
I should not think it strange; for 'tis a physic
That's bitter to sweet end.

Mari. I would Friar Peter—

Isab. O, peace! the friar is come.

Enter FRIAR PETER.

Fri. P. Come, I have found you out a stand most fit, 10
Where you may have such vantage on the duke,
He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets sounded;

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent³ the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering: therefore, hence, away!

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Before the gates of Vienna. Flourish of trumpets and drums.

Enter from one side, DUKE, VARRIUS, Lords, Officers; from the city gates, Soldiers, then ANGELO and ESCALUS, LUCIO, PROVOST, &c. At the back, FRIAR PETER, ISABELLA, and MARIANA veiled.

[Angelo and Escalus kneel and deliver up their commissions, which the Duke hands to an Officer. Angelo and Escalus rise.]

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met!
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. } Happy return be to your royal grace!
Escal. }

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both.

We have made inquiry of you; and we hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
Forerunning more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; [and I should wrong it,
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom, 10
When it deserves, with characters of brass,
A fortified residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And rature of oblivion.] Give me your hand,

And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within. Come, Escalus, [Takes the hands of both of them, placing Angelo on one side of him, Escalus on the other.]

¹ Blench, start off. ² Trumpets, trumpeters.

³ Hent, seized, taken possession of.

You must walk by us on our other hand;
And good supporters are you.

FRIAR PETER and ISABELLA come forward.

Fri. P. Now is your time: speak loud and kneel before him. 19

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Vail¹ your regard [Kneeling.

Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid!
O worthy prince, dishonour not your eye

By throwing it on any other object
Till you have heard me in my true complaint,
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs; in what? by whom? be brief.

Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil:
Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you: hear me, O, hear me, here! 32

Ang. My lord, her wits, I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother
Cut off by course of justice,—

Isab. By course of justice! [Rising.

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly and strange.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will
I speak:

That Angelo's forsworn; is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer; is't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief, 40
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer he is Angelo
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her! Poor soul,
She speaks this in the infirmity of sense.

[The Officers are about to seize her;
she waves them back.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believ'st
There is another comfort than this world,

That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness! Make not impossible 51

That which but seems unlike: 't is not impossible.

But one, the wicked'st caitiff on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute
As Angelo; even so may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characts,² titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain. Believe it, royal prince:
If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
If she be mad,—as I believe no other,— 60
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As³ e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O gracious duke,
Harp not on that; nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
And hide the false, seems true.⁴

Duke. Many that are not mad Have, sure, more lack of reason. What would you say?

Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
Condemn'd upon the act of fornication 70
To lose his head; condemn'd by Angelo:
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the messenger,—

Lucio. [Comes down, taking his cap off to the Duke] That's I, an't like your grace:

I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.

Isab. That's he indeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord;
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven you then
Be perfect. 82

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed
to't.

² Characts, i.e. characters, distinctive marks.

³ As, i.e. that.

⁴ The false, seems true, i.e. the false that seems true.

¹ Vail, lower.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale,—

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are i' the wrong

To speak before your time. [Lucio bows and retires.] Proceed.

Isab. I went

To this pernicious caitiff deputy,—

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it;

The phrase is to the matter. 90

Duke. Mended again. The matter; proceed.

Isab. In brief, to set the needless process by, How I persuaded, how I pray'd, and kneel'd, How he refell'd¹ me, and how I replied,— For this was of much length,—the vile conclusion

I now begin with grief and shame to utter: He would not, but by gift of my chaste body To his concupiscible intemperate lust, Release my brother; and, after much debate-ment, 99

My sisterly remorse² confutes mine honour, And I did yield to him: but the next morn betimes,

His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely!

Isab. O, that it were as like as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, fond wretch, thou know'st not what thou speak'st,

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour In hateful practice.³ First, his integrity Stands without blemish. Next, it imports no reason

That with such vehemency he should pursue Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended, He would have weigh'd thy brother by himself, And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you on: 112

Confess the truth, and say by whose advice Thou cam'st here to complain.

Isab. And is this all?

Then, O you blessed ministers above, Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time Unfold the evil which is here wrapt up

In countenance!⁴ Heaven shield your grace from woe, 118

As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbeliev'd go!

[Going.]

Duke. I know you'd fain be gone. An officer!

[The officers advance.]

To prison with her! Shall we thus permit A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall On him so near us? This needs must be a practice.

Who knew of your intent and coming hither?

Isab. One that I would were here, Friar Lodowick.

Duke. A ghostly father, belike. Who knows that Lodowick?

Lucio. My lord, I know him; 't is a meddling friar;

I do not like the man: had he been lay, my lord,

For certain words he spoke against your grace In your retirement, I had swunged⁵ him soundly. 120

Duke. Words against me! this'⁶ a good friar, belike!

And to set on this wretched woman here Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.

Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar,

I saw them at the prison: a saucy friar, A very scurvy fellow.

Fri. P. Blessed be your royal grace! I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard Your royal ear abus'd. First, hath this woman Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute, 140 Who is as free from touch or soil with her As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less. Know you that Friar Lodowick that she speaks of?

Fri. P. I know him for a man divine and holy;

Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler, As he's reported by this gentleman; And, on my trust, a man that never yet Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace.

Lucio. My lord, most villanously; believe it.

Fri. P. Well, he in time may come to clear himself; 150

¹ Refell'd (Latin, refello), rebutted.

² Remorse, pity.

³ Practice, plotting.

⁴ Countenance, false appearance, hypocrisy.

⁵ Swinged, whipt

⁶ This', i.e., this is

But at this instant he is sick, my lord, 151
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint

Intended 'gainst Lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know

Is true and false; and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full clear,
Whensoever he's convented.¹ First, for this woman,

To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly² and personally accus'd, 160
Her shall you hear disproved to her eyes,
Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let's hear it.
[Exit Isabella, guarded.]

Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats. [The attendants bring two chairs of state from within the city gates.]

Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause.

[Mariana advances, veiled. Duke and Angelo seat themselves.]

Is this the witness, friar?

O heaven, the vanity of wretched fools!
Give us some seats. [The attendants bring two chairs of state from within the city gates.]
Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause.

First, let her show her face, and after speak. 170

Mari. Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face

Duke. What, are you married?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then?

Mari. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you are nothing, then: neither 180

maid, widow, nor wife?
Lucio. [Behind Duke's chair.] My lord, she may be a punk; for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow: I would he had some cause

To prattle for himself.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Mari. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married;

And I confess, besides, I am no maid:
I have known my husband; yet my husband knows not

That ever he knew me.

Lucio. He was drunk, then, my lord: it can be no better.

Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert so too! 191

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

Mari. Now I come to't, my lord:

She that accuses him [of fornication,]
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband;
And charges him, my lord, with such a time
When I'll depose I had him in mine arms
[With all the effect of love.]

Ang. Charges she more than me?

Mari. Not that I know.

Duke. No? you say your husband. 201

Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,

[Who thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body,

But knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's.];

Ang. This is a strange abuse.³ Let's see thy face.

Mari. My husband bids me; now I will unmask. [Unveils.]

This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once thou swor'st was worth the looking
on; 208

This is the hand which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine; this is the body
That took away the match from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house⁴
In her imagin'd person.

Duke. Know you this woman?

Lucio. [Behind chair] Carnally, she says.

Duke. Sirrah, no more!

Lucio. Enough, my lord. [Goes to Peter.]

Ang. My lord, I must confess I know this woman:

And five years since there was some speech of marriage

Betwixt myself and her; which was broke off,
Partly for that her promised proportions⁵

³ Abuse, deception, delusion.

⁴ Garden-house, summer-house.

⁵ Proportions, shares of real and personal estate, i.e. marriage portion.

¹ Convented, summoned.

² Vulgarly, publicly.

Came short of composition;¹ but in chief 220
 For that her reputation was disvalued
 In levity: since which time of five years
 I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,

Upon my faith and honour.

Mari. [Kneeling] Noble prince,
 As there comes light from heaven and words
 from breath,

As there is sense in truth and truth in virtue,
 I am affianc'd this man's wife as strongly

As words could make up vows: [and, my good lord,

But Tuesday night last gone in's garden-house
 He knew me as a wife.] As this is true, 230

Let me in safety raise me from my knees;
 Or else for ever be confixed² here,

A marble monument! [Rises.]

Ang. [Starting up] I did but smile till now:
 Now, good my lord, give me the scope of
 justice;

My patience here is touch'd. I do perceive
 These poor informal³ women are no more
 But instruments of some more mightier member

That sets them on: let me have way, my lord,
 To find this practice out.

Duke. Ay, with my heart;
 And punish them to your height of pleasure.

[Rises.]
 Thou foolish friar, and thou pernicious woman, Compact⁴ with her that's gone, think'st thou thy oaths, 242

Though they would swear down each particular saint,

Were testimonies against his worth and credit,
 That's seal'd in approbation? You, Lord

Escalus,
 Sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains
 To find out this abuse, whence 't is deriv'd.

There is another friar that set them on;
 Let him be sent for.

Fri. P. Would he were here, my lord! for he, indeed, 250

Hath set the women on to this complaint:
 Your provost knows the place where he abides,
 And he may fetch him.

Duke.

Go do it instantly.

[Exit Provost.]

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin,
 Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
 Do with your injuries as seems you best,
 In any chastisement: I for a while will leave
 you; 258

But stir not you till you have well determin'd
 Upon these slanderers.

Escal. My lord, we'll do it thoroughly.

[Exit Duke. Angelo and Escalus sit.]
 Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Lucio. Cucullus non facit monachum.⁵ honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villanous speeches of the duke.

Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come, and enforce them against him:
 we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word. 269

Escal. [To an Officer] Call that same Isabel here once again: I would speak with her.
[Exit Officer through city gates.] Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I'll handle her.

[Lucio. Not better than he, by her own] report.

Escal. Say you?

Lucio. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly, she'll be ashamed.

Escal. I will go darkly to work with her.

Lucio. That's the way; for women are light at midnight.] 281

Re-enter Officer with ISABELLA.

Escal. [To Isabella] Come on, mistress:
 here's a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of; here with the provost.

Escal. In very good time: speak not you to him till we call upon you.

Lucio. Mum.

Re-enter PROVOST, with the DUKE in his friar's habit.

Escal. Come, sir: did you set these women

¹ Composition, agreement.

² Confixed, fixed.

³ Informal, insane.

⁴ Compact, leagued

⁵ "The cow! does not make the monk."

on to slander Lord Angelo? they have confessed you did. 291

Duke. 'T is false.

Escal. How! know you where you are?

Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the devil

Be sometime honour'd for his burning throne! Where is the duke? 't is he should hear me speak.

Escal. The duke's in us; and we will hear you speak:

Look you speak justly.

Duke. Boldly, at least. But, O, poor souls, Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox? Good night to your redress! Is the duke gone? Then is your cause gone too. The duke's unjust, 302

Thus to retort¹ your manifest appeal, And put your trial in the villain's mouth Which here you come to accuse.

Lucio. This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.

Escal. Why, thou unreverend and unhal-low'd friar,

Is't not enough thou hast suborn'd these women To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth, And in the witness of his proper ear, 310 To call him villain? and then to glance from him

To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice? Take him hence; [Officers advance] to the rack with him! We'll touse² you Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose. What, unjust?

Duke. Be not so hot; the duke Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he Dare rack his own: his subject am I not, Nor here provincial.³ My business in this state Made me a looker-on here in Vienna, 319 Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble Till it o'er-run the stew; laws for all faults, But faults so countenanc'd, that the strong statutes Stand like the forfeits in a barber's shop, As much in mock as mark.

Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to prison!

[Two Officers approach the Duke.]

Ang. What can you vouch against him, Signior Lucio? Is this the man that you did tell us of?

Lucio. 'T is he, my lord. Come hither, good-man baldpate: do you know me? 329

[They advance towards each other.]

Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably, sir.

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a fleshmonger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be? 338

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest I love the duke as I love myself.

Ang. Hark, how the villain would close⁴ now, after his treasonable abuses!

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talked withal. Away with him to prison! Where is the provost? [Provost advances.] Away with him to prison! lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more. Away with those giglots⁵ too, and with the other confederate companion!

[Officers advance to seize Isabella and Mariana. The Provost arrests the Duke.]

Duke. [To Provost] Stay, sir; stay awhile.

Ang. What, resists he? Help him, Lucio.

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; foh, sir! Why, you bald-pated, lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knave's visage, with a pox to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour! Will't not off? 360

[Pulls off the friar's hood, and discovers the Duke. Angelo and Escalus start up from their seats. Lucio steps back amazed.]

Duke. Thou art the first knave that e'er mad'st a duke.

¹ Retort, refer back.

² Touse, tear.

³ Provincial, under the jurisdiction of this ecclesiastical province.

⁴ Close, come to an agreement, make reparation.

⁵ Giglots, wantons.

First, provost, let me bail these gentle three.

[Officers release Isabella and Mariana.

Lucio is stealing away.

[To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and you Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him.

[Officers seize Lucio and bring him back.

Lucio. This may prove worse than hanging.

Duke. [To Escalus] What you have spoke

I pardon: sit you down:

We'll borrow place of him. [To Angelo] Sir, by your leave.

[Takes Angelo's chair. Escalus sits. Hast thou or word, or wit, or impudence,

Duke. Thou art the first knave that e'er mad'st a duke —(Act v. 1. 361.)

That yet can do thee office?¹ If thou hast,
Rely upon it till my tale be heard, 370
And hold no longer out.

Ang. O my dread lord,
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness,
To think I can be undiscernible,
When I perceive your grace, like power divine,
Hath look'd upon my passes.² Then, good prince,

No longer session hold upon my shame,
But let my trial be mine own confession:
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg.

Duke. Come hither, Mariana.

[Mariana advances.

Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?

Ang. I was, my lord.

381

Duke. Go take her hence, and marry her instantly. [Angelo goes to Mariana.

Do you the office, friar; which consummate,
Return him here again. Go with him, provost.

[Exeunt Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter, and Provost through the city gates.

Escal. My lord, I am more amaz'd at his dishonour

Than at the strangeness of it.

Duke. Come hither, Isabel.

[Duke and Escalus rise.

[Your friar is now your prince: as I was then;
Advertising³ and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.]

¹ Do thee office, i.e. do thee service.

² Passes, proceedings.

³ Adverting, i.e. assisting with counsel.

Isab. O, give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd¹
Your unknown sovereignty!

Duke. You are pardon'd, Isabel:
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.
Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;
And you may marvel why I obscur'd myself,
Labouring to save his life, and would not rather
Make rash remonstrance² of my hidden power
Than let him so be lost. O most kind maid,
It was the swift celerity of his death,
Which I did think with slower foot came on,
That brain'd my purpose. But peace be with
him! 401

That life is better life, past fearing death,
Than that which lives to fear: make it your comfort,
So happy is your brother.

Isab. I do, my lord.

*Re-enter ANGELO, MARIANA, FRIAR PETER,
and PROVOST.*

Duke. For this new-married man, approaching here,
Whose salt³ imagination yet hath wrong'd
Your well-defended honour, you must pardon
For Mariana's sake: but as he adjudg'd your brother,—

Being criminal, in double violation
Of sacred chastity, and of promise-breach 410
Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,—
The very mercy of the law cries out
[Most audible, even from his proper tongue,]
"An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!"

Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure;
Like doth quit like, and MEASURE still FOR MEASURE.

{ [Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested;
Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee
vantage.]

We do condemn thee to the very block
Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste. 420
Away with him!

[Officers advance and stand by Angelo's side.

¹ Pain'd, put to labour.

² Remonstrance, demonstration.

³ Salt, lustful.

Mari. [O my most gracious lord,
I hope you will not mock me with a husband.]

Duke. It is your husband mock'd you with a husband.

Consenting to the safeguard of your honour,
I thought your marriage fit; else imputation,
For that he knew you, might reproach your life,
And choke your good to come: for his possessions,

Although by confutation⁴ they are ours,
We do instate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband.]

Mari. O my dear lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man. 431

Duke. Never crave him; we are definitive.⁵
Mari. [Kneeling] Gentle my liege,—

Duke. You do but lose your labour.
Away with him to death! [[To Lucio] Now,
sir, to you.]

[Officers about to remove Angelo.]

Mari. O my good lord! Sweet Isabel, take my part;

Lend me your knees, and all my life to come
I'll lend you all my life to do you service.

Duke. Against all sense you do importune
her:

Should she kneel down in mercy of this fact,
Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror.

Mari. Isabel, 441
Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me;
Hold up your hands, say nothing; I'll speak
all.

They say, best men are moulded out of faults;
And, for the most, become much more the better
For being a little bad: so may my husband.
O Isabel, will you not lend a knee?

Duke. He dies for Claudio's death.

Isab. [Kneeling] Most bounteous sir,
Look, if it please you, on this man condemn'd,
As if my brother liv'd. I partly think 450
A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me: since it is so,
Let him not die. My brother had but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died.
For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent

⁴ Confutation, conviction.

⁵ Definitive, resolved.

That perish'd by the way: thoughts are no subjects,
 Intents but merely thoughts.

Mari. Merely, my lord.

Duke. Your suit's unprofitable; stand up,

I say. [Mariana and Isabella rise.]

I have bethought me of another fault. 461

Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded
 At an unusual hour?

Prov. It was commanded so.

Duke. Had you a special warrant for the deed?

Prov. No, my good lord; it was by private message.

Duke. For which I do discharge you of your office:

Give up your keys.

Prov. Pardon me, noble lord:

I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;

Yet did repent me, after more advice:¹ 469

For testimony whereof, one in the prison,
 That should by private order else have died,
 I have reserv'd alive.

Duke. What's he?

Prov. His name is Barnardine.

Duke. I would thou hadst done so by Claudio.
 Go fetch him hither; let me look upon him.

[Exit Provost. Duke talks apart with Isabella.]

Escal. I am sorry, one so learned and so wise
 As you, Lord Angelo, have still appear'd,
 Should slip so grossly, both in the heat of blood,
 And lack of temper'd judgment afterward.

Ang. I am sorry that such sorrow I procure:
 And so deep sticks it in my penitent heart
 That I crave death more willingly than mercy;
 'Tis my deserving, and I do entreat it. 482

Re-enter from the city, PROVOST, with BARNARDINE, CLAUDIO muffled, and JULIET.

Duke. Which is that Barnardine?

Prov. This, my lord.

Duke. There was a friar told me of this man.
 Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
 That apprehends no further than this world,
 And squar'st thy life according. Thou'rt condemn'd:

But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;
 And pray thee take this mercy to provide

For better times to come. Friar, advise him;
 I leave him to your hand. [Exeunt Barnardine and Friar into the city.] What muffled fellow's that? 491

Prov. This is another prisoner that I sav'd,
 Who should have died when Claudio lost his head;

As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Begins to unmuffle Claudio.]

Duke. [To Isabella] If he be like your brother,
 For his sake

Is he pardon'd,—[Claudio discovers himself to Isabella—she rushes into his arms, and then kneels to Angelo,—] and, for your lovely sake;

Give me your hand, [raising her] and say you will be mine,

He is my brother too: [taking Claudio's hand]
 but fitter time for that.

By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe;

[Crossing to Angelo.]

Methinks I see a quickening in his eye. 500

Well, Angelo, your evil quits you well:

Look that you love your wife; her worth worth yours.

I find an apt remission in myself;
 And yet here's one in place² I cannot pardon.
 [To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool, a coward,

One all of luxury, an ass, a madman;
 Wherein have I so deserv'd of you,
 That you extol me thus?

Lucio. Faith, my lord, I spoke it but according to the trick. If you will hang me for it, you may; but I had rather it would please you I might be whipt. 512

Duke. Whipt first, sir, and hang'd after.
 Proclaim it, provost, round about the city,
 If any woman's wrong'd by this lewd fellow,
 As I have heard him swear himself there's one

Whom he begot with child, let her appear,
 And he shall marry her: the nuptial finish'd,
 Let him be whipt and hang'd. 519

Lucio. [I beseech your highness, do not marry me to a whore!] Your highness said even now, I made you a duke: good my lord, do not recompense me in making me a cuckold.

¹ Advice, consideration.

² In place, present.

Duke. Upon mine honour, thou shalt marry her.

Thy slanders I forgive; and therewithal
Remit thy other forfeits. Take him to prison;

[Officers seize Lucio.]

And see our pleasure herein executed.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping and hanging.

Duke. Slandering a prince deserves it. 530

[Exeunt Officers with Lucio.]

She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.

Joy to you, Mariana! Love her, Angelo:
I have confess'd her, and I know her virtue.
Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much goodness:

There's more behind that is more grate. 1
Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy:

We shall employ thee in a worthier place.

Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home
The head of Ragozine for Claudio's:

The offence pardons itself. Dear Isabel, 540

[Taking her hand and kissing it.]

I have a motion much imports your good;

Whereto if you'll a willing ear incline,

What's mine is yours, and what is yours is mine.

So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show
What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

[Exeunt.]

¹ Gratulate, gratifying.

NOTES TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

1. Line 5: Since I am PUT to know.—Compare Cymbeline, ii 3. 110:

You put me to forget a lady's manners.

2 Line 6: the LISTS of all advice, i.e. the limits. Compare I. Henry IV. iv 1. 51, 52:

The very list, the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.

3. Lines 7-10:

then no more remains

*But that, to your sufficiency, as your worth is able,
And let them work.*

This clause in the Duke's first sentence has proved a more awkward stumbling-block to commentators than almost any passage in Shakespeare. The Cambridge editors chronicle twelve conjectural emendations in their foot-note, and five others in the supplementary notes at the end of the play. It has been proved, however, by the Old-Spelling editors that the lines as they stand are capable of explanation—an explanation, it is true, which leaves the whole passage (lines 3-9) an example of the most contorted and arbitrary syntax. I give their note: "The words 'my strength' include (1) the Duke's science, his knowledge of the properties of government; (2) his ducal authority, which is his sole prerogative. 'Your owne science,' he says to Escalus, 'exceedes in that' (in that province of my strength which embraces my administrative skill) all that my 'advice' (counsel) can give you. 'Then,' he continues, 'no more remains (is needful) but that (my strength per se, which is mine alone) to your sufficiency' (legal science),—your 'worth' (character and rank) making you fit for the post,—and you may henceforth let 'them' (your prior sufficiency and my now deputed power) work together."

[This explanation of the Old-Spelling editors seems to me quite as involved and obscure as the text which it professes to explain. It is evident that the text is corrupt, probably through there having been some interlineation in the MS. from which it was printed; nor can I believe that Shakespeare would have wished such a hideously unrhymical verse as line 8 to be spoken by any actor. If by my strength the Duke means "my power," or "my authority," we may imagine that the passage stood something like this:

then no more remains

But that [i.e. my strength] to add to your sufficiency,
And, as your worth is able, let them work.

The rest of line 9, The nature of our people, would then form an imperfect line by itself.—F. A. M.]

4. Line 11: the TERMS.—"Terms mean the technical language of the courts. An old book called Les Termes de la Ley (written in Henry the Eighth's time) was in Shakespeare's days, and is now, the accidence of young students in the law" (Blackstone).

5 Line 18: with special SOUL.—This metaphorical use of soul (meaning preference or regard) may be compared with a similar use of the word in The Tempest, iii 1. 42-46:

for several virtues

Have I lik'd several women, never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she ow'd
And put it to the foil

6. Line 31: proper; i.e. proprius, peculiar to one's self. Compare Timon, i 2 106, 107. "what better or properer can we call our own than the riches of our friends?" and below, in this play, v 1 110. "Faults proper to himself."

7. Line 41: use.—Use was in Shakespeare's time a customary word for interest. Compare Venus and Adonis, 788:

But gold that's put to use more gold begets.

8. Lines 41, 42:

But I do bend my speech

To one that can my part in him advertise.

The Duke has been giving Angelo advice; he now breaks off, intimating gracefully that, after all, he is speaking to one who can instruct him in such matters

9. Line 43: Hold, therefore, Angelo.—This is generally supposed to be spoken by the Duke as he hands his commission to Angelo. Grant White conjectures that a part of the line is lost, and he restores it thus:

Hold therefore, Angelo, our place and power;

basing his guess on i. 3. 11-13 below:

I have deliver'd to Lord Angelo . . .
My absolute power and place here in Vienna.

But this is juggling with the text, not editing. Dyce quotes Gifford, on the words "Hold thee, drunkard" (i.e. take the letter) in Jonson's Catiline: "There is no expression in the English language more common than this, which is to be found in almost every page of our old writers; yet the commentators on Shakespeare, with the exception of Steevens, who speaks doubtfully on the subject, misunderstand it altogether. In Measure for Measure, the Duke, on producing Angelo's commission, says: 'Hold, therefore, Angelo'" (Jonson's Works, vol. iv. p 347).

10. Lines 45, 46:

Mortality and mercy in Vienna

Live in thy tongue and heart.

Douce rightly emphasizes the importance of these words—"the privilege of exercising mercy," conferred by the Duke upon his deputy. See also lines 65-67 below:

your scope is as mine own,

So to enforce or qualify the laws

As to your soul seems good.

The Duke thus renders it impossible for Angelo to make the excuse—such as it would be—that his instructions were precise and without margin of mercy.

11. Line 52. We have with a LEAVEN'D and prepared choice—A leavened choice is explained by Johnson as one "not declared as soon as it fell into the imagination, but suffered to work long in the mind" The metaphor may no doubt have this meaning, as leaven or yeast does take some hours to ferment; but may it not mean as well, or more primarily, that the choice was based on a thorough and searching scrutiny, as leaven works up through and permeates the whole mass of dough?

12. Lines 68, 69:

*I love the people,
But do not like to STAGE me to their eyes*

Stage is used again as a verb in two passages of Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13 29-31:

Yes, like enough, high-battled Cæsar will Unstate his happiness, and be staged to the show Against a sword!

and v. 2. 216, 217:

the quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

13. Line 15. the thanksgiving BEFORE meat.—Hanmer reads after, and his reading, say the Cambridge editors, "is recommended by the fact that in the old forms of 'graces' used in many colleges, and, as we are informed, at the Inns of Court, the prayer for peace comes always after, and never before, meat. But as the mistake may easily have been made by Shakespeare, or else deliberately put into the mouth of the 'First Gentleman,' we have not altered the text"

14. Line 28: Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.—An expression, which may almost be termed proverbial for, We are both of one piece. Steevens cites Marston, The Malcontent, 1604: "There goes but a paire of sheeres betwixt an emperor and the sonne of a bagge-piper; onely the dying, dressing, pressing, glossing, makes the difference" (Works, vol. ii. p. 270). Compare, too, Dekker, The Gull's Hornbook, ch. i: "there went but a pair of shears between them."

15. Line 35: as be PIL'D, as thou art PIL'D.—"A quibble between piled=peeled, stripped of hair, bald (from the French disease), and piled as applied to velvet, three-piled velvet meaning the finest and costliest kind of velvet" (Dyce). Compare Chaucer, Prologue, line 627:

With skalled browes blake, and piled berd.

16. Line 39: forget to drink after thee.—That is, for fear of the contagion.

17. Lines 45, 46, 48.—These lines are given by Pope to the First Gentleman, and there is a good deal of probability in the surmise; still, it is only a probability; and, as the Cambridge editors remark, "It is impossible to discern any difference of character in the three speakers, or to introduce logical sequence into their buffoonery"

18. Line 52: A French crown; i.e. the corona Veneris. Compare Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 2. 99: "Some of your French crowns have no hair at all."

19. Line 84: the sweat.—This very likely refers to the plague or "sweating-sickness," which ravaged London in 1603, carrying off about a fifth of the population. The war, above, may also refer to the war with Spain, which came to an end in the autumn of 1604.

20. Lines 99, 100: ALL HOUSES in the SUBURBS of Vienna must be pluck'd down.—Tyrwhitt, quite unnecessarily, as I take it, would read all bawdy-houses. There is no doubt that this is meant, but when we remember who the speakers were, and how much a meaning look or an extra accent can convey, we may well suppose that Pompey said merely all houses, and that when he said houses Mrs. Overdone quite understood what he meant. As a matter of fact, houses of ill-fame were chiefly in the suburbs. Compare Heywood, The Rape of Lucrece, ii. 3: "Bru . . . he removes himself from the love of Brutus that shrinks from my side till we have had a song of all the pretty suburbanians" (p. 194)—a prelude to Valerius' rattling song of Molly, Nelly, Betty, Dolly, Nanny, Rachel, and Biddy.

21. Line 116: Thomas tapster.—Douce expresses his surprise that Mrs. Overdone "should have called the clown by this name when it appears by his own showing that his name was Pompey." But of course it is a mere class-name, no more peculiar to one man than John Barley-corn or Tommy Atkins. For a contemporary instance of the precise alliterative form, compare Fletcher's Rollo, iii. 1 (end of scene), where a song, expanded from the Three merry men snatch, is sung by a Yeoman or "Page of the Cellar," a Butler, a Cook, and a Pantler. The last sings:

O man or beast, or you at least that wear a brow or antler,
Prick up your ears unto the tears of me poor Paul the Pantler.

22. Line 119.—The Folio after this line begins a new scene (Scena Tertia) with the entrance of the Provost, &c. The Collier MS omits Juliet from the persons who enter here, since, if present, she is silent, and, as appears from Claudio's words to Lucio, out of sight and hearing. Yet Pompey has just said, "There's Madam Juliet." The Cambridge editors "suppose that she was following at a distance behind, in her anxiety for the fate of her lover. She appears again," they add, "as a mute personage at the end of the play."

[It looks very much here as if the author had originally intended to make some use of Julietta or Juliet in this scene, but in the course of working it out had changed that intention. It is evident, from act ii. scene 3, that Juliet was arrested as well as Claudio, and that, for some time at any rate, she was kept "under observation." In the acting edition Juliet does not come on with the Provost and Claudio; but there is no reason why she should not be on the stage; for it is quite clear that the dialogue between Lucio and Claudio is spoken aside. Only one would certainly expect, if Juliet were at that time present on the stage, that Claudio would have made some allusion to the fact.—F. A. M.]

23. Lines 124-127:

*Thus can the demigod Authority
Make us pay down for our offence by weight.
The words of heaven:—on whom it will, it will;
On whom it will not, so; yet still 't is just.*

In the Ff. there is no stop after weight, and this pointing is preserved in the Cambridge Shakespeare. Davenant, in his Law Against Lovers, gives the reading in the text, and he has been generally followed. He omits the next two lines altogether. Dr. Roberts, Provost of Eton, conjectured that "The words of heaven" should be "The sword of heaven." Henley, however, explains the passage as it stands, by an apt reference to the words in Romans ix. 15, 18: "For He saith to Moses, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy;" and "Therefore hath He mercy on whom He will have mercy, and whom He will He hardeneth."

24. Line 133. Like rats that RAVIN down their proper bane.—Compare Macbeth, ii. 4. 28, 29:

Thrifless ambition, that will ravin up
Thine own life's means!

and Cymbeline, i. 6. 49: "ravining first the lamb."

25. Line 138. the MORALITY of imprisonment.—Ff. have mortality, an obvious misprint, rectified by Davenant, and adopted into the text by Rowe.

26. Line 152: the denunciation.—This word, meaning proclamation or formal declaration ("To denounce or declare," Minshew, 1617), is only used here by Shakespeare. Dyce quotes from Todd's Johnson's Dictionary, s.v. Denunciation, "This publick and reiterated denunciation of banns before matrimony" (Hall, Cases of Conscience) Boyer (French Dictionary) has "To Denounce, V.A. (or declare) dénoncer, déclarer, signifier, faire savoir," and "Denunciation, or Denouncing, S. Dénociation, déclaration, Signification, l'Action de dénoncer, &c."

27. Line 154: Only for PROPAGATION of a dower.—F. 1 has propagation, corrected to propagation by F. 2. Various emendations have been proposed, e.g. prorogation by Malone, procurator by Jackson, and preservation by Grant White. Surely there is no need for any change in the text. Shakespeare does not use the substantive in any other passage; but he uses the verb to propagate three times, in All's Well, ii. 1. 200; Rom. and Jul. i. 1. 198; Timon, i. 1. 67. In these three passages it certainly seems to have the sense of "to improve" or "to increase." Only once, in Pericles, i. 2. 73:

From whence an issue I might propagate,

Shakespeare uses the verb in the sense of "to beget." Steevens, in his note, makes the curious statement,—apparently on the authority of an article in the Edinburgh Magazine, November, 1786,—that "Propagation being here used to signify payment, must have its root in the Italian word pagare" (Var. Ed. vol. ix. p. 24). Propagate is derived from the Latin pro, before, forward, and pag, the root of pango, to fix. But surely either "increase," or "bring to its maturity," is the sense which best suits this passage; the meaning being that Claudio and Juliet had not declared their marriage because her dower yet remained in the absolute control of her friends; and, till their approval was gained, the two lovers thought it best to hide their love in case she should lose her dower.—F. A. M.

28. Line 162: Whether it be the FAULT AND GLIMPSE of newness.—Malone explains this by assuming fault and glimpse to be used, by the figure known as hendiadys, for faulty glimpse. But may not the fault of newness mean simply the result of novelty and inexperience?

29. Line 171: like unscour'd armour.—Compare Troilus and Cressida, iii. 3. 152, 153:

Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery.

30. Line 172: nineteen zodiacs.—Claudio states here that the law has been in abeyance for nineteen years; in i. 3. 21 the Duke says that he has let it slip for fourteen years. No satisfactory explanation of this disagreement has been found before Dr. Brinsley Nicholson's acute suggestion, recorded in the Old-Spelling Shakspeare, that the law was made nineteen years ago, but that the duke has reigned only fourteen years.

31. Line 177: tickle.—Tickle for ticklish is used again by Shakespeare in II. Henry VI. i. 1. 215, 216:

the state of Normandy

Stands on a tickle point

32. Line 183: receive her approbation; i.e. enter upon her probation. Compare The Merry Devil of Edmonton, ii. 2. 70:

And I must take a twelve month's approbation;

and iii. 1. 17, 18:

Madam, for a twelve month's approbation
We mean to make this trial of our child.

33. Line 185. in my voice; i.e. in my name. Compare As You Like It, ii. 4. 87:

And in my voice most welcome shall you be.

34. Line 188: There is a PRONE and speechless dialect.—Editors are much at variance as to the exact sense of the word prone as here used, some taking it to mean "prompt, ready," and others (as I think with more likelihood) understanding it as "humble, appealing," from the analogy of prone=prostrate, as in supplication.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

35. Line 2: DRIBBLING dart.—The sense is evident: a weak and ineffectual missile. But while dribbling may be used figuratively in its modern sense, it is perhaps an allusion to a drubber in archery, i.e., according to Steevens, one who shoots badly.

36. Line 12: stricture; i.e. strictness. Warburton proposes strict ure (ure=use, practice); a word used in Promos and Cassandra, but not anywhere by Shakespeare.

37. Lines 20, 21:

The needful bits and curbs to headstrong WEEDS,
Which for this fourteen years we have let SLIP.

This, which is the reading of the Ff., is frequently altered by editors (following Theobald) from weeds to steeds, and from slip to sleep. Mr. W. G. Stone writes me on this passage: "Shakespeare was careless in linking metaphors. I think it possible that he combined the idea of a well-bitted horse (literally equivalent to enforcement of law), and the picture of a rank, noisome growth of weeds, suffered to spring up in a fair garden (literally equivalent to relaxation of law). I do not evade the difficulty by accepting Collins's suggestion (quoted in Schmidt's Sh.

Lex. s.v. Weed) that weed is a term still commonly applied to an ill-conditioned horse; because this term denotes, I believe, a weak horse; and if weeds=horses, the context shows that they are figured as robust animals. Sleep is a specious emendation,—more consistent, no doubt, with the metaphor of an old, drowsy lion,—but sleep=let pass, makes sense.”

38 Lines 26, 27:

*in time the rod's
More mock'd than fear'd.*

Ff. read

in time the rod
More mock'd than fear'd.

The Cambridge editors adopt Pope's conjecture and read the rod BECOMES more mock'd. The reading in the text is that adopted by the Old-Spelling editors, on the ground that becomes was not so likely to be overlooked as the inconspicuous 's' after rod, which gives the same sense

39. Line 30: The baby beats the nurse.—"This allusion," says Steevens, "was borrowed from an ancient print, entitled The World turn'd Upside Down, where an infant is thus employed." It may be questioned whether Shakespeare's powers of observation and invention were ever at so low a zero as to oblige him to "borrow from an ancient print" when he wanted to speak of a baby beating its nurse.

40 Lines 42, 43:

*And yet my nature never in the fight,
To do it slander.*

Ff. To do IN slander. The correction is Hammer's, it referring to nature Sight instead of fight is adopted by many editors, after Pope.

41 Lines 47, 48:

*How I may formally in person BEAR
Like a true friar*

So Ff. It is almost universally altered by modern editors, after Capell, to bear me Furnivall and Stone read bear, adopting Schmidt's explanation, that it means "behave."

42. Line 51: Stands at a guard with.—This probably means, "stands on his guard against," is careful not to lay himself open.

ACT I. SCENE 4.

43. Line 30: Sir, make me not your story.—This admirable expressive phrase, perfectly obvious in meaning ("make me not your jest"), has been oddly misunderstood by some editors, who have altered story to "scorn," and even "sport." Compare Merry Wives, v. 5. 170, where Falstaff, jeered at by his expected dupes, replies: "Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me."

44. Lines 31-33:

*though 't is my familiar sin
With maids to SEEM THE LAPWING and to jest,
Tongue far from heart.*

The allusion here is probably to the lapwing's way of deceiving sportsmen by running along the ground for some distance before taking wing. Compare Comedy of Errors, iv. 2. 27, 28:

Far from her nest the lapwing cries away:

My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse;

and see note 101 on that play.

45. Line 40: Your brother and his LOVER.—Lover in Shakespeare's time was used for a woman as well as a man. Compare As You Like It, iii. 4. 43: "O, that's a brave man! he writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, athwart the heart of his lover." Coles, in his Latin Dictionary, has: "A Lover, amator, amasius, m. amatriz, amasia, fem."

46 Lines 51, 52:

*Bore many gentlemen, myself being one,
In hand and hope of action.*

To bear in hand means, according to Schmidt, "to abuse with false pretences or appearances" Compare Much Ado, iv. 1. 305: "What, bear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then, with public accusation," &c.

47. Line 60: But doth REBATE and blunt his natural edge.—I am indebted to Mr. Stone for the following note on this word: "Cotgrave (ed. 1632) has: 'RABATRE. To abate, deduct, defaulke, diminish, lessen, extenuate; remit, bate; give or draw backe; also, a horse to rebate his curvet . . . RABATRE: m. ue. f. Rebated, bated, abated, deducted, defaulcated, diminished; given, taken, or drawne backe' Under Rabatre Boyer (ed. 1729) has: 'Cheval qui rabat ses Courbettes de bonne grace, (en Termes de Menage), a Horse that rebates his curvets handsomely, or finely.' Amongst the senses of 'Rabatre, v. a.' Bellows (Fr. Dict. ed. 1877) gives, 'aplatir, to flatten,' and 'Rabattu—e, a. flattened: smoothed.' Bellows's gloss admits of literal application to this line—for an edge flattened is blunted—but I think that Cotgrave's renderings—and you will observe that he uses the English rebate—are near enough; for, if an edge be abated, diminished, or lessened, clearly it is blunted. Compare Greene's Orlando Furioso:

And what I dare, let say the Portingale,
And Spanard tell, who, mann'd with mighty fleets,
Came to subdue their islands to my king,
Filling our seas with stately argosies,
Calvars and magars, hulks of burden great;
Which Brandimart rebated from his coast,
And sent them home ballast'd with their wealth.

—Works, ed. Dyce, 1861, p. 90, col. 2.

This is the city of great Babylon,

Which proud Darius was rebated from. —id. p. 101, col. 1.

Collier wanted to read rebutted for rebated in both these passages. Dyce says: "Mr. Collier is greatly mistaken:—the old copies are right in both passages. Greene uses rebate in the sense of beat back (which is its proper sense, —Fr. rebatre). So again in the first speech of the next play [a Looking-Glass for London and England, p. 117, col. 1] we find,—

Great Jewry's God, that foild stout Benhadad,
Could not rebate the strength that Rassi brought," &c.

I suspect that Rolfe and Dyce are both wrong in connecting Eng. rebate with 'rebatre,' to beat back again. 'Rabatre' seems to be nearer the sense required." Compare Massinger, The Roman Actor, iv. 2:

Esop Only, sir, a fool,
The point and edge rebatet, when you act,
To do the murder—

where the Quarto reads rebutted.

49 Line 38: Soon at night; i.e. "this very night" Compare Merry Wives, ii. 2. 295 and 298: "Come to me soon at night;" II Henry IV. v. 5 96: "I shall be sent for soon at night," &c. Better still, compare Othello, iii. 4 198 Bianca asks Cassio if she shall see him "soon at night." Returning shortly afterwards she says—with evident reference to this invitation: "An you'll come to supper to-night, you may," &c (iv. 1. 166).

ACT II. SCENE 1.

[The Provost, according to Ff., is not on at the beginning of this scene, but is made to enter at line 32, just before Angelo says, "Where is the Provost?" This is very absurd; and it is much better that he should go on at the beginning of the scene, as marked by Capell and in the stage-directions of the Acting Edition.

In the arrangement of the play as acted at Drury Lane, 1824, under Macready's management, this act is thus rearranged for stage purposes. Scene 1 consists of the first part of Scene 1 as far as line 37, after which Escalus goes off; and the rest of the scene includes Scene 2 in the text, commencing with the Provost's speech, line 7, to the end of scene. Scene 2 is the scene in the street, and contains nearly all that part of Scene 1 in the text from line 41 to line 279 inclusive. Elbow enters with his halbert and two constables having hold of Pompey and Froth; Escalus enters with two apparitors immediately after Elbow's speech; and the scene continues much as in the text, with a few omissions, including the part of the Justice, which is of course unnecessary. Scene 3 is omitted altogether; the third scene being identical with Scene 4 of the text.—F. A. M.]

49. Line 2: to fear; i.e. to affright. Used transitively several times in Shakespeare, e.g. Merchant of Venice, ii. 1. 8, 9:

I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath feard the valiant.

50. Line 8: Let but your honour KNOW.—Johnson remarks: "To know is here to examine, to take cognizance. So in A Midsummer Night's Dream, i. 1. 67, 68:

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood."

51. Line 12: OUR blood.—So Ff. It is quite possible that this reading may be right, our meaning "our common blood," and so I let it stand; but few emendations seem more reasonable and self-justified than that of Davenant's, adopted by Rowe, and followed by most editors—your. Mr. Stone suggests that "by exchanging your for our, when using a word which might have a general application to human frailty, Escalus avoided a too personal reference in a supposititious case."

52. Line 22: what knows the law, &c.—Ff. what knows the Lawes.

53. Line 23: 'Tis very PREGNANT.—Compare Cymbeline, iv. 2. 325: "O, 'tis pregnant, pregnant!" That is, "it is clearly evident."

54. Line 28: FOR I have had such faults—For=for that, i.e. because; often used by Shakespeare. Compare As You Like It, iii. 2. 133, 134:

Why should this a desert be?
For it is unpeopled? No.

55. Lines 39, 40:

*Some run from BREAKS of ice, and answer none;
And some condemned for a fault alone.*

Ff. read brakes. This, following the Old-Spelling editors, I take to be merely a variant of breaks. The following is their note, given at the end of the play: "The thought uppermost in Escalus's mind is the capricious manner in which punishment is inflicted. He compares this, apparently, to the luck which enables some to clear dangerous ground in the ice, but his metaphor is abruptly abandoned with the words and answer none, &c. The form brakes occurs in the epilogue of Marston and Webster's Malcontent, 1604, where brakes evidently means breaks, flaws; not, as Steevens supposed, brake-fern which grows on uncultivated ground:

Then let not too severe an eye peruse
The slighter brakes of our reformed Muse,
Who could herself herself of faults detect,
But that she knows 'tis easy to correct,
Though some men's labour, &c "

[This is one of the most difficult passages in the play, and marked with a dagger by the Globe edd. Steevens has a long and very interesting note, in the first part of which he explains the text thus: "Some run away from danger, and stay to answer none of their faults, whilst others are condemned only on account of a single frailty" (Var. Ed. vol. ix. p. 43), taking breaks to have the same meaning as that given above; but in the subsequent part of his note he produces very strong instances of the use of the word break in the sense of "a machine for torture," and if it has that meaning, we must adopt the emendation first given by Rowe and read "brakes of vice." This was adopted also by Malone, who followed Rowe chiefly on the ground that the words answer none, i.e. "are not called to account by their conscience," show that the "brakes of vice" evidently here mean "engines of torture." Brake originally meant a kind of severe bit, used for refractory horses, and also a contrivance, used by farriers to confine the legs of horses while they were being shod. I confess that to me the reading of the text is eminently unsatisfactory, though, no doubt, the explanation quoted above makes some sense of it. I cannot see the slightest connection between the idea of running from a dangerous place on ice, and the words answer none; nor does the ice metaphor seem to me to fit in at all with the rest of the passage. It may be that we should regard these two lines as being merely the sketch of some speech which Shakespeare intended to write; but against that theory we must set the fact that the two lines are supposed to form part of a rhyming quatrain, such as we come across occasionally in blank verse scenes (e.g. in Much Ado, iv. 1. 253-256). Such passages generally contain some very sententious expressions. It is worth noting that line 38 is printed in F. 1 in italics, as if it were a quotation, which very possibly it is. In the Quarto of Hamlet, 1603, many of the lines of the speech of Corambis

(Polonius) to Laertes in act i. sc. 3 are printed with inverted commas before them; and, in the Quarto of 1604, though none of the lines in the speech of Polonius to Laertes are so marked, three of the lines in the speech to Ophelia are. This rhymed quatrain, spoken by Escalus, was probably meant to embody some well-known apophthegms; and therefore the reading "brakes of vice" seems to me more suitable to the context; especially as Rowe's emendation involves such a very slight alteration of the text, and the misprint of ice for vice is one very likely to have occurred. I should take brakes to mean here not so much "engines of torture" as "means for restraint of vice," the general sense of the line being, "some escape from all restraints of vice and yet have to answer for none," while some are condemned for a single fault. We might have expected, in line 40, "for one fault alone;" but the author seems to have purposely avoided that because one would have rhymed to none at the end of the preceding line.—F. A. M.]

56 Line 54: precise villains.—Rolfé well remarks on this: "He means of course that they are precisely or literally villains; but, as Clarke notes, the word gives the impression of 'strict, severely moral,' as in i. 3 50 above. 'Lord Angelo is precise'"

57. Line 61. he's out at elbow—This, as Clarke observes, is "a hit at the constable's threadbare coat, and at his being startled and put out by Angelo's peremptory repetition of his name."

58. Line 63: PARCEL-bawd.—Parcel for part is again used by Shakespeare in II. Henry IV. ii. 1. 94: "Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet." It is met with not unfrequently in the dramatic literature of the period. Compare Day, Humour out of Breath, i. 1. 58–60:

Hip. My sister would make a rare beggar

Fran. True, she's parcel poet, parcel fiddler already; and they commonly sing three parts in one

59. Lines 69 and 75: detest—The same blundering use of detest for protest or attest is given to Mrs. Quickly in Merry Wives, i. 4. 130: "but, I detest, an honest maid as ever broke bread."

60. Line 92: stew'd prunes.—A dish proverbial in Elizabethan literature for its prevalence in brothels. It is referred to by Shakespeare in Merry Wives, i. 1. 296; I. Henry IV. iii. 1. 128; and II. Henry IV. ii. 4. 159.

61. Line 97: China dishes.—"A China dish, in the age of Shakespeare, must have been such an uncommon thing, that the Clown's exemption of it, as no utensil in use in a common brothel, is a striking circumstance in his absurd and tautological deposition" (Steevens).

62. Line 133: the Bunch of Grapes.—The practice of giving names to particular rooms in an inn seems to have been common. Compare I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 30: "Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon;" and see the London Prodigal, i. 2, where Sir Lancelot, stopping at the George, and entering, says: "This room shall serve;" and having given his order to the drawer for a pint of sack, the drawer recapitulates, "A quart of sack in the Three Tuns" (ed. Tauchnitz, p. 229). According to the Return of a Jury to a Writ of Elegit, 7 May, 43 Eliz., there was, in the Tabard, Southwark, "una alia camera vocata the flower de Luces" (Hall's Society in the Elizabethan Age, 2nd ed. appendix, p. 162).

63. Line 180: Justice or Iniquity?—Escalus is of course referring to Elbow and Pompey. Ritson thinks that by Iniquity is meant the old Vice of the Moralities. Compare Richard III. iii. 1. 82, 83:

Thus, like the formal Vice, Iniquity,
I moralize two meanings in one word,

and see note 305 to that play

64 Line 200: thou art to continue—Steevens suggests that Elbow, misinterpreting the language of Escalus, supposes that the Clown is to continue in confinement.

65. Line 215: they will draw you.—"Draw has here a cluster of senses. As it refers to the tapster, it signifies to drain, to empty; as it is related to hang ['they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them'], it means to be conveyed to execution on a hurdle" (Johnson). In Froth's reply, drawn in is probably equivalent to "taken in"

66 Line 228: the greatest thing about you—An allusion, it is generally supposed, to the "monstrous hose," as an old ballad calls them, or ridiculously large breeches, which were worn in the early part of Elizabeth's reign. See the lengthy note in the Variorum Shakespeare on this passage; and compare Romeo and Juliet, note 89.

67. Line 256: a bay.—Usually taken to mean the architectural term bay; i. e., according to Johnson, "the space between the main beams of the roof;" according to Dyce, a term used "in reference to the frontage." Boyer, in his French Dictionary, has "Bay or empty Place in Masonry for a Door or Window." Coles (Lat. Dict.) has "A bay of building, Mensura viginti quatuor pedum." Furnivall and Stone suggest "a partitioned space, box."

[Pope's most obvious emendation day for bay may be noticed, only because it is so obvious, and because Pompey, ceteris paribus, would be more likely to talk about "three pence a day" for a house than "three pence a bay," even were it, as Jonson says, a common term in many parts of England. It certainly would be more satisfactory if the commentators could have found any instance of bay being used distinctly as part of a house, and not, as in the only passage quoted by Steevens, as a term of measurement. If one could come across such an expression, for instance, as "a house with many bays in it" in any work of Shakespeare's time; or if we could discover any evidence of such a phrase so used in the vernacular, it would relieve one of the doubt which every editor must now feel that such an extremely common misprint of b for d may be really the only ground for admitting into the text what is a highly characteristic expression, and one which we certainly should not wish to get rid of for the sake of so ordinary a phrase as "three pence a day." Perhaps Pompey here only means by bay a room.—F. A. M.]

68. Line 275: YOUR readiness.—Ff. THE readiness; an evident misprint of the common contraction y' (your), which was taken for y' (the). The emendation is Pope's.

doubtless a misprint, though the Old-Spelling editors resolutely adhere to it. The correction was introduced by Hammer

80. Line 112: pelting.—Pelting, in the sense of pallry, is used several times by Shakespeare (e.g. Lear, ii. 3. 18. "Poor pelting villages"), and Steevens quotes the phrase "a pelting jade" from Lyly's Mother Bombye (1594), iv. 2. The passage runs: "If thou be a good hackneyman, take all our four bonds for the payment, thou knowest we are town-borne children, and will not shrinke the citie for a pelting jade" (Works, vol. ii. p. 128)

81. Lines 113, 114:

*Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder Merciful Heaven!*

Dyce arranged these lines, perhaps preferably, so as to leave Merciful Heaven! in a line to itself.

82. Line 122: As MAKES the angels weep—So Ff., usually altered to the modern grammatical make. But such constructions are not uncommon in Shakespeare; comp. Henry V. i. 2. 118, 119. They are apparently a survival of the Northern plural in -es. In some cases the plural noun may be regarded as equivalent, in thought, to the singular.

83. Line 126: We cannot weigh our brother with ourself.—This is not, as might be supposed at first sight, a reference of Isabella's to her own brother, but a general statement—our brother meaning "our fellow-man," whom she says we cannot weigh as we should, impartially, with ourselves, passing on each an equal judgment.

84. Line 132: Art avis'd o' that!—Avis'd is used several times by Shakespeare in the same sense as here (i.e. advised, aware); e.g. Merry Wives, i. 4. 106: "Are you avis'd o' that?"

85. Line 136: That SKINS the vice.—Shakespeare uses the word skin (as a verb) only here and in a very similar passage in Hamlet, iii. 4. 147: "It will but skin and flim the ulcerous place." In both places the verb has the meaning of "to cover with a skin;" not that which it usually has in our time, viz. "to take off the skin."

86. Line 149: shekels.—This word appears in the Ff. as sickles, a spelling used in Wyclif's Bible.

87. Line 154: dedicate.—This form of the participle is also used in II. Henry VI. v. 2. 37, 38:

He that is truly dedicate to war
Hath no self-love.

88. Line 172: evils; i.e. privies. Used again in Henry VIII. ii. 1. 67:

Nor build their evils on the graves of great men.

Henley remarks: "The desecration of edifices devoted to religion, by converting them to the most abject purposes of nature, was an Eastern method of expressing contempt. See 2 Kings, x. 27."

ACT II. SCENE 3.

89. Line 11: the flaws.—Here Warburton (after Davenant) reads flames, which is certainly a help to the metaphor, and was perhaps in the original text. But, as Johnson says of Warburton's emendations: "Who does not see that, upon such principles, there is no end of correction?"

90. Lines 30-34:

*but LEST you do repent,
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is always toward ourselves, not heaven,
Showing we would not SPARE heaven as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.*

This passage is so broken up by parentheses that it appears more obscure than it really is; and besides, there is an aposiopesis, for the sentence is not finished; the meaning, however, is tolerably clear. The Duke, in his assumed character of spiritual adviser, wishes to impress upon Juliet that her repentance, to be effective, should be based upon the sorrow that she feels for having offended God, and not on account of the shame which her sin has brought upon herself. F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 read least instead of lest, which is the correction of F. 4. Steevens calls it "a kind of negative imperative." The meaning is: "In case you only repent as that (= because) the sin has brought you to this shame;" and then he points out that the sorrow is merely selfish sorrow. The only difficulty in the remainder of the passage is the expression "spare heaven," which may mean either, as Malone explains it, "spare to offend heaven," or "spare heaven (i.e. God) the pain that sin causes to Him." Juliet interrupts the Duke at this point without letting him finish his advice in the sense above.—F. A. M.

91. Lines 40-42:

*Must die to-morrow! O injurious love,
That respites me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror!*

This passage is certainly very difficult to explain; Hammer's emendation law for love is a very plausible one, and gets rid of the difficulty in the simplest manner. The meaning then would be plain enough, Juliet exclaiming on the law which spares her life, but takes that of her lover. Johnson supposes Juliet to refer to the fact that her execution was respited on account of her pregnancy; but it does not appear that the law, so greedily revived by the immaculate Angelo, inflicted any penalty upon the woman, further than the disgrace involved in exposure. If we refer to scene 2 of this act (lines 16, 17):

Dispose of her
To some more fitter place; and that with speed;

and again, lines 23-25:

See you the fornicatress be remov'd:
Let her have needful, but not lavish, means;
There shall be order for't;

we find that Angelo does no more than direct that Juliet shall be taken care of till she has given birth to her child; but, if we refer to the story, we find that the penalty for the woman was that she "should ever after be infamously noted by the wearing of some disguised apparel" (Hazlitt's Shak. Lib. vol. iii. pt. 1, p. 156). It is possible, however, that Juliet may, in this passage, refer to her unborn child, which should be her comfort, but who will now only remind her of the horrid death of her lover.—F. A. M.

69 Lines 291, 292:

Just. Eleven, sir

Escal. I pray you home to dinner with me.

Rolfe cites Harrison's Description of England, ed Fumivall, p. 166: "With vs the nobilitie, gentrie, and students, doo ordinarilie go to dinner at eleuen before noone, and to supper at flue, or between flue and six at afternoone. The merchants dine and sup seldome before twelue at noone, and six at night especiallie in London. The husbandmen dine also at high noone as they call it, and sup at seuen or eight: but out of the tearme in our vniuersities the scholars dine at ten "

ACT II. SCENE 2.

70. Line 4: He hath but as offended in a dream!—Grant White reads, He hath offended but as in a dream—that being of course the sense; but why change? The beauty of the line is gone, and I scarcely see that it is even made appreciably clearer.

71. Line 40: To FINE the faults whose FINE stands in record.—Fine, both as verb and noun, is several times used by Shakespeare in the sense of general, not necessarily of pecuniary, punishment. It is used again in iii 1. 114, 115:

Why would he for the momentary trick
Be perdurably fin'd!

Compare Coriolanus, v. 6. 64, 65:

What faults he made before the last, I think
Might have found easy fin'es.

72. Line 58: But might you do't.—Might you may be merely a transposition of you might, perhaps for the sake of euphony. [In the Cambridge Shakespeare the passage is printed with a full stop at the end of the speech; but Ff. all agree in printing the sentence with a note of interrogation at the end after him. Walker (Critical Examination, &c., vol. ii. p. 250) suggested the emendation: "But you might do't," which the Cambridge editors should certainly have adopted if they altered the punctuation of the Ff. If the line is to be spoken as printed in the text it must be spoken as a question, or it would not be intelligible to the audience. I cannot see any reason why the author should not have written "But you might do't," if he did not mean Isabella to ask a question. The fact that this sentence begins, like that above in line 51, with But makes it probable that, like that also, it is intended to be interrogative. On the other hand Dyce, who adopts Walker's emendation and does away with the note of interrogation, points to Isabella's speech above (line 49):

Yes; I do think that you might pardon him.

—F. A. M.]

73. Line 58: May call it BACK again. Well, believe this.—F. 1 reads may call it againe;—back, which improves alike metre and sense, was added in F. 2.

Well, believe this, the reading of the F., is altered by Theobald to Well believe this (i.e. "be thoroughly assured of this"), and the reading is adopted by some editors. It is a very good reading, but the F. is, to say the least, quite as good, and I think better.

74. Line 76. If He, which is the TOP OF JUDGMENT.—Dyce quotes from Dante, Purgatorio, vi. 37:

Che cima di giudicio non s'avalla; precisely the same phrase, top of judgment. The word top is often used by Shakespeare to express the highest point; compare the Tempest, iii. 1. 38: "the top of admiration;" King John, iv. 3. 45-47:

This is the very top,

The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest,
Of murder's arms.

75. Line 79: Like man new made; i.e. in Johnson's common-sense phrase, "You would be quite another man." I think the references made by some commentators to Adam (as the man new made) are rather far-fetched.

[Most certainly I cannot see what Adam has to do with it; but may not new made here have the scriptural sense of "regenerated?" Shakespeare is in a decidedly theological vein of mind in this speech, and it is natural, having just spoken of the effect of the Redemption, he should have in his mind "regeneration," such as our Lord explained to Nicodemus (John iii. 3-8).—F. A. M.]

76. Line 90: The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept.—Holt White compares the maxim in law, Dormiunt aliquando leges, moriuntur nunquam

77. Line 92: If the first that did the edict infringe—Several emendations of this line have been proposed, where none is needed. It is one of those lines, so frequent in Shakespeare, and so ruthlessly handled by his editors, where the first unaccented half of the first foot is wanting. If we remember this—making sufficient pause on the first word to make it accentually equal to two syllables—and lay the accent of edict on the second syllable (as Shakespeare does whenever the measure requires it), we shall see that the line is strictly rhythmical and very expressive in its solemn slowness. [This is all quite true as far as the study is concerned, but no actor could speak the line, as it stands, with any effect. Of the various emendations suggested, the best perhaps is that of Capell's: "If he the first," and Grant White's: "If but the first." Davenant altered the line to "If he who first." Shakespeare is very fond of the phrase "If that," and it is quite possible that he first wrote "If that the first;" but, seeing he had too many thats in the sentence, struck out the that after If. Certainly, for stage purposes, the words If and first require to be emphasized. The emendation that would transpose the position of the last three words and read "infringe the edict," making the line end with a trochee, are, I think, much less probable. Out of eight passages in verse in which Shakespeare uses the word edict, including this one, it is accented five times on the second syllable.—F. A. M.]

78 Lines 94, 95:

Looks in a glass. and, like a prophet,

An allusion to the beryl-stone, in which it was supposed that the future might be seen, and the absent brought before the eyes. This picturesque superstition has been often utilized in romances and poems; the latest and greatest instance being Rossetti's ballad, "Rose Mary."

79. Line 99: But, ERE they live, to end.—Ff. print here,

ACT II. SCENE 4.

92. Line 9: Grown FEAR'D and tedious.—So Ff. Many editors read sear'd, after Hamner, and Collier states that such is actually the reading in Lord Ellesmere's copy of the First Folio. Fear'd means, no doubt, just what it says on the surface, for, as Johnson says, "what we go to with reluctance may be said to be fear'd."

93. Line 11: with boot.—This expression occurs again in Lear, v. 3. 301, and boot, in the same sense, is used several times by Shakespeare. The meaning, according to Schmidt, is "something given over," a difference of sense from boot, meaning "profit, advantage."

94. Line 17: 'Tis not the devil's crest.—This phrase is no doubt used ironically; and there is nothing in the expression so obscure as to give warrant for the two pages of annotation in the Variorum Shakespeare, and the conjectural emendations of Hamner and Johnson.

95. Line 27: The general.—This word, for "the people," occurs twice elsewhere in Shakespeare: Hamlet, ii. 2. 457: "caviere to the general;" and Julius Cæsar, ii. 1. 10-12:

and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general

96. Line 53: or —Ff and, an obvious error, corrected by Davenant, whose correction is adopted into the text by Rowe.

97. Line 56: I had rather give my body than my soul.—This is perhaps (? intentionally) misunderstood by Angelo; Isabella means, I had rather die (give my body to death) than thus forfeit my soul.

98. Line 75: Or seem so, CRAFTILY.—Ff. crafty; corrected by Rowe, after Davenant.

99. Line 76: Let ME be ignorant.—Me was omitted in F. 1, added in F. 2.

100. Lines 79, 80:

as THESE black masks

Proclaim an ENSHIELD beauty.

Various conjectures have been made as to the precise meaning of these black masks; but I think we may reasonably take the word these to be equivalent to no more than an emphatic the—as indeed was its original significance. Compare Romeo and Juliet, i. 1. 236, 237:

These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies' brows,
Being black, put us in mind they hide the fair.

Enshield is simply a contraction of enshielded. Similar contractions are not uncommon in Shakespeare. See, on the masks, Romeo and Juliet, note 22.

101. Line 90: But in the loss of question.—Schmidt understands this phrase to mean "as no better arguments present themselves to my mind, to make the point clear;" Steevens, however, seems nearer the mark in explaining it to mean "in idle supposition, or conversation that leads to nothing;" as we should say now, "for the sake of argument."

102. Line 94: the ALL-BUILDING law.—So Ff.; best explained in the Old-Spelling editors' alteration of Schmidt's definition: "being the foundation and bond of all." Rowe displaces all-building by all-holding, and Johnson by all-binding.

103. Line 103: That longing HAVE been sick for.—So Ff. Many editors follow Rowe's emendation I've; but the ellipsis of have for I have is perhaps intentional. The Cambridge editors (note xi.) say: "The second person singular of the governing pronoun is frequently omitted by Shakespeare in familiar questions, but, as to the first and third persons, his usage rarely differs from the modern. If the text be genuine, we have an instance in this play of the omission of the third person singular, i. 4. 72: 'Has censured him.' See also the early Quarto of the Merry Wives of Windsor, sc. xiv. l. 40, p. 285 of our reprint:

He cloath my daughter, and aduertuse Slender
To know her by that signe, and steale her thence,
And unknowne to my wife, shall marrie her "

104. Lines 111-113:

Ignomy in ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses: lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption

This is the arrangement and reading of F. 1, which I have not felt justified in disturbing, though Steevens' rearrangement, as follows, is plausible:

lawful mercy is
Nothing akin to foul redemption

Ignomy is, of course, merely another form of ignominy (by which it is replaced in F. 2); but the spelling is preserved in many modern editions. It occurs also in I. Henry IV. v. 4. 100:

Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave;
and in Trolius and Cressida, v. 10. 33, 34:

ignomy and shame

Pursue thy life,
as well as in the Qq. of Titus Andronicus, iv. 2. 115:

I blush to think upon this ignomy.

105. Line 122, 123:

If not a FEDARY, but only he,
Owe and succeed thy weakness.

Fedary (or feodary, as the later Ff. have it) originally meant a vassal; in Cymbeline, iii. 2. 21, it is certainly used in the sense of accomplice: "Art thou a fedary for this act?" Mr. Stone writes me: "I incline to the view that F. fedarie (F. 2 feodary) means a vassal, not an accomplice. If succeed could be supposed to mean follow—in a moral sense—feodary is better understood as meaning accomplice. Accepting the other interpretation of feodary, Isabella may mean: If my brother be not an inheritor of frailty, but frailty begins and ends with him, let him die. As if a man could be heir to himself, and by this title hold his property. With either explanation we must take thy (line 123) to mean you men, since Angelo has not yet revealed himself."

106. Line 130: credulous to false prints.—Compare Twelfth Night, ii. 2. 81; and see my note on that passage (78).

107. Line 160: And now I give my sensual RACE the rein.—For the use of the word race in the sense here given to it—i.e. "natural disposition" (Schmidt)—compare the only other instance in Shakespeare, The Tempest, i. 2. 358-360:

thy vile race,

Though thou didst learn, had that in't which good natures
Could not abide to be with

As Mr. Aldis Wright observes (Clarendon Press ed. of the Tempest, p. 96), "the word is used in this secondary sense like 'stram' (A S strynd, a stock, from strynan, to beget) in Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2. 154:

Can it be
That so degenerate a stram as this Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?"

108 Line 162: PROLIXIOUS blushes.—Steevens cites examples of the use of prolixious by Drayton, Gabriel Harvey, and Nash, but the sense is not precisely that of the text. The word is here evidently used, by a certain license of language, for "tiresomely prudish."

ACT III. SCENE 1.

109. Line 5: Be ABSOLUTE for death; i.e. be certain you will die. Compare Shakespeare's use of absolute in Cymbeline, iv. 2. 106, 107:

I am absolute
'T was very Cloten;

Pericles, ii. 5. 19: "How absolute she's in't;" &c.

110. Line 10: That DOST—Changed by Hammer to do, leaving skye influences as the subject, instead of breath. The sense is quite clear, and would come to much the same in either case.

111. Lines 11–13:

*merely, thou art DEATH'S FOOL;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun
And yet runn'st toward him still.*

This appears to be a reference to a figure in the Dance of Death, some edition of which may very well have been seen by Shakespeare. The subject is very thoroughly explored in a dissertation prefixed by Douce to Pickering's edition of The Dance of Death, 1833, to which the references given below are made. A reprint of it is included in Bohn's Illustrated Series.

"From a manuscript note by John Stowe, in his copy of Leland's Itinerary, it appears that there was a Dance of Death in the church of Stratford upon Avon: and the conjecture that Shakespeare, in a passage in Measure for Measure, might have remembered it, will not, perhaps, be deemed very extravagant. He there alludes to Death and the fool, a subject always introduced into the paintings in question" (p. 53). "Bishop Warburton and Mr. Malone have referred to old Moralities, in which the fool escaping from the pursuit of Death is introduced. Ritson has denied the existence of any such farces, and he is perhaps right with respect to printed ones; but vestiges of such a drama were observed several years ago at the fair of Bristol by the present writer" (pp. 176, 177). The Dance of Death, with 41 cuts, attributed to Holbein, was first published at Lyons in 1538. In 1547 an edition appeared containing 12 additional cuts, one of them (the 43rd of the series) having Death and the fool for its subject. In this the fool is mocking Death, by putting his finger in his mouth, and at the same time endeavouring to strike him with his bladder-bauble. Death smiling, and amused at his efforts, leads him away in a dancing attitude, playing at the same time on a bagpipe. The following text (Proverbs, ch. vii. v. 22) is beneath the cut: "Quasi agnus lascivien, et ignorans, nescit¹ quod ad vincula stultus trahatur" (see p. 261). Another illustration of the subject is in an alphabet ornamented with subjects from the Dance of Death, which was introduced into books printed at Basle by Bebelius and Cratander about 1530. In Bohn's edition of the Dance of Death there is a reprint of this alphabet. The design for the letter R has for its subject Death seizing the fool, who strikes at him with his bladder-bauble and seems to strive to escape. English readers would be familiarized with this, since in an edition of Coverdale's Bible printed by James Nicolson in Southwark, the same design is used for the letter A. It is found in other English books, and even as late as 1618 in an edition of Stowe's Survey of London. (See pp. 214–218.) Besides this, the so-called Queen Elizabeth's prayer-book, printed by J. Daye in 1569, of which there are other editions dated 1578, 1581, 1590, has at the end "a Dance of Death of singular interest, as exhibiting the costume of its time with respect to all ranks and conditions of life." Among the characters are both the Fool and the Female Fool (p. 147). Douce gives also (p. 163) from the Stationers' Registers, under date January 5th, 1597, the entry to the Purfootes of "The roll of the Daunce of Death, with pictures, and verses upon the same." See also Richard II. note 220.

112 Line 24: For thy complexion shifts to strange EFFECTS.—Johnson would read affects, i.e. "affections of mind," but the word in the text, in its natural meaning of "natural manifestations, expressions," is very little in need of improvement.

113. Line 29: sire—So F. 4. The reading of the earlier Ff. is fire.

114. Lines 34–36:

*for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld.*

This passage has given rise to a great deal of conjecture, and many unsatisfactory substitutions for aged have been brought forward. The meaning seems to me to be simply this. The Duke, with a pessimism worthy of Leopardi, is going over the catalogue of miseries, cunningly extracting poison from the fairest flowers of life, and finally he declares that neither in youth nor age is there anything enjoyable, at least according to man's way of dealing with the seasons; for even in youth he is devoured with the ennui and care proper to age, and is as feeble and nerveless as a palsied beggar-man, with strength neither of body nor of will.

115. Line 40: MOE thousand deaths; i.e. a thousand more deaths. Moe is frequently used in Shakespeare for more. Compare Henry VIII. ii. 3. 97: "That promises moe thousands." Compare Julius Cæsar, note 101.

116. Line 51: Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be conceal'd.—F. 1 reads Bring them to hear me speak, an obvious transposition, which, however, was not set right before the conjecture of Steevens, adopted by Malone.

¹ The word nescit is not in the Vulgate

117 Lines 57-59:

*Lord Angelo, having affairs to heaven,
Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting LEIGER.*

Leiger, lieger, or ledger, means "a resident ambassador." Compare Cymbeline, i. 5. 80: "leigers for her sweet." Steevens cites Look About You, a comedy, 1600: "as leiger to solicit for your absent love;" and Leicester's Commonwealth, "a special man of that hasty king, who was his ledger, or agent, in London." The word is used for "resident" in Shirley's Lady of Pleasure, iv. 2:

Fools are a family over all the world;
We do affect one naturally; indeed
The fool is leiger with us

118 Lines 68-70:

a restraint,
THOUGH all the world's vastidity you had,
To a determined scope.

This magnificent conception of a life fettered and confined within the limits of its remorse may be compared with the feebler, more rhetorical, but still fine image of Byron in The Giaour:

The mind that broods o'er guilty woes
Is like the scorpion girt by fire,
In circle narrowing as it glows, &c.
—Works, Tauchnitz ed., 1842, vol. ii p. 166.

Ff. print Through, a misprint which was corrected by Pope.

119. Lines 82, 83:

*Think you I can a resolution fetch
From FLOWERY TENDERNESS?*

The phrase flowery tenderness appears to be used by Claudio in mockery or resentment of his sister's stolid counsels, coming, as they do, from her, a mere woman, a creature tender as a flower, to him, a man, supposing himself valiant.

120. Line 88: conserve; i.e. preserve, a word used by Shakespeare only here and in Othello, iii. 4. 75: "Con-serv'd of maidens' hearts." Chaucer employs the word in The Knight's Tale, 1471:

Syn thou art mayde, and kepere of us alle,
My maydenhode thou kepe and wel conserve,
And whil I live a mayde I wil the serve.

121. Line 93: His filth within being cast.—"As a hawk is made to cast out her 'casting,' a pellet put down her throat to test the state of her digestion" (Furnivall and Stone, Old-Spelling Shakspeare, note).

122. Line 94: The PRENZIE Angelo?—Few words in Shakespeare have given rise to so much controversy as this word prenzie, repeated again in line 97 below. F. 2 has princely, and various conjectural emendations have been adopted, of which preristly (Hammer's conjecture) is, justly, the most widely accepted. Accepting the word in the text as accurate, many attempts have been made to explain it. The Cambridge editors say: "It may be etymologically connected with prin, in old French, meaning demure; also with princeaux, a coxcomb, and with the word prender, which occurs more than once in Skelton, e.g.:

This perysh proud, this prender gest,
When he is well, yet can he not rest.

Mr Bullock mentions, in support of his conjecture, that pensie is still used in some north-country districts. Prmsie is also found in Burns' poems [as 'primsie Malle' in Hallowe'en] with the signification of 'demure, precise,' according to the glossary." Dr. Brinsley Nicholson suggests that the word prenzie may stand for the old Italian Prenze, a variant for Principe; and his suggestion is given in the note to the word in the Old-Spelling Shakspeare, from which I have adopted, at line 97, the reading prenzie's guards, for the prenzie gardes of F. 1; prenzie's guards in this case meaning a prince's guards—the lace on his robe. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 58:

O, rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's hose.

123. Line 115: PERDURABLY fin'd—This is the only instance of the word perdurably in Shakespeare, but we have perdurable in Henry V. iv. 5. 7: "O perdurable shame!" and in Othello, i. 3. 343: "cables of perdurable toughness."

124. Lines 122-128:

*To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
In thrilling REGION of thick-ribbed ice;
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendent world; or to be worse than worst
Of those that lawless and incertain THOUGHT
IMAGINE HOWLING.*

Region, the reading of the Ff, was altered by Rowe to regions, and Dyce, who follows him, declares that the plural is "positively required" here, as also in thought, line 127. "We contend," says Dr. Ingleby, "that Region is used in the abstract, and in the radical sense; and that it means restricted place, or confinement; also that thought is used in the abstract, and that it is the objective governed by imagine" (The Still Lion, 1874, pp. 97, 98). With the latter statement I cannot agree. Perhaps we should read thoughts Imagine or thought Imagines. With regard to the possible sources of Shakespeare's conception of future punishment, see the numerous interesting quotations from mediæval visions of hell and purgatory, given in the notes to the play in the Old-Spelling Shakspeare, with special reference to "alternate torments of heat and cold," such as the fiery floods and thick-ribbed ice point to. An extract from Macrobius, whose commentary on Cicero's Dream of Scipio was well known in Shakespeare's time, affords a curious parallel to the sentence "blown with restless violence."

[Perhaps one of the descriptions that Shakespeare had in his mind was that contained in The Revelation of the Monk of Evesham, published in 1482. (See Arber's reprint of this curious work from the unique copy in the British Museum, and compare, especially, chapters 15, 17, 24, in which the Three Places of Pains and Torments of Purgatory are described.) As to the word howling, it is worth while, perhaps, to quote the well-known lines in Hamlet, addressed to the Priest by Laertes over his sister's grave, v. 1. 263-265:

I tell thee, churlish priest,
A ministering angel shall my sister be
When thou lies howling.

With the whole of the passage quoted above we may compare the following lines from Milton's Paradise Lost:

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
From beds of raging fire, to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round,
Periods of time, thence hurried back to fire
—Book ii lines 596-603

—F. A. M.]

125. Line 130: penury.—This is the correction by F. 2 of the misprint perury in F. 1

126. Line 141: Heaven SHIELD my mother play'd my father fair!—For shield in the sense of forbid, compare All's Well, i. 3. 174: "God shield, you mean it not!" and Romeo and Juliet, iv. 1. 41.

God shield I should disturb devotion!

127. Line 142: slip of wilderness; i. e. wild slip. Wilderness is used for wildness in Old Fortunatus, 1600, iv. 1.

But I in wilderness totter'd out my youth,

And therefore must turn wild, must be a beast

Steevens cites another line in which the word wilderness occurs, from Beaumont and Fletcher's Maid's Tragedy, v. 4; but the word may there be used in its modern sense.

128. Line 143: Take my DEFIANCE.—Explained by Schmidt as "rejection, declaration that one will have nothing to do with another." Compare I. Henry IV. i. 3. 238:

All studies here I solemnly defy.

I am not sure that this interpretation does not afford, after all, a tamer sense than if we take Isabella's indignant defiance to mean simply—defiance.

129. Line 170: do not SATISFY your resolution with hopes that are fallible.—Hanmer conjectures falsify, not a bad conjecture as things go, but unnecessary. Steevens explains the passage: "Do not rest with satisfaction on hopes that are fallible."

130. Line 194: I am now going to resolve him, I had rather, &c.—So most editors; the Cambridge editors follow the pointing of the Ff.: "I am now going to resolve him: I had rather," &c.

131. Line 217: Frederick the great soldier who MISCARRIED at sea; i. e. was lost Compare Merchant of Venice, ii. 8. 29, 30:

there miscarried

A vessel of our country richly fraught.

132. Line 221: She should this Angelo have married; was affianced to her oath.—She is of course used, by a grammatical license, for her. See Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, par. 111. Very likely the latter clause is merely a misprint for "was affianced to her by oath" (as F. 2 corrects it), and so most editors read; the Old-Spelling editors retain the reading of F. 1, and Mr. Stone suggests that here "Mariana's betrothal vow to Angelo may be regarded as a quasi-agent, instead of the person who took the oath."

133. Line 266: the corrupt deputy SCALED.—The meaning of this word is very doubtful. The verb is used by Shakespeare in its ordinary sense of "to climb" with a ladder in four passages, and in a peculiar sense in Coriolanus, i. 1. 92-95:

I shall tell you
A pretty tale: it may be you have heard it,
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To scale 't a little more, where many modern editors read stale, an emendation which Halliwell in his Archaic Dictionary, under Scale, says is undoubtedly right, and is strongly supported also by Dyce. In another passage in the same play, ii. 3. 257, the word occurs,

Scaling his present bearing with his past, where it is undoubtedly used in the sense of "to weigh;" a sense which seems to suit the passage in our text very well.

Johnson says: "To scale is certainly to reach as well as to disperse or spread abroad, and hence its application to a routed army which is scattered over the field" Ritson says: "The Duke's meaning appears to be, either that Angelo would be over-reached, as a town is by the scalade; or, that his true character would be spread or lay'd open, so that his villainy would become evident." This latter meaning suggested by Johnson has been adopted by many editors, and also makes very good sense. Richardson in his Dictionary, under Scale, says: "In Meas for Meas.—'The corrupt deputy was scaled, by separating from him, or stripping off his covering of hypocrisy.' The tale of Menenius (in Coriolanus) was 'scaled a little more,' by being divided more into particulars and degrees; more circumstantially or at length.—'Scaling his present bearing with his past,' (also in Coriolanus), looking separately at each, and, thence, comparing them."

In a passage in Hall, copied by Holinshed, we have this verb used in a very peculiar sense; he is referring to the dispersion of the army of Welshmen collected together at the beginning of Buckingham's insurrection: "the Welshmen lyngerynge ydelyng and without money, vitayle, or wages sodaynely scaled and departed" (Reprint, p. 394). The meaning there seems to be simply "separated." It is difficult to decide authoritatively between the various meanings assigned to the word in the text; but "over-reached" or "exposed" both would suit the context Grant White gets out of the difficulty by reading foiled; an emendation for which, however, there seems no necessity.—F. A. M.

134. Line 277: the moated grange.—A grange is a solitary house, frequently a farm-house; "some one particular house," says Ritson, "immediately inferior in rank to a hall, situated at a small distance from the town or village from which it takes its name." Compare Othello, i. 1. 105, 106:

What tell'st thou me of robbing? This is Venice;
My house is not a grange.

The word is used again in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 309:

Or thou goest to the grange or mill

The "lonely moated grange" of Mariana is equally familiar to the readers of the two most popular English poets, Tennyson as well as Shakespeare.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

135. Line 4: brown and white BASTARD.—Bastard is a sweet Spanish wine. Compare I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 30: "a pint of bastard;" line 82: "your brown bastard is your only drink " Coles (Latin Dictionary) has "Bastard wine, vinum possum " Nares quotes Beaumont and Fletcher, The Tamer Tamed, ii. 1.

I was drunk with bastard,
Whose nature is to form things like itself,
Ready and monstrous

136. Line 26: I drink, I EAT, ARRAY MYSELF, and live. —Ff eat away myselfe. The reading in the text, an unexceptionable and universally followed emendation, was first adopted into the text by Theobald, after Bishop's conjecture.

137. Lines 40, 41:

That we were all, as some would seem to be,
FROM OUR FAULTS, AS FAULTS FROM SEEMING, FREE!

This is the reading of F. 1, followed by the Cambridge and the Old-Spelling editors. F. 2 and F. 3 read "Free from our faults," and F. 4 "Free from all faults." The latter part of the line should be, according to Hanmer, as from faults seeming free—a widely-accepted emendation which has this among other drawbacks, that it turns a line of blank verse into a regular dactylic canter. Furnivall and Stone give, I think, the plain meaning of the Folio text in their foot-note: "Would that we were as free from faults, as our faults are from seeming (hypocrisy)."

138 Line 48: Pygmalion's images, newly made woman.—A double allusion to the story of Pygmalion's image coming to life, and to a meaning sometimes given to the word woman, like the primary meaning of the Latin mulier. See Cotgrave under Dame du milieu

139 Line 58: What say'st thou, TROT?—Needlessly altered by some editors to "What say'st thou to 't?" Trot (a contemptuous term for an old woman, used in Taming of Shrew, i. 2. 80) is no unlikely epithet for the irreverent Lucio to use to his patron. Boyer (French Dictionary) has "an old Trot (or decrepit Woman) Un vieille."

140. Line 60: in the tub.—Compare Henry V. ii. 1. 79: "the powdering tub of infamy"—an allusion to the treatment for the French disease; referred to again in Timon, iv. 3. 88.

141. Line 107: extirp.—Used only here and in I. Henry VI. iii. 3. 24: "extirped from our provinces." Extirpate is only used in The Tempest, i. 2. 125, 126:

extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom.

142. Line 119: a MOTION generative.—Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 1. 100: "O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet!"—which explains the word by giving a synonym for it. Theobald reads "a motion ungenerative," but the change seems unnecessary—indeed, I think the force of the expression is weakened rather than heightened by the alteration.

143. Line 128: I never heard the absent duke much DETECTED for women.—Detected is usually explained as meaning "suspected;" but Verplanck (quoted by Rolfe) remarks: "The use of this word, in the various extracts from old authors, collected by the commentators, shows that its old meaning was (not suspected, as some of them say, but) charged, arraigned, accused. Thus, in Greenway's Tacitus (1822), the Roman senators who informed against their kindred, are said 'to have detected the dearest of their kindred.'

144. Line 135: clack-dish—A dish with a cover, clacked to call attention to the beggars who carried it.

145 Line 138: A SHY fellow was the duke.—Compare v. 1. 53, 54:

the wicked'st catfif on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute.

This closely parallel passage (the only other instance of the word in Shakespeare) quite disallows, I think, the emendation sly, adopted in the present passage by Hanmer.

146. Line 160: dearer—This is Hanmer's correction of the reading of F. 1, deare. F. 2 follows F. 1; F. 3 and F. 4 read dear.

147. Lines 191, 192: The duke, I say to thee again, would eat MUTTON on Fridays.—The double entendre (mutton, or laced mutton, being slang for a courtesan) is a common one in plays of the period. It occurs in Shakespeare's original, Promos and Cassandra, pt. i. i. 3:

I heard of one Phallax,
A man esteemde, of Promos verie much:
Of whose Nature, I was so bolde to axe,
And I smealt, he loved lase mutton well.

—W. C. Hazlitt, Shakespeare's Library, vol. iii. p. 214

148 Line 193: He's now past it; yet (and I say to thee) he would, &c.—This is the reading of the Ff., preserved by the Old-Spelling editors, but almost universally abandoned in favour of Hanmer's plausible emendation: "He's not past it yet, and I say to thee, he would," &c.—plausible, but surely less characteristic of Lucio and his reckless scandal-mongering than the expression in the Folio; an expression explained well enough by Poins' remark concerning Falstaff (II. Henry IV. ii. 4. 283, 284): "Is it not strange that desire should so many years outlive performance?" The parenthetic "and I say to thee" is merely an emphatic pressing home of the point.

149 Line 232: the See—Ff. read Sea, a spelling not uncommon at the time. Furnivall and Stone quote Hall's Chronicles, 1548, ed. 1809, p. 789, l. 3: "the Sea Apostolick;" and Stow's Annals, 1605, p. 1058, l. 14: "the sea of Rome."

150. Line 237: and it is as dangerous . . . as.—This is the correction of F. 3 and F. 4 of the reading of F. 1 and F. 2: and as it is as dangerous.

151. Line 278: Grace to stand, and virtue GO; i.e. "to go." "He should have grace to withstand temptation, and virtue to go (walk) uprightly" (Furnivall and Stone, note).

152 Line 287: How may likeness, made in crimes, &c.—Many attempts have been made to amend this passage or to explain it. Mr. W. G. Stone attempts a paraphrase in his notes on Measure for Measure (New Shakspere Society's Transactions, part iii. p. 115): "How may a real affinity of guilt (like that which attaches to Angelo, who meditates the same crime for which he has condemned Claudio), practising upon the world, draw with such gossamer threads as hypocritical pretences the solid advantages of honour, power, &c. The addition of to in line

289 is not without confirmation in the usage of Shakespeare's time.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

153. Line 1: Take, O, take these lips away.—This song appears again in Fletcher's Bloody Brother, v. 2, with the addition of the following stanza:

Hide, O hide those hills of snow
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears;
But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee

The two stanzas are also found in the spurious edition of Shakespeare's Poems, 1640; and it has been supposed by some that the same hand wrote the whole poem. It seems equally certain that Shakespeare did write the first stanza, and that he did not write the second. In the first place, the added stanza is of obviously poorer stuff than the original one—as inferior as Fletcher is to Shakespeare. In the second place, the original stanza is so written as to afford a very beautiful refrain in the last two lines:

But my kisses bring again,
Bring again;
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain,
Seal'd in vain.

The added stanza is written with no such intention; and a refrain is impossible, without a perfect dislocation of sense, thus: "poor heart free," and "chains by thee." I do not think there is anything very surprising in Fletcher's using and continuing a song of Shakespeare's. Literary property was not then very strictly guarded; and both before and since there have been instances of apparently unfinished poems completed by other hands.

154. Line 18: much upon this time have I promised here to MEET.—Meet is used intransitively in Merry Wives, ii. 3. 5: "'Tis past the hour, sir, that Sir Hugh promised to meet;" and in As You Like It, v. 2. 129: "'as you love Phebe, meet: and as I love no woman, I'll meet."

155. Line 21: I do CONSTANTLY believe you.—Constantly here means firmly; the word is used in the same sense in Troilus and Cressida, iv. 1. 40–42:

I constantly do think—
Or, rather, call my thought a certain knowledge—
My brother Troilus lodges there to-night.

In the other sense of firmly, i.e. with firmness of mind, it is used in Julius Cæsar, v. 1. 92:

To meet all perils very constantly.

156. Line 30: a PLANCHED gate.—Steevens cites Sir Arthur Gorges' translation of Lucan's Pharsalia, 1614, p. 18 (bk. i.):

Like a proud Courser bred in Thrace,
Accustom'd to the running race,
Who when he hears the Trumpets noyse,
The shouts and cries of men and boyes,
(Though in the stable close vp-pent)
Yet, with his hooves, doth beat and rent
The planch'd floore, the barres and chaines,
Vntill he have got loose the raines.

157. Lines 34–36:

*There have I made my promise
Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him.*

The Ff. arrange these lines thus:

There have I made my promise, vpon the Heauy midle of the night, to call vpon him

The arrangement adopted in the text was proposed to Dyce by Lord Tennyson in 1844. It is adopted by Dyce, the Cambridge, and the Old-Spelling editors, &c., and seems unquestionably right.

158. Line 40: In action all of precept.—"Showing the several turnings of the way with his hand" (Warburton).

159. Line 62: contrarious.—Used only here and in I. Henry IV v. 1. 52:

And the contrarious winds that held the king.

Quests is F. 2's correction of the quest of F. 1.

160. Line 64: make thee the father of their idle DREAM.—So Ff and Old-Spelling editors; Pope's emendation dreams is almost universally followed. It seems to me more probable than not, but not certain, and I have allowed the original reading to stand.

161. Lines 74, 75:

*Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth FLOURISH the deceit.*

This is the only instance of flourish used as a verb in the sense obviously intended here. But flourish is often used as a noun with somewhat the same signification; e.g. Sonnet lx. 9:

Time doth transfix the flourish set on youth;

i.e. the "varnish, gloss, ostentatious embellishment" (Schmidt).

162. Line 76: Our corn's to reap, for yet our TILTH's to sow.—F. 1, F. 2, F. 3 print tithes; F. 4 tythes, which Knight, the Cambridge editors, &c., retain. Johnson takes the word by metonymy for harvest, and Knight suggests that tithe may be understood as meaning "the proportion that the seed which is sown bears to the harvest." The reading adopted in the text is Warburton's very probable conjecture, to which great support is given by the passage in Markham's English Husbandman, 1635 (quoted in the Variorum Sh. ix. 145): "After the beginning of March you shall begin to sow your barley upon that ground which the year before did lie fallow, and is commonly called your tith or fallowfield."

[I cannot find tith in any of the numerous provincial glossaries that I have searched; but Halliwell in his Archaic and Provincial Dictionary gives a quotation from Gower:

So that the tithe is nyze forlorne,
Whiche Criste sewe with his owen honde.

—MS. Soc. Antiq. x34 f. x38, which seems very appropriate, for there he speaks of sowing tith; and Richardson, sub voce, gives a quotation from Appollonius Rhodius, Argon b. iv.:

O'er the rough tith he cast his eyes around,
And soon the plough of adamant he found,
And yokes of brass,

where it seems to mean "ground to be tilled." Fawkes appears to have published his translation in 1761.—F. A. M.]

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

163. Line 30: mystery—The word mystery is used by Shakespeare several times for trade or profession; three times in the present scene; once in Othello, iv. 2. 30; and twice in Timon, iv. 1. 13, iv. 3. 453. [It is well to remember that the word mystery in the sense of a trade, occupation, or art, is quite a different word from mystery in its ordinary sense—"anything kept concealed, a secret rite;" the latter being derived through the Latin mysterium, from the Greek μυστήριον; while mystery, or mistry, as it should be spelt, is from the Middle English mistere, a word used by Chaucer, and is no doubt adapted from the old French mestier, which Cotgrave translates "a trade, occupation, mistry." As Skeat says, the two words have been sadly confused. Spenser uses mysterie—"the soldier's occupation" in Prosopopeia or Mother Hubbards Tale:

Shame light on him that through so false illusion,
Doth turne the name of Souldiers to abusion,
And that which is the noblest mysterie,
Brings to reproach and common infamie,

—Pp. 6, 7, ed. 1617.

—F. A. M.]

164. Lines 46–50:

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief.
Pom. If it be too little, &c.

The distribution of speakers in the text is that of the Ff. Almost all the editors since Capell, including even the Old-Spelling editors, have given the whole passage, from Every true man's apparel to so every true man's apparel fits your thief, to Abhorson. But I consider the admissibility of the original reading to have been quite proved by Cowden Clarke in the following passage, quoted by Rolfe: "Abhorson states his proof that hanging is a mystery by saying, 'Every true man's apparel fits your thief,' and the Clown, taking the words out of his mouth, explains them after his own fashion, and ends by saying, so (in this way, or thus) every true man's apparel fits your thief." Moreover, the speech is much more in character with the Clown's snip-snap style of chop-logic than with Abhorson's manner, which is remarkably curt and bluff."

165. Line 54: he doth oftener ask forgiveness—This is an allusion to the practice, common among executioners, of asking the pardon of those whom they were about to send out of the world. Compare As You Like It, iii. 5. 3–6:

The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck
But first begs pardon.

166. Line 59: and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me YARE.—The word, which occurs several times in Shakespeare, is from A. S. gedro, ready. There is a curious parallel to the use of this word in its present connection, in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 129, 130:

A halter'd neck which does the hangman thank
For being yare about him.

167. Line 86: meal'd.—Johnson's explanation, "sprinkled, defiled," seems preferable to Blackstone's derivation from Fr. mesler, mingled, compounded.

168. Line 89: seldom when; i. e. 'tis seldom when. Compare II. Henry IV. iv. 4. 79, 80:

'Tis seldom when the bee doth leave her comb
In the dead carrion

169. Line 92: the UNSISTING postern.—This is an expression never satisfactorily explained, unless the guess of the Old-Spelling editors can be said to solve the difficulty. They suggest that the word may be derived from sisto, which is sometimes intransitive, and that unsisting may thus mean "shaking."

170. Line 103: This is his LORDSHIP's man.—Ff. Lords. The correction was made by Pope. "In the MS. plays of our author's time they often wrote Lo, for Lord, and Lord, for Lordship; and these corrections were sometimes improperly followed in the printed copies" (Malone).

171. Lines 103, 104:

Duke. This is his lordship's man
Prov. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

This is the reading of the Ff, and I do not see any certain reason why it should be altered, as most editors, following Tyrwhitt's conjecture, have altered it, by the transposition of the speakers' names. Tyrwhitt bases his change on the seeming inconsistency of the Provost's words. "He has just declared a fixed opinion that the execution will not be countermanded; and yet, upon the first entrance of the messenger, he immediately guesses that his errand is to bring Claudio's pardon." I cannot see any real inconsistency in this. The Provost, judging from what he knows of Angelo's character, has said that he has no expectation of a remand. At that moment Angelo's servant enters. "This is his lordship's man," says the Duke significantly. "And here comes Claudio's pardon!" cries the Provost, now at last convinced. Is not all this very natural? The Provost, despite the opinion he holds to the contrary, has just confessed that "haply" the pretended friar may be in the secret, and "something know." Would not the unexpected entrance of Angelo's servant—at so very unusual an hour ("almost day," as he says in leaving)—force a strong probability on the Provost's mind that after all the friar is right? Another imaginary inconsistency is brought forward by Knight in support of the charge: that of the Provost's first saying, "Here comes Claudio's pardon," and then, "I told you [that he had no chance of a pardon]." Here again the process of mind is quite natural. Having read the letter, and found out what it really is, the provost is of course in the same mind as before as to Angelo's character, and the improbability of his pardoning Claudio. Thus, when the Duke questions him, "What news?" he replies (ignoring his momentary change of front), "I told you;" that is, "I told you before that Claudio must die."

172. Line 135: one that is a prisoner nine years old.—Compare Hamlet, iv. 6. 15: "Ere we were two days old at sea."

173. Lines 187–189: Shave the head, and TIE the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so BAR'D.—So Ff, and there seems no reason to suppose there is any error, though Dyce reads trim, and Simpson conjectures dye. Bared, immediately following, has reference chiefly, no doubt, to the shaving of the head (probably receiving the tonsure, in order to die in the odour of sanctity); but it may also refer to the tying back of the beard, for, as Dyce notes, we have in All's Well, iv. 1. 54, the expression, "the barving of my beard"

174. Line 205: attempt; i.e. tempt, as in Merchant of Venice, iv. 1. 421:

Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

175. Line 5: he's in for a commodity of BROWN PAPER.—Steevens cites Middleton, Michaelmas Term, 1607, ii. 3: "I know some gentlemen in town has been glad, and are glad at this time, to take up commodities in hawks hoods and brown paper" (Works, vol. i p. 451); and R. Davenport, A New Tricke to Cheat the Divell, 1636, i. 2, fol. B:

Vsurer. . . . What newes in Holborne, Fleet-street, and the Strand?

In th' Ordinaries among Gallants, no young Herres There to be snapp'd?

Scrusener Th' have bin so bit already With taking up Commodities of browne paper, Buttons past fashion, silkes, and Sattins, Babies and childrens Fiddles, with like trash Tooke up at a deare rate, and sold for trifles.

Malone quotes the following passage relating to the practices of the money-lenders from Nash, Christs Teares ouer Ierusalem, 1593, fol. 46: "He falls acquainted with Gentlemen, frequents Ordinaries and Dicing-houses dayly, where when some of them (in play) haue lost all theyr money, he is very diligent at hand, on their Chaynes, or Bracelets, or Iewels, to lend them halfe the value: Now this is the nature of young Gentlemen that where they haue broke the Ise, and borrowd once, they will come againe the seconde time; and that these young foxes knowe, as well as the Begger knows his dish. But at the second time of their comming, it is doubtful whether they shall haue money or no The worlde growes harde, and wee all are mortal, let them make him any assurance before a Iudge, and they shall haue some hundred poundes (per consequence) in Silks & Veluets. The third time if they come, they shall haue baser commodities: the fourth time Lute strings and gray Paper."

176. Line 21: "for the Lord's sake"—Malone compares Nash (Apologie for Pierce Pennilisse, 1593): "At that time that thy joys were in the fleeting, and thus crying for the Lord's sake out at an iron window;" and Papers Complaint, in The Scourge of Folly, 1611, p. 241, by John Davies (of Hereford):

Good gentle Writers, for the Lord sake, for the Lord sake, Like Lue-gate Fris'ner, lo, I (begging) make my mone to you.

Compare Heywood, A Woman Killed with Kindness, iii. 1:

Agien to prison? Malby, hast thou seene A poore slave better tortur'd? Shall we heare The musicke of his voice cry from the grate, "Meate for the Lord's sake."

—Works, vol. ii. p. 116.

177 Line 43: I would desire you to CLAP INTO your prayers—The phrase to clap into is used again by Shakespeare in Much Ado, iii. 4. 44: "Clap's into Light o' Love;" and As You Like It, v. 3. 11: "Shall we clap into 't roundly?"

178 Lines 92, 98:

Ere twice the sun hath made his JOURNAL greeting To THE UNDER GENERATION

The word journal for diurnal is used again in Cymbeline, iv. 2. 10. "Stick to your journal course." The Ff. read, in the next line, To yond generation. The emendation adopted in the text is that of Hammer, who suggested that the yond of the Ff was due to a misreading of ye ond, a contraction for the under. Pope reads yonder. Steevens takes the under generation to mean the Antipodes, and cites Richard II. iii. 2. 38. Dyce, understanding by the term "the generation who live on the earth beneath,—mankind in general," cites Lear, ii. 2. 170:

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe;

and Tempest, iii. 3. 53–55:

You are three men of sin, whom Destiny,
That hath to instrument this lower world
And what is in 't, &c.

179. Line 104: By cold gradation and WELL-BALANCED form.—F 1, F 2, F 3 read weale-balanced; F. 4 weal balanced, probably by a mere misprint; though some editors take weal-balanced to mean "adhered to for the public weal" The correction was made by Rowe.

180. Line 133: covent.—An alternative form of convent, used again in Henry VIII. iv. 2. 19. Some editors read convent, but as the Cambridge editors remark, "Shakespeare's ear would hardly have tolerated the harsh-sounding line:

One of our cónvēt and his cónfessor."

Coles (Latin Dictionary) has:

Covent canobium, conventus monachorum.

181. Lines 137, 138:

If you can, pace your wisdom

In that good path that I would wish it go.

The comma after can was inserted by Rowe: the Ff. read: "If you can pace your wisdom." The reading in the text is that usually followed. Rolfe adopts the conjecture of the Cambridge editors (not adopted by them):

If you can pace your wisdom

In that good path that I would have it, go.

182 Line 139: And you shall have your BOSOM on this wretch—A somewhat similar example of this use of the word bosom is found in Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 573–575:

he shall not perceive

But that you have your father's bosom there

And speak his very heart.

183 Line 171: he's a better WOODMAN than thou tak'st him for.—Read compares Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, i. 8:

Well, well, son John,

I see you are a woodman, and can choose

Your deer tho' it be i' the dark.

—Works, vol. i. p. 498.

184 Line 184: the rotten medlar.—Compare As You Like It, iii. 2. 126: "you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe, and that's the right virtue of the medlar."

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

185 Line 6: RELIVER our authorities there?—So F. 1, the later Ff. deliver; modern editors read redeliver, which is, in any case, the meaning of the word. Mr Stone, in his notes on Measure for Measure (New Sh. Soc Trans. part iii. p. 116), observes that Cotgrave has "Reliver, to redeliver;" and that Reliverer, to redeliver, appears in Kelham's Old French Dictionary. Ducange gives Rede-liberare, explaining it as "Iterum liberare, seu tradere," which he confirms by a quotation from a charter of 1502 (apud Rymer, tom. 13, pag. 53, col. 1) The uncompounded Low Latin verbs liberare, librare, and livrare, were all used in the sense of the French livrer.

186. Lines 19, 20:

*Give notice to such men of SORT and SUIT
As are to meet him.*

This means men of rank (sort: compare Much Ado, i. 1. 7, and note 3), and such as owed attendance to the prince as their liege lord (compare the term of feudal law: suit and service)

187. Line 28: How might she TONGUE me!—Compare Cymbeline, v. 4. 143, 147:

'T is still a dream, or else such stuff as madmen
Tongue and brain not.

188. Line 29: For my authority bears of a credent bulk—So the first three Ff.; F. 4. changes of to off. Schmidt explains the phrase of a credent bulk, as "weight of credit."

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

189. Line 5: Though sometimes you do BLENDH from this to that.—Compare Winter's Tale, i. 2. 333: "Could man so blendh?" and Trolius and Cressida, ii. 2. 67, 68:

there can be no evasion

To blendh from this, and to stand firm by honour.

190. Line 6: Flavius' house—Ff. have Flavia's. The emendation is Rowe's.

191. Line 8: To VALENTIUS, Rowland, and to Crassus.—Ff. Valencius. The reading in the text is adopted by the Cambridge editors, though in the Globe edition they read, with Capell, Valentinus.

192. Line 9: the trumpets; i.e. the trumpeters, as in Henry V. iv. 2. 61:

I will the banner from a trumpet take

Shakespeare uses the form trumpeter as well, but four times only against five.

ACT IV. SCENE 6.

193 Line 13: The generous and gravest citizens.—The ellipsis here is a common one in Elizabethan English. Ben Jonson has "The soft and sweetest music;" and see the other quotations in Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, par. 308.

194. Line 14: hent.—This word is used again in Winter's Tale, iv. 3. 133:

And merrily hent the stile a;

and, as a noun, in Hamlet, iii. 3. 88:

Up, sword, and know thou a more horrid hent.

See note on the latter passage.

ACT V SCENE 1.

195 Line 20: VAIL your regard—Compare Venus and Adonis, 956: "She vail'd her eyelids." Boyer (French Dictionary) has "To vail one's Bonnet, (to pull off one's Hat) Se decouvrir, lever son Chapeau a quelqu'un."

196. Lines 73, 74:

One Lucio

AS THEN the messenger.

As is frequently joined to expressions of time in Shakespeare. Compare Tempest, i. 2. 70: "as at that time;" and Romeo and Juliet, v. 3. 247:

That he should hither come as this dark night

197 Line 158: Whosoever he's CONVENTED—Convent, for summon, is used also in Coriolanus, ii. 2. 58, 59:

We are convented

Upon a pleasing treaty;

and in Henry VIII. v. 1. 50–52:

hath commanded . . .

He be convented.

It is used in a somewhat different sense in Twelfth Night, v. 1. 391.

198 Line 163: First, let her show HER face.—This is the correction found in F 2 of the evident error in F 1, "your face."

199 Line 205: This is a strange ABUSE—Abuse here means deception, as in Hamlet, iv. 7. 51:

Or is it some abuse, and no such thing?

and Macbeth, iii. 4. 142, 143.

My strange and self-abuse

Is the initiate fear that wants hard use.

200 Line 212: garden-house.—Malone compares The London Prodigal, 1605, v. 1: "If you have any friend, or garden-house where you may employ a poor gentleman as your friend, I am yours to command in all secret service" (Tauchnitz ed. p. 263) Reed refers to, but does not quote the following passage from Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses, 1597: "In the Feeldes and Suburbes of the Cities thei haue gardens, either palled, or walled round about very high, with their Harbers and Bowers fit for the purpose" [i.e. for assignations].—New Shak. Soc. Reprint, p. 88.

201. Line 219: her promised PROPORTIONS—Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 3. 3: "I have receiv'd my proportion," i.e. my portion or allotment. The word is also used in the same sense in the prose part of Pericles, iv. 2. 29.

202. Line 236: These poor INFORMAL women.—This is Shakespeare's only use of the word informal; but he uses formal in the sense of sane, in Comedy of Errors, v. 1. 105:

To make of him a formal man again,

i.e. to bring him back to his senses; and in much the same sense in Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 123: "this is evident to any formal capacity."

203. Line 242: COMPLOT with her that's gone; i.e. leagued in conspiracy. The only other instance of this sense of the word in Shakespeare is in a doubtful passage in Lear, ii. 2. 125, 126, where the Ff. read:

When he compact, and flattering his displeasure,
Tript me behind

The Qq reading is conjunct, which is perhaps preferable.

204. Line 263: Cucullus non facit monachum.—This proverb seems to have been a favourite with Shakespeare. He has quoted it in the Latin twice (here and in Twelfth Night, i. 5. 62), and given three translations of it; literally, in Henry VIII. iii. 1. 23: "All hoods make not monks;" and freely here ("honest in nothing but in his clothes") and in Twelfth Night ("that's as much to say as, I wear not motley in my brain") The proverb is quoted in Promos and Cassandra, pt. I. iii. 6:

A holie Hoode makes not a Frier devoute.

205. Line 281: women are LIGHT at midnight—The obvious quibble on light is one of Shakespeare's favourite puns. Compare Merchant of Venice, v. 1. 129, 130:

Let me give light, but let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband

206. Lines 320, 321:

Where I have seen corruption BOIL AND BUBBLE
Till it o'er-run the STEW.

Steevens compares Macbeth, iv. 1. 19:

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble

Stew may mean here a stew-pan, or its contents. The metaphor is taken of course from the kitchen, with an afterthought perhaps of the steuus

207. Lines 322-324:

the strong statutes
Stand like THE FORFEITS in A BARBER'S SHOP,
As much in mock as mark.

"These shops," says Nares, "were places of great resort, for passing away time in an idle manner. By way of enforcing some kind of regularity, and perhaps at least as much to promote drinking, certain laws were usually hung up, the transgression of which was to be punished by specific forfeitures. It is not to be wondered, that laws of that nature were as often laughed at as obeyed."

[In my copy of F. 4, which has some annotations in MS., I find the following note on this passage: "It is a custom in the shops of all mechanicks to make it a forfeiture for any stranger to use or take up the tools of their trade. In a Barber's shop especially, when heretofore Barbers practis'd the under parts of surgery their Instruments being of a nice kind, and their shops generally full of idle people" [a written list was displayed] "showing what particular forfeiture was required for meddling." This note is much to the same purpose as Warburton's in the Var. Ed. ad locum.—F. A. M.]

208. Line 346: Hark, how the villain would CLOSE now.—Compare Two Gent. of Verona, ii. 5. 13: "after they clos'd in earnest, they parted very fairly in jest;" and Troilus and Cressida, iii. 2. 51: "an 'twere dark, you'd close sooner;" where close is used, as here, in the sense of coming to an agreement. It is oftener followed by with; e.g. Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 830: "close with him, give him gold."

209. Line 353: Away with those GIGLOTS too.—Gifford

1 There is a hiatus here in the MS.

(spelt giglet in Ff) is used as an adjective (meaning, as here, wanton) in I. Henry VI. iv. 7. 41. "a giglot wench;" and Cymbeline, iii. i. 31: "O giglot fortune!"

210. Line 358: Show your SHEEP-BITING face, and be hanged AN HOUR.—On sheep-biting, see note on sheep-biter in Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 6 (note 133). "Be hanged an hour" seems to have been something of a colloquialism. An hour appears to mean nothing in particular, but to be intended to emphasize the expression in which it occurs. Gifford has a long note on the subject in his edition of Ben Jonson (vol. iv. pp. 421, 422), suggested by a passage in The Alchemist, v. 1:

like unto a man

That had been strangled an hour and could not speak.

—Works, vol. iv. p. 162

"... Strangled an hour, &c (though Lovewit perversely catches at the literal sense to perplex his informant) has no reference to duration of time, but means simply suffocated, and therefore, unable to utter articulate sounds. A similar mode of expression occurs in Measure for Measure: 'Shew your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour!'"

Gifford then refers to the following passage in Bartholomew Fair, ii. 1:—

Leave the bottle behind you, and be curst awhile!

In his note on that passage he refers to the passage in As You Like It, i. 1. 38:

Marry, sir, be better employed, and be naught awhile!

and then continues as follows:

"It is not easy to ascertain the origin of this colloquial vulgarism; but that the explanation of Warburton (which Steevens is pleased to call 'far-fetched') is as correct as it is obvious, may be proved 'by witnesses more than my pack will hold.' It will be sufficient to call two or three:

"The first shall be our poet:

Peese and be naught! I think the woman's frantic.

—Tale of a Tub.

—plain boy's play

More manly would become him.

Lady. You would have him

Do worse then, would you, and be naught, you owlet!

—New Academy.

"Again:

Come away, and be naught a while!

—Storie of Kyng Darius.

"Again:

Nay, sister, if I stir a foot, hang me; you shall come together of yourselves, and be naught!

—Green's Tu Quoque.

"Again:

What, piper, ho! be hanged awhile!

—Old Madrigal.

"And, lastly:

Get you both in, and be naught awhile!

—Swetnam.

"It is too much, perhaps, to say that the words 'an hour,' 'a while,' are pure expletives; but it is sufficiently apparent that they have no perceptible influence on the exclamations to which they are subjoined. To conclude, 'be naught, hanged, curst, &c. with or without an hour, a while, wherever found, bear invariably one and the same meaning; they are, in short, pithy and familiar maledictions, and cannot be better rendered than in the words of Warburton—a plague, or a mischief on you!" (Jonson's Works, vol. iv pp 421, 422).

211. Line 383: which consummate.—Consummate is used again as a participle (= being consummated) in Much Ado, ii. 2 2

212 Line 387: ADVERTISING and holy to your business.—Compare i. 1. 42 above:

To one that can my part in him advertise.

213. Lines 390-392:

*O, give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and PAIN'D
Your unknown sovereignty!*

This is the only instance in Shakespeare of the verb to pain being used in the sense of putting to trouble or labour; but painful is not infrequently used with the meaning of laborious, as in Tempest, iii. 1. 1: "some sports are painful;" and painfully is twice used in the sense of laboriously: in Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1. 74: "painfully to pore upon a book;" and in King John, ii. 1. 223, 224:

Who painfully with much expedient march
Have brought a countercheck

214. Line 397: Make rash REMONSTRANCE of my hidden power—This is the only example of the word remonstrance in Shakespeare; here it evidently means demonstration, manifestation. Dyce cites from Arrowsmith's Shakespeare's Editors and Commentators, p. 28, the following quotations: Barnabe Barnes, The Devil's Charter, 1607, i. 4, sig. B, 3:

Your sonne shall make remonstrance of his valour;

W. Barclay, The Lost Lady, 1639, p. 4:

with all remonstrances
Of love, &c.;

Taylor, Sermons, 1653, iv. p. 162, serm 13, part 2: "manifested in such visible remonstrances;" Smith, Posthumous Sermons, 1744: "to make remonstrance and declaration of what he thinks" (vol. ix. p. 78, serm. 8).

215. Line 406: Whose SALT imagination.—Compare Othello, ii. 1. 244: "the better compassing of his salt and most hidden loose affection."

216 Line 416: MEASURE still FOR MEASURE.—Measure for measure, in the sense of "like for like," seems to have been a common phrase. It is used in III. Henry VI. ii. 6. 54:

Measure for measure must be answered;

and Steevens cites the same phrase from A Warning for Fair Women, 1599 (lines 898, 899):

Then triall now remains, as shall conclude,
Measure for measure, and lost blood for blood.

—School of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 304.

217. Line 428: Although by CONFUTATION they are ours.—So F. 1; F. 2 reads confiscation, which has been followed by all the editors. The editors of the Old-Spelling Shakespeare have been the first to explain the meaning of the word confutation, and to restore it to its place in the text. I give the substance of their note, as it appears, in a slightly condensed form, in the New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1880-86, part iii. pp. 116^a-117^a: "Although the sb. confutatio, conviction, was unknown, there were examples of the post-classical use of the vb. con- future, to convict. In Ammianus Marcellinus, lib. xxvi cap. 3, and the Theodosian Code, lib. xi. tit. viii. respectively, the past participles confutatos and confutatus occur, the context showing that in both cases they bear the meaning of convicted.

"Moreover, as Angelo's crime was murder, not treason, conviction would be the proper English term for expressing the antecedent cause of his forfeiture. 'Lands are forfeited upon attainder, not before; goods and chattels are forfeited by conviction' (Blackstone's Commentaries, iv. 387, ed. 1873)

"There was another possible meaning for confutation. The Catholicon Anglicum, p. 263, has 'to Ouer come; confundere, fundere, confutare, debellare,' &c. Now apply this definition metaphorically to Angelo's circumstances, and it might be said that he had been vanquished in single combat with his accuser Isabel. We, having no trial by battle, by duel of accuser and accused, which was frequent in early days, forget that overcoming your adversary was in fact convicting him of the crime of which you accused him, or he you. The addition of the meaning 'convict' to confutare, overcome, would follow as a matter of course."

218 Line 456: His act did not o'ertake his bad intent—Malone compares the very closely parallel passage in Macbeth, iv. 1 145, 146:

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook
Unless the deed go with it

219. Lines 495-498:

*If he be like your brother, for his sake
Is HE pardon'd,—[Claudio discovers himself to Isabella—she rushes into his arms, and then kneels to Angelo,—and, for your lovely sake;
Give me your hand, [raising her] and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: [taking Claudio's hand] but fitter time for that.*

In F. 1 the last three lines stand thus (without any stage-direction):

Is he pardon'd and for your louelie sake
Give me your hand, and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: But fitter time for that.

F. 4 has a comma after pardon'd and a semicolon after mine.

The awkwardness of the rhythm of line 496 is very manifest; and various emendations have been attempted. Hammer reads He's pardoned and rearranges the next two lines thus:

Give me your hand, say you'll be mine, and he's
My brother too.

All the difficulty as to rhythm would be got over if we could accentuate pardon'd on the second syllable; but I can find no instance of pardon, either verb or substantive, being so accentuated. There is, however, no reason why it should not be,—for it was originally spelt pardoun; and condone, the only other similar verb derived from the Latin dono, is always accentuated on the last syllable; the reason being because, in that case, the e mute is retained at the end of the word. Capell proposed: "Is he too pardon'd?" to which Dyce very justly objects because of the too in the next line; and prints, apparently on his own responsibility, "Then is he pardon'd." It is easy to supply an extra syllable to make the line more rhythmical; I would suggest So rather than Then, but I should prefer to read "He is pardon'd," letting the pause supply the place of the next syllable, but that the author seems to have wished to avoid the recurrence of He is at the beginning of two lines so close together. The dramatic force of the passage requires that the his in line 495 and the your in line 496 should be slightly accentuated.

The first important point to be considered is when does Isabella recognize Claudio? As the text stands, without any stage-direction, it would appear that Isabella took no notice whatever of her brother when she finds he is alive; but, as has been pointed out by other commentators, Shakespeare wrote for the stage, and this recognition of Claudio could easily take place in action without any spoken words. In the acting version it takes place after the words Is he pardon'd, and Isabella is made to say O, my dear brother! The next two and a half lines of the Duke's speech are omitted, and he resumes

By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe.

This, of course, gets rid of all difficulty, but to take such liberties with the text here is scarcely necessary. As the passage is arranged in our text, we imagine that Claudio—who is on the right side of the stage by the side of the Provost—having thrown off his disguise, turns round to Isabella at the word pardon'd; she interrupts the Duke by rushing across him to embrace her brother; and then, remembering herself, kneels to express her respectful gratitude. The Duke continues his interrupted sentence, and raises her from her knees, placing her on the left side of him. He then speaks the next line (497) holding her hand in his; and, at the words He is my brother too, turns to Claudio, giving him his hand as a confirmation of his pardon. The arrangement of the punctuation, adopted in our text, slightly alters the sense of the passage as printed by most modern editors; the words and for your lovely sake meaning that Claudio has been pardoned—as undoubtedly he was—chiefly for Isabella's sake. But, as the passage is usually punctuated, these words would mean that for Isabella's lovely sake, if she gave the Duke her hand, then he would consider Claudio his brother; but surely, in that case, the words for your lovely sake are redundant; for what the Duke means to say is that, if Isabella will marry him, he will look upon Claudio as his brother. In any case the last sentence must be elliptical in its construction, being equivalent to "If you will give me your hand [in marriage], then he is my brother too."—F. A. M.

220. Line 507: Wherein have I so deserv'd of you?—So the Ff., which Pope took upon himself to "correct" as follows:

Wherein have I deserved so of you;

a reading which Dyce says "at least restores the metre." I cannot conceive how any one (except Pope) could think the change an improvement metrically.

221. Line 510: I spoke it but ACCORDING TO THE TRICK.—Compare Lucio's jaunty words to Pompey, iii. 2. 53: "Is the world as it was, man? Which is the way? Is it sad, and few words? or how? The trick of it?"

222. Line 515: If any WOMAN'S wrong'd by this lewd fellow.—Ff. read woman. The correction is due to Hamner, and is generally adopted. The Cambridge editors read Is any woman.

223. Line 528: Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping and hanging.—There is a reference here to that extraordinary freak of British law, the peine forte et dure, alluded to in Much Ado, iii. 1. 75, 76: "she would . . . press me to death with wit;" Richard II. iii. 4. 72:

O, I am press'd to death through want of speaking!

and Troilus, iii. 2. 218: "press it to death." On this punishment see note 178 on Much Ado. It is suggested in a letter in the Athenæum of Feb. 23, 1884, signed H. C. Coote, that Shakespeare had also in mind an Italian law, in force during his lifetime in the States of the Church, by which a criminal could be released from the penalty of his crime on marrying a courtesan. In Prof. Fabio Gori's Archivio Storico, Artistico, Archeologico, e Letterario (Spoleto, Tip. Bassani), vol. iii pp. 220, 221, is given, says Mr Coote, "the petition of a Senese courtesan named Caterina de Geronimo, living at Rome, to the governor of the city. It has been extracted from the public records of Rome, and may therefore be fully relied upon for truth and authenticity. This petition (supplica), which is dated the 9th of February, 1611, sets forth that the lady has followed her profession for these twenty years ('sono 20 anni che sta in peccato') and now wishes to reform ('Hora si trova in volontà et [sic] fermo proposito di levarsi di peccato, et [sic] viver da donna dabene et [sic] christianamente'). She then goes on to state that Nicolò de Rubéis (i.e. de Rossi) di Assisi, alias Gattarello, who has been accused, though quite unjustly, of being a cheat at cards ('falso gioiatore'), he never having had such things as cards or dice in his possession, has been, through the persecution of his enemies, condemned to exile from Rome and the States of the Church. The poor petitioner ('povera oratrice') has put up the banns between herself and the said Nicolò in the church of S. Lorenzo in Lucina, and she implores his excellency the governor to remit to Nicolò his said exile, inasmuch as he wishes to relieve her from sin, which besides, she adds, will be a pious work. The governor has noted upon the memorial 'Concedatur.' Whatever may have been the value of the poor woman's opinion of her friend Nicolò, there can be no doubt that she has represented the criminal law of the States of the Church with perfect accuracy, and that law was probably not confined to the Papal dominions. Some wandering Englishman had doubtless heard of it, and told the poet, who, as we know, thirsted after all sorts of knowledge, and he afterwards applied it, as we have seen, to heighten the local colour of his play."

224. Line 545: What's yet behind, THAT's meet you all should know.—F. 1 reads that, by an obvious misprint; corrected in F. 2.

225. Line 538.—In the acting edition the following passage (marked as a quotation) is substituted for the remaining eight lines of the Duke's speech, and the play concludes:

For thee, sweet saint—if for a brother sav'd,
From that most holy shrine thou wert devote to,

Thou deign to spare some portion toh, ev y l fo
Thy Duke, thy friar, tempts thee from thy vow:

[Isabel is falling on her knees, the Duke prevents her—kisses her hand, and proceeds with his speech.]

In its right orb let thy true spirit shine,
Blessing both prince and people—thus we'll reign,
Rich in the possession of their hearts, and, warn'd
By the abuse of delegated trust,
Engrave this royal maxim on the mind,
To rule ourselves before we rule mankind.

Whence these lines come from I cannot discover. They certainly do not come from Gildon's version, which ends with a speech after "The last Musick," the concluding couplet of the Duke being:

Impartial Justice, Kings should mind alone
For that 'tis still perpetuates a throne

On referring to Bell's edition, 1774, which is printed from the Prompt Books, I find the speech concludes with the following lines:

*Dear Isabel, I have a motion much imports your good,
Shade not, sweet saint, those graces with a veil,
Nor in a Nunnery hide thee; say thou'rt mine;
Thy Duke, thy Friar, tempts thee from thy vows
Let thy clear spirit shine in public life;
No cloister'd sister, but thy Prince's Wife*

The last five are printed in italics by Bell; and, in a note, the editor adds "the five distinguished lines which conclude, are an addition, by whom we know not; however, they afford a better finishing than that supplied by Shakespeare." Certainly none of the lines in either acting version are taken from Davenant's play, which indeed does not contain anything original so nearly approaching to poetry.—F. A. M.

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

NOTE.—The addition of sub, adj., verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb only in the passage or passages cited.

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line	Act Sc. Line
According ¹ v. 1 437	Belocked..... v. 1 210	Definitive..... v. 1 432	Fornicatrix... ii. 2 23
Adoptedly i. 4 47	Belongings ... i. 1 30	Denunciation .. i. 2 152	Forted v. 1 12
Advivings (sub.) iii. 1 203	Billets iv. 3 58	Dependency ¹⁸ . v. 1 62	*Fruit-dish... ii. 1 95
Affianced { iii. 1 222	Birch..... i. 3 24	Dependent ¹⁹ (adj.) v. 1 411	Garden-house.. v. 1 212, 229
{ v. 1 227	Breather ¹⁰ iv. 4 31	Disguiser iv. 2 138	Generative ... iii. 2 118
All-building... ii. 4 94	*Bringings-forth iii. 2 152	Dismissed ²⁰ ... ii. 2 102	Giglots..... v. 1 351
All-hallond ... ii. 1 130	Cardinally ¹¹ ... ii. 1 81	Disvalued..... v. 1 221	Gnarled ii. 2 116
Approbation ² . i. 2 133	Carnally..... v. 1 214	Disvouched.... iv. 4 1	Gratulate (adj.) v. 1 535
Attempt ³ i. 4 79	Characts v. 1 56	Doubleness... iii. 1 267	Head ²⁴ iii. 1 91
Attorneyed ⁴ ... v. 1 390	China ¹² ii. 1 97	Dribbling i. 3 2	Head ²⁵ (verb)... ii. 1 250, 251
Audible ⁵ v. 1 413	Circummuired.. iv. 1 23	Dukes (verb) .. iii. 2 100	Helmed..... iii. 2 150
Austerity..... ii. 4 155	Clack-dish.... iii. 2 135	Emmew..... iii. 1 91	Hot-house..... ii. 1 66
Aves i. 1 71	Combinatè iii. 1 231	Enshield ii. 4 80	House-eaves... iii. 2 136
Backed ⁶ iv. 1 29	Commandments ¹³ i. 2 7, 12	Enskied i. 4 34	Husband ²⁶ iii. 2 75
Back-wounding iii. 2 193	Concupiscible . v. 1 98	Escapes ²¹ iv. 1 63	Immoderate... i. 2 131
Baldpate v. 1 329	Confessed ¹⁴ ... v. 1 533	Eve ²² ii. 1 130	Inequality.... v. 1 65
Bald-pated ... v. 1 356	Confixed v. 1 232	Facing iii. 2 11	Infliction .. i. 3 28
Bane ⁷ i. 2 133	Confutation ¹⁵ .. v. 1 423	Fewness i. 4 39	Informal v. 1 236
*Bawd-born.... iii. 2 73	Conserve ¹⁶ v. 1 83	Fleshmonger .. v. 1 337	Ingots iii. 1 26
Bay ⁸ ii. 1 256	Contracting (sub) iii. 2 296	Flourish ²³ v. 1 75	Instate..... v. 1 429
Bear ⁹ i. 3 47	Counsellors ¹⁷ .. i. 2 111	Forenamed.... iii. 1 248	Institutions... i. 1 11
	Custom-shrunk i. 2 85		Inward ²⁷ (sub.) iii. 2 133

¹ Used adverbially = accordingly; as adj. used very frequently.

² = probation of a novice; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.

³ Verb, used absolutely; used transitively frequently elsewhere.

⁴ = employed as an attorney.

⁵ Used adverbially; as adj., = attentive, in Coriolanus, iv. 5. 233.

⁶ = having as a back or limit; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.

⁷ Figuratively = poison; used frequently elsewhere = destruction, ruin.

⁸ See note 67. ⁹ = to behave.

¹⁰ = a speaker, = a human being, in three other passages.

¹¹ Elbow's blunder for carnally.

¹² = porcelain.

¹³ = the Ten Commandments.

¹⁴ Used transitively in its ecclesiastical sense; in same sense in trans. Rom. and Jul. iv. 1. 23; used very frequently in its ordinary sense elsewhere.

¹⁵ = conviction. See note 217.

¹⁶ = to preserve; in culinary sense in Othello, iii. 4. 75.

¹⁷ = lawyers; used frequently elsewhere = advisers.

¹⁸ = consistency; occurs in slightly different sense in Cymbeline, ii. 3. 123; Ant. and Cleo. v. 2. 26.

¹⁹ = occasioned by something previous.

²⁰ = pardoned; used in various other senses elsewhere.

²¹ = sallies; used elsewhere in other senses.

²² = all-hallond eve.

²³ Used transitively = to colour; also transitively = to brandish, Rom. and Jul. i. 1. 85; used intransitively frequently elsewhere.

²⁴ = a bud.

²⁵ = to decapitate.

²⁶ = one who keeps house; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.

²⁷ = a confidant; as adj. with similar meaning in Rich. III. iii. 4. 8; used both as sub. and adj. in other passages.

²⁸ Used adjectively.

WORDS PECULIAR TO MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

Act Sc Line	Act Sc Line	Act Sc Line	Act Sc Line
Mealed iv. 2 86	Prioresse i 4 11	Shekels ii. 2 149	Touse v. 1 313
Mercer iv. 3 11	Procures ⁵ iii. 2 58	Shy. iii. 2 138,	Treasonable v. 1 345
Misreport v 1 148	Prolxious ii 4 162	Siege ¹⁰ iv. 2 101	*True-meant .. i 4 55
Moated iii. 1 277	Promise-breach v. 1 410	Sisterly v 1 100	Tun-dish iii. 2 182
Morality . . . i. 2 138	*Promise-keeping i. 2 77	Skeye in 1 9	Unbelieved v. 1 119
Mother ¹ . . . i. 4 86	Prompture .. ii 4 178	Sliding (sub) .. ii. 4 115	Uncleanliness .. i. 1 83
Mouth ² (verb) iii. 2 194	Propagation .. i 2 154	Snow-broth ii. 4 58	Uncleanness ¹⁷ . ii. 4 54
	Provincial ⁶ .. v 1 318	Spawned iii. 2 114	Undiscernible .. v. 1 373
*New-conceived ii 2 96	Provost i. 2 117, etc	Splay i. 1 243	Undoubtful .. . iv. 2 143
Nicety ii. 4 162	Razure v. 1 13	Starkly iv. 2 70	Ungentured... iii 2 184
Notedly v. 1 335	Ready (money) iv 3 8	Stead ¹¹ (up) .. iii. 1 260	Ungot. v. 1 142
Offenceful .. . ii 3 26	Rebate i 4 60	Stew ¹² v. 1 321	Unhurtful iii 2 175
*Outward-sainted ii 1 89	Refelled v 1 94	Stiffe ¹³ ii. 4 158	Unmask (intr.). v 1 206
Over-read .. . iv. 2 212	Remissness fi. 2 96	Stinkingly iii. 2 28	Unscoured i 2 171
Overweigh ii. 4 157	Remonstrance v 1 397	Stones ¹⁴ ii. 1 110	Unshapes iv. 4 23
	Renouncement i. 4 35	Straitness .. . iii. 2 268	Unshunned iii. 2 63
*Parcel-bawd . . ii. 1 63	Rent ⁷ ii. 1 254	Stricture i. 3 12	Unsisting iv. 2 92
Pardoner iv. 2 112	Reproach ⁸ (verb) v. 1 426	Stroke ¹⁵ iv. 2 83	Unskilfully iii. 2 155
Pass ³ i. 3 38	Reprobate (sub.) iv 3 78	Sun-rise ii. 2 153	Unsoiled ii. 4 155
Passes ⁴ v. 1 375	Resemblance ⁹ . iv. 2 203		Unsworn i. 4 9
Penitently .. . iv 2 147		Taphouse ii. 1 220	Untrussing iii. 2 190
Perdurably iii 1 115	School-maids.. . i 4 47	Temporary v. 1 145	Unwedgeable.. . ii 2 116
Permissive i. 3 38	Seedness i 4 42	Tested ii. 2 149	Unwighing ... iii. 2 147
Pick-lock iii. 2 18	Seemers i. 3 54	Testimonied .. . iii 2 152	Uprighteously. i. 1 206
Piled i. 2 35	Self-offences .. iii. 2 280	Thick-ribbed .. . iii 1 123
Planchd iv. 1 30	Sheep-biting .. v. 1 358	Tick-tack i. 2 196	Vastidity iii. 1 69
Plausible iii. 1 254		Tongue ¹⁶ (verb) iv. 4 28	Viewless iii 1 124
Pose (verb) ii. 4 51			*Virgin-violator v. 1 41
Pre-contract .. iv. 1 72			Vulgarly v. 1 180
Frenzie iii 1 94, 97

1 Applied to an abbess or prioress

2 Mouth with, i.e. exchange kisses on the mouth with; the verb is used in other senses elsewhere.

3 = permission.

4 = proceedings Used in Sonn. cni 11 in singular, perhaps in same sense

5 In the sense of to pimp; used frequently elsewhere in other senses.

6 Belonging to an ecclesiastical province; as epithet, derived from Provins in France, in Hamlet, iii. 2. 288.

7 = to hold by lease; = to rend, used frequently elsewhere.

8 The sub. is repeatedly used throughout Shakespeare's plays.

9 = probability; = likeness, occurs in Winter's Tale, v. 2. 39; Rich. III. iii. 7. 11.

10 = a seat; used in other senses elsewhere.

11 = to supply; = to benefit, used frequently elsewhere

12 See note 208. Used three times = a brothel

13 Used intransitively; used transitively elsewhere.

14 Of fruit.

15 Of a pen; used elsewhere in many senses.

16 = to speak of, in Cymb. v. 4. 148 = to speak.

17 Lucrece, 163.

18 Sonn. lxxvii. 10.

KING LEAR

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

LEAR, king of Britain.
King of France.
Duke of Burgundy.
Duke of Cornwall.
Duke of Albany.
Earl of Kent.
Earl of Gloster.
EDGAR, son to Gloster.
EDMUND, bastard son to Gloster.
CURAN, a courtier.
Old Man, tenant to Gloster.
Doctor.
Fool.
OSWALD, steward to Goneril.
An Officer employed by Edmund.
Gentleman attendant on Cordelia.
A Herald.
Servants to Cornwall.
GONERIL, }
REGAN, } daughters to Lear.
CORDELIA, }

Knights attending on Lear, Officers, Messengers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE—BRITAIN.

HISTORIC PERIOD: Mythical, 841–791 B.C. (3105 A.M. Holinshed).

TIME OF ACTION.

Mr. Daniel gives the following time analysis.

Day 1: Act I. Scene 1.	Day 6: Act III. Scene 7; Act IV. Scene 1.
Day 2: Act I. Scene 2.—An interval of something less than a fortnight.	Day 7: Act IV. Scene 2.—Perhaps an interval of a day or two.
Day 3: Act I. Scenes 3, 4, 5.	Day 8: Act IV. Scene 3.
Day 4: Act II. Scenes 1, 2.	Day 9: Act IV. Scenes 4, 5, 6.
Day 5: Act II. Scenes 3, 4; Act III. Scenes 1–6.	Day 10: Act IV. Scene 7; Act V. Scenes 1–3.

KING LEAR.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

The earliest known edition of King Lear is a quarto published in 1608, with the title-page as follows:

M. William Shak-speare: | HIS | True
Chronicle Historie of the life and | death of
King LEAR and his three | Daughters. | With the vnfortunate life of Edgar, sonne | and heire to the Earle of Gloster, and his | sullen and assumed humor of | TOM of Bedlam: | As it was played before the Kings Maiestie at Whitehall vpon | S. Stephans night in Christmas
Hollidayes. | By his Maiesties seruants playing vsually at the Gloabe | on the Bancke-side.
| LONDON, | Printed for Nathaniel Butter, and are to be sold at his shop in Pauls |
Church-yard at the signe of the Pide Bull
neere | S^t. Austins Gate. 1608.

A second quarto was issued by Butter in the same year, the title-page of which is similar, except that instead of the imprint "LONDON," &c., it has "Printed for Nathaniel Butter. | 1608."

It has been stated by several editors that a third quarto was brought out in 1608; but this is an error, due to the fact that of the existing copies of the first quarto no two are exactly alike. As the Cambridge editors remark, the text was apparently corrected when the book was on the press, and the corrected and uncorrected sheets were bound up indiscriminately. This is also the view taken by Dr. Furness in his "New Variorum" edition of the play. He says: "For some reason or other 'Master N. Butter' was in a hurry to publish his 'booke,' and he therefore sent out the 'copy,' divided into several parts, to several compositors, and these different parts, when printed, were dispatched to a binder to be stitched (it is not probable that any of the Shakespearian quartos were more than merely stitched, or had other than paper covers). We learn from Arber's invaluable Transcript of the Stationers' Registers, ii. 881-2, that the binding was not done by the printers, and as there were nearly fifty freemen binders at that time in London, there must have been among them various degrees of excellence. As ill-luck would have it, the several portions of this tragedy of Lear fell to the charge of a careless binder, and the signatures, corrected and uncorrected, from the different printers, were mixed up, to the confusing extent in which the few copies that survive have come down to us."

Critics are not entirely agreed as to which of the two quartos was the earlier, but Furness and Rolfe are probably correct in assuming that the priority is to be assigned to the "Pide Bull" edition, though the evidence in favour of this view is purely circumstantial. The Cambridge editors, in their collation of the texts, call the other edition Q. 1; but in their preface they say that, after all, they are inclined to regard it as the later edition.

In the Folio of 1623 the play is evidently printed from a different manuscript, and a better one than was used for the Quartos. According to Furness the quartos contain 220 lines that are not found in the Folio, which, on the other hand, has 50 lines that do not appear in the Quartos. The 3rd scene of the 4th act is entirely wanting in the Folio.

How the difference in the texts is to be explained has been much discussed by the critics and commentators. No two of them come to precisely the same conclusion, and it is not likely that the question can ever be settled. The weight of authority is in favour of the view that the Folio gives us a later and revised form of the play, and that the omissions in that edition were probably made in the theatre for stage purposes.

KING LEAR.

The play could not have been written earlier than 1603—the date of the publication of Harsnet's Declaration of Popish Impostures, to which Shakespeare was indebted for the names of some of the devils mentioned by Edgar in the 4th scene of act iii.—nor later than 1606, on the 26th of December in which year it was performed before King James. We get this latter information from the entry in the Stationers' Registers, November 26th, 1607, which states that the play was acted "before the kinges maiestie at Whitehall vpon Sainct Stephens night at Christmas Last." Malone, Dyce, and Fleay believe that the date of composition is to be placed early in 1605; Dowden, Furnivall, and Moberly put it 1605-6. Aldis Wright, we may add, finds in Gloucester's speech, "These late eclipses," &c., i. 2. 112, a reference to the great eclipse of the sun which took place in October, 1605, and excited much dismay and alarm. He also thinks that Gloucester's words in the same speech, "machinations, hollownes, treachery, and all ruinous disorders," may allude to the Gunpowder Plot of Nov. 5, 1605, his general conclusion being that "Shakespeare did not begin to write King Lear till towards the end of the year 1605."

The story of Lear and his three daughters is old and oft repeated. "It is told by Geoffrey of Monmouth in his Historia Britonum, by Layamon in his Brut, by Robert of Gloucester, by Fabyan in his Chronicle, by Spenser in the Faerie Queene, by Holinshed in his Chronicle, by Camden in his Remaines, in the Mirror for Magistrates, in Warner's Albions England, and elsewhere in prose and verse. It had also been dramatized in the Chronicle History of King Leir, which, according to Malone and Halliwell, was written in 1593 or 1594" (Rolfe).¹ This old play was reprinted in 1605, not improbably on account of the success of Shakespeare's King Lear, which had just appeared on the stage. The materials of this earlier drama were probably taken from Holinshed; but whether Shakespeare took his incidents from the chronicle or the old play it is impossible to determine. In either case the obligation was of the most trivial nature. In the words of Furness, "The distance is always immeasurable between the hint and the fulfilment; what to our purblind eyes is a bare, naked rock, becomes, when gilded by Shakespeare's heavenly alchemy, encrusted thick all over with jewels. When, after reading one of his tragedies, we turn to what we are pleased to call the 'original of his plot,' I am reminded of those glittering gems, of which Heine speaks, that we see at night in lovely gardens, and think must have been left there by king's children at play; but when we look for these jewels by day we see only wretched little worms which crawl painfully away, and which the foot forbears to crush only out of strange pity."

The story of Gloster and his sons is not found either in Holinshed or the old play of King Leir. For this the dramatist was indebted to Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia; and the skill with which he has interwoven it with the main plot is as noteworthy as in the blending of two independent tales in the Merchant of Venice and other plays.

The following extracts from Holinshed and Sidney will add to the value of this introduction:—

"Leir the sonne of Baldud, was admitted ruler ouer the Britaines, in the yeere of the world 3105, at what time Ioas reigned as yet in Iuda. This Leir was a prince of right noble demeanor, gouerning his land and subiects in great wealth. He made the towne of Caerlier nowe called Leicester, which standeth vpon the riuer of Sore. It is written that he had by his wife three daughters without other issue, whose names were Gonorilla, Regan, and Cordella, which daughters he greatly loued, but specially Cordeilla the youngest farre aboute the two elder.

his Three Daughters. The Latin original of the Lear story is Geoffrey of Monmouth (Hist. Britonum, bk. ii. ch. 11-15). And it was first told, and well told, in English, by Layamon in his Brut ab. 1205. That it came originally from Wales there is little doubt" (Leopold Shakspeare, Introduction, p. lxxx.).

¹ Dr. Furnivall has a useful summary covering much the same ground; he says: "The source of the Lear story is Holinshed's Chronicle; of the Gloster, Edmund and Edgar story, Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia. Mr. Hazlitt has reprinted in his Shakspeare's Library: 1. The History of Lear, from Holinshed. 2. The same, from the English Gesta Romanorum (ab. 1440, A.D.), Edit Madden, pp. 50-3. 3. The History of Leir and his Three Daughters, 1605, a play. It was not used by Shakspeare. 4. Queen Cordela, an historical poem, by John Higgins, from the Mirror for Magistrates. 5. The Story of the Paphlagonian Unkind King, from Sidney's Arcadia. 6. The Ballad of Lear and

INTRODUCTION.

When this Leir therefore was come to great yeeres, & began to waxe vnwelde through age, he thought to vnderstand the affections of his daughters towards him, and preferre hir whome he best loued, to the succession ouer the kingdome. Whervpon he first asked Gonorilla the eldest, how well shee loued him: who calling hir gods to record, protested, that she loued him more than hir owne life, which by right and reason shoulde be most deere vnto hir. With which answer the father being well pleased, turned to the second, and demanded of hir how well she loued him: who answered (confirming hir saiegns with great othes) that she loued him more than tounge could expresse, and farre aboue all other creatures of the world.

"Then called he his yongest daughter Cordeilla before him, and asked of hir what account she made of him: vnto whom she made this answer as followeth: Knowing the great loue and fatherlie zeale that you haue always borne towards me, (for the which I maie not answere you otherwise than I thinke, and as my conscience leadeth me) I protest vnto you, that I haue loued you euer, and will continuallie (while I liue) loue you as my naturall father. And if you would more vnderstand of the loue that I beare you, asser-taine your selfe, that so much as you haue, so much you are worth, and so much I loue you, and no more. The father being nothing content with this answer, married his two eldest daughters, the one vnto Henninus, the Duke of Cornewal, and the other vnto Maglanus, the Duke of Albania, betwixt whome he willed and ordeined that his land should be deuided after his death, and the one halfe thereof immediate-lie should be assigned to them in hand: but for the third daughter Cordeilla he reserued nothing.

"Neuertheles it fortuneth that one of the princes of Gallia (which now is called France) whose name was Aganippus, hearing of the beautie, womanhood, and good conditions of the said Cordeilla, desired to haue hir in marriage, and sent ouer to hir father, requiring that he might haue hir to wife: to whome answer was made, that he might haue his daughter, but as for anie dower he could haue none, for all was promised and assured to hir other sisters already. Aganippus notwithstanding this answer of denial to receiue anie thing by way of dower with Cordeilla, took hir to wife, onlie moued thereto (I saie) for respect of hir person and amiable vertues. This Aganippus was one of the twelue kings that ruled Gallia in those daies, as in the British historie it is recorded. But to proceed.

"After that Leir was fallen into age, the two dukes that had married his two eldest daughters, thinking long yer the government of the land did come to their hands, arose against him in armour, and reft from him the gouernance of the land, vpon conditions to be continued for terme of life: by the which he was put to his portion, that is, to liue after a rate assigned to him for the maintenance of his estate, which in processe of time was diminished as well by Maglanus as by Henninus. But the greatest grieffe that Leir tooke, was to see the vnkindnesse of his daughters, which seemed to thinke that all was too much which their father had, the same being neuer so little: in so much, that going from the one to the other, he was brought to that miserie, that scarslie they would allow him one seruauant to waite vpon him.

"In the end, such was the vnkindnesse, or (as I maie saie) the vnnaturalnesse which he found in his two daughters, notwithstanding their faire and pleasant words vttered in time past, that being constrained of necessitie, he fled the land, and sailed into Gallia, there to seeke some comfort of his youngest daughter Cordeilla whom before time he hated. The ladie Cordeilla hearing that he was arriued in poore estate, she first sent to him priuile a certeine summe of mome to apparell himselfe withall, and to reteine a certein number of seruants that might attende vpon him in honorable wise, as appertained to the estate which he had borne: and then so accompanied, she appointed him to come to the court, which he did, and was so iofullie, honorablie, and loungliereceiued, both by his sonne in law Aganippus, and also by his daughter Cordeilla, that his hart was greatlie comforted: for he was no lesse honored, than if he had beene king of the whole countrie himselfe.

"Now when he had informed his son in law and his daughter in what sort he had beene vsed by his other daughters, Aganippus caused a mightie armie to be put in readinesse, and likewise a great naue of ships to be rigged, to passe ouer into Britaine with Leir his father in law, to see him againe restored to his kingdome. It was accorded, that Cordeilla should also go with him to take possession of the land, the which he promised to leaue vnto hir, as the rightfull inheritour after his decesse, notwithstanding any former grant made to hir sisters or to their husbands in anie maner of wise.

"Herevpon, when this armie and naue of ships were readie, Leir and his daughter Cordeilla with hir husband tooke the sea, and arriuing in Britaine, fought with their enimies, and discomfited them in battell, in which Maglanus and Henninus were slaine: and then was Leir restored to his kingdome, which he ruled after this by the space of two yeeres, and then died, fortie yeeres after he first began to reigne. His bodie was buried at Leicester in a vault vnder the channell of the riuer of Sore beneath the towne.

"Cordeilla the yongest daughter of Leir was admitted Q. and supreme gouernesse of Britaine, in the yeere of the world 3155, before the bylding of Rome 54, Uzia was then reigning in Juda, and Jero-boam ouer Israel. This Cordeilla after hir father's decesse ruled the land of Britaine right worthilie during the space of fve yeeres, in which meane time her husband died, and then about the end of those five yeeres, hir two nephewes Margan and Cunedag, sonnes to hir aforesaid sisters, disdaining to be vnder the gouernment of a woman, leuiud warre against hir, and destroyed a great part of the land, and finally tooke hir prisoner, and laid hir fast in ward, where-with she tooke suche grieffe, being a woman of a manlie courage, and despairing to recouer libertie, there she slue hirselfe."

KING LEAR.

The following extract is from Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia (lib. ii. pp. 133-138, ed. 1598):

"It was in the kingdome of Galacia, the season being (as in the depth of winter) verie cold, and as then sodainlie growne to so extreame and foule a storme, that neuer any winter (I thinke) brought forth a fowler child: so that the Princes were euen copelled by the haile, that the pride of the winde blew into their faces, to seeke some shrowding place which a certain hollow rocke offering vnto them, they made it their shield against the tempests furie. And so staying there, till the violence thereof was passed, they heard the speach of a couple, who not perceiuing them, being hid within that rude canapie, held a strange and pitifull disputation, which made them step out, yet in such sort, as they might see vnseene. There they perceiued an aged man, and a young, scarcelie come to the age of a man, both poorly arrayed, extreameley weather-beaten; the olde man blind, the young man leading him: and yet through all those miseries, in both there seemed to appeare a kind of noblenesse, not sutable to that affliction. But the first words they heard, were these of the old man. Well Leonatus (said he) since I cannot perswade thee to leade me to that which should end my grieffe, and thy trouble, let me now intreat thee to leaue me: feare not, my miserie cannot be greater then it is, and nothing doth become me but miserie: feare not the daunger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse then I am: and do not I pray thee, do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchednesse: but fie, fie from this region only worthe of me. Deare father (answered he) do not take away from me the only remnant of my happinesse: while I haue power to do you seruice, I am not whollie miserable. Ah my sonne (said he, and with that he groned, as if sorrow straue to breake his heart) how euill fits it me to haue such a sonne, and how much doth thy kindnesse vpbraide my wickednesse? These dolefull speeches, and some others to like purpose (well shewing they had not bene borne to the fortune they were in,) moued the Princes to go out vnto them, and aske the younger what they were? Sirs (answered he with a good grace, and made the more agreeable by a certaine noble kind of piteousnesse) I see well you are straungers, that know not our miserie, so well here knowne, that no man dare know, but that we must be miserable. Indeed our state is such, as though nothing is so needfull vnto vs as pitie, yet nothing is more dangerous vnto us, then to make our selues so knowne as may stirre pitie; but your presence promisth that crueltie shall not ouer-runne hate: and if it did, in truth our state is sunke below the degree of feare.

"This old man (whom I leade) was lately rightfull Prince of this countrie of Paphlagonia, by the hard-hearted vngratefulness of a sonne of his, deprived, not onely of his kingdome (whereof no forraigne forces were euer able to spoyle him) but of his sight, the riches which Nature graunts to the poorest creatures. Whereby, and by other his vnnaturall dealings, he hath bene drinen to such grieffe, as euen now he would haue had me to haue led him to the top of this rocke, thence to cast himselfe headlong to death: and so would haue made me, who receiued my life of him, to be the worker of his destruction. But noble Gentlemen, said he, if either of you haue a father, and feele what dutifull affection is engraffed in a sonnes heart, let me intreat you to conueigh this afflicted Prince to some place of rest and securitie: amongst your worthe acts it shall be none of the least, that a king of such might and fame, & so vniustlie oppressed, is in any sort by you relieved.

"But before they could make him answer, his father beganne to speake. Ah my sonne, said he, how euill an Historian are you, that leaue out the chiefe knot of all the discourse? my wickednesse, my wickednesse: and if thou doest it to spare my eares, (the only sense now left me proper for knowledge) assure thy selfe thou doest mistake me: and I take witness of that Sonne which you see (with that he cast vp his blind eyes, as if he would hunt for light) and wish my selfe in worse case then I do wish my selfe, which is as euill as may be, if I speake vntrulie, that nothing is so welcome to my thoughts, as the publishing of my shame. Therefore know you Gentlemen (to whom from my heart I wish that it may not proue some ominous foretoken of misfortune to haue met with such a miser as I am) that what-soeuer my son (O God, that truth binds me to reproch him with the name of my son) hath said is true. But besides those trutthes, this also is true, that hauing had in lawfull mariage, of a mother fit to beare royall children, this sonne (such a one as partly you see, and better shall know by my short declaration) and so enioyed the expectations in the world of him, till he was growne to iustifie their expectations (so as I needed eniue no father for the chiefe comfort of mortalitie, to leaue another ones-selfe after me) I was caried by a bastard sonne of mine (if at least I be bound to beleue the words of that base woman my concubine, his mother) first to mislike, then to hate, lastlie to destroy, or to do my best to destroy this sonne (I thinke you thinke) vnderseuing destruction. What wayes he vsed to bring me to it, if I should tell you, I should tediouslie trouble you with as much poisonous hypocrisie, desperate fraud, smooth malice, hidden ambition, and smiling enuie, as in anie liuing person could be harboured: but I list it not; no remembrance of naughtiness delights me but mine owne; and me thinks, the accusing his traps might in some maner excuse my fault, which certainlie I lothe to do. But the conclusion is, that I gaue orders to some seruants of mine, whom I thought as apt for such charities as my selfe, to leade him out into a forrest, and there to kill him.

INTRODUCTION.

"But those theenes (better natured to my sonne then my selfe) spared his life, letting him go to learne to liue poorely: which he did, giuing himselfe to be a priuate souldier in a countrey here by: but as he was ready to be greatly aduanced for some noble peeces of seruice which he did, he heard newes of me: who (drunke in my affection to that vnlawfull and vnnaturall sonne of mine) suffered my selfe so to be gouerned by him, that all fauours and punishments passed by him, all offices, and places of importance distributed to his fauorites; so that ere I was aware, I had left my selfe nothing but the name of a King: which he shortly wearie of too, with many indignities (if any thing may be called an indignitie, which was laid vpon me) threw me out of my seat, and put out my eyes, and then (proud in his tyrannie) let me go, neither imprisoning, nor killing me; but rather delighting to make me feeble my miserie; miserie indeed, if euer there were anie; full of wretchednesse, fuller of disgrace, and fullest of guiltinesse. And as he came to the crowne by so vnjust means, as vnjustlie he kept it, by force of straunger souldiers in Cittadels, the neasts of tyrannie, and murderers of libertie; disarming all his owne countrimen, that no man durst shew himself a wel-willer of mine: to say the truth (I thinke) few of them being so (considering my cruell follie to my good sonne, and foolish kindnesse to my vnkind bastard:) but if there were any who felt a pitie of so great a fall, and had yet any sparkes of vnslaine dutie left in them towards me; yet durst they not shew it, scarceho with giuing me almes at their doores; which yet was the onlie sustenance of my distressed life, no bodie daring to shew so much charitie, as to lend me a hand to guide my darke steps: till this sonne of mine (God knowes, worthy of a more vertuous, and more fortunate father) forgetting my abominable wrongs, not recking danger, and neglecting the present good way hee was in of doing himselfe good, came hither to do this kind office you see him performe towards me, to my vnspeakable griefe; not onlie because his kindnesse is a glasse euen to my blind eyes of my naughtiness, but that about all griefes, it grieues me he should desperatelie aduenture the losse of his well-deseruing life for mine, that yet owe more to Fortune for my deserts, as if he would carie mudde in a chest of Chrystall: for well I know, he that now reigneth, how much so euer (and with good reason) he despiseth me, of all men despised; yet he will not let slip any aduantage to make away him, whose iust title (ennobled by courage & goodnesse) may one day shake the seat of a neuer secure tyrannie. And for this cause I craued of him to leade me to the top of this rocke, indeed I must confesse, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am. But he finding what I purposed, onely therein since he was borne, shewed himselfe disobedient vnto me. And now Gentlemen, you haue the true storie, which I pray you publish to the world, that my mischieuous proceedings may be the glorie of his filiall pietie, the onlie reward now left for so great a merite. And if it may be, let me obtaine that of you, which my sonne denies me: for neuer was there more pity in sauing any, then in ending me, both because therein my agonie shall end, & so you shal preserue this excellent young man, who else wilfully follows his owne ruine."

STAGE HISTORY.

The first recorded performance of King Lear took place at Whitehall, in the presence of King James, on the 26th December, 1606. For this knowledge we are indebted to an entry in the Stationers' Register, under the names Nathanael Butter and John Busby, and the date 26th November, 1607, to the following effect: "Entred for their copie under th(e h)andes of Sir George Buck Knight and th(e) wardens A booke called. Master William Shakespeare his 'hystorie of Kinge LEAR' as yt was played before the kinges maiestie at Whitehall vppon Sainct Stephens night (26 December) at Christmas last by his maiesties seruantes playinge vsually at the 'Globe' on the Banksyde . . . vi^d." (Arber's Transcripts, vol. iii. p. 161, verso). This is not, of course, the earliest entry in the Stationers' Registers concerning a King Lear, neither does it settle the date of the first performance of the piece. That the first representation took place in 1605 is the conclusion arrived at by Malone and accepted by most subsequent commentators down to Mr. Horace Howard Furness, and to Mr. Fleay, who conjectures it to have been given about May 7 of that year. Even then, as the reader knows, an earlier King Lear had been played. In Henslowe's Diary a representation of "Kinge leare" is chronicled under the date "the 6 of Aprell 1593." This was, of course, the earlier play of Lear or Leir. Henslowe's Diaries, as they exist, are unfortunately untrustworthy. These dates, however, are presumably accurate, and the scene of production was probably the Rose Theatre.

KING LEAR.

To enter into the question of the representations of successive plays is to go over ground already trodden. Little is known concerning those who took part in the performance of Lear. Collier says that Shakespeare was not one of the Queen's men at the period when the first King Lear was played (see Henslowe's Diary, p. 34). Malone assumes that Burbage was the original Lear. This seems borne out by the Elegy quoted at p. 9 of this volume.

After the resumption of theatrical entertainments following the Restoration a little better fate attended Lear than other plays of a similar date, seeing that before it was exhibited in a mutilated form, it was at least seen in its original shape. Downes, in his Roscius Anglicanus (p. 26), numbers among the plays which were acted at the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields, between the opening in 1662 and the beginning of May, 1665, at which time the plague began to rage, "The Tragedy of King Lear, as Mr. Shakespear wrote it, before it was altered by Mr. Tate." It is the chief defect in Downes that he had no idea of the matters of contemporary theatrical history with which future times would be concerned. In this, as in other similar cases, he tells us nothing. Our first stage knowledge of Lear is accordingly in Tate's mangled version. Concerning this we have the dubious advantage of full information. The History of King Lear, by N. Tate, was printed in quarto in 1681, and again in 1689. A list of the dramatis personæ and the actors with which the piece was given at Dorset Garden in 1681 is prefixed. It is as follows:

KING LEAR,	Mr. Betterton.
GLOSTER,	Mr. Gillo.
KENT,	Mr. Wiltshire.
EDGAR,	Mr. Smith.
BASTARD,	Mr. Jo. Williams
CORNWAL,	Mr. Norris.
ALBANY,	Mr. Bowman.
GENTLEMAN-USHER,	Mr. Jevon.
GONERIL,	Mrs. Shadwel.
REGAN,	Lady Slingsby.
CORDELIA,	Mrs. Barry.
Guards, Officers, Messengers, Attendants.

In the prologue to this piece, Tate, after the wont of adapters, pays a few compliments to the author he has travestied. After saying that it might have been worth while under a new name to have drawn the spectators in to "our old honest play," he continues:

But he that did this evening's treat prepare Bluntly resolv'd before hand to declare
Your entertainment should be most old fare.
Yet hopes, since in rich Shakespear's soil it grew,
'Twill relish yet, with those whose tastes are true,
And his ambition is to please a few.
If then this heap of flowers shall chance to wear
Fresh beauty in the order they now bear,
Ev'en (sic) this Shakespear's praise; each rustick knows
'Mongst plenteous flow'rs a garland to compose,
Which strung by this coarse hand may fairer show,
But 't was a power divine first made 'em grow.

The epistle dedicatory to Tate's King Lear is addressed to his "esteemed friend Tho. Boteler, Esq." It is curious as at once an apology for Tate's adaptation, an explanation of his method, and a self-pronounced encomium upon his work. To Boteler Tate ascribes the drama, since nothing but the power of his (Boteler's) persuasion and his own zeal for all the remains of Shakespeare could have wrought him to so bold an undertaking. The chief difficulty he declares to have been in making the chiefest persons speak something like their character on matter whereof he had no ground in his author(!). Lear's real and Edgar's pretended madness have, he holds, so much of extravagant nature as "could never have started but from our Shakespear's creating fancy." He has found the whole to answer Boteler's description of it: "A heap of jewels, unstrung and unpolisht, yet so dazing in their disorder" that he soon perceived he had seized a treasure. Tate's procedure may best be described in his own words: "'T was my good fortune to light on one expedient to rectifie what was wanting in the regularity and probability of the tale, which was to run through the whole a love betwixt Edgar and Cordelia; that never chang'd word with each other in the original. This renders Cordelia's indifference, and her father's passion in the first scene, probable. It likewise gives countenance to Edgar's disguise, making that a generous design that was before a poor shift to save his life. The distress of the story is evidently heightened by it; and it particularly gave occasion of a new scene or two, of more success (perhaps) than merit." Mark and approve Tate's modesty in the last sentence! "This method," continues Tate, "necessarily threw me on making the tale conclude in a success to the innocent distress persons: otherwise I must have incumbered the stage with dead bodies, which conduct makes many tragedies conclude with unseasonable jests." He then quotes the success of the piece as a justification for so bold a change, and fortifies himself with the opinion of Dryden expressed in the preface to the Spanish Fryar (it should be the dedication—there is no preface) that it is more difficult to end a serious piece happily than tragically. One more gem from this precious epistle dedicatory may be exhibited. Tate says: "I have one thing more to apologize for, which is, that I have us'd less quaintness of expression even in the newest parts of this play. I confess 't was design in me, partly to comply with my author's style, to make the scenes of a piece, and partly to give it some resemblance of the time and persons here represented."

INTRODUCTION.

For giving the play a happy termination Tate had more justification than can always be advanced by the perverters of Shakespeare. The termination of The Chronicle History of King Lear, which preceded the play of Shakespeare, and has been supposed to have in part inspired it, is happy. That of Holinshed's history is the same; and the Mirror for Magistrates, the Faery Queene, and other poetical works dealing with the legend, show Lear reigning for from two to three years after his restoration to the kingdom, and then dying in peace. For the Lear of history or of myth, and for that of Tate, such an end is well enough. For the Lear of Shakespeare, however, the sublimest picture of age that the world has seen, it is impossible. The words of Kent dispose of the entire question, v. 3. 313-315:

Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! he hates him
That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.

How long the happy termination—which won the approval of Dr. Johnson and was condemned by Addison, and after him by Richardson in his Clarissa—held possession of the stage will be seen. A score successive revivals between 1681 and 1829 are chronicled by Genest, who can oppose to these but one solitary performance with the original catastrophe.

The dismissal of the Fool was another of the "emendations" of Tate which long won acceptance. Davies surmises that in the few representations of Shakespeare's play which followed the Restoration, "Nokes, whose face was a comedy, acted the fool with Betterton's Lear" (Dram. Misc. ii. 267). This is mere conjecture. Following up his conjecture he says, that "we may guess the consequence" of such a conjunction, and finds in his own supposition a reason for backing up Tate. One fact of interest Davies chronicles, namely, that Garrick once contemplated the restoration of the Fool and designed the part for Woodward, "who promised to be very chaste in his colouring, and not to counteract the agonies of Lear." Garrick's heart misgave him, however, and he dared not "hazard so bold an attempt" (ib.).

In neither version of Lear does Betterton or any of his company seem to have made much mark. Fame, which commemorates his Hamlet and other Shakespearian characters, is silent as to his Lear, and the few unsatisfactory annals of the early stage say nothing concerning any of the cast.

When, on 30th October, 1706, Tate's King Lear was acted at the Haymarket, Betterton was again Lear, Verbruggen being Edgar, Mills Edmund, Freeman Gloster, Minns Kent, and Mrs. Bracegirdle Cordelia. On the 29th November, 1715, at Drury Lane, Barton Booth was Lear to the Edgar of Wilks, the Edmund of Mills, and the Cordelia of Mrs. Santlow. The remainder of the cast is not given, and the performance appears to have inspired but moderate interest. Booth's Lear was in his day compared to that of Garrick, as was subsequently that of Barry. Booth's delivery of the curse on Goneril was rapid. The fire throughout "was ardent, and his feelings were remarkably energetic; but they were not attended with those strugglings of parental affection and those powerful emotions of conflicting passions so visible in every look, action, and attitude of our great Roscius" (ib. p. 279).

At Lincoln's Inn Fields Lear was played for the first time 15th October, 1720, and was acted about ten times during the season. Boheme was Lear, Ryan Edgar, Ogden Kent, Quin Gloster, Leigh Edmund, Spiller the Gentleman Usher, Mrs. Parker Regan, and Mrs. Seymour Cordelia. Antony Boheme, who had a tall figure, an expressive face, with something that was venerable about it, and had originally been an actor on a booth at a fair, Bartholomew or Southwark, obtained some reputation as Lear, and won the praise of Macklin, who says that he assigned Lear a trait of the antique (Davies, Dram. Misc. ii. 277).

In the next important revival, which took place at Drury Lane 8th March, 1739, Quin, who had been the Gloster to Boheme, was Lear, Milward Edgar, Wright Gloster, Mills Edmund, Winstone Kent, Theophilus Cibber the Gentleman Usher, Havard Albany, Mrs. Mills Cordelia, and Mrs. Furnival Goneril. Quin demanded twenty-two rehearsals and attended but two. Without offending the public or forfeiting his reputation, he came altogether short of Boheme, feeling neither the tender nor the violent emotions of the soul, and proving his inferiority to his predecessor in almost every scene (ib. p. 278).

Garrick was the next actor to essay the part of Lear. This he did in his memorable first season of 1741-1742, at Goodman's Fields 11th March, 1742, repeating the performance at Drury Lane on the 28th of May. Tate's version, it is needless to say, was selected. The cast of the first representation is not known; that at Drury Lane included Havard as Edgar, Mills as Edmund, Berry as Gloster, Winstone as Kent, Neale as the Gentleman Usher, and Mrs. Woffington as Cordelia.

To the general blaze of triumph which attended Garrick's opening season his Lear doubtless contributed. Not, however, until later in his career are we able to estimate its influence upon his contemporaries. When once he was pitted against Spranger Barry criticism and epigram ran riot. Before this time Garrick, who had played Lear in Dublin, made, 11th June, 1746, his first appearance in the character at Covent Garden. Upon this occasion Ryan was Edgar, Chapman Kent, Bridgewater Gloster, Cashell Edmund, Philips the Usher, Mrs. Vincent Cordelia, Miss Haughton Goneril, and Mrs. Bland Regan.

On 26th February, 1756, Barry appeared at Covent Garden in Lear. He played the part the previous May in Dublin. Ryan was again Edgar, Sparks was Kent, Ridout Gloster, Smith Edmund, Shuter the Gentleman Usher, Mrs. Hamilton (late Mrs. Bland) Regan, and Miss Nossiter Cordelia. Lear was acted six times. Barry's reception was eminently favourable. His fine figure was of great use, his bearing was dignified and venerable, his manner of speaking the curse impressive, and the pathetic scenes were rendered with remarkable effect. His voice, however, "wanted that power and flexibility which varied passion requires. His pauses and broken interruptions of speech, of which he was extremely enamoured . . . were at times too inartificially repeated; nor did he give that terror to the whole which the great poet intended should predominate" (Davies, Dram. Misc. ii. 280, 281). In one or two scenes Barry was charged with copying Garrick.

To the challenge of Barry, Garrick responded by reviving King Lear at Drury Lane on 28th Oct. 1756, with Mrs. Davies as his Cordelia. The revival was announced as with restorations from Shakespeare. These, however, did not include the tragic termination nor the reintroduction of the Fool. What they were is not known, since Garrick's version has not been printed. Genest assumes that the alterations probably "did not differ materially from those shown in King Lear as published by Bell in 1772 or 1773 from the prompt-book of Drury Lane" (Account of the Stage, iv. 475).

The town was now flooded with comparisons between Garrick and Barry. One or two epigrams of the date were happy enough deservedly to survive. One on "The Two Lears" is as follows:

The town has found out different ways
To praise the different Lears;

INTRODUCTION.

To Barry they give loud huzzas;
To Garrick—only tears.

A second, no less well known, runs:

A king—may every inch a king,
Such Barry doth appear;
But Garrick's quite another thing;
He's every inch King Lear.

Theophilus Cibber, a constant enemy of Garrick, speaks of the first as a pretty conceit, but asks "How if it be not quite true?—For 't is as certain that Mr. Garrick has had other applauses besides tears, as 'tis true, Mr. Barry, besides loud Huzzas has never failed to draw tears from many of his spectators" (Dissertations on Theatrical Subjects by Mr. Cibber, 1756, p. 43). After insinuating that Garrick was jealous of Barry, he supplies another epigram which he claims may stand by the other, and is not the less poignant for its truth:

Criticks attend—and judge the rival Lears;
Whilst each commands applause and each your tears:
Then own the truth—well he performs his part
Who touches—even Garrick—to the heart.

—(Ib. p. 44.)

Garrick was said to have been too deliberate in the curse. This is scarcely reconcilable with the fact mentioned by Davies that he "rendered the curse so terribly affecting to the audience, that, during his utterance of it, they seemed to shrink from it as from a blast of lightning. His preparation for it was extremely affecting; his throwing away his crutch, kneeling on one knee, clasping his hands together and lifting his eyes toward heaven, presented a picture worthy of the pencil of a Raphael" (Dram. Misc. ii. 280).

Among the passages restored by Garrick from Shakespeare were the lines spoken by Lear (ii. 4. 155-158):

Do you but mark how this becomes the house:
"Dear daughter, I confess that I am old;
Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food."

In the delivery of these lines, unknown to Booth, Boheme, and Quin, Garrick, throwing himself on his knees, with his hands clasped, and a tone of supplication in which the irony was veiled, obtained a great effect. Murphy says: "Garrick in Lear was transformed into a weak old man, still retaining an air of royalty; in the mad scenes his genius was remarkably distinguished: he had no sudden starts, no violent gesticulation; his movements were slow and feeble, misery was depicted in his countenance; he moved his head in the most deliberate manner; his eyes were fixed; or if they turned to any one near him he made a pause and fixed his look on the person after much delay; his features at the same time telling what he was going to say before he uttered a word; during the whole time he presented a scene of woe and misery, and a total alienation of mind from every idea, but that of his unkind daughters" (Life of Garrick, i. 37, 38). This presents an aspect of King Lear, but can scarcely be accepted as a complete embodiment of a king whose impetuosity was not the least conspicuous of his qualities. "After Macbeth King Lear was Garrick's masterpiece," says Tate Wilkinson (The Mirror, or Actor's Tablet, p. 221). Mrs. Davies played Cordelia during the illness of Mrs. Cibber, whom Davies calls the most pathetic of all actresses and the only Cordelia of excellence.

Barry played Lear again 7th Oct. 1769, at Drury Lane, with Reddish as Edgar, Palmer as Edmund, Dodd as the Gentleman Usher, and Mrs. Barry as Cordelia, and was replaced by Garrick, 21st February, 1770. Before this time, however, during the absence of Garrick, another Lear had sprung up in Powell, who played the part for the first time 2nd Jan. 1765, to the Cordelia of Mrs. Cibber. Of this performance Davies says that it was "a fair promise of something great in the future" (Dram. Misc. ii. 281).

A new version of King Lear had meanwhile appeared. This, which saw the light at Covent Garden 20th Feb. 1768, was altered by George Colman. It is an improvement upon Tate, but it is very far from being Shakespeare. In a thoughtful and sensible preface—the worst manglers of Shakespeare wrote many such—Colman points out the mistakes of his predecessor and advocates his own theories. "To reconcile the catastrophe of Tate to the story of Shakespeare, was the first grand object I proposed to myself in the alteration" (Dramatick Works, vol. vii. p. 104). On the strength of the censure of Warton (Adventurer, No. 122) he omitted the leap down Dover Cliff. The putting out Gloster's eyes he meditated omitting, but upon examination it appeared so closely interwoven with the fable that he durst not venture to change it. He had at one time an idea of retaining the Fool, but, led again by the opinion of Warton (Adventurer, No. 126), he abandoned it, being "convinced that such a scene 'would sink into burlesque' in the representation, and would not be endured on the modern stage" (Colman's Dram. Works, iii. p. 105).

KING LEAR.

Powell was the original Lear of the nearest approach to Shakespeare that for more than a century had been made. The entire cast survives, but the only features of interest in it are the Duke of Burgundy of Lewis, the Duke of Albany of Hull, Bensley's Edmund, and Mrs. Yates's Cordelia. Besides introducing lines of his own, Colman keeps some of Tate's fustian. It was the fashion to compare the Lear of Powell with that of Garrick. Francis Gentleman, however, while allowing Powell "more nature but less expression than Barry," places him "far, far beneath Mr. Garrick in both." Gentleman avers that Powell's "deportment was abominable; not a trace of majesty in it. His transitions in the violent parts wanted essential volubility (whatever that may mean), and most of his attitudes were injudiciously disposed" (Dramatic Censor, i. 372). On the following page Gentleman speaks with praise of the Edgar of Regan and that of Howard, not knowing how to award either a preference. Smith and Reddish are also said to give satisfaction. The Gloster of Sparks and that of Berry are said to have been respectable, but that of Burton at Drury Lane is nervous and feeble. The Edmund of Palmer and that of Bensley, the Gentleman Usher of Woodward, Dyer, and Dodd, win favourable recognition. Mrs. Cibber, Mrs. Yates, and Mrs. Barry are praised in Cordelia. Of Mrs. Bellamy, it is said, that she "looked the part amiably, but tuned the words most monotonously" (ib. 376). Colman's version was never revived. Mrs. Barry played Cordelia at Drury Lane 7th Oct. 1769, in Tate's Lear, to the Lear of her husband. A revival with the Barrys in the principal parts, Lewis as Edgar, and Quick as the Gentleman Usher, took place at Covent Garden 24th Nov. 1774, and another at the same house on 22nd Feb. 1776, with Mrs. Bulkeley as Cordelia. The performances in Lear of West Digges and of Mossop are also chronicled. Gentleman speaks disparagingly of both. Henderson played Lear at Drury Lane 22nd March, 1779, to the Cordelia of Miss Young. The pathetic was not his forte. His friend Ireland allows that his powers were unequal to Lear. On the 14th of the following April, at the same house, Mrs. Robinson was Cordelia.

Mrs. Siddons first played Cordelia at Drury Lane for her benefit 21st Jan. 1788. Tate's version was adopted, and the receipts taken at the door were £347, 10s. The cast comprised Kemble as Lear, Wroughton as Edgar, Barrymore as Edmund, Aikin as Kent, Packer as Gloster, Lamash as Gentleman Usher, and Mrs. Ward as Regan. The Cordelia of Mrs. Siddons added little to her reputation, and she is held to have chosen the play with regard to her brother's interest rather than her own. Kemble, however, does not seem to have scored greatly in the part, which is not included in the summary of his character given by Hazlitt à propos to his retirement in Coriolanus (Criticism, pp. 287, et seq.). Leigh Hunt also leaves it unmentioned.

Pope played Lear at Covent Garden 6th Jan. 1794, to the Cordelia of Mrs. Esten, Holman's Edgar, Harley's Kent, and Hull's Gloster. Pope had a good voice but no expression, and his performance had little value. On 18th May, 1808, Kemble repeated Lear at Covent Garden to the Edgar of Charles Kemble, the Kent of Cooke, and the Cordelia of Miss Smith. On the 27th of the following February he repeated it at the same house to the Cordelia of Miss Bristow, the Edmund of Brunton, the Gloster of Murray, and the Oswald of Farley. A version altered by Kemble was then acted. In this Kemble restored passages from Tate which Garrick had excised. Genest (viii. 133) declared this version decidedly worse than Garrick's.

Booth was the next Lear witnessed at Covent

INTRODUCTION.

Garden, playing the character for the first time 13th April, 1820, with Macready as Edmund, Fawcett as Kent, and Sally Booth as Cordelia. In the Theatrical Inquisitor, xvi. 246 et seq., the new representative of Lear is said to have made "its hoary-headed hero the victim of his ignorant distortion and unshrinking audacity." Charles Kemble is said to have been "a most poetical representative of Edgar." Mr. Macready's great requisites (sic) were wasted upon the obnoxious villainy of Edmund, and Miss Booth, who was amusingly anxious not to be supposed a relative of the actor performing Lear, whose representation was destined to eclipse her own, was "essentially mediocre" as Cordelia. Fawcett, according to the same authority, was a failure in Kent. The representation was decried as "a mean, hurried, and malicious anticipation of the measures adopted at the other house," at which Kean was announced as Lear.

Kean's first appearance as Lear took place at Drury Lane, 24th April, 1820. Rae was Edgar; Dowton, Kent; and Mrs. W. West, Cordelia. On 10th Feb. 1823, it was revived, when the original fifth act was restored. Other innovations of Tate are assumed to have been omitted. As this is the first fully recorded performance of the play given approximately as Shakespeare intended it to be acted, the cast is supplied: Lear = Kean, Edgar = Cooper, Edmund = Younge, Kent = Terry, Gloucester = Powell, Oswald = S. Penley, Cordelia = Mrs. W. West, Goneril = Mrs. Glover, Regan = Mrs. Knight. The Fool, it is seen, does not appear. Kean in the last act could not carry Mrs. West without obvious difficulty. This caused some laughter, which must have interfered with the success of the performance. On the 24th further restorations from Shakespeare were made, and are said to have been received with enthusiasm. According to the New Monthly Magazine (probably Talfourd) the change "produced no appalling effect, as had been anticipated, but was received with silent tears. (ix. 108). Of Kean's interpretation it is said that it was "quiet, gentle, yet intense, and each word and sigh seemed to come from a breaking heart."

A first appearance at Covent Garden of Vandenhoff as Lear is not indexed in Genest. It took place 9th December, 1820, and was repeated three times. Vandenhoff was announced as from Liverpool. Miss Foote was the Cordelia, and Abbott the Edmund. He was a little awkward in deportment, but was received with applause.

Young played Lear at Drury Lane on the 30th of March, 1829, but the performance was not repeated. A version wrongly announced as Shakespeare's was given. W. Farren was Kent for the first time, Cooper was Edgar; Miss Phillips, Cordelia; Mrs. W. West, Goneril; and Mrs. Faucit, Regan.

On 25th January, 1838, Macready produced Shakespeare's King Lear. He had played the character previously in Tate's version, and was very nervous about the substitution. In common with most actors he feared the introduction of the Fool. His diary of Jan. 4 has this entry: "My opinion of the introduction of the Fool is that, like many such terrible contrasts in poetry and painting, in acting representation it will fail of effect; it will either weary and annoy or distract the spectator" (Reminiscences, ii. 97). The following day he wrote: "Speaking to Willmott and Bartley about the part of the Fool in Lear, and mentioning my apprehension that, with Meadows, we should be obliged to omit the part, I described the sort of fragile, hectic, beautiful-faced boy that he should be, and stated my belief that it never could be acted. Bartley observed that a woman should play it. I caught at the idea, and instantly exclaimed, Miss P. Horton is the very person. I was delighted at the thought" (ib.). The revival was on an elaborate scale. Macready was nervous, and thought he failed in the character. The verdict was, however, favourable. Lear became one of Macready's stock characters, and was played by him in the country and in America. Bulwer, afterwards Lord, Lytton, speaking as chairman at the farewell banquet to Macready in March, 1851, spoke with pardonable extravagance of eulogy of the "titanic grandeur of Lear."

After the example had been set of acting Shakespeare's version, the attempt, so far as the capital is concerned, to go back to the profane version of Tate was abandoned. Innumerable performances of King Lear have since been given, and no tragedian has left it out of his repertory. The productions have, however, for the most part been ephemeral, and have left no surviving record.

KING LEAR.

King Lear was among the revivals of Charles Kean at the Princess's, at which house it was given on the 17th April, 1858. Ryder was Edgar; Mr. Walter Lacy, Edmund; Cooper, Kent; Miss Kate Terry, Cordelia; Miss Heath (afterwards Mrs. Wilson Barrett), Goneril; and Miss Eleanor Bufton (Mrs. Swanborough), Regan. The fool was played by Miss Poole. It was repeated thirty consecutive times. Three years later, in June, 1861, Phelps appeared at the same house in Lear. He showed the pathetic aspects of Lear, but failed in the majestic and the terrible. Phelps had played the part previously at the Surrey and elsewhere. He played it also at Sadler's Wells, 5th Nov. 1845, with Marston as Edgar, George Bennett as Edmund, A. Younge as Kent, H. Mellon as Gloster, Miss Cooper as Cordelia; and again in 1861.

At Sadler's Wells, also, King Lear was played by C. Dillon in 1868 and by W. H. Pennington in 1870. Mr. and Mrs. Rousby appeared at Drury Lane in 1873 as Lear and Cordelia. In February, 1881, Booth played Lear at the Princess's with Miss Maud Milton, John Ryder, and W. Redmund in the cast. In June, 1882, at Her Majesty's Theatre, London, Ernesto Rossi, the famous Italian tragedian, appeared as King Lear, supported by an English company, including W. H. Vernon, John Ryder, Miss Louise Moodie, and Miss Lydia Cowell. The part of the King was delivered by Rossi in Italian, while his associates spoke English, and the experiment was hardly a success. On Nov. 10th, 1892, the tragedy was produced at the Lyceum, with Henry Irving as Lear, William Terriss as Edgar, Frank Cooper as Edmund, Alfred Bishop as Gloucester, Miss Ada Dyas as Goneril, Miss Maud Milton as Regan, and Miss Ellen Terry as Cordelia. The play was splendidly staged, and the entire performance most interesting.

In later days Lear has often been seen at home and abroad, the most noteworthy representations being those of the Italian tragedians, Salvini and Rossi.

Lear has been often acted in Germany and France. On 26th September, 1626, Lear was played by the English Comedians at the Court of Dresden (Cohn's Shakespeare in Germany, Introduction cxvi.). It is now constantly given by the great German companies. Le Roi Lear of Ducis was played at the Théâtre Français 20th June, 1783. It is a wretched work, founded partly upon Tate and ending happily. Another Roi Lear, imitated from Shakespeare by Élie Sauvage and Duhomme, was played at the Odéon in November, 1844. Rouvière was the Lear.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

The play of Lear obviously belongs to that dark chapter of Shakespeare's life when, after his attainment of the fulness of his power and complete mastery of his art, the deeper problems and mysteries of human life were in some singularly pressing and vital way brought home to him for solution. Whatever the special conditions attending the personal struggle, the result was an unequalled series of tragedies of passion, all turning upon the extent to which order and civilization and happiness rest upon domestic and social relations and upon a wise acceptance of the conventions of life without too close and curious a scrutiny. In Othello the fatal strain falls upon the bond between husband and wife; in Macbeth upon that between kinsman and kinsman, between king and subject; in Timon upon that which unites every man with his kind; in Lear upon that uniting parent and child: in all, the false friend, "the smiler with the knife beneath his cloak," the foe within a man's own household, is the unsound link in the chain by which the golden lamp of happiness hangs. Each of these plays, it has been noticed, ends disastrously, "in confusion and sorrow;" but in Lear the passionate emphasis is such as to give the play a unique place, not only in this group, but in the history of drama. The trivial source of the tragic issues of the piece—the fantastic whim of a king from whom madness is not far distant—lends to it almost an ironic force. In it good and evil are more

INTRODUCTION.

definitely ranged in a series of distinct antagonisms than in most of the Shakespearean dramas; but the separation is not for the enforcement of the final salvation and triumph of goodness, but rather of the blindness of the doom which overwhelms good and evil alike. Although at the last the guilty are punished, yet, as Schlegel and others have pointed out, "the virtues that would bring help and succour are everywhere too late, or are over-matched by the cunning activity of malice." So far as the limits of the dramatic action are concerned, vice drags down virtue with it to a not dissimilar fate. Cordelia, it is true, regains her father's love before her death by strangling in the prison; Lear in that clouded gleam, which at the last breaks in for a moment upon the mad brain, has some glimpse of a higher love and truth than he has yet known; the blind Gloucester gropes his way to his leal son's side again; Kent finds grateful recognition of faithful service. But the blow falls unsparringly. Over the corpse of his wronged daughter the old man dies broken-hearted; Kent's vain fidelity has only a third grave to which to look forward; Gloucester dies of mingled joy and grief; Edgar, whose "foolish honesty" has assisted in his father's undoing, has his brother's death upon his hands. Kent's exclamation, "all's cheerless, dark, and deadly," sums up the whole situation; and that this termination rhymed with the personal mood of the poet must be inferred from a variety of contingent circumstances, apart from the fact that the original story and the play from which Shakespeare worked, end happily. While, however, the reflex of a personal mood must undoubtedly be traced in the tragic close of the Shakespearean plot, it must be admitted that the higher logic of events demands it independently of the personal mood. After the breaking down of the mind sufficiently to admit, not merely of the cession of kingly power in one incapable of renouncing the habit and temper of kingship, but of the cession of power in a manner unworthy of a king; and especially after the tragedy of passion which follows the ingratitude of his elder daughters, a comedy-ending to the action would have been discordant. Lear, reconciled to Cordelia, might have been restored to his throne, as in the story on which Shakespeare based his drama; but what reconciliation was possible with Goneril and Regan, what happiness could have rounded off so intense and disastrous a struggle with evil. Lear and Cordelia, saved from the horrors of storm and wreck, would still have found but a bare rock and waste of sea about them, with death only removed a little further off. Once having conceived the idea that such an action as that of Lear in the division of his kingdom involved certain morbid elements which the conduct of his daughters would develop into madness, Shakespeare was almost compelled to a tragedy-ending, though the tone might have been less dark and hopeless. Lear's madness is not that of a mood merely; it is fundamental; the bitterness of life has cut too deeply to find remedy in anything but death. In the case of Goneril and Regan and Edmund, and in a modified degree in that of Gloucester, justice demands the guilty life; and even the death of Cordelia, which at first sight appears wanton, has its necessity in the events preceding it, for no art could withdraw this white victim from the monstrous coils of fate that lay about her. She is doomed, and happiest so. Step by step, as by some inner and dark necessity of things, the foredoomed close works itself out with a consummate art which abundantly proves that whatever depths had been sounded in the personal struggle, the poet had remained master of himself.

Improbable as the story is in itself, Shakespeare has succeeded in making it appeal, not merely as a powerful imaginative product of a fantastic kind, but as absolutely true in its rendering of a great complex of passion. The concrete basis of the drama is a wild phantasmagory of figures performing the strangest antics against a background of turbulence and storm. Yet so true is the passion that breathes in them to the high key in which it is pitched, so logical are the sequences, and with such certainty is mood played off against mood, that after the initial surprise at the conditions assumed by the dramatist, the mind is immediately subdued by a sense of the profoundest reality. Shelley, indeed, describes it as "the most perfect specimen of the dramatic art existing in the world," and even M. Saint-Marc Girardin in his comparison of the Œdipus Coloneus, King Lear, and Père Goriot, is shaken in his adhesion to the methods of the eternal Greeks and the eternal Romans. Schlegel, commenting upon the criticism which censures the incorporation of the story of Gloster and his sons with that of Lear, points out how skilfully the interweaving is carried out so as to secure the highest unity. In one sense the play is a compound of two tragedies—indeed Mr. Moulton has chosen to regard it as three tragedies in one; but the two are so worked that the single motive receives a double enforcement from actions which, though in some respects contrasted, fall within the same scheme of passion. Of the various excellences in the adaptation of details in the plot-construction, Schlegel has noted that the pity felt by Gloster for the fate of Lear becomes the means which enables his son Edmund to effect his complete destruction, and affords the outcast Edgar an opportunity of being the saviour of his father; while the activity of Edmund in the cause of Regan and Goneril, and the passion which both entertain for him, induce them to execute justice on each other and on themselves. Coleridge, with his wonted fineness of touch, has indicated how Cordelia's reluctance to yield a point to her father, the touch of his own stubbornness which animates her, lessens the glaring absurdity of Lear's conduct, which is again, in part, palliated by the similar unwillingness on Kent's part to abate anything in his blunt advocacy of Cordelia. He further points out that the conduct of Edmund to Edgar and his father is rendered plausible by the seemingly casual indication that Edmund has been abroad nine years, and that there has, therefore, been no co-domestication; that the Fool is from the first removed from the sphere of pure buffoonery by the anticipation of his entry in a reference which brings him into living connection with the higher passions and pathos of the play; that the character of Albany renders possible "a perfect sympathy of monstrosity" and consentaneity of action on the part of Regan and Goneril; and that Edgar's assumed madness—he might have added also the professional madness of the Fool—takes off part of the shock which would otherwise be caused by the true madness of Lear. Points such as these might readily be multiplied in evidence of the almost unerring judgment shown in the dramatic structure and minor details of the play. Only one man could have safely handled that great "trio of madness" in the middle act of the piece, and only one man could have carried the action through it and past it without anticlimax to a great termination. In one place only did Coleridge think that Shakespeare had urged the tragic of the play beyond the outermost mark of the dramatic—the blinding of Gloster; a point, however, bearing rather upon the proprieties of stage presentation than upon the dramatist's art in the abstract. From the point of view of the imagination the incident has to be judged by a less restricted standard of fitness—that of consistency with the environment in which the action is supposed to take place. The incident is one amongst other elements in the piece cited in support of the view that the play is to be characterized as the result of a deliberate endeavour to conduct us into heathen and barbaric times, a purposeful study by Shakespeare of an unruly and turbulent age, in which passion was lord of all. The characterization is obviously true in so far that Shakespeare has carefully refrained in the play from all direct reference to Christianity—a degree of chronological consistency possibly not without meaning in view of his other anachronisms; and there is good ground for the stress laid by Mr. Hales on the fact that the strange savage figures of the piece, and its crowding horrors and ghastliness, carry us back to the "dragons of the prime." Along the same line of inquiry is the question, also entered upon by the last-mentioned writer, as to the extent to which the play may be regarded as a deliberate study by Shakespeare in the characteristics of the Celtic race, and as taking an important place among the evidences of his acute sense of ethnological distinctions. By sentiment, if not by system, Shakespeare was inevitably more or less of an ethnologist in the perception of differences of national character and temperament, witness the Teutonic characteristics in Hamlet, the Jewish in the Merchant of Venice, and the Italian in Romeo and Juliet; and the author of the New Exegesis of Shakespeare long since laid stress on the accurate discrimination of the Celtic characteristics in Macbeth. In King Lear this is even more striking; and in this regard at least Shakespeare has been almost faultlessly consistent with the demands of the old British tradition. Some special interest attaches to this in connection with the fact that Shakespeare himself was born on the old Welsh and English borderland, and that certain Celtic elements undoubtedly entered into his own character and genius.

INTRODUCTION.

Of the individual characters of the play it is noteworthy how completely, despite the many clearly-drawn and impressive characters, the figure of Lear dominates all, almost to the point of diffusing a certain madness wherever he may go. He is to be conceived as a large-brained, irritable-nerved man, impulsive, passionate, capable of inspiring the strongest attachment in the best natures, constitutionally compelled to lead, yet in a fantastic moment divesting himself of rulership, though impotent to put away at the same time the habit and necessity of ruling. The trial of the daughters accompanying this is rightly characterized by Coleridge as "a trick," it being manifest that the old king anticipates from Cordelia a profession of affection which will throw into the shade those of her sisters. He comes to her last of the three, but he has reserved for her the most opulent division of his kingdom. She has, moreover, heard the speeches of her sisters, only the turn of a phrase is required to outpace them in the rivalry of profession. At bottom he feels instinctively that her affection is truer and deeper than that of either Goneril or Regan, but he is too habituated to profession not to look for an expression commensurate with the feeling of which his instinct assures him. The trick undoes itself by its own foolishness, arousing, as it was bound to do in a nature like that of Cordelia, only pain and revulsion from the indignity of subjection to so gross a test, from the signs of weakness and senility in the abrogation of power in this childish fashion, and from the unscrupulous eagerness of her sisters to turn their father's weakness to their own advantage. Not under conditions such as these can the full heart speak its love. A chilled and, when she turns to her sisters, even a disgustful reserve overspreads it, with some inherited touch of the obstinacy and pride which are so clearly discernible in the father. The excess of rage of the disappointed king, who finds the instinctive feeling after a greater depth of love in Cordelia momentarily baffled—who finds his longing for intense expression opposed in that pained, relentless, "Nothing, my lord," and his plans all thrown down and ridiculous, is perfectly natural under the conditions assumed. These are undoubtedly, so far as Lear is concerned, those of failing powers of restraint bordering upon madness, if, indeed, it may not be said that this borderland has been already crossed. On this point professionalism has some claim to speak, and at least three medical men, Dr. Brigham, Dr. Ray, and Dr. Bucknall, have certified the insanity of Lear from the very outset of the play, pointing out at the same time—as Coleridge had done before them—the profound insight with which Shakespeare has distinguished the assumed madness of Edgar from the real madness of Lear, and the wisdom of the poet's views with regard to the treatment of the insane. At the same time there is little satisfaction in approaching the study of Lear from the standpoint of Colney Hatch; indeed it is all but impossible to the reader who rises to the due height of the play. As Lamb well said, the passions of Lear are storms turning up and disclosing to the bottom a mind like a sea with vast hidden riches, and in reading the play we are "sustained by a grandeur which baffles the malice of daughters and storms," discovering in the aberration of his reason "a mighty irregular power of reasoning, immethodized from the ordinary purposes of life, but exerting its powers, as the wind bloweth where it listeth, at will on the corruptions and abuses of life." It is a madness which often transcends reason, and Lear the madman was never perhaps more a king. The qualities of Lear are reproduced to some extent in his daughters, the better qualities in Cordelia, the worse in Goneril and Regan, but both in alliance with a certain absoluteness, pride, obstinacy, and impatience. Fine nature as that of Cordelia indisputably is, a spark more of conciliatory tact at the beginning would have averted the tragic fate. If, however, in Cordelia there is the touch of weakness which humanizes, there is in Goneril and Regan no touch of the goodness that redeems. They are bad enough in the old story, but Shakespeare scores even more deeply the lines of evil, adding conjugal infidelity to filial impiety. A curious likeness exists between them; and Victor Hugo, in view of this resemblance, has said that Shakespeare "takes ingratitude and gives this monster two heads, Goneril and Regan." Gervinus, however, has pointed out that Goneril is the calmer, the more resolute, the more pitiless, the stronger and the worse of the pair. Regan, as Dowden puts it, is "a smaller, shriller, fiercer, more eager piece of malice." It is Goneril who first suggests the plucking out of Gloster's eyes; it is she who poisons her sister. Regan quails a little before her father's curse; but Goneril treats it as she would an ordinary outburst of petulance. The two share with Edmund and Oswald a place amongst the most hopelessly wicked characters of the Shakespearean plays. Amongst the other characters the Fool undoubtedly appeals most forcibly to the heart, from the first brief reference, to that significant disappearance in the very middle of the play. In no respect is Shakespeare's art more strikingly shown than in the way in which he thus lifts the Fool from the old level of extemporized clowning and buffoonery and gives the part the highest tragic force. It is in thorough keeping with the daring and profound reach of intellect which has given us in the work as a whole, perhaps "the greatest single achievement in poetry of the Teutonic or Northern genius."

KING LEAR.

R. M. W

Glo.

Away, and let me die.—(Act iv. 6. 48)

KING LEAR.

ACT I.

SCENE I. A room of state in King Lear's palace.

Enter KENT, GLOSTER, and EDMUND.

Kent. I thought the king had more affected¹ the Duke of Albany than Cornwall.

Glo. It did always seem so to us: but now, in the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for equalities are so weigh'd, that curiosity² in neither can make choice of either's moiety.³

Kent. Is not this your son, my lord?

Glo. His breeding, sir, hath been at my charge: I have so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd to't. 11

[Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glo. Sir, this young fellow's mother could: whereupon she grew round-womb'd, and had, indeed, sir, a son for her cradle ere she had a husband for her bed. Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper.⁴

Glo. But I have a son, sir, by order of law, some year elder than this, who yet is no dearer in my account: though this knave came something saucily into the world before he was sent for, yet was his mother fair; there was good sport at his making, and the whore-son must be acknowledged.]—Do you know this noble gentleman, Edmund?

Edm. No, my lord.

Glo. My Lord of Kent: remember him hereafter as my honourable friend.

Edm. My services to your lordship.

Kent. I must love you, and sue to know you better. 31

Edm. Sir, I shall study deserving.

Glo. [He hath been out⁵ nine years, and away he shall again.] [Sennet within.—The king is coming.

Enter LEAR, CORNWALL, ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN, CORDELIA, and Attendants.

Lear. Attend the Lords of France and Burgundy, Gloster.

¹ Affected, liked, been partial to.

² Curiosity, curious scrutiny.

³ Moiety, share.

⁴ Proper, comely.

⁵ Out, abroad.

Glo. I shall, my liege.

[Exeunt Gloster and Edmund.]

Lear. Meantime we shall express our darker¹ purpose.—

Give me the map there.—Know that we've divided

In three our kingdom: and 't is our fast intent
To shake all cares and business from our age;
Conferring them on younger strengths, while
we 41

Unburden'd crawl toward death.—Our son of Cornwall,

And you, our no less loving son of Albany,
We have this hour a constant will to publish
Our daughters' several dowers, that future strife

May be prevented now. The princes, France and Burgundy,

Great rivals in our youngest daughter's love,
Long in our court have made their amorous sojourn,

And here are to be answer'd.—Tell me, my daughters,—

Since now we will divest us both of rule, 50
Interest of territory, cares of state,—

Which of you shall we say doth love us most?
That we our largest bounty may extend

Where nature doth with merit challenge.—
Goneril,

Our eldest-born, speak first.

Gon. Sir,

I love you more than words can wield² the matter;

Dearer than eyesight, space, and liberty;

Beyond what can be valu'd, rich or rare;
No less than life, with grace, health, beauty,
honour;

As much as child e'er lov'd, or father found;
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable; 61

[Beyond all manner of so much I love you.]

Cor. [Aside] What shall Cordelia speak?
Love, and be silent.

Lear. Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,

With shadowy forests and with champaigns³
rich'd,⁴

With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady: to thine and Albany's issue

Be this perpetual.—What says our second
daughter,

Our dearest Regan, wife to Cornwall? Speak.

Reg. Sir, 70

I'm made of that self⁵ metal as my sister,
And prize me at her worth. In my true
heart

I find she names my very deed of love;

Only she comes too short,—that⁶ I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys,

Which the most precious square⁷ of sense
professes;

And find I am alone felicitate⁸

In your dear highness' love.

Cor. [Aside] Then poor Cordelia!
And yet not so; since, I am sure, my love's
More ponderous than my tongue. 80

Lear. To thee and thine hereditary ever
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
No less in space, validity,⁹ and pleasure,
Than that conferr'd on Goneril.—Now, our joy,

Although the last, not least; to whose young
love

The vines of France and milk¹⁰ of Burgundy Strive to be interest'd;¹¹ what can you say to draw

A third more opulent than your sisters? Speak.

Cor. Nothing, my lord.

Lear. Nothing! 90

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing will come of nothing: speak
again.

Cor. Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond;¹² nor more nor less.

Lear. How, how, Cordelia! mend your speech a little,

Lest it may mar your fortunes.

Cor.

Good my lord,

You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I

Return those duties back as are right fit, 99

⁵ Self, same.

⁶ That, in that, because.

⁷ Square, compass, scope.

⁸ Felicitate, made happy

⁹ Validity, value.

¹⁰ Milk, pastures.

¹¹ Interest'd, interested.

¹² Bond, duty.

¹ Darker, more secret.

² Wield, express.

³ Champaigns, plains.

⁴ Rich'd, enriched.

Obeys you, love you, and most honour you.
 Why have my sisters husbands, if they say
 They love you all?¹ Haply, when I shall wed,
 That lord whose hand must take my plight² shall carry

Half my love with him, half my care and duty:
 Sure, I shall never marry like my sisters,
 To love my father all.

Lear. But goes thy heart with this?

Cor. Ay, good my lord.

Lear. So young, and so untender?

Cor. So young, my lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so,—thy truth, then, be thy dower: 110

For, by the sacred radiance of the sun,
 The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
 By all the operation of the orbs
 From whom we do exist, and cease to be;
 Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
 Propinquity and property of blood,
 And as a stranger to my heart and me
 Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barbarous Scythian,

Or he that makes his generation messes³
 To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom 120
 Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd,
 As thou my sometime daughter.

Kent. Good my liege,—

Lear. Peace, Kent!

Come not between the dragon and his wrath.—
 I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest⁴
 On her kind nursery.—Hence, and avoid my sight!—

So be my grave my peace, as here I give Her father's heart from her!—Call France;— who stirs?

Call Burgundy.—Cornwall and Albany,
 With my two daughters' dowers digest⁵ this third: 130

Let pride, which she calls plainness, marry⁶
 her.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
 Pre-eminence, and all the large effects
 That troop with majesty.—Ourself, by monthly course,

With reservation of an hundred knights,
 By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode Make with you by due turns. Only we still retain

The name, and all th' additions⁷ to a king;
 The sway, revenue, execution of the rest,
 Beloved sons, be yours: which to confirm, 140
 This coronet part between you.

[Giving the crown.

Kent. Royal Lear,

Whom I have ever honour'd as my king,
 Lov'd as my father, as my master follow'd,
 As my great patron thought on in my prayers,—

Lear. The bow is bent and drawn, make⁸ from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the fork⁹ invade

The region of my heart: be Kent unmannerly,
 When Lear is mad. What wouldst thou do,
 old man?

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to
 speak,

When power to flattery bows? To plainness
 honour's bound, 150

When majesty falls to folly. Reserve thy state;
 And, in thy best consideration, check

This hideous rashness: answer my life my judgment,

Thy youngest daughter does not love thee
 least;

Nor are those empty-hearted whose low sound
 Reverbs¹⁰ no hollowness.

Lear. Kent, on thy life, no more.

Kent. My life I never held but as a pawn
 To wage¹¹ against thine enemies; nor fear to lose it,

Thy safety being the motive.

Lear. Out of my sight!

Kent. See better, Lear; and let me still remain 160

The true blank¹² of thine eye.

Lear. Now, by Apollo,—

Kent. Now, by Apollo, king,
 Thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

Lear. O, vassal! miscreant!

[Laying his hand on his sword.

¹ All, alone, altogether.

² Plight, troth

³ Makes his generation messes, devours his offspring.

⁴ Set my rest, find rest, repose.

⁵ Digest, enjoy (perhaps, incorporate).

⁶ Marry, find a husband for.

⁷ Additions, title.

⁸ Make, go, get away.

⁹ Fork, barbed head.

¹⁰ Reverbs, reverberates.

¹¹ Wage, wager, stake.

¹² Blank, target.

Alb. Corn. Dear sir, forbear.

Kent. Do;

Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the foul disease. Revoke thy gift;
Or, whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil.

Lear. Hear me, recreant!
On thine allegiance, hear me!— 170
That thou hast sought to make us break our vow,—

Which we durst never yet,—and with strain'd¹
pride

To come between our sentence and our power,—
Which nor our nature nor our place can bear,—
Our potency made good, take thy reward.
Five days we do allot thee, for provision
To shield thee from diseases² of the world;
And, on the sixth, to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom: if, on the tenth day following, 179
Thy banish'd trunk be found in our dominions,
The moment is thy death. Away! by Jupiter,
This shall not be revok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well, king: sith³ thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.—
[To Cordelia] The gods to their dear shelter take thee, maid,
That justly think'st, and hast most rightly said!—

[To Regan and Goneril] And your large speeches may your deeds approve,
That good effects may spring from words of
love.—

Thus Kent, O princes, bids you all adieu; 189
He'll shape his old course in a country new.

[Exit.]

Flourish. Re-enter GLOSTER, with FRANCE,
BURGUNDY, and Attendants.

Glo. Here's France and Burgundy, my noble
lord.

Lear. My Lord of Burgundy,
We first address towards you, who with this
king
Hath rivall'd for our daughter: what, in the least,

Will you require in present dower with her,
Or cease your quest of love?

Bur. Most royal majesty,
I crave no more than hath your highness
offer'd,

Nor will you tender less.

Lear. Right noble Burgundy,
When she was dear to us, we did hold her so;
But now her price is fall'n. Sir, there she stands: 200

If aught within that little-seeming⁴ substance,
Or all of it, with our displeasure piec'd,⁵
And nothing more, may fitly like⁶ your grace,
She's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.

Lear. Will you, with those infirmities⁷ she owes,⁸

Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate, Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd⁹ with our oath,

Take her, or leave her?

Bur. Pardon me, royal sir;
Election makes not up on such conditions.

Lear. Then leave her, sir; for, by the power that made me, 210
I tell you all her wealth.—[To France] For you, great king,

I would not from your love make such a stray¹⁰
To match you where I hate; therefore beseech
you

T' avert¹¹ your liking a more worthier way
Than on a wretch whom nature is asham'd
Almost t' acknowledge hers.

France. This is most strange,
That she, who even but now was your best object,

The argument¹² of your praise, balm of your age,
Most best, most dear'st, should in this trice of time 219

Commit a thing so monstrous, to¹³ dismantle
So many folds of favour. Sure, her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters¹⁴ it, or your fore-vouch'd affection

⁴ Little-seeming, small in appearance.

⁵ Piec'd, pieced out.

⁶ Like, please

⁷ Infirmities, disabilities.

⁸ Owes, owns, has.

⁹ Stranger'd, estranged, disowned.

¹⁰ Make such a stray, go astray so far as.

¹¹ Avert, turn.

¹² Argument, theme.

¹³ To, as to.

¹⁴ Monsters, makes monstrous.

¹ Strain'd, excessive.

² Diseases, discomforts.

³ Sith, since.

Fall'n into taint: which to believe of her,
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Should never plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your majesty,—
If for I want that glib and oily art,
To speak and purpose not; since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak,—that you make known
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,²³⁰
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour;
But even for want of that for which I'm richer,—

A still-soliciting¹ eye, and such a tongue

Cor. Time shall unfold what plighted cunning hides:
Who cover faults, at last shame them derides.
Well may you prosper!

France.

Come, my fair Cordelia.—(Act I. 1. 283-285.)

As I am glad I have not, though not to have it
Hath lost me² in your liking.

Lear. Better thou
Hadst not been born than not t' have pleas'd me better.

France. Is it but this,—a tardiness in nature
Which often leaves the history unspoke 239
That it intends to do?—My Lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the lady? Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards that stand

Aloof from the entire³ point. Will you have her?
She is herself a dowry.

Bur. Royal Lear,
Give but that portion which yourself propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchess of Burgundy.

Lear. Nothing: I have sworn; I am firm.

Bur. I'm sorry, then, you have so lost a
father 249

That you must lose a husband.

¹ Still-soliciting, ever-begging.

² Lost me, caused my loss,

³ Entire, main, essential.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundy!

Since that respects¹ of fortune are his love,
I shall not be his wife.

France. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich, being poor;

Most choice, forsaken; and most lov'd, despis'd!
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be't lawful I take up what's cast away.
Gods, gods! 't is strange that from their cold'st neglect

My love should kindle to inflam'd respect.—
Thy dowerless daughter, king, thrown to my chance, 259

Is queen of us, of ours, and our fair France:

[Not all the dukes of waterish Burgundy
Can buy this unpriz'd² precious maid of me.—
Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind:³
Thou lovest here, a better where to find.]

Lear. Thou hast her, France: let her be thine; for we

Have no such daughter, nor shall ever see
That face of hers again:—Therefore be gone
Without our grace, our love, our benison.⁴—

[Come, noble Burgundy.]

[Flourish. Exeunt Lear, Burgundy, Cornwall, Albany, Gloster, and Attendants.

France. Bid farewell to your sisters. 270

Cor. Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd⁵
eyes

Cordelia leaves you: I know you what you
are;

And, like a sister, am most loath to call Your faults as they are nam'd. Love well our
father:

To your professed bosoms⁶ I commit him:

[But yet, alas, stood I within his grace,

I would prefer⁷ him to a better place.]

So, farewell to you both.

Reg. Prescribe not us our duty.

Gon. Let your study

Be to content your lord, who hath receiv'd you
At fortune's alms. [You have obedience
scanted, 281

And well are worth the want that you have wanted.]

¹ Respects, considerations.

² Unpriz'd, unappreciated.

⁴ Benison, blessing.

⁶ Bosoms, love.

³ Unkind, unnatural.

⁵ Wash'd, tearful

⁷ Prefer, commend.

Cor. Time shall unfold what plighted⁸ cunning hides:

Who cover faults, at last shame them derides.]

Well may you prosper!

France. Come, my fair Cordelia.

[Exeunt France and Cordelia.

Gon. Sister, it is not little I have to say of what most nearly appertains to us both. I think our father will hence to-night.

Reg. That's most certain, and with you;
next month with us. 290

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is; the observation we have made of it hath not been little: he always lov'd our sister most; and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off appears too grossly.⁹

Reg. 'T is the infirmity of his age: yet he hath ever but slenderly known himself.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look to receive from his age, not alone the imperfec-tions of long-engrafted condition, but therewithal the unruly waywardness that infirm and choleric years bring with them.

Reg. Such unconstant¹⁰ starts are we like to have from him as this of Kent's banishment.

Gon. There is further compliment of leave-taking between France and him. Pray you, let us hit¹¹ together: if our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend¹² us. 310

Reg. We shall further think of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i' the heat.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. A hall in the Earl of Gloster's castle.

Enter EDMUND, with a letter.

Edm. Thou, nature, art my goddess; to thy law

My services are bound. Wherefore should I Stand in¹³ the plague of custom, and permit
The curiosity¹⁴ of nations to deprive me,
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-shines

⁸ Plighted, folded, secret.

⁹ Grossly, palpably.

¹⁰ Unconstant, capricious.

¹¹ Hit, agree.

¹² Offend, injure.

¹³ Stand in, be exposed to ¹⁴ Curiosity, scrupulousness.

Lag of¹ a brother? Why bastard? wherefore base?

When my dimensions are as well compact,²
My mind as generous, and my shape as true,
As honest madam's issue? [Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base?

Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality
Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed,
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake?—Well, then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land:]

Glo. Hum—conspiracy!—"Sleep till I waked him, you should enjoy half his revenue."—(Act i. 2. 59, 60.)

Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund
As to the legitimate: [fine word,—legitimate!
Well, my legitimate,] if this letter speed,³
And my invention thrive, Edmund the base
Shall top the legitimate. [I grow; I prosper:—
Now, gods, stand up for bastards!]

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus! and France in choler parted!⁴

And the king gone to-night! subscrib'd⁵ his power!

Confin'd to exhibition!⁶ All this done
Upon the gad!⁷—Edmund, how now! what news?

Edm. So please your lordship, none.

[Putting up the letter.

[Glo. Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter?

Edm. I know no news, my lord.]

Glo. What paper were you reading? 30

¹ Lag of, lagging behind.

² Compact, compacted.

³ Speed, succeed.

⁴ Parted, departed.

⁵ Subscrib'd, surrendered.

⁶ Confin'd to exhibition, limited to an allowance.

⁷ The gad, the spur of the moment.

Edm. Nothing, my lord. 31

Glo. No? What needed, then, that terrible¹ dispatch of it into your pocket? the quality of nothing hath not such need to hide itself. Let's see: come, if it be nothing, I shall not need spectacles.

Edm. I beseech you, sir, pardon me: it is a letter from my brother, that I have not all o'er-read; and for so much as I have perus'd, I find it not fit for your o'er-looking. 40

Glo. Give me the letter, sir.

Edm. I shall offend, either to detain or give it. The contents, as in part I understand them, are to blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Edm. I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay or taste² of my virtue.

Glo. [Reads]:

"This policy and reverence of age makes the world bitter to the best of our times;³ keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness⁴ cannot relish them. I begin to find an idle and fond⁵ bondage in the oppression of aged tyranny; who sways, not as it hath power, but as it is suffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may speak more. If our father would sleep till I wak'd him, you should enjoy half his revenue for ever, and live the beloved of your brother, EDGAR."

Hum—conspiracy!—"Sleep till I wak'd him, you should enjoy half his revenue,"—My son Edgar! Had he a hand to write this? a heart and brain to breed it in?—When came this to you? who brought it?

Edm. It was not brought me, my lord,—there's the cunning of it; I found it thrown in at the casement of my closet.⁶

Glo. You know the character⁷ to be your brother's?

Edm. If the matter were good, my lord, I durst swear it were his; but, in respect of that, I would fain think it were not. 70

Glo. It is his.

Edm. It is his hand, my lord; but I hope his heart is not in the contents.

Glo. Has he never before sounded you in this business?

Edm. Never, my lord: but I have heard him oft maintain it to be fit, that, sons at perfect⁸ age, and father declining, the father should be as ward to the son, and the son manage his revenue.

Glo. O villain, villain!—[His very opinion] in the letter!—Abhorred villain! Unnatural, detested,⁹ brutish villain! worse than brutish!—Go, sirrah, seek him;] I'll apprehend him:—abominable villain!—Where is he?

Edm. I do not well know, my lord. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my brother till you can derive from him better testimony of his intent, you shall run a certain course; where,¹⁰ if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your own honour, and shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. I dare pawn down my life for him, that he hath writ this to feel¹¹ my affection to your honour, and to no other pretence¹² of danger. Glo. Think you so?

Edm. If your honour judge it meet, I will place you where you shall hear us confer of this, and by an auricular assurance have your satisfaction; and that without any further delay than this very evening. 101

Glo. He cannot be such a monster—

Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!—Edmund, seek him out; wind me¹³ into him, I pray you: frame the business after your own wisdom. I would unstate myself,¹⁴ to be in a due resolution.¹⁵

Edm. I will seek him, sir, presently; convey¹⁶ the business as I shall find means, and acquaint you withal. 111

Glo. These late eclipses in the sun and moon portend no good to us: though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourg'd by the sequent effects: love cools, friendship falls off, brothers divide: in cities, mutinies; in countries, dis-

⁸ Perfect, full.

⁹ Detested, detestable.

¹⁰ Where, whereas. ¹¹ Feel, test. ¹² Pretence, design.

¹³ Wind me, insinuate yourself.

¹⁴ Unstate myself, sacrifice my rank and fortune.

¹⁵ In a due resolution, duly satisfied.

¹⁶ Convey, stily manage.

¹ Terrible, affrighted.

² Essay or taste, trial or test.

³ Times, life.

⁴ Oldness, old age.

⁵ Fond, foolish.

⁶ Closet, chamber.

⁷ Character, handwriting.

cord; in palaces, treason; and the bond crack'd 'twixt son and father. This villain of mine comes under the prediction; there's son against father: the king falls from bias¹ of nature; there's father against child. We have seen the best of our time: machinations, hollow-ness, treachery, and all ruinous disorders, follow us disquietly to our graves.—Find out this villain, Edmund; it shall lose thee nothing; do it carefully.—And the noble and true-hearted Kent banish'd! his offence, honesty!—'T is strange. [Exit.]

Edm. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that, when we are sick in fortune,—often the surfeit of our own behaviour,—we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and the stars: as if we were villains by necessity; fools by heavenly compulsion; knaves, thieves, and teachers,² by spherical predominance;³ [drunkards, liars, and adulterers, by an enforced obedience of planetary influence;] and all that we are evil in, by a divine thrusting on: [an admirable evasion of whoremaster man, to lay his goatish disposition to the charge of a star! My father compounded with my mother under the Dragon's tail; and my nativity was under ursa major; so that it follows, I am rough and lecherous.—Tut, I should have been that I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing.]—Edgar! pat he comes like the catastrophe of the old comedy: my cue is villanous melancholy, with a sigh like Tom o' Bedlam.

Enter EDGAR.

[O, these eclipses do portend these divisions! fa, sol, la, mi.]

Edg. How now, brother Edmund! what serious contemplation are you in? 151

Edm. [I am thinking, brother, of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these eclipses.

Edg. Do you busy yourself with that?

Edm. I promise you, the effects he writes of succeed⁴ unhappily; as of unnaturalness between the child and the parent; death, dearth, dissolutions of ancient amities; divisions in state, menaces and maledictions against king and nobles; needless diffidences,⁵ banishment of friends, dissipation⁶ of cohorts, nuptial breaches, and I know not what.

Edg. How long have you been a sectary astronomical?⁷

Edm. Come, come;] when saw you my father last?

Edg. The night gone by.

Edm. Spake you with him?

Edg. Ay, two hours together. 170

Edm. Parted you in good terms? Found you no displeasure in him by word nor countenance?

Edg. None at all.

Edm. Bethink yourself wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty forbear his presence till some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure; [which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief of your person it would scarcely allay.]

Edg. Some villain hath done me wrong. 180

Edm. That's my fear. I pray you, have a continent⁸ forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower; and, as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly bring you to hear my lord speak: [pray ye, go; there's my key:]—if you do stir abroad, go arm'd.

Edg. Arm'd, brother!

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; I am no honest man if there be any good meaning toward you: I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly, nothing like the image and horror of it: pray you, away.

Edg. Shall I hear from you anon?

Edm. I do serve you in this business.

[Exit Edgar.]

A credulous father! and a brother noble, Whose nature is so far from doing harms, That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty My practices⁹ ride easy!—I see the business.—Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit: All with me's meet that I can fashion fit. 200

[Exit.]

¹ Bias, tendency.

² Treachers, traitors.

³ Spherical predominance, influence of the spheres.

⁴ Succeed, follow.

⁵ Diffidences, distrusts.

⁶ Dissipation, disbanding.

⁷ Sectary astronomical, astrological disciple.

⁸ Continent, restrained.

⁹ Practices, plots.

SCENE III. A room in the Duke of Albany's palace.Enter GONERIL and OSWALD.

Gon. Did my father strike my gentleman for chiding of his fool?

Osw. Ay, madam.

Gon. By day and night, he wrongs me; every hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds: I'll not endure it:

His knights grow riotous, and himself upbraids us
On every trifle.—When he returns from hunting,

I will not speak with him; say I am sick:—
If you come slack of former services, 9
You shall do well; the fault of it I'll answer.

[Horns within.]

Osw. He's coming, madam; I hear him.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please,

Edm. Brother, I advise you to the best; I am no honest man if there be any good meaning toward you.—(Act i. 2. 188-190.)

You and your fellows; I'd have it come to question:

If he distaste¹ it, let him to my sister,
Whose mind and mine, I know, in that are one,
Not to be over-ruled. Idle old man,
That still would manage those authorities
That he hath given away!—Now, by my life,
Old fools are babes again; and must be us'd
With checks as² flatteries, — when they're seen abus'd. 20

Remember what I have said.

Osw. Very well, madam.

Gon. And let his knights have colder looks among you;
What grows of it, no matter; advise your fellows so:

I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak:—I'll write straight to my sister,

To hold my very course.—[Prepare for dinner.]

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A hall in the same.Enter KENT, disguised.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my speech defuse,³ my good intent
May carry through itself to that full issue
For which I raz'd⁴ my likeness.—Now, banish'd Kent,

If thou canst serve where thou dost stand condemn'd,

So may it come,⁵ thy master, whom thou lov'st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

[Horns within. Enter LEAR, Knights, and Attendants.]

Lear. Let me not stay⁶ a jot for dinner; go get it ready. [Exit an Attendant.] How now! what art thou? 10

Kent. A man, sir.

¹ Distaste, dislike.

² Checks as, reproofs as well as.

³ Defuse, disorder, disguise.

⁵ Come, come to pass that.

⁴ Raz'd, erased.

⁶ Stay, wait.

Lear. What dost thou profess?¹ What wouldst thou with us?

Kent. I do profess to be no less than I seem; to serve him truly that will put me in trust; to love him that is honest; to converse² with him that is wise, and says little; to fear judgment; to fight when I cannot choose; and to eat no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest-hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. 21

Lear. If thou be as poor for a subject as he is for a king, thou art poor enough. What wouldst thou?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serve?

Kent. You.

Lear. Dost thou know me, fellow?

Kent. No, sir; but you have that in your countenance which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that? 31

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What services canst thou do?

Kent. I can keep honest counsel, ride, run, mar a curious³ tale in telling it, and deliver a plain message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence.

Lear. How old art thou? 39

Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for any thing: I have years on my back forty-eight.

Lear. Follow me; thou shalt serve me: if I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.—Dinner, ho, dinner!—Where's my knave? my fool?—Go you, and call my fool hither. [Exit an Attendant.]

Enter OSWALD.

You, you, sirrah, where's my daughter?

Osw. So please you,— [Exit.]

Lear. What says the fellow there? Call the clotpoll⁴ back. [Exit a Knight.].—Where's my fool, ho?—I think the world's asleep.

Re-enter Knight.

How now! where's that mongrel?

Knight. He says, my lord, your daughter is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slave back to me when I call'd him?

Knight. Sir, he answered me in the roundest⁵ manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not! 60

Knight. My lord, I know not what the matter is; but, to my judgment, your highness is not entertain'd with that ceremonious affection as you were wont; there's a great abatement of kindness appears as well in the general dependants as in the duke himself also and your daughter.

Lear. Ha! sayest thou so?

Knight. I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, if I be mistaken; for my duty cannot be silent when I think your highness wrong'd. 71

Lear. Thou but rememberest me of mine own conception: I have perceived a most faint⁶ neglect of late; which I have rather blamed as mine own jealous curiosity than as a very pretence⁷ and purpose of unkindness: I will look further into't.—But where's my fool? I have not seen him this two days.

Knight. Since my young lady's going into France, sir, the fool hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that; I have noted it well.—Go you, and tell my daughter I would speak with her. [Exit an Attendant.].—Go you, call hither my fool. [Exit an Attendant.]

Re-enter OSWALD.

O, you sir, you, come you hither, sir: who am I, sir?

Osw. My lady's father.

Lear. "My lady's father"! my lord's knave; you [whoreson] dog! you slave! you cur!

Osw. I am none of these, my lord; I beseech your pardon. 81

Lear. Do you bandy looks with me, you rascal? [Striking him.]

Osw. I'll not be struck, my lord.

Kent. Nor tripp'd neither, you base football player. [Tripping up his heels.]

Lear. I thank thee, fellow; thou servest me, and I'll love thee.

¹ Profess, profess to do.

² Curious, elaborate.

³ Converse, associate.

⁴ Clotpoll, clodpole.

⁵ Roudest, bluntest.

⁶ Faint, slight.

⁷ Very pretence, actual intention.

Kent. Come, sir, arise, away! I'll teach you differences: away, away! If you will measure your lubber's length again, tarry: but away! go to; have you wisdom? so.

[Pushes Oswald out.]

Lear. Now, my friendly knave, I thank thee: there's earnest of thy service.

[Giving Kent money.]

Enter Fool.

Fool. Let me hire him too:—here's my coxcomb. [Offering Kent his cap.]

Lear. How now, my pretty knave! how dost thou?

Fool. Sirrah, you were best take my coxcomb.

Kent. Why, fool? 110

Fool. Why, for taking one's part that's out of favour: nay, an thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch cold shortly: there, take my coxcomb:¹ why, this fellow has banish'd two on's daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will; if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb.—How now, nuncle! [Would I had two coxcombs and two daughters!]

Lear. Why, my boy? 119

Fool. If I gave them all my living,² I'd keep my coxcombs myself. There's mine; beg another of thy daughters.

Lear. Take heed, sirrah,—the whip.

Fool. Truth's a dog must to kennel; he must be whipp'd out, when Lady, the brach,³ may stand by the fire and stink.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me!

Fool.] Sirrah, I'll teach thee a speech.

Lear. Do.

Fool. Mark it, nuncle; 130

Have more than thou showest,
Speak less than thou knowest,
Lend less than thou owest,⁴
Ride more than thou goest,⁵
Learn more than thou trowest,⁶
Set⁷ less than thou throwest;
[Leave thy drink and thy whore,
And keep in-a-door,]
And thou shalt have more
Than two tens to a score. 140

Kent. This is nothing, fool. 141

Fool. Then 't is like the breath of an unfee'd lawyer,—you gave me nothing for 't.—Can you make no use of nothing, nuncle?

Lear. Why, no, boy; nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. [To Kent] Prithee, tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to: he will not believe a fool.

Lear. A bitter fool! 150

Fool. Dost thou know the difference, my boy, between a bitter fool and a sweet fool?

Lear. No, lad; teach me.

Fool. That lord that counsell'd thee
To give away thy land,
Come place him here by me,—
Do thou for him stand:
The sweet and bitter fool
Will presently appear;
The one in motley here, 160
The other found out there.

Lear. Dost thou call me fool, boy?

Fool. All thy other titles thou hast given away; that thou wast born with.

Kent. This is not altogether fool, my lord.

Fool. No, faith, lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly out, they would have part on 't: and ladies too, they will not let me have all fool to myself; they'll be snatching.—Give me an egg, nuncle, and I'll give thee two crowns. 171

Lear. What two crowns shall they be?

Fool. Why, after I have cut the egg i' the middle, and eat up the meat, the two crowns of the egg. [When thou clovest thy crown i' the middle, and gavest away both parts, thou borest thine ass on thy back o'er the dirt:] thou hadst little wit in thy bald crown, when thou gavest thy golden one away. If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so. 180

[Singing: Fools had ne'er less grace in a year;

For wise men are grown foppish,⁸

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

Lear. When were you wont to be so full of songs, sirrah?

Fool. I have used it, nuncle, e'er since thou madest thy daughters thy mothers: for when

¹ Coxcomb, fool's cap

² Living, property.

³ Brach, female hound.

⁴ Owest, ownest.

⁵ Goest, walkest. ⁶ Trowest, knowest. ⁷ Set, stake.

⁸ Foppish, foolish.

{thou gavest them the rod, and puttedst down
{thine own breeches,] 190

Singing: Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among.

Prithee, nuncle, keep a schoolmaster that can teach thy fool to lie: I would fain learn to lie.

Lear. An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd.

Fool. I marvel what kin thou and thy daughters are: they'll have me whipp'd for speaking true, thou'lt have me whipp'd for lying; and sometimes I am whipp'd for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o' thing than a fool: and yet I would not be thee, nuncle; thou hast pared thy wit o' both sides, and left nothing i' the middle:—here comes one o' the parings.

Enter GONERIL.

Lear. How now, daughter! what makes that frontlet¹ on? Methinks you are too much of late i' the frown. 209

{[Fool. Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou
{hadst no need to care for her frowning; now
{thou art an O without a figure: I am better
{than thou art now; I am a fool, thou art noth{ing.—[To Goneril] Yes, forsooth, I will hold
{my tongue; so your face bids me, though you {say nothing. Mum, mum,

He that keeps nor crust nor crum,
Weary of all, shall want some.—

{That's a shealed² peascod. [Pointing to Lear.]

Gon. Not only, sir, this your all-licens'd
fool, 220

But other of your insolent retinue³
Do hourly carp and quarrel; breaking forth
In rank and not-to-be-endured riots.

Sir,
I had thought, by making this well known unto you,
T' have found a safe redress; but now grow fearful,
By what yourself too late have spoke and
done,
That you protect this course, and put it on⁴

By your allowance; [which if you should, the fault

Would not scape censure, nor the redresses
sleep, 229

Which, in the tender of⁵ a wholesome weal,⁶
Might in their working do you that offence,
Which else were shame, that then necessity
Will call discreet proceeding.]

Fool. For, you throw, nuncle,

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it's had it⁷ head bit off by it young.

[So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.⁸]

Lear. Are you our daughter?

Gon. Come, sir,

I would you would make use of that good
wisdom 240

Whereof I know you're fraught; and put away
These dispositions, that of late transform you
From what you rightly are.

{[Fool. May not an ass know when the cart
{draws the horse?—Whoop, Jug! I love thee.]

Lear. Doth any here know me?—Why, this is not Lear:

Doth Lear walk thus? speak thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his notion⁹ weakens, or his discernings
Are lethargied—Ha! waking? 't is not so.—

Who is it that can tell me who I am?— 250

Fool. Lear's shadow.

{[Lear. I would learn that; for, by the {marks of sovereignty, knowledge, and reason,
{I should be false-persuaded I had daughters.

Fool. Which they will make an obedient
father.]

Lear. Your name, fair gentlewoman?

Gon. This admiration,¹⁰ sir, is much o' the savour

Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you
To understand my purpose aright: 260
As you are old and reverend, you should be wise.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debosh'd,¹¹ and bold,

⁵ Tender of, regard for.

⁶ Wholesome weal, healthy commonwealth.

⁷ It, its (old possessive).

⁸ Darkling, in the dark.

⁹ Notion, mind.

¹⁰ Admiration, astonishment. ¹¹ Debosh'd, debauched.

That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shows like a riotous inn: epicurism and lust
[Make it more like a tavern or a brothel
Than a grac'd¹ palace.] The shame itself doth speak

For instant remedy: be, then, desir'd
By her, that else will take the thing she begs,
A little to disquantity² your train; 270
And the remainder, that shall still depend,
To be such men as may besort³ your age,
Which know themselves and you.

Lear. Darkness and devils!—
Saddle my horses; call my train together.—
Degenerate bastard! I'll not trouble thee:
Yet have I left a daughter.

Gon. You strike my people; and your disorder'd rabble
Make servants of their betters.

Enter ALBANY.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents,—[To Albany] O, sir, are you come?
Is it your will? Speak, sir.—Prepare my horses.— 280
Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous when thou show'st thee in a child
Than the sea-monster!

Alb. Pray, sir, be patient.

Lear. [To Goneril] Detested⁴ kite! thou liest:
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know,
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their name.—O most small fault,

How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine,⁵ wrench'd my frame of nature 290
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,

And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beat at this gate, that let thy folly in,
[Striking his head.]
And thy dear judgment out!—Go, go, my people.

Alb. My lord, I'm guiltless, as I'm ignorant
Of what hath mov'd you.

¹ Grac'd, dignified.

² Disquantity, diminish.

³ Besort, become.

⁴ Detested, detestable.

⁵ Engine, rack.

Lear.

It may be so, my lord.—
Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear!
Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend
To make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility! 300
Dry up in her the organs of increase;
And from her derogate⁶ body never spring
A babe to honour her! If she must teem,⁷
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart⁸ disnatur'd⁹ torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent¹⁰ tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's¹¹ pains and benefits
To laughter and contempt,—that she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is 310
To have a thankless child!—Away, away!

[Exit.]
Alb. Now, gods that we adore, whereof comes this?

Gon. Never afflict yourself to know the cause;
But let his disposition have that scope
That dotage gives it.

Re-enter LEAR.

Lear. What, fifty of my followers at a clap!
Within a fortnight?

Alb. What's the matter, sir?

Lear. I'll tell thee,—[To Goneril] Life and death! I am asham'd
That thou hast power to shake my manhood
thus;
That these hot tears, which break from me
perforce, 320
Should make thee worth them.—Blasts and fogs upon thee!

Th' untented¹² woundings of a father's curse
Pierce every sense about thee!—Old fond eyes,
Bewep this cause again, I'll pluck ye out,
And cast you, with the waters that you lose,
To temper clay.—Ha, is it come to this?
Let it be so:—I have another daughter,
Who, I am sure, is kind and comfortable:¹³
When she shall hear this of thee, with her nails
She'll flay thy wolfish visage. Thou shalt find

⁶ Derogate, degraded, depraved.

⁷ Teem, bear children.

⁸ Thwart, perverse.

⁹ Disnatur'd, unnatural.

¹⁰ Cadent, falling.

¹¹ Mother's, maternal

¹² Untented, incurable.

¹³ Comfortable, ready to comfort.

That I'll resume the shape which thou dost think 331
I have cast off for ever; thou shalt, I warrant thee.

[Exeunt Lear, Kent, and Attendants.]

Gon. Do you mark that, my lord?

Alb. I cannot be so partial, Goneril,

To the great love I bear you,—

Gon. Pray you, content.—What, Oswald, ho!—

[To the Fool] You, sir, more knave than fool, after your master.

Fool. Nuncle Lear, nuncle Lear, tarry, and take the fool with thee.—

A fox, when one has caught her, 340
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a halter:
So the fool follows after. [Exit.]

Gon. This man hath had good counsel:—a hundred knights!

'Tis politic and safe to let him keep

At point¹ a hundred knights: yes, that, on every dream,

Each buzz,² each fancy, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard³ his dotage with their powers,
And hold our lives in mercy.⁴—Oswald, I say!—

Alb. Well, you may fear too far.

Gon. Safer than trust too far:
Let me still⁵ take away the harms I fear,
Not fear still to be taken:⁶ I know his heart.

What he hath utter'd I have writ my sister:
If she sustain him and his hundred knights,
When I have show'd th' unfitness,—

Re-enter OSWALD.

How now, Oswald!

What, have you writ that letter to my sister?

Osw. Ay, madam.

Gon. Take you some company, and away to horse:

Inform her full of my particular fear; 350
And thereto add such reasons of your own
As may compact it more. Get you gone;

And hasten your return. [Exit Oswald.] No, no, my lord, 363

This milky gentleness and course of yours,
Though I condemn not, yet, under pardon,
You are much more at task⁷ for want of wisdom

Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

Fool. So the fool follows after —(Act i. 4. 344.)

Alb. How far your eyes may pierce I cannot tell:

Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.

Gon. Nay, then— 370

Alb. Well, well; the event.⁸] [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Court before the same.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these letters. Acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know than comes from her demand out of the letter. If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.

⁷ At task, to be taken to task, at fault.

⁸ The event, the result (will show).

¹ At point, at call, ready.

² Buzz, whisper.

³ Enguard, guard.

⁴ In mercy, at his mercy.

⁵ Still, ever.

⁶ Taken, overtaken (by the harms).

Kent. I will not sleep, my lord, till I have delivered your letter. [Exit.]

Fool. If a man's brains were in 's heels, were't not in danger of kibes?¹

Lear. Ay, boy. 10

Fool. Then, I prithee, be merry; thy wit shall ne'er go slipshod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha!

Fool. Shalt see thy other daughter will use thee kindly; for though she's as like this as a crab²'s like an apple, yet I can what I can tell.

Lear. What canst tell, boy?

Fool. She will taste as like this as a crab does to a crab. Thou canst tell why one's nose stands i' the middle on's face? 20

Lear. No.

Fool. Why, to keep one's eyes of either side's nose; that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong—

Fool. Canst tell how an oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Fool. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a nail has a house. 30

Lear. Why?

Fool. Why, to put his head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case.

Lear. I will forget my nature.—So kind a father!—Be my horses ready?

Fool. Thy asses are gone about 'em. The reason why the seven stars³ are no more⁴ than seven is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight? 40

Fool. Yes, indeed: thou wouldst make a good fool.

Lear. To take 't again perforce!⁵—Monster ingratitude!

Fool. If thou wert my fool, nuncle, I'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Fool. Thou shouldst not have been old till thou hadst been wise.

Lear. O, let me not be mad, not mad, sweet heaven! 50

Keep me in temper: I would not be mad!

Enter Gentleman.

How now! are the horses ready?

Gent. Ready, my lord.

Lear. Come, boy.

Fool. She that's a maid now, and laughs at my departure,

Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A court within the castle of the Earl of Gloster.

Enter EDMUND and CURAN, meeting.

Edm. Save thee, Curan.

Cur. And you, sir. I have been with your father, and given him notice that the Duke of Cornwall and Regan his duchess will be here with him this night.

Edm. How comes that?

Cur. Nay, I know not.—You have heard of news abroad,—I mean the whisper'd ones, or they are yet but ear-kissing⁶ arguments?

Edm. Not I: pray you, what are they? 10

Cur. Have you heard of no likely wars toward⁷ 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Edm. Not a word.

Cur. You may do, then, in time. Fare you well, sir. [Exit.]

Edm. The Duke be here to-night? The better! best!

This weaves itself perforce into my business. My father hath set guard to take my brother; And I have one thing, of a queasy⁸ question, Which I must act:—briefness and fortune, work!— 20

Brother, a word;—descend:—brother, I say!

¹ Kibes, chilblains. ² Crab, crab-apple.

³ Seven stars, the Pleiades. ⁴ More, more.

⁵ Perforce, by force. ⁶ Ear-kissing, whispered in the ear.

⁷ Toward, coming, in preparation.

⁸ Queasy, delicate.

Enter EDGAR.

My father watches:—O sir, fly this place; 22
Intelligence is given where you are hid;
You've now the good advantage of the night:—
Have you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall?

He's coming hither; now, i' the night, i' th'
haste,

And Regan with him: have you nothing said
Upon his party¹ 'gainst the Duke of Albany?
Advise yourself.

Edg. I'm sure on't, not a word.

Edm. I hear my father coming:—pardon
me; 30

In cunning I must draw my sword upon you:—
Draw: seem to defend yourself: now quit
you well.—

Yield:—come before my father.—Light, ho,
here!

Fly, brother.—Torches, torches!—So, farewell.

[Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion [Wounds his arm.

Of my more fierce endeavour: I've seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.—Father, father!—
Stop, stop!—No help?

Enter GLOSTER, and Servants with torches.

Glo. Now, Edmund, where's the villain?

Edm. Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out, 40

Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon

To stand auspicious mistress,—

Glo. But where is he?

Edm. Look, sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villain, Edmund?

Edm. Fled this way, sir, when by no means he could—

Glo. Pursue him, ho!—Go after. [Exeunt some Servants.]—By no means what?

Edm. Persuade me to the murder of your lordship;

{[But that I told him the revenging gods
{'Gainst parricides did all their thunders bend;
{Spoke with how manifold and strong a bond

The child was bound to the father;—sir, in { fine,] 50

Seeing how loathly² opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose, in fell motion,³
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd mine arm:
But when he saw my best alarum'd⁴ spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,

Or whether gasted⁵ by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled.

Glo. Let him fly far:

Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found—dispatch.—The noble duke my master, 60

My worthy arch⁶ and patron, comes to-night:
By his authority I will proclaim it,
That he which finds him shall deserve our thanks,

Bringing the murderous coward to the stake;
He that conceals him, death.

[Edm. When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him pight⁷ to do it, with curst⁸
speech

I threaten'd to discover him: he replied,
"Thou unpossessing⁹ bastard! dost thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal 70

Of any trust, virtue, or worth, in thee Make thy words faith'd¹⁰? No: what I should deny,—

As this I would; ay, though thou didst produce

My very character,¹¹—I'd turn it all
To thy suggestion,¹² plot, and damned practice:

And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant¹³ and potential spurs
To make thee seek it."

Glo. Strong and fasten'd¹⁴ villain!

² Loathly, loathingly.

³ Motion, attack (a fencing term).

⁴ Best alarum'd, thoroughly roused.

⁵ Gasted, frightened.

⁶ Arch, chief.

⁷ Pight, fixed, settled.

⁸ Curst, sharp, harsh.

⁹ Unpossessing, incapable of inheriting.

¹⁰ Faith'd, believed.

¹¹ Character, handwriting.

¹² Suggestion, evil prompting.

¹³ Pregnant, ready.

¹⁴ Fasten'd, confirmed.

¹ Party, part, side.

{ Would he deny his letter?—I never got¹ { him.—] [Tucket within.

Hark, the duke's trumpets! I know not why
 he comes.— 81

All ports² I'll bar; the villain shall not
 scape;

The duke must grant me that: besides, his picture

I will send far and near, that all the kingdom
 May have due note of him; and of my land,
 Loyal and natural boy, I'll work the means
 To make thee capable.³

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Attendants.

Corn. How now, my noble friend! since I came hither,—

Which I can call but now,—I've heard strange
 news.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short 90

Which can pursue th' offender. How dost,
 my lord?

{ [Glo. O, madam, my old heart is crack'd,— { it's crack'd!

{ Reg.] What, did my father's godson seek your life?

He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar?

Glo. O lady, lady, shame would have it hid!

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous knights

That tend upon my father?

{ [Glo. I know not, madam:—'tis too bad,
 { too bad.]

Edm. Yes, madam, he was of that consort.⁴

Reg. No marvel, then, though he were ill affected: 100

{ ['Tis they have put him on⁵ the old man's
 { death,

{ To haveth' expense and waste of his revenues.⁶]
 I have this present evening from my sister

Been well inform'd of them; and with such cautions,

That if they come to sojourn at my house,
 I'll not be there.

Corn. Nor I, assure thee, Regan.—

Edmund, I hear that you have shown your father

A child-like office.

Edm. 'T was my duty, sir.

Glo. He did bewray⁷ his practice:⁸ and receiv'd 109

This hurt you see, striving to apprehend him.

Corn. Is he pursu'd?

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Corn. If he be taken, he shall never more

Be fear'd of⁹ doing harm: [make your own,
 purpose,

How in my strength¹⁰ you please.]—For you,
 Edmund,

Whose virtue and obedience doth this instant
 So much commend itself, you shall be ours:

Natures of such deep trust¹¹ we shall much need;

You we first seize on.

Edm. I shall serve you, sir,

Truly, however else.

Glo. For him I thank your grace.

Corn. You know not why we came to visit
 you,— 120

Reg. Thus out of season, threading darkey'd night:

[Occasions, noble Gloster, of some poise,¹²
 Wherein we must have use of your advice:]—

Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
 Of differences, which I best thought it fit
 To answer from our home; the several messengers

From hence attend dispatch. Our good old friend,

Lay comforts to your bosom; and bestow

Your needful counsel to our businesses, 129
 Which craves the instant use.

Glo. I serve you, madam:
 Your graces are right welcome. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Before Gloster's castle.

Enter KENT and OSWALD, severally.

[Osw. Good dawning to thee, friend: art of this house?

Kent. Ay.

¹ Got, begot.

² Ports, gates.

³ Capable, a possible heir.

⁴ Consort, set, company.

⁵ Put him on, incited him to.

⁶ Revenues, accented on second syllable.

⁷ Bewray, betray.

⁸ Practice, plot.

⁹ Of, for, as to.

¹⁰ In my strength, with my authority.

¹¹ Trust, trustworthiness. ¹² Poise, weight.

Osw. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I' the mire.

Osw. Prithee, if thou lovest me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Osw. Why, then, I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury pinfold,¹ I would make thee care for me.

10

Osw. Why dost thou use me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow, I know thee.

Osw. What dost thou know me for?

Kent. A knave; a rascal; an eater of broken meats; a base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited,² hundred-pound, filthy, worsted-stock-

Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with letters against the king.—(Act II. 2. 33, 39.)

ing,³ knave; a lily-livered, action-taking,⁴ whoreson, glass-gazing,⁵ superserviceable,⁶ finical rogue; one-trunk-inheriting⁷ slave; one that wouldst be a bawd, in way of good service, and art nothing but the composition of a knave, beggar, coward, pander, and the son and heir of a mongrel bitch: one whom I will beat into clamorous whining, if thou deniest the least syllable of thy addition.⁸

¹ Pinfold, pound.

² Three-suited, with only three suits of clothes.

³ Worsted-stocking, wearing cheap stockings, shabby.

⁴ Action-taking, bringing lawsuits.

⁵ Glass-gazing, vain. ⁶ Superserviceable, officious.

⁷ One-trunk-inheriting, beggarly. ⁸ Addition, title.

Osw. Why, what a monstrous fellow art thou, thus to rail on one that is neither known of thee nor knows thee!

29

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me! Is it two days since I tripp'd up thy heels, and beat thee, before the king? Draw, you rogue: for, though it be night, yet the moon shines; I'll make a sop o' the moonshine of you: draw, you whoreson cullionly⁹ barber-monger,¹⁰ draw.

[Drawing his sword.]

Osw. Away! I have nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw, you rascal: you come with

⁹ Cullionly, base, vile.

¹⁰ Barber-monger, top.

letters against the king; and take Vanity the puppet's part against the royalty of her father: draw, you rogue, or I'll so carbonado¹ your shanks:—draw, you rascal; come your ways.

Osw. Help, ho! murder! help!

Kent. Strike, you slave; stand, rogue, stand; you neat² slave, strike. [Beating him.]

Osw. Help, ho! murder! murder!

Enter EDMUND.

Edm. How now! What's the matter?

[Kent. With you, goodman boy, if you please: come, I'll flesh ye; come on, young master.]

Enter GLOSTER.

[Glo. Weapons! arms! What's the matter here?] 51

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, and Servants.

Corn. Keep peace, upon your lives; He dies that strikes again. What is the matter?

Reg. The messengers from our sister and the king.

Corn. What is your difference?³ speak.

Osw. I am scarce in breath, my lord.

Kent. No marvel, you have so bestirr'd your valour. You cowardly rascal, nature disclaims in⁴ thee: a tailor made thee. 60

Corn. Thou art a strange fellow: a tailor make a man?

Kent. Ay, a tailor, sir: a stone-cutter or a painter could not have made him so ill, though they had been but two hours o' the trade.

Corn. Speak yet, how grew your quarrel?

Osw. This ancient ruffian, sir, whose life I have spar'd at suit of his gray beard,—

Kent. [Thou whoreson zed!] thou unnecessary letter!—My lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unbolted⁵ villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes⁶ with him.—“Spare my gray beard,” you wagtail?

Corn. Peace, sirrah!

[You beastly knave,] know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes, sir; but anger hath a privilege.

Corn. Why art thou angry?

[Kent. That such a slave as this should wear a sword,

Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,

Like rats, oft bite the holy cords a-twain 80

Which are too intrinse⁷ t' unloose; smooth⁸ every passion

That in the natures of their lords rebel;

Being oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;

Renege,⁹ affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With every gale and vary of their masters,

Knowing naught, like dogs, but following.—

A plague upon your epileptic visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,

I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot. 90

Corn. What, art thou mad, old fellow?

Glo. How fell you out? say that.]

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy Than I and such a knave.

Corn. Why dost thou call him knave? What is his fault?

Kent. His countenance likes¹⁰ me not.

Corn. No more, perchance, does mine, nor his, nor hers.

Kent. Sir, 't is my occupation to be plain:

I have seen better faces in my time

Than stands on any shoulder that I see 100

Before me at this instant.

Corn. This is some fellow, Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness, [and constrains the garb¹¹

Quite from his nature: he cannot flatter, he,—

An honest mind and plain,—he must speak truth!

An they will take it, so; if not, he's plain.]

These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbour more craft and more corrupter ends

Than twenty silly-ducking¹² observants¹³

That stretch their duties nicely.¹⁴ 110

[Kent. Sir, in good faith, in sincere verity,

⁷ Intrinse, intricate.

⁸ Smooth, flatter.

⁹ Renege, deny.

¹⁰ Likes, pleases.

¹¹ Constrains the garb, distorts his appearance.

¹² Silly-ducking, obsequious.

¹³ Observants, servile persons. ¹⁴ Nicely, scrupulously.

¹ Carbonado, notch, cut.

² Neat, mere (perhaps, spruce, finical).

³ Difference, quarrel.

⁴ Disclaims in, disowns.

⁵ Unbolted, coarse.

⁶ Jakes, privy.

Under th' allowance of your great aspect,¹
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire
On flickering Phœbus' front,—

Corn. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discommend so much. I know, sir, I am no flatterer: he that beguil'd you in a plain accent was a plain knave; which, for my part,
I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to 't. 120

Corn. What was the offence you gave him?

Osw. I never gave him any:

It pleas'd the king his master very late
To strike at me, upon his misconstruction;
When he, compact,² and flattering his displeasure,
Tripp'd me behind; being down, insulted, rail'd,
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied³ him, got praises of the king
For him attempting⁴ who was self-subdu'd;
And, in the fleshment⁵ of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here again.

[Kent. None of these rogues and cowards
But Ajax is their fool.⁶]

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks!—

You stubborn ancient knave, you reverend braggart, 133
We'll teach you—

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learn:
Call not your stocks for me: I serve the king;
On whose employment I was sent to you:
You shall do small respect, show too bold malice

Against the grace and person of my master,
Stocking⁷ his messenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the stocks!—As I have life and honour, 140
There shall he sit till noon.

Reg. Till noon! till night, my lord; and all night too.

Kent. Why, madam, if I were your father's dog,

You should not use me so.

Reg. Sir, being his knave, I will.

¹ Aspect, accented on second syllable.

² Compact, joining with him.

³ Worthied, exalted.

⁴ Him attempting, attacking him.

⁵ Fleshment, glory, exultation.

⁶ Their fool, a fool to them.

⁷ Stocking, putting in the stocks.

Corn. This is a fellow of the self-same colour
Our sister speaks of.—Come, bring away⁸ the stocks! [Stocks brought out.]

Glo. Let me beseech your grace not to do so:
His fault is much, and the good king his master
Will check⁹ him for 't: [your purpos'd low correction 149]

Is such as basest and contemn'd'st wretches
For pilferings and most common trespasses
Are punish'd with:] the king must take it ill,
That he, so slightly valued in his messenger,
Should have him thus restrain'd.

Corn. I'll answer that.

Reg. My sister may receive it much more worse,

To have her gentleman abus'd, assaulted,
For following her affairs.—[Put in his legs.—
[Kent is put in the stocks.]

Come, my lord, away.]

[Exeunt all except Gloucester and Kent.]

Glo. I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd or stopp'd: I'll entreat for thee. 161

Kent. Pray, do not, sir: I've watch'd, and travell'd hard;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

A good man's fortune may grow out at heels:

Give you good morrow!

Glo. The duke's to blame in this; 't will be ill taken. [Exit.]

Kent. Good king, that must approve¹⁰ the common saw,¹¹—

Thou out of heaven's benediction com'st
To the warm sun! 169

Approach, thou beacon to this under globe,
That by thy comfortable¹² beams I may Peruse this letter!—Nothing almost sees miracles

But misery:—I know 'tis from Cordelia,
Who hath most fortunately been inform'd
Of my obscured¹³ course; and shall find time
From this enormous¹⁴ state, seeking to give

⁸ Bring away, bring along.

⁹ Check, chide, reprove.

¹⁰ Approve, prove true.

¹¹ Saw, saying.

¹² Comfortable, comforting.

¹³ Obscured, disguised.

¹⁴ Enormous, abnormal.

Losses their remedies.—All weary and o'erwatch'd,¹

Take vantage, heavy eyes, not to behold

This shameful lodging. 179

Fortune, good night: smile once more; turn thy wheel! [Sleeps.]

SCENE III. The open country.

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. I heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree

Lear. Ha!
Mak'st thou this shame thy pastime?—(Act II. 4. 5, 6.)

Escap'd the hunt. No port² is free; no
place,

That guard, and most unusual vigilance,
Does not attend my taking.³ While I may
scape,

I will preserve myself: and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape
That ever penury, in contempt of man, Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime
with filth;

Blanket my loins; elf⁴ all my hair in knots;
And with presented nakedness out-face 11
The winds and persecutions of the sky.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortified⁵ bare arms
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary;
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Poor pelting⁶ villages, sheep-cots, and mills, Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with
prayers,

¹ O'erwatch'd, worn out with watching

² Port, harbour, refuge.

³ Attend my taking, watch to take me.

⁴ Elf, tangle.

⁵ Mortified, hardened (as if dead).

⁶ Pelting, paltry, petty.

Enforce their charity.—“Poor Turlygod! poor Tom!”²⁰
That’s something yet:—Edgar I nothing am.
[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Before Gloster’s castle; Kent in the stocks.

Enter LEAR, Fool, and Gentleman.

Lear. ’Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
And not send back my messenger.
Gent. As I learn’d,
The night before there was no purpose in them
Of this remove.

Kent. Hail to thee, noble master!

Lear. Ha!

Mak’st thou this shame thy pastime?

Kent. No, my lord.

[Fool. Ha, ha! he wears cruel¹ garters.
Horses are tied by the head, dogs and bears
by the neck, monkeys by the loins, and men by the legs: when a man’s over-lusty at legs, then he wears wooden nether-stocks.]¹¹

Lear. What’s he that hath so much thy place mistook

To set thee here?

Kent. It is both he and she,—

Your son and daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No, I say.

Kent. I say, yea.

Lear. No, no, they would not.

Kent. Yes, they have.²⁰

Lear. By Jupiter, I swear, no.

Kent. By Juno, I swear, ay.

Lear. They durst not do’t;

They could not, would not do’t; ’tis worse than murder,

To do upon respect² such violent outrage:
Resolve³ me, with all modest⁴ haste, which way
Thou mightst deserve, or they impose, this usage,

Coming from us.

Kent. My lord, when at their home
I did commend your highness’ letters to them,

Ere I was risen from the place that show’d
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking post, Stew’d in his haste, half breathless, panting
forth³¹

From Goneril his mistress salutations;
Deliver’d letters, spite of intermission,⁵
Which presently they read: on whose contents,
They summon’d up their meiny,⁶ straight took horse;

Commanded me to follow, and attend⁷
The leisure of their answer; gave me cold looks:
And meeting here the other messenger,
Whose welcome, I perceiv’d, had poison’d
mine,—

Being the very fellow which of late⁴⁰
Display’d so saucily against your highness,—
Having more man than wit about me, drew:
He rais’d the house with loud and coward cries.

Your son and daughter found this trespass
worth

The shame which here it suffers.

Fool. Winter’s not gone yet, if the wild-geese fly that way.

Fathers that wear rags

Do make their children blind;

But fathers that bear bags⁵⁰

Shall see their children kind.

[*Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne’er turns the key to the poor.*—

But, for all this, thou shalt have as many dolours for thy daughters as thou canst tell in a year.]

Lear. O, how this mother⁸ swells up toward my heart!

Hysterica passio,—down, thou climbing sorrow,

Thy element’s below!—Where is this
daughter?

Kent. With the earl, sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not;

Stay here.^[Exit.]

Gent. Made you no more offence but what you speak of?⁶¹

Kent. None.

How chance the king comes with so small a train?

¹ Cruel, a play upon crevel.

² Upon respect, deliberately.

³ Resolve, inform. ⁴ Modest, becoming, reasonable.

⁵ Spite of intermission, not waiting for me to be answered. ⁶ Meiny, train, retinue. ⁷ Attend, wait.

⁸ Mother, hysteric passion (hysterica passio).

Fool. An thou hadst been set i' the stocks for that question, thou hadst well deserv'd it.

Kent. Why, fool?

Fool. We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring i' the winter. [All that follow their noses are led by their eyes but blind men; and there's not a nose among twenty but can smell him that's stinking. Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes up the hill, let him draw thee after. When a wise man gives thee better counsel, give me mine again: I would have none but knaves follow it, since a fool gives it.]

That sir which serves and seeks for gain,
And follows but for form, 80
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.
But I will tarry; the fool will stay,
And let the wise man fly:
The knave turns fool that runs away:
The fool no knave, perdy.¹

Kent. Where learned you this, fool?

Fool. Not i' the stocks, fool.

Re-enter LEAR with GLOSTER.

Lear. Deny to speak with me? They're sick? they're weary?

They have travell'd all the night? Mere fetches;² 90

The images³ of revolt and flying-off.
Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My dear lord,

You know the fiery quality⁴ of the duke;

[How unremovable⁵ and fix'd he is
In his own course.]

Lear. Vengeance! plague! death! confusion!—

Fiery? what quality? Why, Gloster, Gloster,
I'd speak to the Duke of Cornwall and his wife.

Glo. Well, my good lord, I have inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them! Dost thou understand me, man? 100

Glo. Ay, my good lord.

Lear. The king would speak with Cornwall;
the dear father

Would with his daughter speak, commands
her service:

Are they inform'd of this?—My breath and
blood!—

Fiery? the fiery duke?—Tell the hot duke
that—

No, but not yet:—may be he is not well:

Infirmity doth still neglect all office

Whereto our health is bound; we're not ourselves

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind

To suffer with the body: I'll forbear; 110

[And am fall'n out with my more headier⁶ will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man.]—Death on my state!
wherefore [Looking on Kent.

Should he sit here? This act persuades me

That this remotion⁷ of the duke and her

Is practice⁸ only. Give me my servant forth.

Go tell the duke and 's wife I'd speak with
them,

Now, presently: bid them come forth and hear me,

Or at their chamber-door I'll beat the drum
Till it cry sleep to death. 120

[Glo. I would have all well betwixt you.]
[Exit.]

Lear. O me, my heart, my rising heart!—
but, down!

Fool. Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney did to the eels when she put 'em i' the paste alive;
she knapp'd⁹ 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick, and cried, "Down, wantons, down!" 'T was her brother that, in pure kindness to his horse, battered his hay.]

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GLOSTER, and Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Hail to your grace!

[Kent is set at liberty.

Reg. I am glad to see your highness. 130

Lear. Regan, I think you are; I know what reason

¹ Perdy, par Dieu (by God).

² Fetches, pretexts.

³ Images, signs.

⁴ Quality, temper.

⁵ Unremovable, immovable.

⁶ Headier, more headlong.

⁷ Remotion, removal, departure.

⁸ Practice, artifice.

⁹ Knapp'd, rapped, hit.

I have to think so: if thou shouldst not be glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb, Sepulchring an adultrous.—[To Kent] O, are you free?

Some other time for that.—Beloved Regan,
Thy sister's naught:¹ O Regan, she hath tied

Sharp-tooth'd unkindness, like a vulture, here,— [Points to his heart.

I can scarce speak to thee; thou'lt not believe
Of how deprav'd a quality²—O Regan!

Reg. I pray you, sir, take patience: I have hope 140

Lear. "Dear daughter, I confess that I am old;
[Kneeling.

Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food.'—(Act II. 4. 156-158.)

You less know how to value her desert 141
Than she to scant her duty.

Lear. Say, how is that?

Reg. I cannot think my sister in the least
Would fail her obligation: if, sir, perchance
She have restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,

As clears her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her!

Reg. O, sir, you are old;
Nature in you stands on the very verge 149

Of her confine: you should be rul'd, and led
By some discretion that discerns your state Better than you yourself. Therefore, I pray
you, 152

That to our sister you do make return;
Say you have wrong'd her, sir.

Lear. Ask her forgiveness?
Do you but mark how this becomes the
house:

"Dear daughter, I confess that I am old;
[Kneeling.

Age is unnecessary: on my knees I beg

¹ Naught, worthless, wicked.

² Quality, nature, disposition.

That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food."

Reg. Good sir, no more; these are unsightly tricks:

Return you to my sister.

Lear. [Rising] Never, Regan:
She hath abated¹ me of half my train; 161
Look'd black upon me; struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent-like, upon the very heart:—
All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ungrateful top!² Strike her young bones,

You taking³ airs, with lameness!

Corn. Fie, sir, fie!

Lear. You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornful eyes! Infect her beauty,
You fen-suck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun,

To fall and blast her pride! 170

Reg. O the blest gods! so will you wish on me,

When the rash mood is on.

Lear. No, Regan, thou shalt never have my curse:

Thy tender-hefted⁴ nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce;
but thine

Do comfort, and not burn. 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train,

To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,⁵
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt 179
Against my coming in: thou better know'st
The offices of nature, bond of childhood,
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude;
Thy half o' the kingdom hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good sir, to the purpose.

Lear. Who put my man i' the stocks?

[Tucket within.]

Corn. What trumpet's that?

Reg. I know't,—my sister's: this approves⁶ her letter,
That she would soon be here.

Enter OSWALD.

Is your lady come?

Lear. This is a slave, whose easy-borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.—
Out, varlet, from my sight!

Corn. What means your grace?

Lear. Who stock'd⁷ my servant? Regan, I have good hope 191
Thou didst not know on 't.—Who comes here?
O heavens,

Enter GONERIL.

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow⁸ obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause; send down, and take my part!—

[To Goneril] Art not asham'd to look upon this beard?—

O Regan, wilt thou take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by the hand, sir? How have I offended?

All's not offence that indiscretion finds
And dotage terms so.

Lear. O sides, you are too tough;
Will you yet hold?—How came my man i'
the stocks? 201

Corn. I set him there, sir: but his own disorders

Deserv'd much less advancement.

Lear. You! did you?

Reg. I pray you, father, being weak, seem so.
If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me:
I'm now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment.

Lear. Return to her, and fifty men dismiss'd? 210

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and choose
To wage⁹ against the enmity o' th' air;
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl,—
Necessity's sharp pinch!—Return with her?
[*Why, the hot-blooded France, that dowerless took
Our youngest born, I could as well be brought,*]

¹ Abated, deprived.

² Top, head.

³ Taking, malignant.

⁴ Tender-hefted, equivalent to tender.

⁵ Sizes, allowances.

⁶ Approves, confirms

⁷ Stock'd, put in the stocks.

⁸ Allow, approve.

⁹ Wage, wage war, contend.

To knee his throne, and, squire-like, pension beg

To keep base life afoot.]—Return with her?
Persuade me rather to be slave and sumpter¹
To this detested groom. [Pointing at Oswald.

Gon. At your choice, sir.

Lear. I prithee, daughter, do not make me mad: 221

I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another:—
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my
daughter;

Or rather a disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine: [thou art a boil,

A plague-sore, an embossed² carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood.] But I'll not chide
thee;

Let shame come when it will, I do not call it:
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot, 230
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove:
Mend when thou canst; be better at thy leisure:

I can be patient; I can stay with Regan,
I and my hundred knights.

Reg. Not altogether so:
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. [Give ear, sir, to my sister;

For those that mingle reason with your passion
Must be content to think you old, and so—
But she knows what she does.]

Lear. Is this well spoken?

Reg. I dare avouch it, sir: what, fifty followers? 240

Is it not well? What should you need of more?

Yea, or so many, [sith³ that both charge⁴
and danger

Speak 'gainst so great a number? How, in one house

Should many people, under two commands,
Hold amity? 'Tis hard; almost impossible.]

Gon. Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance

From those that she calls servants or from mine?

¹ Sumpter, pack-horse.

² Embossed, swollen, tumid.

³ Sith, since.

⁴ Charge, cost, expense.

Reg. Why not, my lord? If then they chanc'd to slack you,
We could control them. If you will come to
me,—

For now I spy a danger,—I entreat you 250
To bring but five-and-twenty: to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all—

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my guardians, my deposi-taries;

But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number. What, must I come to
you

With five-and-twenty, Regan? said you so?

Reg. And speak 't again, my lord; no more
with me.

Lear. Those wicked creatures yet do look well-favour'd,⁵

When others are more wicked; not being the worst 260

Stands in some rank of praise.—[To Goneril]
I'll go with thee:

Thy fifty yet doth double five-and-twenty,
And thou art twice her love.

Gon. Hear me, my lord:

What need you five-and-twenty, ten, or five,
To follow in a house where twice so many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O, reason not the need: our basest beggars

Are in the poorest thing superfluous:

Allow not nature more than nature needs,

Man's life is cheap as beast's: thou art a lady; 270

If only to go warm were gorgeous,

Why, nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'st,

Which scarcely keeps thee warm.—But, for true need,—

You heavens, give me that patience, patience
I need!

You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger,

⁵ Well-favour'd, well-featured.

And let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks!—No, you unnatural
hags, 281

I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will do such things,—

What they are, yet I know not; but they shall be

The terrors of the earth. You think I'll weep;
No, I'll not weep:—

I have full cause of weeping; but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,¹
Or e'er I'll weep.—O fool, I shall go mad!

[Exeunt [Lear, Gloster, Kent, and Fool.

Storm heard at a distance.

Corn. Let us withdraw; 't will be a storm.

Reg. This house is little: the old man and his people 291

Cannot be well bestow'd.²

Gon. 'T is his own blame; 'hath put himself
from rest,

And must needs taste his folly.

Reg. For his particular,³ I'll receive him gladly,

But not one follower.

Gon. So am I purpos'd.

Where is my Lord of Gloster?

Corn. Follow'd the old man forth;—he is return'd.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

Glo. The king is in high rage.

Corn. Whither is he going?

Glo. He calls to horse; but will I know not whither. 300

Corn. 'T is best to give him way; he leads himself.

Gon. My lord, entreat him by no means to stay.

Glo. Alack, the night comes on, and the bleak winds

Do sorely ruffle;⁴ for many miles about
There's scarce a bush.

Reg. O, sir, to wilful men
The injuries that they themselves procure Must be their schoolmasters. Shut up your doors:

He is attended with a desperate train;
And what they may incense⁵ him to, being apt
To have his ear abus'd, wisdom bids fear. 310

Corn. Shut up your doors, my lord; 't is a wild night:

My Regan counsels well: come out o' the storm. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A heath.

A storm, with thunder and lightning. Enter
KENT and a Gentleman, meeting.

Kent. Who's there, besides foul weather?

Gent. One minded like the weather, most unquietly.

Kent. I know you. Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful elements;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change or cease; tears his white hair,

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,
Catch in their fury, and make nothing of;

Strives in his little world of man t' out-scorn
The to-and-fro-conflicting wind and rain. 11
This night, wherein the cub-drawn⁶ bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will take all.

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. None but the fool; who labours to out-jest

His heart-struck injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you;
And dare, upon the warrant of my note,⁷ Commend a dear thing to you. There's division,

¹ Flaws, shivers, fragments. ² Bestow'd, lodged.

³ For his particular, as to him personally.

⁴ Ruffle, rustle, grow boisterous

⁵ Incense, incite.

⁶ Cub-drawn, sucked dry, hungry.

⁷ Note, observation.

KING LEAR

Act III. Scene ii.

FROM A PAINTING BY PROFESSOR ALBERT
W. HOLDEN

Although as yet the face of it be cover'd 20
With mutual cunning, 'twixt Albany and
Cornwall;

[Who have—as who have not, that their great stars

Throned and set high?—servants, who seem no less,

Which are to France the spies and speculations¹
Intelligent² of our state; what hath been seen,
Either in snuffs³ and packings⁴ of the dukes;
Or the hard rein which both of them have borne

Against the old kind king; or something deeper,

Whereof perchance these are but furnishings;—⁵]

But, true it is, from France there comes a power 30

Into this scatter'd⁶ kingdom; who already,
Wise in our negligence, have secret feet

In some of our best ports, and are at point⁷.
To show their open banner.—Now to you:

If on my credit you dare build so far
To make your speed to Dover, you shall find

Some that will thank you, making just report
Of how unnatural and bemadding sorrow

The king hath cause to plain.⁸ 39

[I am a gentleman of blood and breeding;
And, from some knowledge and assurance, offer

This office to you.

Gent. I will talk further with you.

Kent. No, do not.

For confirmation that I am much more

Than my out-wall,⁹ open this purse, and take What it contains.] If you shall see Cordelia,—

As fear not but you shall,—show her this ring;
And she will tell you who your fellow is

That yet you do not know. Fie on this storm!
I will go seek the king. 50

Gent. Give me your hand: have you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but, to effect, more than all yet,—

¹ Speculations, speculators, watchers.

² Intelligent, giving intelligence.

³ Snuffs, huffs, offence-taking. ⁴ Packings, plottings.

⁵ Furnishings, external pretences.

⁶ Scatter'd, divided, unsettled.

⁷ At point, on the point of, ready.

⁸ Plain, complain.

⁹ Out-wall, exterior.

That, when we've found the king,—in which your pain

That way, I'll this,—he that first lights on him
Holla the other. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE II. Another part of the heath.
Storm continues.

Enter LEAR and Fool.

Lear. Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks!
rage! blow!

You cataracts and hurricanoes,¹⁰ spout
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd
the cocks!¹¹

You sulphurous and thought-executing¹² fires,
Vaunt-couriers¹³ of oak-cleaving thunderbolts, Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
Crack nature's moulds, all germens¹⁴ spill¹⁵ at once,

That make ungrateful man! 9

Fool. [O nuncle, court holy-water in a dry { house is better than this rain-water out o' door. }
Good nuncle, in, and ask thy daughters' blessing: here's a night pities neither wise men nor fools.

Lear. Rumble thy bellyful! Spit, fire!
spout, rain!

Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,
You owe me no subscription:¹⁶ then let fall
Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave,

A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man:—
But yet I call you servile ministers, 21
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this! O! O! 'tis foul!

Fool. He that has a house to put 's head in has a good head-piece.

[The cod-piece that will house
Before the head has any, {

¹⁰ Hurricanoes, water-spouts.

¹¹ Cocks, weathercocks.

¹² Thought-executing, swift as thought.

¹³ Vaunt-couriers, forerunners.

¹⁴ Germens, germs, seeds.

¹⁵ Spill, destroy.

¹⁶ Subscription, obedience.

The head and he shall louse;—
So beggars marry many. 30

The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make
Shall of a corn cry woe,
And turn his sleep to wake: ✓ for there was never yet fair woman but she made mouths in a glass.]

Lear. No, I will be the pattern of all patience;
I will say nothing.

Enter KENT.

Kent. Who's there?

Fool. Marry, [here's grace and a cod-piece; that's] a wise man and a fool. 41

Kent. Alas, sir, are you here? things that love night

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies

Gallow¹ the very wanderers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves: [since I was man,

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature cannot carry²

Th' affliction nor the fear.]

Lear. Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads, 50
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,

That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice: hide thee, thou bloody hand;

Thou perjur'd, and thou simular³ of virtue
That art incestuous: caitiff, to pieces shake,
That under covert and convenient seeming Hast practis'd on man's life: close pent-up guilts,

Rive your concealing continents,⁴ and cry
These dreadful summoners grace.—I am a man
More sinn'd against than sinning.

Kent. [Alack, bare-headed!] Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;

Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest: 62

[Repose you there; while I to this hard house—

More harder than the stones whereof 't is rais'd;

Which even but now, demanding⁵ after you,
Denied me to come in—return, and force
Their scantied courtesy.]

Lear. My wits begin to turn.—
Come on, my boy: how dost, my boy? art cold?

I'm cold myself.—Where is this straw, my fellow?

The art⁶ of our necessities is strange, 70
That can make vile things precious. Come, your hovel.—

Poor fool and knave, I've one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee.

Fool. [Singing]

He that has and a little tiny wit,—

With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,—

Must make content with his fortunes fit,

For the rain it raineth every day.

Lear. True, my good boy.—Come, bring us to this hovel. [Exeunt Lear and Kent.]

[Fool. This is a brave night to cool a courtezan.—I'll speak a prophecy ere I go: 80

When priests are more in word than matter;

When brewers mar their malt with water;

When nobles are their tailors' tutors;

No heretics burn'd, but wenches' suitors;

When every case in law is right;

No squire in debt, nor no poor knight;

When slanders do not live in tongues;

Nor outpurses come not to throngs;

When usurers tell their gold i' the field;

And bawds and whores do churches build;— 90
Then shall the realm of Albion

Come to great confusion:

Then comes the time, who lives to see 't,

That going shall be us'd with feet.

This prophecy Merlin shall make; for I live before his time. [Exit.]

SCENE III. A room in Gloster's castle.

Enter GLOSTER and EDMUND.

Glo. Alack, alack, Edmund, I like not this

¹ Gallow, affright.

² Carry, sustain.

³ Similar, simulator.

⁴ Continents, containers, inclosures.

⁵ Demanding, inquiring.

⁶ Art, alchemy.

KING LEAR.

Lear No I will be the pattern of all patience.

unnatural dealing. When I desired their leave that I might pity him, they took from me the use of mine own house; charg'd me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, nor any way sustain him.

Edm. Most savage and unnatural!

Glo. Go to; say you nothing. There is division between the dukes; and a worse matter than that: I have received a letter this night;—'t is dangerous to be spoken;—I have lock'd the letter in my closet: these injuries the king now bears will be revenged home; there is part of a power already footed:¹ we must incline to the king. I will look² him, and privily relieve him: go you, and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived: if he ask for me, I am ill, and gone to bed. Though I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. There is strange things toward,³ Edmund; pray you, be careful. [Exit.]

Edm. This courtesy forbid⁴ thee, shall the duke

Instantly know; and of that letter too:—
This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me

That which my father loses,—no less than all:
The younger rises when the old doth fall.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. A part of the heath, with a hovel.
Storm continues.

Enter LEAR, KENT, and Fool.

Kent. Here is the place, my lord; good my lord, enter:

[The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Wilt break my heart?

Kent. I had rather break mine own. Good my lord, enter.]

Lear. Thou think'st 't is much that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin: so 't is to thee;
But where the greater malady is fix'd,

The lesser is scarce felt. [Thou'dst shun a bear;

But if thy flight lay toward the roaring sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth.] When the mind's free,

The body's delicate: the tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else
Save what beats there.—Filial ingratitude!
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand
For lifting food to't?—But I will punish home:⁵—

No, I will weep no more.—In such a night
To shut me out!—Pour on; I will endure:—
In such a night as this! O Regan, Goneril!—
Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave all,—

O, that way madness lies; let me shun that;
No more of that.

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Prithee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease:

This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more.—But I'll go in.—

[To the Fool] In, boy; go first. You houseless poverty,—

Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep.— [Fool goes in.]

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,

Your loop'd⁶ and window'd raggedness, defend
you

From seasons such as these? O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this! Take physic, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou mayst shake the superflux⁷ to them,
And show the heavens more just.

Edg. [Within] Fathom and half, fathom and half! Poor Tom!

[The Fool runs out from the hovel.]

Fool. Come not in here, nuncle, here's a spirit. Help me, help me!

Kent. Give me thy hand.—Who's there?

Fool. A spirit, a spirit: he says his name's poor Tom.

¹ Footed, on foot (perhaps, landed).

² Look, look for. ³ Toward, coming, at hand.

⁴ Forbid, forbidden.

⁵ Home, fully, to the utmost.

⁶ Loop'd, full of holes.

⁷ Superflux, superfluity, surplus.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there i' the straw? Come forth.

Enter EDGAR disguised as a madman.

Edg. Away! the foul fiend follows me!—
Through the sharp hawthorn blows the cold wind.—
Hum! go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.

Lear. Didst thou give all to thy daughters?
And art thou come to this? 50

Edg. Who gives any thing to poor Tom?
whom the foul fiend hath led through fire and through flame, through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire; that hath laid knives {under his pillow, and halts in his pew; [set ratsbane by his porridge;] made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting-horse over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow {for a traitor.—Bless thy five wits!—[Tom's a-cold,—O, do de, do de, do de.—Bless thee
{from whirlwinds, star-blasting, and taking!¹
{Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes:—there could I have him now,— and there,—and there again, and there.]

[Storm continues.

Lear. What, have his daughters brought him to this pass?—

Couldst thou save nothing? Didst thou give 'em all?

Fool. Nay, he reserv'd a blanket, else we had been all shamed.

Lear. Now, all the plagues that in the pen-dulous² air

Hang fated o'er men's faults light on thy daughters! 70

Kent. He hath no daughters, sir.

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdu'd nature

To such a lowness but his unkind daughters.—
Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers
Should have thus little mercy on their flesh?
Judicious³ punishment! 't was this flesh begot
Those pelican daughters.

Edg. Pillicock sat on Pillicock-hill:—

Halloo, halloo, loo, loo!

Fool. This cold night will turn us all to fools and madmen. 81

Edg. Take heed o' the foul fiend: obey thy parents; keep thy word justly; swear not; commit not with man's sworn spouse; set not thy sweet heart on proud array. Tom's a-cold.

Lear. What hast thou been?

Edg. A serving-man, proud in heart and mind; [that curl'd my hair;] wore gloves;
in my cap; [serv'd the lust of my mistress;
heart, and did the act of darkness with her;]
swore as many oaths as I spake words, and broke them in the sweet face of heaven: [one that slept in the contriving of lust, and wak'd to do it:] wine lov'd I deeply, dice dearly;
[and in woman out-paramour'd the Turk:]
false of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand; hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey. Let not the creaking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman: keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend.—

Still through the hawthorn blows the cold wind;
Says suum, mun, ha, no, nonny.

Dolphin my boy, boy, sessa! let him trot by.

[Storm continues.

Lear. Why, thou wert better in thy grave than to answer with thy uncover'd body this extremity of the skies.—Is man no more than this? Consider him well. Thou owest the worm no silk, the beast no hide, the sheep no wool, the cat no perfume.—Ha! here's three on's are sophisticated!⁴—Thou art the thing itself: unaccommodated⁵ man is no more but such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art.
—Off, off, you lendings!—come, unbutton here.

[Tearing off his clothes.

Fool. Prithee, nuncle, be contented; 't is a naughty night to swim in.—[Now a little fire in a wild field were like an old lecher's heart;
—a small spark, all the rest on's body cold.]
—Look, here comes a walking fire. 119

Edg. This is the foul fiend Flibbertigibbet:
he begins at curfew, and walks at first cock;
he gives the web and the pin,⁶ squints the eye,
and makes the hare-lip; mildews the white wheat, and hurts the poor creature of earth.

Saint Withold footed thrice the old;

He met the night-mare, and her nine-fold;

¹ Taking, bewitching, magical injury.

² Pendulous, overhanging

³ Judicious, wise.

⁴ Sophisticated, not genuine.

⁵ Unaccommodated, unsupplied, unprovided.

⁶ The web and the pin, cataract in the eye.

Bid her alight,
And her troth plight,
And, aroint¹ thee, witch, aroint thee!

Kent. How fares your grace? 130

Enter GLOSTER with a torch.

[Lear. What's he?

Kent.] Who's there? What is't you seek?

Glo. What are you there? Your names?

Edg. Poor Tom; that eats the swimming frog, the toad, the tadpole, the wall-newt and the water;² that in the fury of his heart, when the foul fiend rages, [eats cow-dung for sal-lets;³] swallows the old rat and the ditch-dog; drinks the green mantle of the standing pool; who is whipp'd from tithing to tithing, and stock-punish'd, and imprison'd, who hath three suits to his back, six shirts to his body, horse to ride, and weapon to wear;

But mice and rats, and such small deer,
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.

Beware my follower.—Peace, Smulkin; peace,
thou fiend!

Glo. What, hath your grace no better company?

Edg. The prince of darkness is a gentleman:
Modo he's call'd, and Mahu.

Glo. Our flesh and blood, my lord, is grown so vile, 150
That it doth hate what gets⁴ it.

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.

Glo. Go in with me: my duty cannot suffer
T' obey in all your daughters' hard commands:
Though their injunction be to bar my doors,
And let this tyrannous night take hold upon
you,

Yet have I ventur'd to come seek you out,
And bring you where both fire and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talk with this philosopher.—

What is the cause of thunder? 160

Kent. Good my lord, take his offer; go into th' house.

Lear. I'll talk a word with this same learned Theban.—

What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin.

Lear. Let me ask you one word in private.

Kent. Impórtune him once more to go, my
lord;

His wits begin to unsettle.

Glo. Canst thou blame him?

His daughters seek his death:—ah, that good
Kent!—

He said it would be thus,—poor banish'd
man!—

Thou say'st the king grows mad; I'll tell thee,
friend, 170

I'm almost mad myself: I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life,
But lately, very late: I lov'd him, friend,
No father his son dearer: true to tell thee,

[Storm continues.

The grief hath craz'd my wits.—What a night's this!—

I do beseech your grace,—

Lear. O, cry you mercy, sir.—

Noble philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a-cold.

Glo. In, fellow, there, into th' hovel: keep thee warm.

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keep still with my philosopher. 181

Kent. Good my lord, soothe⁵ him; let him take the fellow.

Glo. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirrah, come on; go along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glo. No words, no words: hush.

Edg. Child Roland to the dark tower came;

His word was still,—Fie, feh, and fum,

I smell the blood of a British man.

[Exeunt.

[SCENE V. A room in Gloster's castle.

Enter CORNWALL and EDMUND.

Corn. I will have my revenge ere I depart his house.

Edm. How, my lord, I may be censured, that nature thus gives way to loyalty, something fears⁶ me to think of.

Corn. I now perceive, it was not altogether

¹ Aroint, away with.

² Water, water-newt.

³ Sallets, salads.

⁴ Gets, begets

⁵ Soothe, humour.

⁶ Fears, frightens.

your brother's evil disposition made him seek his death; but a provoking merit, set a-work by a reproveable badness in himself. 9

Edm. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be just! This is the letter he spoke of, which approves¹ him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O heavens! that this treason were not, or not I the detector!

Corn. Go with me to the duchess.

Edm. If the matter of this paper be certain, you have mighty business in hand.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee Earl of Gloster. Seek out where thy father is, that he may be ready for our apprehension. 20

Edm. [Aside] If I find him comforting² the king, it will stuff his suspicion more fully. —I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.³

Corn. I will lay trust upon thee; and thou shalt find a dearer father in my love.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A chamber in a farmhouse adjoining Gloster's castle.

Enter GLOSTER, LEAR, KENT, FOOL, and EDGAR.

[Glo. Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. I will piece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you.

Kent. All the power of his wits have given way to his impatience:—the gods reward your kindness! [Exit Gloster.

Edg. Fraterretto calls me; and tells me Nero is an angler in the lake of darkness.—Pray, innocent, and beware the foul fiend.

Fool. Prithee, nuncle, tell me whether a madman be a gentleman or a yoeman? 11

Lear. A king, a king!

Fool. No, he's a yoeman that has a gentleman to his son; for he's a mad yoeman that sees his son a gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thousand with red burning spits
Come hissing⁴ in upon 'em,—

Edg. The foul fiend bites my back.

Fool. He's mad that trusts in the tameness of a wolf, a horse's health, a boy's love, or a whore's oath.] 21

Lear. It shall be done; I will arraign them straight.—

[To Edgar] Come, sit thou here, most learned justicer;⁵—

[To the Fool] Thou, sapient sir, sit here.—Now, you she-foxes!—

Edg. Look, where he stands and glares!—Wantest thou eyes at trial, madam?

Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me:—

[Fool. Her boat hath a leak,
And she must not speak

Why she dares not come over to thee. 30

Edg. The foul fiend haunts poor Tom in the voice of a nightingale. Hopdance cries in Tom's belly for two white herring. Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.

Kent. How do you, sir? Stand you not so amaz'd:

Will you lie down and rest upon the cushions?]

Lear. I'll see their trial first.—Bring in the evidence.—

[To Edgar] Thou robed man of justice, take thy place;—

[To the Fool] And thou, his yoke-fellow of equity,

Bench by his side:—[To Kent] You are o' the commission, 40

Sit you too.

Edg. [Let us deal justly.

Sleepest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?

Thy sheep be in the corn;

And for one blast of thy minikin⁶ mouth

Thy sheep shall take no harm.]

Pur! the cat is gray.

Lear. Arraign her first; 'tis Goneril. [I here take my oath before this honourable assembly, she kick'd the poor king her father.

Fool. Come hither, mistress. Is your name Goneril?

Lear. She cannot deny it.

Fool. Cry you mercy, I took you for a joint-stool.

Lear.] And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim

¹ Approves, proves.

² Comforting, aiding.

³ Blood, nature.

⁴ Hissing, whizzing.

⁵ Justicer, justice.

⁶ Minikin, small and pretty.

What store¹ her heart is made on.—Stop her there!

Arms, arms, sword, fire!—Corruption in the place!—

False justicer, why hast thou let her scape?

Edg. Bless thy five wits! 60

Kent. Opity!—Sir, where is the patience now

That you so oft have boasted to retain?

Edg. [Aside] My tears begin to take his part so much,

They'll mar my counterfeiting.

Lear. The little dogs and all,

Tray, Blanch, and Sweetheart, see, they bark at me.

Lear. And here's another, whose warp'd looks proclaim
What store her heart is made on.—Stop her there!
Arms, arms, sword, fire!—(Act iii. 6. 56-58.)

Edg. Tom will throw his head at them.—
Avaunt, you curs!

Be thy mouth or black or white,
Tooth that poisons if it bite;
Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,
Hound or spaniel, brach² or lym,³
Or bobtail tike⁴ or trundle-tail,⁵—
Tom will make them weep and wail:
For, with throwing thus my head,
Dogs leap the hatch,⁶ and all are fled.

70

Do de, de, de. Sessa! Come, march to wakes and fairs and market-towns.—Poor Tom, thy horn is dry. 79

Lear. Then let them anatomize Regan; see what breeds about her heart. Is there any cause in nature that makes these hard hearts?
—[To Edgar] You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments: you will say they are Persian;
but let them be chang'd.

Kent. Now, good my lord, lie here and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise; draw

¹ Store, material.

² Brach, female hound.

³ Lym, lime-hound.

⁴ Tike, cur.

⁵ Trundle-tail, a kind of dog.

⁶ Hatch, half-doo

the curtains: so, so, so: we'll go to supper
i' the morning: so, so, so. 91

Fool. And I'll go to bed at noon.

[Re-enter GLOSTER.]

Glo. Come hither, friend; where is the king my master?

Kent. Here, sir; but trouble him not,—his wits are gone.

Glo. Good friend, I prithee, take him in thy arms;

I have o'erheard a plot of death upon him:
There is a litter ready; lay him in't,
And drive towards Dover, friend, where thou shalt meet

Both welcome and protection. [Take up thy master: 99

If thou shouldst dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss: take up, take up;
And follow me, that will to some provision
Give thee quick conduct.

Kent. Oppress'd nature sleeps:—
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken sinews,

Which, if convenience¹ will not allow,
Stand in hard cure.²—[To the Fool] Come,
help to bear thy master;

Thou must not stay behind.

Glo. Come, come, away.

[Exeunt Kent, Gloster, and the Fool, bearing off Lear.]

Edg. When we our betters see bearing our woes,

We scarcely think our miseries our foes. 110
Who alone suffers suffers most i' the mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind:
But then the mind much sufferance³ doth o'erskip,

When grief hath mates, and bearing fellowship.

How light and portable⁴ my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend makes the king bow,

He childed as I father'd!—Tom, away!

Mark the high noises; and thyself bewray,⁵

¹ Convenience, a quadrisyllable here.

² Stand in hard cure, will be hard to cure.

³ Sufferance, suffering.

⁴ Portable, endurable.

⁵ Bewray, disclose.

When false opinion, whose wrong thoughts
defile thee,

In thy just proof, repeals⁶ and reconciles thee.
What will hap⁷ more to-night, safe scape the
king! 121

Lurk, lurk.

[Exit.]

SCENE VII. A room in Gloster's castle.

Enter CORNWALL, REGAN, GONERIL, EDMUND, and Servants.

Corn. Post speedily to my lord your husband; show him this letter:—the army of France is landed.—Seek out the villain Gloster. [Exeunt some of the Servants.]

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gon. Pluck out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure.—Edmund, keep you our sister company: the revenges we are bound to take upon your traitorous father are not fit for your beholding.
Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate⁸ preparation: we are bound to the like. Our posts shall be swift and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell, dear sister:—farewell, my Lord of Gloster.

Enter OSWALD.

How now! where's the king?

Osw. My Lord of Gloster hath convey'd him
hence:

Some five or six and thirty of his knights,
Hot questrists⁹ after him, met him at gate;
Who, with some other of the lord's dependants,
Are gone with him towards Dover; where they boast 19

To have well-armed friends.

Corn. Get horses for your mistress.

Gon. Farewell, sweet lord, and sister.

Corn. Edmund, farewell.

[Exeunt Goneril, Edmund, and Oswald.]

Go, seek the traitor Gloster,
Pinion him like a thief, bring him before us.

[Exeunt other Servants.]

Though well we may not pass upon his life
Without the form of justice, yet our power
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control.—Who's there?
the traitor?

⁶ Repeals, recalls. ⁷ What will hap, happen what will.

⁸ Festinate, speedy. ⁹ Questrists, seekers.

Re-enter Servants with GLOSTER.

Reg. Ingrateful fox! 't is he.

Corn. Bind fast his corky¹ arms.

Glo. What mean your graces?—Good my friends, consider 30

You are my guests: do me no foul play, friends.

Corn. Bind him, I say. [Servants bind him.]

Reg. Hard, hard.—O filthy traitor!

Glo. Unmerciful lady as you are, I'm none.

Corn. To this chair bind him.—Villain, thou shalt find— [Regan plucks his beard.]

Glo. By the kind gods, 't is most ignobly done

To pluck me by the beard.

Reg. So white, and such a traitor!

Glo. Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,

Will quicken² and accuse thee: I'm your host:
With robbers' hands my hospitable favours³

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come, sir, what letters had you late from France? 42

Reg. Be simple-answer'd,⁴ for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Reg. To whose hands have you sent the lunatic king?

Speak.

Glo. I have a letter guessingly set down,
Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the king?

Glo. To Dover.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover? Wast thou not charg'd at peril— 51

Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him answer that.

Glo. I'm tied to the stake, and I must stand the course.

Reg. Wherefore to Dover?

Glo. Because I would not see thy cruel nails

Pluck out his poor old eyes; nor thy fierce sister

In his anointed flesh stick boarish fangs.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
In hell-black night endur'd, would have buoy'd up 60

And quench'd the stelled⁵ fires:

Yet, poor old heart, he help the heavens to rain.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou shouldst have said, "Good porter, turn the key,"

All cruels else subscrib'd:—but I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children.

Corn. See't shalt thou never.—Fellows, hold the chair.—

Upon these eyes of thine I'll set my foot. *

Glo. He that will think to live till he be old,
Give me some help!—O cruel!—O you gods!

Reg. One side will mock another; th' other too. 71

Corn. If you see vengeance,—

First Serv. Hold your hand, my lord:

I've serv'd you since I was a child;

But better service have I never done you

Than now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dog!

First Serv. If you did wear a beard upon your chin,

I'd shake it on this quarrel. What do you mean?

Corn. My villain! [Draws.]

First Serv. Nay, then, come on, and take the chance of anger.

[Draws. They fight. Cornwall is wounded.]

Reg. Give me thy sword.—A peasant stand up thus! 80

[Takes a sword from another Servant, and runs at First Servant behind.]

First Serv. O, I am slain!—My lord, you have one eye left

To see some mischief on him.—O! [Dies.]

Corn. Lest it see more, prevent it.—Out, vile jelly!

Where is thy lustre now?

Glo. All dark and comfortless.—Where's my son Edmund?

¹ Corky, dry, withered.

² Quicken, come to life.

³ Favours, features.

⁴ Simple-answer'd, plain in your answer.

⁵ Stelled, starry, fixed.

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit¹ this horrid act.

Reg. Out, treacherous villain!
Thou call'st on him that hates thee: it was he
That made the overture² of thy treasons to us;
Who is too good to pity thee. 90

Glo. O my follies! Then Edgar was abus'd.—
Kind gods, forgive me that, and prosper him!

Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell

His way to Dover.—How is 't, my lord? how look you?

Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt:—follow me,
lady.—

Turn out that eyeless villain;—throw this slave

Upon the dunghill.—Regan, I bleed apace:
Untimely comes this hurt: give me your arm.

[Exit Cornwall, led by Regan.—Some of the Servants unbind Gloster, and lead him out.]

Sec. Serv. I'll never care what wickedness
I do, 99

If this man come to good.

Third Serv. If she live long,
And in the end meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters.

Sec. Serv. Let's follow the old earl, and get the Bedlam³

To lead him where he would: his roguish madness

Allows itself to any thing.

Third Serv. Go thou: I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs

T'apply to his bleeding face. Now, heaven, help him! [Exeunt severally.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The heath.

Enter EDGAR.

Edg. Yet better thus, and known to be contemn'd,
Than still contemn'd and flatter'd. To be worst,
The lowest and most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance,⁴ lives not in fear:
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome, then,
Thou unsubstantial air that I embrace!
The wretch that thou hast blown unto the
worst
Owes nothing to thy blasts.—But who comes here?

Enter GLOSTER, led by an Old Man.

My father, poorly led?—Work, world, O
world! 10
But that thy strange mutations make us hate
thee,
Life would not yield to age.

Old Man. O, my good lord,
I've been your tenant, and your father's tenant,
These fourscore years.

Glo. Away, get thee away; good friend, be gone:

Thy comforts can do me no good at all;
Thee they may hurt.

Old Man. You cannot see your way.

Glo. I have no way, and therefore want no
eyes; 20

I stumbled when I saw: full oft 't is seen,
Our means secure us,⁵ and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.⁶—O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused⁷ father's wrath!
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again!

Old Man. How now! Who's there?

Edg. [Aside] O gods! Who is't can say,
"I'm at the worst?"

I'm worse than e'er I was.

Old Man. 'T is poor mad Tom.

Edg. [Aside] And worse I may be yet: the worst is not 29

So long as we can say "This is the worst."

Old Man. Fellow, where goest?

Glo. Is it a beggar-man?

Old Man. Madman and beggar too.

¹ Quit, requite.

² Overture, disclosure.

³ Bedlam, madman.

⁴ Esperance, hope.

⁵ Our means secure us, our advantages make us secure or careless.

⁶ Commodities, advantages.

⁷ Abused, deceived.

Glo. He has some reason, else he could not
beg. 33
I' the last night's storm I such a fellow saw;
Which made me think a man a worm: my son
Came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him: I've heard more since.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to the gods,—
They kill us for their sport.

Edg. [Aside] How should this be?—
Bad is the trade that must play fool to sorrow,
Angering itself and others.—Bless thee, master!

Glo. Is that the naked fellow?

Old Man.

Ay, my lord.

Edg. Give me thy arm:
Poor Tom shall lead thee.—(Act iv. 1. 81, 82.)

Glo. Then, prithee, get thee gone: if, for my sake, 43
Thou wilt o'ertake us, hence a mile or twain,
I' the way toward Dover, do it for ancient love;
And bring some covering for this naked soul,
Which I'll entreat to lead me.

Old Man. Alack, sir, he is mad.

Glo. 'Tis the times' plague, when madmen lead the blind.

Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
Above the rest, be gone, 50

Old Man. I'll bring him the best 'parel that I have,

Come on't what will. [Exit.]

Glo. Sirrah, naked fellow,—

Edg. Poor Tom's a-cold.—[Aside] I cannot daub it¹ further.

Glo. Come hither, fellow.

Edg. [Aside] And yet I must.—Bless thy sweet eyes, they bleed.

¹ Daub it, disguise.

Glo. Know'st thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both stile and gate, horse-way and foot-path. Poor Tom hath been scar'd out of his good wits:—bless thee, good man's son, from the foul fiend!—[five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididance, prince of dumbness; Mahu, of stealing; Modo, of Murder; and Flibbertigibbet, of mopping¹ and mowing,²—who since possesses chambermaids and waiting-women. So, bless thee, master!]

Glo. Here, take this purse, thou whom the heavens' plagues

Have humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched

Makes thee the happier:—[heavens, deal so still!

Let the superfluous³ and lust-dieted man, 70
That slaves⁴ your ordinance,⁵ that will not see
Because he doth not feel, feel your power quickly;

So distribution should undo excess,
And each man have enough.]—Dost thou know Dover?

Edg. Ay, master.

Glo. There is a cliff, whose high and bending head

Looks fearfully in the confined deep:

Bring me but to the very brim of it, 78

And I'll repair the misery thou dost bear
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need.

Edg. Give me thy arm:

Poor Tom shall lead thee. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. Before the Duke of Albany's palace.

Enter GONERIL and EDMUND.

Gon. Welcome, my lord: I marvel our mild husband

Not met us on the way.

Enter OSWALD.

Now, where's your master?

Osw. Madam, within; but never man so chang'd.

I told him of the army that was landed;
He smil'd at it: I told him you were coming;
His answer was, "The worse:" of Gloster's treachery,

And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot,⁶
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out:—

What most he should dislike seems pleasant to him; 10

What like, offensive.

Gon. [To Edmund] Then shall you go no further.

It is the cowish⁷ terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrongs,

Which tie him to an answer.⁸ Our wishes on the way

May prove effects. Back, Edmund, to my brother;

Hasten his musters and conduct his powers:
I must change arms at home, and give the distaff

Into my husband's hands. This trusty servant
Shall pass between us: ere long you're like to hear,

If you dare venture in your own behalf, 20
A mistress's command. Wear this; spare speech; [Giving him a favour.

Decline your head: this kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:—
Conceive,⁹ and fare thee well.

Edm. Yours in the ranks of death.

Gon. My most dear Gloster!
[Exit Edmund.

O, the difference of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due:
My fool usurps my body.

Osw. Madam, here comes my lord. [Exit.

Enter ALBANY.

Gon. I have been worth the whistle.

Alb. O Goneril!
You are not worth the dust which the rude wind 30

Blows in your face. I fear your disposition:
That nature which contemns it¹⁰ origin

¹ Mopping, making faces.

² Mowing, grimacing.

³ Superfluous, having more than enough.

⁴ Slaves, makes a slave of, treats as a slave.

⁵ Ordinance, established order, law of nature.

⁶ Sot, fool, dolt.

⁷ Cowish, cowardly.

⁸ Answer, answer to a challenge, manly resistance.

⁹ Conceive, understand.

¹⁰ It, its (old possessive).

Cannot be border'd¹ certain in itself; 33
 She that herself will sliver² and disbranch
 From her material³ sap, perforce must wither,
 And come to deadly use.

Gon. No more; the text is foolish.

Alb. Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile:

Filths savour⁴ but themselves. What have you done?

Tigers, not daughters, what have you perform'd? 40

A father, and a gracious aged man,
 Whose reverence even the head-lugg'd⁵ bear would lick,

Gon.

O vain fool!—(Act iv 2 61.)

Most barbarous, most degenerate! have you madded. 48

Could my good brother suffer you to do it?

A man, a prince, by him so benefited!

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
 Send quickly down to tame these vile offences,
 It will come,
 Humanity must perforce prey on itself,
 Like monsters of the deep.

Gon.

Milk-liver'd man!

That bear'st a cheek for blows, a head for wrongs; 51

Who hast not in thy brows an eye discerning Thine honour from thy suffering; that not know'st 58

Fools do those villains pity who are punish'd
 Ere they have done their mischief. Where's thy drum?

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land;

With plumed helm thy state begins to threat;
 Whiles thou, a moral⁶ fool, sitt'st still, and criest

"Alack, why does he so?"

¹ Border'd, restrained.

² Sliver, break off.

³ Material, nourishing.

⁴ Savour, relish.

⁵ Head-lugg'd, led by the head.

⁶ Moral, moralizing.

Alb. See thyself, devill!
 Proper¹ deformity seems not in the fiend 60
 So horrid as in woman.

Gon. O vain fool!

Alb. Thou changed and self-cover'd² thing,
 for shame,
 Be-monster not thy feature.³ Were 't my fitness
 To let these hands obey my blood,⁴
 They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
 Thy flesh and bones:—howe'er thou art a fiend,
 A woman's shape doth shield thee.

Gon. Marry, your manhood now!

Enter a Messenger.

Alb. What news?

Mess. O, my good lord, the Duke of Corn-wall's dead; 70
 Slain by his servant, going to put out
 The other eye of Gloster.

Alb. Gloster's eyes!

Mess. A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,⁵
 Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
 To his great master; who, thereat enraged, Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him
 dead;
 But not without that harmful stroke which since 77
 Hath pluck'd him after.

Alb. This shows you are above,
 You justicers,⁶ that these our nether crimes
 So speedily can venge!—But, O poor Gloster!
 Lost he his other eye?

Mess. Both, both, my lord.—
 { [This letter, madam, craves a speedy answer;
 'Tis from your sister.

Gon. [Aside] One way I like this well;
 But being widow, and my Gloster with her,
 May all the building in my fancy pluck
 Upon my hateful life: another way
 The news is not so tart.—I'll read, and answer. [Exit.]

Alb. Where was his son [when they did take his eyes?

Mess. Come with my lady hither.

Alb. He's not here.

Mess. No, my good lord; I met him back⁷
 again. 91/

Alb.] Knows he the wickedness?

Mess. Ay, my good lord; 't was he inform'd against him;

And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment

Might have the freer course.

Alb. Gloster, I live
 To thank thee for the love thou show'dst the
 king,

And to revenge thine eyes.—Come hither,
 friend:

Tell me what more thou know'st. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The French camp near Dover.

Enter KENT and a Gentleman.

Kent. Why the King of France is so suddenly gone back know you the reason?

Gent. Something he left imperfect in the state, which since his coming forth is thought of; which imports to the kingdom so much fear and danger, that his personal return was most requir'd and necessary.

Kent. Who hath he left behind him general?

Gent. The Marshal of France, Monsieur La
 Far. 10

Kent. Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

Gent. Ay, sir; she took them, read them in my presence;

And now and then an ample tear trill'd⁸ down
 Her delicate cheek: it seem'd she was a queen
 Over her passion; who, most rebel-like,
 Sought to be king o'er her.

Kent. O, then it mov'd her.

Gent. Not to a rage: patience and sorrow strove

Who should express her goodliest. You have seen 19

Sunshine and rain at once: her smiles and tears
 Were like a better way: those happy smilets⁹
 That played on her ripe lip seem'd not to know
 What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence

As pearls from diamonds dropt.—In brief,
 sorrow

¹ Proper, his own.

² Self-cover'd, concealing thy real self.

³ Feature, bodily form.

⁴ Blood, passion, anger.

⁵ Remorse, pity.

⁶ Justicers, just powers.

⁷ Back, going back.

⁸ Trill'd, trickled.

⁹ Smilets, a diminutive of smile.

Would be a rarity most belov'd, if all
Could so become it.

Kent. Made she no verbal question?

Gent. Faith, once or twice she heav'd the name of "father"

Pantingly forth, as if it press'd her heart;
Cried "Sisters, sisters!—Shame of ladies! sisters!
Kent! father! sisters! What, i' the storm?
i' the night?" 30

Let pity not be believ'd!"—There she shook
The holy water from her heavenly eyes,
And, clamour moisten'd, then away she started
To deal with grief alone.

Kent. It is the stars,
The stars above us, govern our conditions;
Else one self¹ mate and mate could not beget
Such different issues. You spoke not with her since?

Gent. No.

Kent. Was this before the king return'd?

Gent. No, since.

Kent. Well, sir, the poor distressed Lear's
i' the town; 40

Who sometime, in his better tune, remembers
What we are come about, and by no means
Will yield to see his daughter.

Gent. Why, good sir?

Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows² him:
his own unkindness,
That stripp'd her from his benediction, turn'd
her

To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his dog-hearted daughters,—these things sting

His mind so venomously, that burning shame
Detains him from Cordelia.

Gent. Alack, poor gentleman!

Kent. Of Albany's and Cornwall's powers
you heard not? 50

Gent. 'Tis so they are a-foot.

Kent. Well, sir, I'll bring you to our master
Lear,
And leave you to attend him: some dear cause³
Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance. I pray you, go Along with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The same. A tent.

Enter CORDELIA, Doctor, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alack, 'tis he: why, he was met even now

As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud;
Crown'd with rank fumitory and furrow-
weeds,

With burdocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-
flowers,

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn.—A century⁴ send forth;

Search every acre in the high-grown field,
And bring him to our eye. [Exit an Officer]—

[What can man's wisdom

In the restoring his bereaved sense?
He that helps him take all my outward worth.

Doct. There is means, madam: 11

Our foster-nurse of nature is repose,
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him
Are many simples⁵ operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish.

Cor.] All bless'd secrets,

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears! be aidant⁶ and remediate⁷

In the good man's distress!—Seek, seek for
him;

Lest his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life
That wants the means to lead it.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. News, madam;

The British powers are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis known before; our preparation
stands 22

In expectation of them.—O dear father,

It is thy business that I go about;

Therefore great France

My mourning and important⁸ tears hath pitied.

No blown⁹ ambition doth our arms incite,

But love, dear love, and our aged father's right:

[Soon may I hear and see him!] [Exeunt.

¹ One self, the same.

² Elbows, stands at his elbow, haunts.

³ Dear cause, important business.

⁴ Century, a company of a hundred soldiers.

⁵ Simples, medicinal herbs.

⁶ Aidant, helpful.

⁷ Remediate, healing, curing.

⁸ Important, importunate.

⁹ Blown, inflated.

[SCENE V. A room in Gloster's castle.Enter REGAN and OSWALD.Reg. But are my brother's powers set forth?Osw. Ay, madam.Reg. Himself in person there?Osw. Madam, with much ado:
Your sister is the better soldier.¹*Reg.* Lord Edmund spake not with your lord at home?Osw. No, madam.Reg. What might import my sister's letter to him?Osw. I know not, lady.Reg. Faith, he is posted hence on serious matter.It was great ignorance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live: where he arrives he moves 11
All hearts against us: Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted² life; moreover, to descry
The strength o' the enemy.Osw. I must needs after him, madam, with my letter.Reg. Our troops set forth to-morrow: stay
with us;

The ways are dangerous.

Osw. I may not, madam:
My lady charg'd my duty in this business.Reg. Why should she write to Edmund?
Might not youTransport her purposes by word?³ Belike, 20 Something—I know not what:—I'll love thee
much,

Let me unseal the letter.

Osw. Madam, I had rather—Reg. I know your lady does not love her husband;I'm sure of that: and at her late being here
She gave strange ceilliades⁴ and most speaking looksTo noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosom.Osw. I, madam?Reg. I speak in understanding; you are, I know't:Therefore I do advise you, take this note:
My lord is dead; Edmund and I have talk'd;
And more convenient is he for my hand 31
Than for your lady's:—you may gather more.
If you do find him, pray you, give him this;
And when your mistress hears thus much from
you,

I pray, desire her call her wisdom to her.

So, fare you well.

If you do chance to hear of that blind traitor, Preferment falls on him that cuts him off.Osw. Would I could meet him, madam! I 39 would show

What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well. [Exeunt.]SCENE VI. The country near Dover.Enter GLOSTER, and EDGAR dressed like a peasant.Glo. When shall I come to the top of that same hill?Edg. You do climb up it now: look, how we labour.Glo. Methinks the ground is even.⁵*Edg.* Horrible steep.

Hark, do you hear the sea?

Glo. No, truly.Edg. Why, then, your other senses grow imperfect

By your eyes' anguish.

Glo. So may it be, indeed:
Methinks thy voice is alter'd; and thou speak'st
In better phrase and matter than thou didst.Edg. You're much deceiv'd: in nothing am
I chang'd

But in my garments.

Glo. Methinks you're better spoken.Edg. Come on, sir; here's the place:—stand still.—How fearful 11

And dizzy 't is to cast one's eyes so low!

The crows and choughs that wing the midway airShow scarce so gross⁶ as beetles: half way down Hangs one that gathers sampire,—dreadful trade!

Methinks he seems no bigger than his head:

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,

¹ Soldier, a trisyllable here.² Nighted, darkened, blinded.⁴ Ceilliades, amorous glances³ By word, orally.⁵ Even, level.⁶ Gross, big.

Appearlikemice; and yond tall anchoring bark,
 Diminish'd to her cock,¹—her cock, a buoy
 Almost too small for sight: the murmuring surge,²⁰
 That on th' unnumber'd² idle pebbles chafes,
 Cannot be heard so high.—I'll look no more;
 Lest my brain turn, and the deficient³ sight
 Topple down headlong.

Glo. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Give me your hand:—you're now within a foot

Of th' extreme verge: for all beneath the moon
 Would I not leap upright.

Glo. Let go my hand.
 Here, friend, 's another purse; in it a jewel
 Well worth a poor man's taking: fairies and gods²⁹

Prosper it with thee! Go thou further off;
 Bid me farewell, and let me hear thee going.

Edg. Now fare you well, good sir.

Glo. With all my heart.

Edg. [Aside] Why I do trifle thus with his despair

Is done to cure it.

Glo. [Kneeling] O you mighty gods!
 This world I do renounce, and, in your sights,
 Shake patiently my great affliction off:
 If I could bear it longer, and not fall
 To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
 My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O, bless him!—
 Now, fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Gone, sir:—farewell.

[Gloster throws himself forward, and falls.]

[Aside] And yet I know not how conceit may rob⁴²

The treasury of life, when life itself Yields to the theft: had he been where he thought,

By this had thought been past.—Alive or dead?
 Ho you, sir! friend!—hear you, sir!—speak!—
 [Aside] Thus might he pass indeed:—yet he revives.—

What are you, sir?

Glo. Away, and let me die.

Edg. Hadst thou been ought but gossamer, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating,⁵⁰
 Thou 'dst shiver'd like an egg: but thou dost
 breathe;

Hast heavy substance; bleed'st not; speak'st;
 art sound.

Ten masts at each⁴ make not the altitude
 Which thou hast perpendicularly fell:

Thy life 's a miracle. Speak yet again.

Glo. But have I fall'n, or no?

Edg. From the dread summit of this chalky bourn.

Look up a-height;⁵—the shrill-gorg'd⁶ lark so
 far

Cannot be seen or heard: do but look up.

Glo. Alack, I have no eyes.—⁶⁰

Is wretchedness depriv'd that benefit
 To end itself by death? 'Twas yet some comfort,
 When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,
 And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arm:
 Up:—so.—How is't? Feel you your legs? You stand.

Glo. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all strangeness.
 Upon the crown o' the cliff, what thing was that
 Which parted from you?

Glo. A poor unfortunate beggar.

Edg. As I stood here below, methought his eyes⁶⁹

Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses, Horns whelk'd⁷ and wav'd like the enridged sea:

It was some fiend; therefore, thou happy father,
 Think that the clearest⁸ gods, who make them
 honours

Of men's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee.

Glo. I do remember now: henceforth I'll bear

Affliction till it do cry out itself

"Enough, enough," and die. That thing you speak of,

I took it for a man; often 't would say

"The fiend, the fiend:" he led me to that place.

Edg. Bear free⁹ and patient thoughts.—But who comes here?⁸⁰

⁴ At each, each joined to another.

⁵ A-height, on high, aloft.

⁶ Shrill-gorg'd, shrill-throated.

⁷ Whelk'd, protruding.

⁸ Clearest, brightest, purest.

⁹ Free, sound.

¹ Cock, cockboat.

² Unnumber'd, innumerable.

³ Deficient, defective.

Enter LEAR, fantastically dressed with wild flowers.

[The safer¹ sense will ne'er accommodate His master thus.]

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for coining;
I am the king himself.

Edg. [Aside] O thou side-piercing sight!

Lear. Nature's above art in that respect.
—There's your press-money. That fellow handles his bow like a crow-keeper:² draw me a clothier's yard.³—Look, look, a mouse!
Peace, peace;—this piece of toasted cheese will do't.—There's my gauntlet; I'll prove it on

Lear. Ha! Goneril,—with a white beard!—(Act iv. 6. 98.)

a giant.—Bring up the brown bills.⁴—O, well flown, bird!—i' the clout;⁵ i' the clout: hewgh!
—Give the word.⁶

Edg. Sweet marjoram.

Lear. Pass.

Glo. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha! Goneril,—with a white beard!
—They flatter'd me like a dog; and told me
I had white hairs in my beard ere the black ones were there.—To say “ay” and “no” to everything that I said!—“Ay” and “no” too was no good divinity. When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go to, they are not men o' their words: they told me I was every thing;

't is a lie,—I am not ague-proof.

Glo. The trick of that voice I do well remember: 109

Is't not the king?

Lear. Ay, every inch a king:

When I do stare, see how the subject quakes!
I pardon that man's life.—What was thy cause?—

Adultery?—

Thou shalt not die: die for adultery! No:

¹ Safer, sounder, more sober.

² Crow-keeper, one who keeps off the crows.

³ A clothier's yard, an arrow a yard long.

⁴ Brown bills, halberds.

⁵ Clout, centre of target.

⁶ Word, watchword.

The wren goes to 't, and the small gilded fly
Does lecher in my sight.
[Let copulation thrive; for Gloster's bastard son
Was kinder to his father than my daughters
Got 'tween the lawful sheets.]
To 't, luxury, pell-mell! for I lack soldiers.—
[Behold yon simpering dame, 120
Whose face between her forks presages snow,
That minces virtue, and does shake the
head
To hear of pleasure's name,—
The fitchew nor the soiled horse goes to 't
With a more riotous appetite.
Down from the waist they are Centaurs,
Though women all above:
But to the girdle do the gods inherit,
Beneath is all the fiends';
There's hell, there's darkness, there's the sulphurous pit, 130
burning, scalding, stench, consumption;]—fie, fie, fie! pah, pah! Give me an ounce of civet, good apothecary, to sweeten my imagination:
there's money for thee.

Glo. O, let me kiss that hand!

Lear. Let me wipe it first; it smells of mortality.

Glo. O ruin'd piece¹ of nature! This great world
Shall so wear out to naught.—Dost thou know
me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough.
Dost thou squiny² at me? No, do thy worst, blind Cupid; I'll not love.—Read thou this challenge; mark but the penning of it.

Glo. Were all the letters suns, I could not see one.

Edg. [Aside] I would not take this from report;—it is,

And my heart breaks at it.

Lear. Read.

Glo. What, with the case³ of eyes?

Lear. O, ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no money in your purse?
Your eyes are in a heavy case, your purse in a light: yet you see how this world goes. 151

Glo. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may see how this world goes with no eyes. Look with thine ears: see how yond justice rails upon yond simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: change places; and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?—Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar?

Glo. Ay, sir. 160

Lear. And the creature ran from the cur?
There thou mightst behold the great image of authority: a dog's obey'd in office.—

[Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand!
Why dost thou lash that whore? Strip thine own back;

Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind
For which thou whipp'st her.] The usurer hangs the cozeners.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold, 169

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw does pierce it.
None does offend, none,—I say, none; I'll able⁴ 'em:

Take that of me, my friend, who have the power
To seal th' accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see the things thou dost not.—Now, now,
now, now:

Pull off my boots:—harder, harder:—so.

Edg. [Aside] O, matter⁵ and impertinency⁶
mix'd!

Reason in madness!

Lear. If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes. 180

I know thee well enough; thy name is Gloster:
Thou must be patient; we came crying hither:
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawl and cry.—I will preach to thee: mark.

Glo. Alack, alack the day!

Lear. When we are born, we cry that we are come

To this great stage of fools.—[This⁷ a good block:—

It were a delicate stratagem to shoe
A troop of horse with felt: I'll put 't in proof;

¹ Piece, masterpiece.

² Squiny, squint.

³ Case, empty socket.

⁴ Able, warrant, vouch for.

⁵ Matter, meaning, sense.

⁶ Impertinency, lack of pertinency.

⁷ This, this is.

And when I've stol'n upon these sons-in-law,
Then, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill!] 191

Enter a Gentleman, with Attendants.

Gent. O, here he is: lay hand upon him.—
Sir,

Your most dear daughter—

Lear. No rescue? What, a prisoner? I am even

The natural fool of fortune.—Use me well;
You shall have ransom. Let me have surgeons;
I am cut to the brains.

Gent. You shall have any thing.

Lear. No seconds? all myself?

[Why, this would make a man a man of salt,
To use his eyes for garden water-pots, 200
Ay, and laying autumn's dust.

Gent. Good sir,—

Lear.] I will die bravely, like a smug¹ bridegroom. What!

I will be jovial: come, come; I am a king;
My masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a royal one, and we obey
you.

[Lear. Then there's life in 't. Nay, an you get it, you shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa.] [Exit; Attendants follow.]

Gent. A sight most pitiful in the meanest wretch,

Past speaking of in a king!—Thou hast one
daughter, 209

Who redeems nature from the general curse
Which twain have brought her to.

[Edg. Hail, gentle sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: what's your will?

Edg. Do you hear aught, sir, of a battle toward?²

Gent. Most sure and vulgar:³ every one hears that,

Which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But, by your favour,
How near's the other army?

Gent. Near and on speedy foot; the main desery⁴

Stands on the hourly thought.

Edg. I thank you, sir: that's all.

Gent. Though that the queen on special cause is here, 219
Her army is mov'd on.

Edg. I thank you, sir.]

[Exit Gentleman.]

Glo. You ever-gentle gods, take my breath from me;

Let not my worser spirit tempt me again
To die before you please!

Edg. Well pray you, father.

Glo. Now, good sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poor man, made tame to fortune's blows;

Who, by the art of known and feeling⁵ sorrows,
Am pregnant⁶ to good pity. Give me your hand,
I'll lead you to some bidding.⁷

Glo. Hearty thanks:
The bounty and the benison⁸ of heaven
To boot, and boot!

Enter OSWALD.

Osw. A proclaim'd prize! Most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh 231

To raise my fortunes.—Thou old unhappy traitor,

Briefly thyself remember:—the sword is out
That must destroy thee.

Glo. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough to it. [Edgar interposes.]

Osw. Wherefore, bold peasant,
Dar'st thou support a publish'd traitor?
Hence;

Lest that th' infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arm.

Edg. Chill⁹ not let go, zir, without vurther
'casion. 240

Osw. Let go, slave, or thou diest!

Edg. Good gentleman, go your gait, and let poor volk pass. An chud¹⁰ ha' bin zwaggered out of my life, 't would not ha' bin zo long as 't is by a vortnight. Nay, come not near the old man; keep out, che vor ye,¹¹ or ise try whether your costard¹² or my ballow¹³ be the harder: chill be plain with you.

¹ Smug, spruce. ² Toward, at hand, imminent.

³ Vulgar, commonly known.

⁴ The main desery, &c., the main body is hourly expected to be seen.

⁵ Feeling, heartfelt.

⁷ Biding, abode.

⁹ Chill, I will.

¹¹ Che vor ye, I warn ye.

¹² Costard, head.

⁶ Pregnant, disposed.

⁸ Benison, blessing.

¹⁰ Chud, I should.

¹³ Ballow, cudgel.

Osw. Out, dunghill!

Edg. Chill pick your teeth, zir: come; no matter vor your foins¹ 251

[They fight, and Edgar knocks him down.]

Osw. Slave, thou hast slain me:—villain, take my purse:

If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body;

And give the letters which thou find'st about me

To Edmund earl of Gloster; seek him out
Upon the English party:²—O, untimely death!
[Dies.]

Edg. I know thee well: a serviceable villain;

As duteous to the vices of thy mistress

As badness would desire.

Glo.

What, is he dead?

Osw. Slave, thou hast slain me:—villain, take my purse.—(Act iv. 6. 252)

Edg. Sit you down, father; rest you.— 260
Let's see these pockets: the letters that he speaks of

May be my friends.—He's dead; I'm only sorry

He had no other deathsman.³—Let us see:—
Leave, gentle wax; and, manners, blame us not:

To know our enemies' minds, we'd rip their hearts;

Their papers, is more lawful.

[Reads] "Let our reciprocal vows be remembered. You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully⁴ offer'd. There is nothing done, if he return the conqueror: then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol; from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me, and supply the place for your labour."

"Your—wife, so I would say—affectionate servant, "GONERIL."

O indistinguish'd space⁵ of woman's will!
A plot upon her virtuous husband's life;
And the exchange my brother!—[Here, in the sands,

¹ Foins, thrusts.

² Party, side.

³ Deathsman, executioner.

⁴ Fruitfully, abundantly.

⁵ Indistinguish'd space, boundless range.

These I'll rake¹ up, the post unsanctified 281
Of murderous lechers: and, in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd² duke: for him 'tis well
That of thy death and business I can tell.

Glo. The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,

That I stand up, and have ingenious³ feeling
Of my huge sorrows! Better I were distract:
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,

And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose 290
The knowledge of themselves.

Edg. Give me your hand:

[Drum afar off.]

Far off, methinks, I hear the beaten drum:

Come, father, I'll bestow you with a friend.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. A tent in the French camp. Lear on a bed asleep, soft music playing; Doctor, Gentleman, and others attending.

Enter CORDELIA and KENT.

Cor. O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work,
To match thy goodness? My life will be too short,

And every measure fail me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd, madam, is o'er-paid.

All my reports go with the modest⁴ truth;
Nor more nor clipp'd, but so.

Cor. Be better suited:⁵
These weeds⁶ are memories of those worser hours:

I prithee, put them off.

Kent. Pardon, dear madam;
Yet to be known shortens my made intent:⁷
My boon I make it, that you know me not Till time and I think meet. 11

Cor. Then be't so, my good lord.—[To the Doctor] How does the king?

Doct. Madam, sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind gods,
Cure this great breach in his abused nature!
Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up
Of this child-changed father!

Doct. So please your majesty
That we may wake the king? he hath slept long.

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceed 19

I' the sway of your own will. Is he array'd?

Gent. Ay, madam; in the heaviness of sleep
We put fresh garments on him.

Doct. Be by, good madam, when we do awake him;

I doubt not of his temperance.⁸

Cor. Very well.

Doct. Please you, draw near.—Louder the music there!

Cor. O my dear father! Restoration hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Kent. Kind and dear princess!

Cor. Had you not been their father, these white flakes 30

Had challeng'd pity of them. Was this a face
To be oppos'd against the warring winds?

To stand against the deep dread-bolted
thunder?

In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? to watch—poor perdu!⁹—

With this thin helm? Mine enemy's dog, Though he had bit me, should have stood that night

Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack, alack! 40

'Tis wonder that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.¹⁰—He wakes; speak to
him.

Doct. Madam, do you; 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my royal lord? how fares your majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong to take me out o'
the grave:—

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound

¹ Rake, cover.

² Death-practis'd, whose death is plotted.

³ Ingenious, conscious.

⁴ Modest, moderate.

⁵ Suited, dressed.

⁶ Weeds, garments.

⁷ Made intent, plan formed.

⁸ Temperance, calmness.

⁹ Perdu, forlorn one.

¹⁰ Concluded all, entirely ended.

Upon a wheel of fire, that¹ mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know: when did you die?

Cor. Still, still, far wide! 50

Doct. He's scarce awake: let him alone awhile.

Lear. Where have I been? Where am I?
—Fair daylight?—

I'm mightily abus'd.²—I should e'en die with pity,

To see another thus.—I know not what to say.—
I will not swear these are my hands:—let's see;

Lear. I pray, weep not:
If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know you do not love me; for your sisters

Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.
—(Act iv 7. 71-75.)

I feel this pin prick. Would I were assur'd
Of my condition!

Cor. O, look upon me, sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me:—
No, sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man, 60
Fourscore and upward, not an hour more nor less;

And, to deal plainly,
I fear I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks I should know you, and know this
man;

Yet I am doubtful: for I'm mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know
not

Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me;

For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am, I am.

Lear. Be your tears wet? yes, faith. I pray, weep not: 71

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know you do not love me; for your sisters

¹ That, so that.

² Abus'd, deceived.

Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, sir.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Doct. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,

You see, is kill'd in him: and yet 't is danger
To make him even o'er¹ the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more 81
Till further settling.²

Cor. Will 't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me:
Pray you now, forget and forgive. I'm old and foolish.

[Exeunt all except Kent and Gentleman.]

Gent. Holds it true, sir, that the Duke of Cornwall was so slain?

Kent. Most certain, sir.

Gent. Who is conductor of his people?

Kent. As 't is said, the bastard son of Gloster.

Gent. They say Edgar, his banish'd son, is with the Earl of Kent in Germany. 91

Kent. Report is changeable. 'T is time to look about; the powers of the kingdom approach apace.

Gent. The arbitrement³ is like to be bloody.
Fare you well, sir. [Exit.]

Kent. My point and period will be thoroughly⁴ wrought,

Or well or ill, as this day's battle's fought.

[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The camp of the British forces, near Dover.

Enter, with drum and colours, EDMUND, REGAN, Officers, Soldiers, and others.

Edm. Know of the duke if his last purpose
hold,

Or whether since he is advis'd by aught
To change the course: he's full of alteration
And self-reproving:—bring his constant pleasure.⁵ [To an Officer, who goes out.]

[Reg. Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Edm. 'T is to be doubted,⁶ madam.

Reg. Now, sweet lord.
You know the goodness I intend upon you:
Tell me,—but truly,—but then speak the truth,
Do you not love my sister?

Edm. In honour'd love.

Reg. But have you never found my brother's way 10

To the forfended⁷ place?

Edm. That thought abuses you.

Reg. I am doubtful that you have been conjunct⁸

And bosom'd with her, as far as we call hers.

Edm. No, by mine honour, madam.

Reg. I never shall endure her: dear my lord,
Be not familiar with her.

Edm. Fear me not:—
She and the duke her husband!]

Enter, with drum and colours, ALBANY, GONERIL, and Soldiers.

Gon. [Aside] I had rather lose the battle than that sister

Should loosen him and me.

Alb. Our very loving sister, well be-met.— Sir, this I hear,—the king is come to his daughter, 21

With others whom the rigour of our state
Forc'd to cry out. Where I could not be honest,
I never yet was valiant: for this business,
It toucheth us, as France invades our land,
Not bolds⁹ the king, with others, whom, I fear,
Most just and heavy causes make oppose.¹⁰

Edm. Sir, you speak nobly.

Reg. Why is this reason'd?¹¹

¹ Even o'er, try to account for.

² Settling, composure of mind, recovery of reason.

³ Arbitrement, decision. ⁴ Thoroughly, thoroughly.

⁵ Constant pleasure, settled resolution.

⁶ Doubted, suspected, feared. ⁷ Forfended, forbidden.

⁸ Conjunct, intimately connected. ⁹ Bold, emboldens.

¹⁰ Make oppose, cause to oppose us.

¹¹ Reason'd, debated.

Gon. Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestic and particular broils 30
Are not the question here.

Alb. Let's, then, determine
With the ancient of war on our proceedings.

Edm. I shall attend you presently at your tent.

Reg. Sister, you'll go with us?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'Tis most convenient; pray you, go
with us.

Gon. [Aside] O, ho, I know the riddle.—I will go.

As they are going out, enter EDGAR disguised.

Edg. If e'er your grace had speech with man so poor,
Hear me one word.

[Alb.] I'll overtake you.—Speak.
[Exeunt all except Albany and Edgar.]

Edg. Before you fight the battle, ope this letter. 40

If you have victory, let the trumpet sound
For him that brought it: wretched though I seem,

I can produce a champion that will prove
What is avouched there. If you miscarry,
Your business of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune love you!

Alb. Stay till I've read the letter.

Edg. I was forbid it.
When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. 49

Alb. Why, fare thee well: I will o'erlook thy paper. [Exit Edgar.]

Re-enter EDMUND.

Edm. The enemy's in view; draw up your powers.

Here is the guess of their true strength and forces

By diligent discovery;¹—but your haste
Is now urg'd on you.

Alb. We will greet the time. [Exit.]

Edm. To both these sisters have I sworn my love;
Each jealous² of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both? one? or neither? Neither can be enjoy'd,

If both remain alive: to take the widow
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril;
And hardly shall I carry out my side,³ 61
Her husband being alive. Now, then, we'll use His countenance for the battle; which being
done,

Let her who would be rid of him devise
His speedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,—
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon; for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate. [Exit.]

SCENE II. A field between the two camps.

*Alarum within. Enter, with drum and colours, LEAR, CORDELIA, and their Forces; and
exeunt.*

Enter EDGAR and GLOSTER.

Edg. Here, father, take the shadow of this tree

For your good host; pray that the right may thrive:

If ever I return to you again,

I'll bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you, sir!
[Exit Edgar.]

Alarum and retreat within. Re-enter EDGAR.

Edg. Away, old man,—give me thy hand,— away!

King Lear hath lost, he and his daughter ta'en:
Give me thy hand; come on.

Glo. No further, sir; a man may rot even here.

Edg. What, in ill thoughts again? Men must endure 9

Their going hence, even as their coming hither:
Ripeness⁴ is all:—come on.

Glo. And that's true too. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The British camp, near Dover.

*Enter, in conquest, with drum and colours, ED-MUND; LEAR and CORDELIA prisoners;
Officers, Soldiers, &c.*

Edm. Some officers take them away: good guard,

¹ Discovery, reconnoitring.

² Jealous = suspicious.

³ Carry out my side, win the game.

⁴ Ripeness, readiness.

Until their greater pleasures first be known
That are to censure¹ them.

Cor. We are not the first
Who, with best meaning, have incurr'd the worst.

Cor. We are not the first
Who, with best meaning, have incurr'd the worst.
—(Act v. 3. 3, 4.)

For thee, oppressed king, am I cast down;
Myself could else out-frown false fortune's frown.—
Shall we not see these daughters and these sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no! Come, let's away to prison:

We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage:
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel
down, 10

And ask of thee forgiveness: so we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh

At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them
too,—

Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out;—

And take upon's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies: and we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great
ones,

That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense. Have I caught thee? 21

He that parts us shall bring a brand from
heaven,

And fire us hence like foxes. Wipe thine eyes;
The good-years² shall devour them, flesh and fell,³

Ere they shall make us weep; we'll see 'em starv'd first.

Come. [Exeunt Lear and Cordelia, guarded.]

Edm. Come hither, captain; hark.

Take thou this note [Giving a paper]; go follow them to prison:

One step I have advanc'd thee; if thou dost
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To noble fortunes: know thou this, that men
Are as the time is: to be tender-minded 31
Does not become a sword:—thy great employment

Will not bear question; either say thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other means.

Off. I'll do't, my lord.

Edm. About it; and write happy⁴ when thou hast done.

Mark,—I say, instantly; and carry it so
As I have set it down.

Off. I cannot draw a cart, nor eat dried oats;
If't be man's work, I'll do't. [Exit.]

² Good-years, goujere, pox.

³ Fell, skin.

⁴ Write happy, count yourself fortunate.

Flourish. Enter ALBANY, GONERIL, REGAN,
Officers, and Attendants.

Alb. Sir, you have shown to-day your valiant strain,¹ 40
And fortune led you well: you have the captives

That were the opposites² of this day's strife:
We do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine.

Edm. Sir, I thought it fit
To send the old and miserable king
To some retention³ and appointed guard;
Whose age has charms in it, whose title more,
To pluck the common bosom⁴ on his side,
And turn our impress'd lances⁵ in our eyes Which do command them. With him I sent the queen; 51

My reason all the same; and they are ready
To-morrow, or at further space, t' appear Where you shall hold your session. At this time

We sweat and bleed: the friend hath lost his friend;

And the best quarrels, in the heat, are curs'd
By those that feel their sharpness:—
The question of Cordelia and her father
Requires a fitter place.

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subject of this war, 60
Not as a brother.

[Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks our pleasure might have been demanded,
Ere you had spoke so far. He led our
powers;

Bore the commission of my place and person;
The which immediacy⁶ may well stand up
And call itself your brother.

Gon. Not so hot:
In his own grace he doth exalt himself,
More than in your addition.⁷

Reg. In my rights

By me invested, he compeers⁸ the best.

Alb. That were the most, if he should husband you. 70

Reg. Jesters do oft prove prophets.

Gon. Holla, holla!

That eye that told you so look'd but a-squint.

Reg. Lady, I am not well; else I should answer

From a full-flowing stomach.⁹—General,
Take thou my soldiers, prisoners, patrimony;
Dispose of them, of me; the walls are thine:
Witness the world that I create thee here
My lord and master.

Gon. Mean you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let-alone lies not in your good will.

Edm. Nor in thine, lord.

Alb. Half-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. [To Edmund] Let the drum strike, and prove my title thine. 81

Alb. Stay yet; hear reason.]—Edmund, I arrest thee

On capital treason; and, in thine attaint,
This gilded serpent [Pointing to Goneril].—

[For your claim, fair sister,

I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'T is she is sub-contracted to this lord,
And I, her husband, contradict your bans.
If you will marry, make your loves to me;
My lady is bespoken.

Gon. An interlude!

Alb.] Thou art arm'd, Gloster:—let the trumpet sound: 90

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge [Throwing down a glove];

I'll prove it on thy heart,

Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing less
Than I have here proclaim'd thee.

[Reg. Sick, O, sick!

Gon. [Aside] If not, I'll ne'er trust medicine.]

Edm. There's my exchange [Throwing down a glove]: what in the world he is

That names me traitor, villain-like he lies:
Call by thy trumpet: he that dares approach,
On him, on you, who not? I will maintain
My truth and honour firmly. 101

¹ Strain, race.

² Opposites, opponents.

³ Retention, custody.

⁴ Bosom, affection.

⁵ Impress'd lances, the soldiers we have pressed into service.

⁶ Immediacy, being next in authority to me.

⁷ Addition, title given him.

⁸ Compeers, is the peer of.

⁹ Stomach, anger.

[Alb. A herald, ho!

Edm. A herald, ho, a herald!

Alb. Trust to thy single virtue;¹ for thy soldiers,

All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge.

Reg. My sickness grows upon me.

Alb. She is not well; convey her to my tent.]
[Exit Regan, led.

Enter a Herald.

Come hither, herald, — Let the trumpet sound, —

And read out this.

Off. Sound, trumpet! [A trumpet sounds.

Her. [Reads] “If any man of quality or degree within the lists of the army will maintain upon Edmund, supposed Earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor; let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet: he is bold in his defence.”

Edm. Sound! [First trumpet.

Her. Again! [Second trumpet.

Her. Again! [Third trumpet.

[Trumpet answers within.

Enter EDGAR, armed, and preceded by a trumpet.

Alb. Ask him his purposes, why he appears
Upon this call o’ the trumpet.

Her. What² are you?
Your name, your quality? and why you answer
This present summons?

Edg. Know, my name is lost;
By treason’s tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit:
Yet am I noble as the adversary 128
I come to cope.

Alb. Which is that adversary?

Edg. What’s he that speaks for Edmund
earl of Gloster?

Edm. Himself:—what say’st thou to him?

Edg. Draw thy sword,
That, if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice: here is mine.
Behold, it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession: I protest,— 130
Maugre³ thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,

Despite thy victor sword and fire-new fortune,
Thy valour and thy heart,—thou art a traitor;
False to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father;
Conspirant⁴ ’gainst this high illustrious prince;
And, from th’ extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Say thou “no,”
This sword, this arm, and my best spirits, are bent

To prove upon thy heart, whereto I speak, 140
Thou liest.

Edm. In wisdom I should ask thy name;
But, since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,

And that thy tongue some say⁵ of breeding breathes,

What safe and nicely⁶ I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn:
Back do I toss these treasons to thy head;
With the hell-hated⁷ lie o’erwhelm thy heart;
Which,—for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,—

This sword of mine shall give them instant
way,

Where they shall rest for ever.—Trumpets,
speak! 150

[Alarums. They fight. Edmund falls.

[Alb. Save him, save him!

Gon. This is practice,⁸ Gloster:
By the law of arms thou wast not bound to answer

An unknown opposite;⁹ thou art not van-quish’d,

But cozen’d and beguil’d.

Alb. Shut your mouth, dame,
Or with this paper shall I stop it:—Hold, sir;
Thou worse than any name, read thine own evil:—

No tearing, lady; I perceive you know it.

[Gives the letter to Edmund.

Gon. Say, if I do,—the laws are mine, not
thine: 158

Who can arraign me for’t? [Exit.

Alb. Most monstrous! oh!—

Know’st thou this paper?

Edm. Ask me not what I know.

⁴ Conspirant, plotter, conspirer.

⁵ Say, assay, proof

⁶ Nicely, punctiliously.

⁷ Hell-hated, hated like hell.

⁸ Practice, plotting.

⁹ Opposite, opponent.

¹ Virtue, valour

² What, who.

³ Maugre, in spite of.

Alb. Go after her: she's desperate; govern¹ her. [To an Officer, who goes out.]

Edm. What you have charg'd me with, that have I done;

And more, much more; the time will bring it out:

'Tis past, and so am I.—But what art thou That hast this fortune on me? If thou'rt noble, I do forgive thee.

Edg. Let's exchange charity.

I am no less in blood than thou art, Edmund; If more, the more thou hast wrong'd me.

My name is Edgar, and thy father's son.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices Make instruments to plague us: 171

[*The dark and vicious place where thee he got*² Cost him his eyes.]

Edm. Thou hast spoken right, 'tis true; The wheel is come full circle; I am here.

[Alb. Methought thy very gait did prophesy A royal nobleness:—I must embrace thee:

Let sorrow split my heart, if ever I

Did hate thee or thy father!

Edg. Worthy prince, I know't.

Alb. Where have you hid yourself?

How have you known the miseries of your father? 180

Edg. By nursing them, my lord.—List a brief tale;—

And when 'tis told, O, that my heart would burst!

The bloody proclamation to escape,

That follow'd me so near,—O, our lives' sweetness! 190

That we the pain of death would hourly die Rather than die at once!—taught me to shift

Into a madman's rags; t' assume a semblance

That very dogs disdain'd: and in this habit

Met I my father with his bleeding rings,³

Their precious stones new lost; became his guide, 190

Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair;

Never—O fault!—reveal'd myself unto him,

Until some half-hour past, when I was arm'd,

Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,

I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last

Told him my pilgrimage: but his flaw'd⁴ heart, Alack, too weak the conflict to support, 'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief, Burst smilingly.

Edm. This speech of yours hath mov'd me, And shall perchance do good: but speak you on; You look as⁵ you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woeful, hold it in; For I am almost ready to dissolve, 208 Hearing of this.

Edg. This would have seem'd a period To such as love not sorrow; but another, To amplify too much, would make much more, And top extremity.

Whilst I was big⁶ in clamour, came there a man,

Who, having seen me in my worst estate, Shunn'd my abhorr'd society; but then, finding, Who 't was that so endur'd, with his strong arms 211

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out As he'd burst heaven; threw him on my father; Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him That ever ear receiv'd: which in recounting His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life Began to crack: twice then the trumpets sounded,

And there I left him tranc'd.⁷

Alb. But who was this?

Edg. Kent, sir, the banish'd Kent; who in disguise

Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service Improper for a slave. 221

Enter a Gentleman hastily with a bloody knife.

Gent. Help, help, O, help!

Edg. What kind of help?

Alb. Speak, man.

Edg. What means that bloody knife?

Gent. 'Tis hot, it smokes; It came even from the heart of—O, she's dead!

Alb. Who dead? speak, man.

Gent. Your lady, sir, your lady: and her sister By her is poisoned; she hath confess'd it.

Edm. I was contracted to them both: all three

Now marry in an instant.

¹ Govern, restrain.

² Got, begot.

³ Rings, sockets.

⁴ Flaw'd, broken.

⁶ Big, loud.

⁵ As, as if.

⁷ Tranc'd, in a faint.

Edg.

Here comes Kent.

Alb. Produce their bodies, be they alive or dead:—

230

This judgment of the heavens, that makes us tremble,

Touches us not with pity. [Exit Gentleman.]

Enter KENT.

O, is this he?

The time will not allow the compliment
Which very manners urges.

Kent.

I am come

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!
I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever!—(Act v. 3. 269, 270.)

To bid my king and master aye good night:
Is he not here?

Alb.

Great thing of us forgot!—

Speak, Edmund, where's the king? and where's
Cordelia?—

[The bodies of Goneril and Regan are brought in.]

See'st thou this object, Kent?

Kent. Alack, why thus?

Edm.

Yet Edmund was belov'd:

The one the other poison'd for my sake, 240
And after slew herself.

Alb. Even so.—Cover their faces.

Edm. I pant for life:—some good I mean to do,

Despite of mine own nature. Quickly send—
Be brief in it—to the castle; for my writ
Is on the life of Lear and on Cordelia:—

[Nay, send in time.]

Alb.

[Run, run, O, run!

Edg. To who, my lord?]—Who has the office? send

Thy token of reprieve. 249

Edm. Well thought on: take my sword;
Give it the captain.

Alb.

Haste thee, for thy life.

[Exit Edgar.]

Edm. He hath commission from thy wife and me

To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame upon her own despair,
That she fordid¹ herself.

Alb. The gods defend her!—Bear him hence awhile. [Edmund is borne off.]

¹ Fordid, destroyed.

Re-enter LEAR, with CORDELIA dead in his arms; EDGAR, Captain, and others following.

Lear. Howl, howl, howl, howl!—O, you are men of stones:

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack.—She's gone for ever!—

I know when one is dead, and when one lives; 260

She's dead as earth.—Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?¹

Edg. Or image of that horror?

Alb. Fall, and cease!

Lear. This feather stirs; she lives! if it be so,
It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O my good master! [Kneeling.

Lear. Prithce, away.

Edg. 'Tis noble Kent, your friend.

Lear. A plague upon you, murderers, traitors
all!

I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever!— 270

Cordelia, Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!

What is't thou say'st?—Her voice was ever soft,

Gentle, and low,—an excellent thing in woman.—

I kill'd the slave that was a-hanging thee.

Cap. 'Tis true, my lords, he did.

Lear. Did I not, fellow?

I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion

I would have made them skip: I am old now,
And these same crosses spoil me.—Who are
you?

Mine eyes are not o' the best:—I'll tell you straight.

Kent. If fortune brag of two she lov'd and hated, 280

One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight. Are you not Kent?

Kent. The same,

Your servant Kent.—Where is your servant
Caius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that;
He'll strike, and quickly too:—he's dead and rotten.

Kent. No, my good lord; I am the very
man,—

Lear. I'll see that straight.

Kent. That, from your first of difference² and decay,

Have follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. You're welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else:—all's cheerless, dark, and deadly.— 290

Your eldest daughters have fordone³ themselves,

And desperately⁴ are dead.

Lear. Ay, so I think.

Alb. He knows not what he says; and vain it is

That we present us to him.

Edg. Very bootless.

[Enter a Captain.

Cap. Edmund is dead, my lord.]

Alb. [That's but a trifle here.—

You lords and noble friends, know our intent.

What comfort to this great decay may come

Shall be applied: for us, we will resign,

During the life of this old majesty,

To him our absolute power:—[To Edgar and

Kent] you, to your rights; 300

With boot, and such addition as your honours

Have more than merited.—All friends shall taste

The wages of their virtue, and all foes

The cup of their deservings.]—O, see, see!

Lear. And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no no life!

Why should a dog, a horse, a rat, have life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no

more,

Never, never, never, never!—

Pray you, undo this button. Thank you, sir.—

Do you see this? Look on her,—look,—her lips,— 310

Look there, look there!— [Dies.

Edg. He faints!—My lord, my lord!—

Kent. Break, heart; I prithee, break!

¹ End, end of the world.

² Difference, turn of fortune.

³ Fordone, destroyed.

⁴ Desperately, in despair.

Edg.

Look up, my lord.

Kent. Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass!

he hates him

313

That would upon the rack of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.Edg.

He is gone indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long:

He but usurp'd his life.

Alb. Bear them from hence.—Our present businessIs general woe.—[To Kent and Edgar] Friends of my soul, you twain 319

Rule in this realm, and the gor'd state sustain.

Kent. I have a journey, sir, shortly to go;
My master calls me,—I must not say no.Alb. The weight of this sad time we must obey;Speak what we feel, not what we ought to say.
The oldest hath borne most: we that are young
Shall never see so much, nor live so long.[Exeunt, with a dead march.]

NOTES TO KING LEAR.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

1.—It will be best, I think, to group together some of the smaller points of divergence between the Quartos and the Folios which occur in the course of this scene. The more important questions of reading are discussed in separate notes.

Line 35, Qq. have my Lords. Line 69, the Folio omits speak. Line 84, the Folios have conferr'd, the Quartos confirmed. Line 112, Qq. read mistress, the first Folio miseries, the other Folios mysteries. Line 120, to my bosom, omitted in Qq. Line 164, Dear sir, forbear, not in the Quartos. Line 167, the Quartos read doom, the Folios gift. Line 183, for sith Q. 1 has since, Q. 2 omits the thus. Line 184, for freedom, the Folio reading, the Quartos give friendship. Line 242, the Quartos read respects; probably the change to regards was made in the Folio in consequence of the recurrence of respects in line 251. Line 251, the Folio has respect and fortunes. Line 279, for duty the Quartos give duties, assigning the speech to Goneril and the next to Regan. Line 284, the Folios read with shame derides.

2. Enter KENT, GLOSTER, &c.—F. 1 spells the latter name Gloucester here, but in many places it has Gloster or Glouster. In Q. 1 the name is regularly Gloster, as in the majority of more recent editions.

3. Line 2: ALBANY.—Holinshed (Chron. i. fol. 396, ed. 1577) explains the origin of the name thus: "The third and last part of the Island he (Brutus) allotted unto Albanecte hys youngest sonne. . . . This later parcel at the first, toke the name of Albanactus, who called it Albania." This district, as the chronicler goes on to state, included all the territory north of the Humber.

4. Line 5: for EQUALITIES are so weigh'd.—That is, equal conditions. I have followed Qq; the Folio has qualities.

5. Line 6: that CURIOSITY in neither can make choice, &c.—The meaning of curiosity here is doubtful. Warburton makes it "exactest scrutiny," which, on the whole, is as probable as any sense that has been suggested. Steevens explains it as "scrupulousness or captiousness." The only other instance of the word in Shakespeare (outside the present play—see i. 2. 4, and i. 4. 75) is in Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 303, where it evidently means nicety or fastidiousness. The general sense of the passage is clear enough: the values are so nearly alike that careful scrutiny cannot discriminate between them.

6. Line 12: I cannot CONCEIVE you.—That is, understand you. The quibble in Gloucester's reply needs no explanation.

7. Line 20: some year elder.—Compare i. 2. 5, where Edmund makes it "some twelve or fourteen moonshines."

8. Line 21: came SOMETHING saucily into the world.—F. 3 and F. 4 have somewhat, which some modern editors adopt, though something in this adverbial sense is common in Shakespeare. See Abbott, A Shakespearian Grammar, p. 51, and compare, as he does, II Henry IV. i. 2. 212: "a white head and something a round belly."

9. Line 33: He hath been out nine years.—His absence for nine years abroad sufficiently explains his not knowing a man so prominent in Lear's court as Kent was; and for the same reason Kent appears not to know him.

10. Line 34: Attend the Lords of France and BURGUNDY, Gloucester.—Walker (Versification, p. 240) says that the French Bourgeois would satisfy the measure; but Shakespeare takes great liberties with proper names in his verse. See on this point Abbott's Shakespearian Grammar, p. 352.

11. Line 37: Meantime we shall express our darker purpose.—"We have already made known in some measure our desire of parting the kingdom; we will now discover what has not been told before, the reasons by which we shall regulate the partition" (Johnson).

12. Line 54: Where nature doth with merit challenge.—"That is, where the claim of nature is superadded to that of merit; or where a superior degree of natural filial affection is joined to the claim of other merits" (Steevens). Qq. have the simpler reading, where merit most doth challenge it. Challenge in the sense of "claim as due" (Schmidt) is not rare in Shakespeare. See Othello, i. 3. 188; ii. 1. 213; Romeo and Juliet, iii. 5. 216; &c. We have another instance in iv. 7. 31 of the present play.

13. Line 54: GONERIL.—Moberly (Rugby ed. of Lear) derives this name from Gwenar, the British form of Vener (Venus); and REGAN he believes to be of the same origin as Rience, a name in the Holy Grail, reian meaning in Cornish "to give bounteously."

14. Line 56:

Sir,

I love you more than words can wield the matter.

This is printed as one line in all the early edd., but modern editors have made various attempts to improve the measure. Johnson, Dyce (2nd ed.), Grant White, and Furness adopt the above form Collier's MS. Corrector strikes out Sir. Pope gave I love you sir, &c.

15. Line 62: Beyond all manner of so much I love you.—The simplest explanation is that which makes so much refer to the preceding comparisons. Johnson paraphrases thus: "Beyond all assignable quantity: I love you beyond limits and cannot say it is so much, for how much soever I should name, it would yet be more."

16. Line 63: What shall Cordelia SPEAK?—The reading of Ff. The Qq. have do, which implies that Love, and be silent is infinitive, not imperative. The majority of the editors have adopted do; but Rowe, Knight, Collier, Delius, Furness, and Rolfe have speak, which is also approved by Schmidt.

17 Line 65: with CHAMPAIGNS rich'd.—The later Ff have Champions, a spelling found also in Deuteronomy xi. 30 in the ed. of 1611. In Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 174, the Ff. have champion, and other old examples of this spelling have been pointed out; [for example, Tamburlaine, part I. ii. 2. 39, 40:

A hundred horsemen of my company
Scouting abroad upon these champion plains

—Bullen's Marlowe, i. p. 32.

And The Pilgrim, v. 1:

In all the champion country, and the villages

—Dyce's Beaumont and Fletcher, vol. vii. p. 83

Compare, too, Middleton's A Trick to Catch the Old One, iv. 4: "There's goodly parks and champion grounds for you" (Bullen's ed. vol. ii. p. 324). The same phrase occurs in A Mad World, My Masters, ii. 2 (Bullen, iii. p. 277).—A. W. V.]

18 Line 71: that SELF metal—Compare iv. 3. 36 below: "self mate and mate" Self=selfsame occurs very often in Shakespeare.

19. Line 72: And prize me at her worth.—That is, reckon my affection equal to hers. Theobald put a comma after worth, explaining thus: "And so may you prize me at her worth, as in my true heart I find that she names," &c. Mason (Comments, p. 338) wished to read "prize you at her worth."

20 Line 73: names my very deed of love.—Describes my love as indeed it is, as it really is.

21. Line 76: Which the most precious square of sense professes.—This line is probably corrupt, but no satisfactory emendation has been proposed. The Ff and Qq agree in the puzzling square of sense, but the latter have possesses for professes. Warburton thought that square of sense referred to "the four nobler senses, sight, hearing, taste, and smell." Johnson says: "Perhaps square means only compass, comprehension." Moberly makes it "the choicest estimate of sense;" and Wright (Clarendon Press ed.) "The most delicately sensitive part of my nature." But wherefore square to express any of these meanings? The critics see the general sense, which is obvious enough, and try to express it in the way that will best square with square; but no one succeeds, I think, in making the connection really natural. Rolfe says: "If Shakespeare wrote the word, it must have one of these meanings—rule, estimate, compass, or range;" but he suspects corruption. Collier's Corrector has sphere of sense; and Singer reads spacious sphere. Grant White at first (Shakes. Scholar, p. 423) favoured spacious square, but in his edition of the dramatist he falls back on the old text, which, though "very obscure," may not be corrupt, and "seems to mean the entire domain of sensation." Furness, who reads professes, ends his review of the many comments on the passage thus: "Whatever meaning or no-meaning we may attach to square of sense, it seems clear to me that Regan refers to the joys which that square professes to bestow." As Schmidt says, "to object to a word because it occurs twice within two lines, appears to be, in the interpretation of Shakespeare, a custom as ill-grounded as it is widespread, but from which, at all events, the poet himself was free" [On the other hand professes may conceivably have ousted possesses through the compositor's eye having caught the end of the last line but one —A. W. V.]

22 Line 80: More Ponderous than my tongue —The Qq. have More richer, which is preferred by the majority of editors. Grant White suggests More precious Schmidt says, "Light was the usual term applied to a wanton, frivolous, and fickle love; 'light o' love' was a proverbial expression. But the opposite of this, heavy, could not be here employed, because that means uniformly, in a moral sense, melancholy, sad; nor is weighty any better; therefore Shakespeare chose ponderous."

23 Line 85: Although the LAST, NOT LEAST.—So the first Quarto. The Folio has: "our last and least" The locus classicus, so to speak, on last, not least is a note by Malone in the Life of Shakespeare which he included in the prolegomena to the Variorum Edition, vol ii pp 276, 277. Last, not least, he says, "seems to have been a common formula in that age; and is always applied to a person very highly valued by the speaker" Malone gives numerous passages in which the phrase occurs, including the present line, and Julius Caesar, iii. 1. 189:

Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.

Grant White supports the Folio reading in sentences of exquisite verbal felicity: "A happy change (i.e. from the Quarto reading to that of the Folio) [was] made from the commonplace of 'last, not least' to an allusion to the personal traits and family position of Cordelia. The impression produced by all the passages in which she appears or is referred to is, that she was her father's little pet, while her sisters were big, bold, brazen beauties." And so on. The critic, by the way, cherished the idée fixe that the Cambridge editors plagiarized from him; this, however, in passing. Furness remarks: "if last, not least was a hackneyed phrase in Shakespeare's time, it is all the more reason why it should not be used here;" though why it is used in Julius Caesar he does not explain. It seems to me that the critics who condemn the Quarto reading on the ground that it was an Elizabethan commonplace unconsciously adduce the real argument in its favour Shakespeare has used the phrase once—in the Julius Caesar passage: prima facie, therefore, there is no reason why he should not have employed it again. Moreover, to take a proverbial saying and twist it round to mean something quite different while the sound is much the same, that surely is like misquoting a familiar line, or reversing a well-worn maxim; nothing is gained by the artifice; the effect produced is one of simple incongruity; the reader thinks for the moment that the poet has made a slip. I hold therefore that the Quarto is right.—A. W. V.

24. Line 88: The vines of France and milk of Burgundy.—Moberly observes: "In ascribing vines to France, and not to Burgundy, Shakespeare may have thought of the pastoral countries of Southern Belgium as forming part of Burgundy (as they did till the death of Charles the Bold, 1477), otherwise we should not understand the distinction; as in the French Burgundy wine-growing was of very old standing; the arms of Dijon and Beaune have a vine upon them, and a great insurrection of vine-dressers took place there in 1630—Michelet, Hist. de France, ii 308"

25. Line 87: Strive to be INTERESS'D —The Folios have interest, perhaps, as Schmidt says, a contracted form of interested (See Abbott's Shakespearean Grammar, pp. 242-245) Most editors, however, read interest'd, which may be illustrated by several passages, e.g. Ben Jonson's Sejanus, iii. 1:

the dear republic,
Our sacred laws, and just authority
Are interest'd therein,

—Gifford's Ben Jonson, vol. iii. p. 71.

and Massinger's Duke of Milan, i. 1:

The wars so long continued . . .
Have interest'd in either's cause the most Of the Italian princes

—Gifford's Massinger, vol i pp 241, 242, with note

—A. W. V.

26 Line 94: I love your MAJESTY —Walker (Versif. 174) and Abbott (Grammar, § 468) agree in making majesty a dissyllable here; but it would be better, perhaps, to say that the middle syllable is rapidly and lightly pronounced, as in enemy, general, and so many other words that are metrically equivalent to a dissyllable. Poets generally do not take this liberty except where the half-suppressed syllable is merely an unaccented vowel; but Shakespeare does it not unfrequently where the vowel, as here, is followed by a consonant in the same syllable

27 Line 96: How, how, Cordelia! —The Qq. have Goe to, goe to or go too, go too; and Capell, who follows them, inserts me after mend to fill out the measure.

28. Line 99: Return those duties back AS are right fit.—Furness explains as as the relative (see Abbott's Grammar, § 280), which seems better than Abbott's own explanation of the expression as an ellipsis (Grammar, § 384). Keightley reads "as is right fit," and Moberly thinks that are is equivalent to is (changed by "attraction"). Whatever the true explanation be, compare Julius Caesar, i. 2. 33, 34:

I have not from your eyes that gentleness
And show of love as I was wont to have.

29 Line 106: To love my father all.—Omitted in Ff.

30. Line 112: THE MYSTERIES OF HECAETE —Hecate is a dissyllable in Shakespeare except in I. Henry VI. iii. 2. 64, which, as Wright remarks, is "a significant fact as regards Shakespeare's share in that play."

31. Line 113: THE OPERATION of the orbs —The influence of the stars, on which Edmund comments at length in the next scene. The later Ff. have operations, and are followed by Capell, Jennens, Steevens, and a few other editors

32. Line 118: The barbarous Scythian.—Compare Titus Andronicus, i. 1. 131: "Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?" Wright quotes Purchas, Pilgrimage (ed. 1614, p. 396): "These customes were general to the Scythians in Europe and Asia (for which cause Scytharum facinora patrare, grew into a proverbe of immane crueltie, and their Land was iustly called Barbarous): others were more speciall and peculiar to particular Nations Scythian."

33. Line 124: Come not between the DRAGON and his wrath.—Moberly says: "A natural trope for Lear to use, as, like Arthur, he would wear a helmet,

On which for crest the golden dragon clung
For Britain!"

34. Line 125: thought to SET MY REST, &c—See Romeo and Juliet, note 186; and Henry V. note 88.

35. Line 126: Hence, and avoid my sight!—These words are probably addressed to Cordelia, as Rowe, Jennens, Malone, Wright, Furness, and Rolfe explain them, not to Kent, as Heath, Delius, and others argue. Rolfe remarks: "The only reason given for the latter view is that Cordelia does not go out, as, it is said, she would be likely to do upon such a command; but neither does Kent obey the order, and Cordelia would perhaps be no more likely to leave at the first impatient word of her father. Before she has fairly time to go, the order is given to call in France to take her if he will."

36. Line 128: who stirs?—Delius interprets this as a threat to terrify into silence any possible interference on the part of those present. Moberly says: "The courtiers seem unwilling to obey a command so reckless." Rolfe cites with approval Furness's suggestion: "May it not be that the circle of courtiers are so horror-struck at Lear's outburst of fury, and at Cordelia's sudden and impending doom, that they stand motionless and forget to move?" No better exegesis could be given.

37. Line 133: the large effects—The grand insignia or attributes that accompany royalty.

38. Line 139: execution OF THE REST.—As Rolfe says, this is "antithetical to The name, &c," and includes all powers and attributes not thus reserved." Heath conjectures execution, interest; and Jennens suggests all the rest. Pope omits the words, and Capell has and the rest.

39. Lines 146, 147:

*though the FORK invade
The region of my heart.*

Wright cites Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. Arber, p 135), where two kinds of arrow-heads are described: "The one he calleth ελαφες, describynge it thus, hauyng two poyntes or barbes, looking backwarde to the stele and the fethers, which surely we call in Englishe a brode arrowe head or a swalowe tayle. The other he calleth γλαχς, hauyng .ii. poyntes stretchyng forward, and this Englysh men do call a forkehead." See As You Like It, note 35.

40. Line 148: What wouldst thou do, old man?—"This is spoken on seeing his master put his hand to his sword" (Capell).

41. Line 151: When majesty FALLS to folly. RESERVE thy STATE.—The reading of the FF. The Qq. have: "When majesty stoops to folly. Reverse thy doome." The majority of editors follow the Qq., but Knight, Delius, Singer, Schmidt, Furness, and Rolfe are on the other side. Furness defends the FF. thus: "Kent is such a noble fellow that we who know Cordelia's truthfulness and honesty, and have heard her words spoken aside, cannot but think that he is here pleading her cause. But I am afraid we are too hasty. Kent is pleading, not for Cordelia, but for Lear himself; he has not as yet made the slightest allusion to Cordelia. When Lear denounces her, Kent, who sees that Lear is crushing the only chance of future happiness, starts forward with 'Good my liege,' but before he can utter another word Lear interrupts him, and interprets his exclamation as an intercession for Cordelia; and we fall into the same error, so that when Kent speaks again we keep up the same illusion, whereas all that he now says breathes devotion to the king, and to no one else. The folly to which majesty falls is not the casting off of a daughter,—that is no more foolish in a king than in a subject,—but it is the surrendering of revenue, of sway, and of the crown itself,—this is hideous rashness, this is power bowing to flattery. Hence, Kent entreats Lear 'to reserve his state.' And to show still more conclusively that Lear, and not Cordelia, is chiefly in his thoughts, in his very next speech he says that the motive for which he now risks his life is the safety of the king. Furthermore, when Lear has been turned out of doors and his daughters have usurped all his powers, Gloucester (iii. 4. 168, 169) says, ah, that good Kent!—

He said it would be thus, which cannot well refer to any other passage than the present. Moreover, had Kent been so devoted to Cordelia as to suffer banishment for her sake, would he not have followed her to France rather than followed as a servant his great patron whom he had thought on in his prayers? It need scarcely be added that 'Reserve thy state' means 'retain thy royal dignity and power.'

42. Line 153: answer my life my judgment, &c.—"That is, let my life be answerable for my judgment, or I will stake my life on my opinion" (Johnson).

43. Lines 160, 161:

*See better, Lear; and let me still remain
The true blank of thine eye.*

"The white or exact mark at which the arrow is shot. 'See better,' says Kent, 'and keep me always in your view'" (Johnson).

44. Line 171: That thou hast sought.—The Qq. have since, which Schmidt regards as "less in the tone of suppressed passion which characterizes the speech, and leading, grammatically, less directly than that to the main point: take thy reward."

45. Line 172: with STRAIN'D pride.—For the use of strain'd, compare II. Henry IV. i. 1. 161:

This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord.

The Qq. have strayed, which Johnson explained as "exorbitant, passing due bounds."

46. Line 175: Our potency made good, take thy reward.—To prove that our power is equal to our threat, take the due of thy deserts. Heath would read, "nor potency make good." Q. 2, followed by Pope and Warburton, has make for made.

47. Line 177: from DISEASES of the world.—A clear instance of dis-ease as opposed to ease. Compare I. Henry VI. ii. 5. 44:

And, in that ease, I'll tell thee my disease.

The FF. have disasters, which is adopted by Capell, Knight, Delius, Dyce (1st ed.), and White. For the verb disease, see Macbeth, note 252.

48. Line 190: He'll shape his old COURSE in a country new.—He will spend his old age in a new country. This appears to be the simple and obvious meaning; but some have supposed that course should be corse, and so good a critic as Wright thinks "there is evidently a play upon" these two words. [For shape his course Steevens aptly compares Peele, The Battle of Alcazar, ii. 4:

Saint George for England! and Ireland now adieu,
For here Tom Stukely shapes his course anew.

—Greene and Peele, Dyce's ed., p. 431.

—A. W. V.]

49. Line 193: We first ADDRESS TOWARDS you.—Rolfé compares Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 92, 93:

Toward that shade I might behold address
The king and his companions

50. Line 201: that LITTLE-SEEMING substance.—The hyphen is not in the early eds., and some modern critics would omit it, making seeming mean "beautiful" (Johnson), "specious" (Steevens), &c. Moberly thinks that little-seeming means "seeming so slight and shallow;" but I prefer to regard it as an allusion to Cordelia's height.

51. Line 203: may fitly LIKE your grace.—Compare ii. 2. 98 below:

His countenance likes me not.

52. Line 209: Election MAKES NOT UP on such conditions.—That is, does not make up its mind, as we say, or "comes to no decision" (Schmidt).

53. Line 217: your BEST object.—The Ff. omit best, which Collier's Corrector changes to blest. Schmidt defends the Ff., comparing cases in which object is used without an adjective; as in Venus and Adonis, 255:

The time is spent, her object will away.

54. Line 230: It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness.—So Qq; the Folios giving murther for murder, and though the reading is unsatisfactory I hardly think we are justified in adopting Collier's sweeping change—nor other foulness. Hudson suggests that Cordelia purposely uses murder "out of place, as a glance at the hyperbolic absurdity of denouncing her as 'a wretch whom Nature is ashamed to acknowledge.'" Rolfé, commenting on this, says: "By 'out of place' we presume he refers to his being used in the speech, not to its strange position between blot and foulness, which, to our thinking, settles the question beyond a doubt. We can conceive of Cordelia's using the word in the way that Hudson suggests (indeed, it seems to us the best explanation of her using it—if she did use it—that has been offered), but not of her putting it so preposterously 'out of place' in the speech. One has only to read the line, giving murder the sarcastic tone which this explanation requires, in order to see how awkwardly it comes in at that point."

55. Line 233: But even for want of that for which I'm richer.—Wright remarks: "The construction is imperfect, though the sense is clear. We should have expected 'even the want,' as Hammer reads, but Shakespeare was probably guided by what he had written in the line preceding, and mentally supplied 'I am deprived.' There is an obscurity about for which. It would naturally mean 'for having which,' but here it must signify 'for wanting which.'"

56. Line 262: this UNPRIZ'D precious maid.—Unprized may = "prizeless;" but, as Rolfé remarks, "the other sense gives us an antithesis (unprized by others, but precious to me) instead of a mere repetition of epithets."

57. Line 263: though UNKIND.—The word clearly means unnatural, as in iii. 4. 73: "his unkind daughters."

58. Line 264: Thou lovest HERE, a better WHERE to find.—"Here and where have the power of nouns: Thou lovest this residence to find a better residence in another place" (Johnson).

59. Line 271: YE jewels of our father.—All the early eds. have The jewels, which Walker (Critical Exam. iii. 276) defends, though somewhat lamely. As Halliwell remarks, Ye and The were constantly written alike in MSS. and therefore liable to be confounded by the printer.

60. Line 275: your PROFESSED BOSOMS.—For bosoms in the sense of love, compare v. 3. 49 below. There is no necessity for reading professing, as Pope does, or explaining professed as "which had made professions" (Wright).

61. Line 282: And well are worth the want that you have wanted.—"And well deserve the want that you have brought upon yourself" (Rolfé and Schmidt), want being a "cognate accusative;" or "well deserve the want of that affection in which you yourself have been wanting" (Wright). The emendations that have been proposed are numerous, but not worth recording.

62. Line 292: the observation we have made of it hath NOT been little.—The Ff. omit not, and are followed by Rowe, Knight, Delius (first ed.), and Schmidt, who explains little as "little in comparison with what we may expect in the future, to judge from Lear's treatment of Cordelia."

63. Line 300: long-engrafted condition.—Well explained by Malone as "qualities of mind confirmed by long habit."

64. Lines 308-310: if our father carry authority with such dispositions as he bears, this last surrender of his will but offend us.—If he goes on in this manner, taking back his authority the moment his will is crossed, we shall only be the worse off for his surrender of his kingdom to us.

65. Line 312: We must do something, and I' THE HEAT.—A version of the proverb, "Strike while the iron is hot." Compare II. Henry IV. ii. 4. 323-325: "My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge and turn all to a meriment, if you take not the heat."—A. W. V.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

66. Line 1: Thou, nature, art my goddess.—Warburton says: "Shakespeare makes this bastard an atheist;" but Steevens aptly replies: "Edmund speaks of nature in opposition to custom, and not to the existence of a God." Moreover, the speech ends with an invocation to the gods.

67. Line 3: Stand in the PLAGUE of custom.—Be exposed to the plague, or vexation, of custom (Capell). Warburton reads plage, "that is, the place, the country, the boundary of custom;" and Staunton favours this interpretation of plague, which he thinks may be the Latin plaga. Wright suggests that "Shakespeare had in his mind a passage in the Prayer Book Version of Psalm xxxviii. 17: 'And I truly am set in the plague;' where plague . . . evidently follows the Latin of Jerome's translation: 'Quia ego ad plagam paratus sum.'"

68. Line 4: The CURIOSITY of nations to deprive me.—Pope reads nicety; and Theobald, Warburton, Hammer, Johnson, Capell, and Jennens, courtesy or courtesy. Walker (Versification, 201) believes that curiosity was pronounced curiously. Compare Abbott's Grammar, §456.

69. Line 18: fine word, legitimate!—Omitted in the Qq.

70. Line 21: Shall TOP the legitimate.—Capell's emendation for the tooth of the Qq. and to th' or to th' of the Ff. Hammer gave toe th', as meaning "to come up to." Compare Coriolanus, ii. 1. 23: "topping all others in boasting;" and Macbeth, iv. 3. 57: "In evils to top Macbeth."

71. Line 24: subscrib'd his power!—Compare Sonnet cvii. 10-12:

My love looks fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
Since, spite of him, I'll live in this poor rhyme,
While he insults o'er dull and speechless tribes.

The Ff. have Prescrib'd, which is adopted by Rowe, Knight, and Schmidt.

72. Line 25: Confin'd to EXHIBITION!—See Two Gentlemen of Verona, note 33; and Othello, note 57.

73. Line 26: Upon the GAD!—Johnson took gad to be the gad-fly, but Ritson explained correctly that it is the iron used as a goad. In Titus Andronicus, iv. 1. 102, 103, it is the stylus used by the ancients in writing:

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words.

74. Line 47: as an ESSAY or TASTE of my virtue.—The meaning obviously is "as a trial or test of my virtue;" but there has been a difference of opinion as to the metaphor. Johnson was inclined to read "essay or test" (Collier, in his third ed. has test), as being "both metallurgical terms;" but it is quite certain, as Steevens thought, that they are "terms from royal tables," and refer to the practice of tasting the assay, or say—a regular formality at the beginning of a meal at court. Nares says: "To give the say was for the royal taster to declare the goodness of the wine or dishes." Compare Richard II. v. 5. 99-104, and see the quotation from Holinshed in note 326. See also v. 3. 143 of the present play, where we have the same figure; as also King John, note 308, and Sonnet cxiv. 12, 13. Of course essay and assay are etymologically the same word, of which say in this special sense is a contraction. For taste=test, compare Hamlet, ii. 2. 452: "a taste of your quality."

75. Line 48: This POLICY and reverence of age.—Policy is not limited by of age, but is to be taken absolutely. Schmidt defines it as "the frame of civil government in a state;" Rolfe as "the established order of things," which seems to be its meaning. The phrase may, however, be explained as a hendiadys for "the policy of holding in reverence."

76. Line 65: the casement of my CLOSET.—For this sense of closet, compare Matthew vi. 6. In iii. 3. 10 of this play the meaning is probably the same, though Schmidt gives it the more familiar modern sense, which of course fits the context as well.

77. Lines 103-105:

Edm. Nor is not, sure.

Glo. To his father, that so tenderly and entirely loves him.—Heaven and earth!

All this is wanting in the Ff. and Schmidt believes that it was an interpolation of the theatre for sensational effect. He regards it as inconsistent with the character of Gloster, who shows no paternal affection for Edgar until after he has driven him away.

78. Line 108: I would UNSTATE myself.—Compare Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 29, 30:

Yes, like enough, high-battled Caesar will Unstate his happiness.

79. Line 112: These late eclipses, &c.—For other references to the superstition of the time concerning eclipses, see Hamlet, i. 1. 120; Othello, v. 2. 99; and Sonnet cvii. 6. Moberly remarks: "As to the current belief in astrology, we may remember that, at the time when this play was written, Dr. Dee, the celebrated adept, was grieving for his lost patroness, Queen Elizabeth; that the profligate court of James I. was in 1618 frightened by the appearance of a comet into a temporary fit of gravity; and that even Charles I. sent £500 as a fee to William Lilly for consulting the stars as to his flight from Hampton Court in 1647." Rolfe notes that Milton has several allusions to the ominous nature of eclipses; as in the grand image in Paradise Lost, l. 594-599:

as when the sun new-risen
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations, and with fear of change
Perplexes monarchs.

From Sonnet xiv. we may infer that Shakespeare was not a believer in astrology, though he uses it for dramatic and poetic purposes, as writers of our own day still do. Edgar and Cassius (Julius Caesar, i. 2. 140) probably express his personal opinion on the subject.

80. Lines 113-115: though the wisdom of nature can reason it thus and thus, yet nature finds itself scourg'd by the sequent effects.—In sequent effects Gloster begs the question, confounding the post hoc and propter hoc. Aside from this, the statement is a truism; whatever we may say of the philosophy of these natural events, their consequences (or what are supposed to be their consequences) are none the less felt by us. Moberly remarks: "This curious view is repeated, with remarkable force of language, by Sir T. Browne, even in the less credulous times (Buckle, i. 336) when he wrote his Treatise on Vulgar Errors: 'That two suns or moons should appear, is not worth the wonder. But that the same should fall out at the point of some decisive action, that these two should make but one line in the book of fate, and stand together in the great Ephemerides of God, besides the philosophical assignment of the cause, it may admit a Christian apprehension in the signality' (i. 2). We learn also from Bishop Burnet that Lord Shaftesbury believed in astrology, and thought that the souls of men live in the stars."

81. Lines 118-124: This villain of mine . . . disquietly to our graves.—This passage is not in the Qq. As Delius remarks, disquietly is used causatively: disquieting us. In bias of nature we have one of Shakespeare's frequent allusions to the game of bowls. Compare Richard II. iii. 4. 5; Henry V ii. 2. 188; Taming of the Shrew, iv. 5. 25; Hamlet, ii. 1. 65; Coriolanus, iii. 1. 60, &c.

82. Line 132: villains BY necessity.—The Folio has on. Schmidt asserts that "Shakespeare has an unmistakable preference for on or upon to express that which gives the motive or impulse to anything;" but Rolfe shows by many quotations that the examples Schmidt gives "can be readily balanced by others in which other prepositions are used."

83. Line 133: and TREACHERS.—The Qq. have treacherers. Mr. Aldis Wright compares The Captain, v. 4:

Where art thou treacher?

—Beaumont and Fletcher, Dyce's ed. vol. iii. p. 318.

and The Bloody Brother, iii. 1:

Play not two parts,

Treacher and coward both. —Ibid. vol. x. p. 414.

Treachour, I may note, is quite common in Spenser; cf. the following lines:

No knight, but treachour full of false despight;

—Faerie Queene, bk. i. c. iv. st. xli. l. 4.

Where may that treachour then . . . be found?

—Bk. ii. c. i. st. xxi. l. 6

The whiles to me the treachour did remove

His craftie engin. —Bk. ii. c. iv. st. xxvii. l. 3.

Spenser also employs the form treachetour; see Globe edition of his works, pp. 31, 81, 99, 136.—A. W. V.]

84. Line 134: spherical PREDOMINANCE.—The word (so the adjective predominant, for which see All's Well, i. 1. 211), like disasters and influence, was an astrological technicality; see Trolius and Cressida, note 140. For influence, compare Job xxxviii. 31.

85. Line 146: like the catastrophe of the old comedy.—"That is, just as the circumstance which decides the catastrophe of a play intervenes on the very nick of time, when the action is wound up to its crisis, and the audience are impatiently expecting it" (Heath). Scholars, of course, will recollect Horace's deus ex machina (Ars Poetica, 191, 192).

86. Line 149: fa, sol, la, mi—Specialists are apt to read into Shakespeare a world of matter, derived from their pet science or profession. Dr. Burney (quoted by Wright in the Clarendon Press ed.) says: "Shakespeare shows by the context that he was well acquainted with the property of these syllables in solmization, which imply a series of sounds so unnatural that ancient musicians prohibited their use. The monkish writers on music say: mi contra fa est diabolus: the interval fa mi, including a tritonus, or sharp 4th, consisting of three tones without the intervention of a semitone, expressed in the modern scale by the letters F G A B, would form a musical phrase extremely disagreeable to the ear. Edmund, speaking of eclipses as portents and prodigies, compares the dislocation of events, the times being out of joint, to the unnatural and offensive sounds, fa, sol, la, mi." Wright adds: "For this note, Mr. Chappell assures me, there is not the slightest foundation. Edmund is merely singing to himself in order not to seem to observe Edgar's approach." And to this Furness adds: "Just as Mistress Quickly sings 'And down, down, down-a' in the Merry Wives (i. 4. 44) when Doctor Caius is approaching." [I expect sol, fa, &c. were used in any combination; compare Campaspe, iv. 3: "But what doth Alexander in the meane season; but use for tantara—sol, fa, la—for his hard couch, downe beds?" (Fairholt's Lilly, vol. i. p. 134). —A. W. V.]

87. Lines 157-166: as of unnaturalness. . . . Come, come—All this is wanting in the Ff. As evidence that the passage is spurious, Schmidt notes that it contains no less than six words not used elsewhere by Shakespeare: unnaturalness, menace (noun), malediction, dissipation, cohort, and astronomical. Rolfe says: "He might have added that sectary occurs only in Henry VIII. v. 3. 70, a part of the play probably not written by Shakespeare."

88. Line 173: with the mischief of your person—That is, mischief to your person. Hamner and Capell unnecessarily change with to without, and Johnson suggested but with.

89. Lines 181-187: That's my fear. . . . Arm'd, brother!—The Qq. add brother to That's my fear, but omit the rest of this, and also the Brother at the beginning of the next speech.

90. Line 182: a continent forbearance.—"A forbearing restraint upon yourself" (Clarke).

ACT I. SCENE 3.

91. Line 14: If he DISTASTE it.—The Qq. have distike, which is adopted by Capell, Steevens, the Globe editors, and Moberly. Rolfe compares Trolius and Cressida, ii. 2. 66:

Although my will distaste what it elected

92. Lines 16-20: Not to be over-rul'd . . . they're seen abus'd.—These lines are omitted in the Ff., and are printed as prose in the Qq. As Schmidt remarks, the fact that they can be arranged metrically is evidence of their authenticity.

93. Line 20: With checks as flatteries, when they're seen abus'd.—The line may be corrupt, but no emendation that has been proposed is, on the whole, satisfactory. Schmidt's "With checks when flatteries are seen abus'd" is the most plausible. If the line is what Shakespeare wrote, we must accept Tyrwhit's interpretation: "With checks, as well as flatteries, when they (that is, flatteries) are seen to be abused."

94. Lines 24, 25:

*I would breed from hence occasions, and I shall,
That I may speak.*

This is not in the Ff.; but, although the verse is not very smooth, it fills out the regular lines, and is probably from Shakespeare's pen. Moberly thinks "the vixenish tone of Goneril" affects the measure of line 23 at least,

ACT I. SCENE 4.

95. Line 2: That can my speech DEFUSE—That is, disorder it, and so disguise it, as he had disguised his dress. Here (as in Henry V. v. 2. 61 and Richard III. i. 2. 78) the Folio has defuse, and there can be no possible reason for changing to diffuse. For defuse see Henry V. note 270, and Richard III. note 81. In the latter the present passage will be found with the wrong reading—diffuse. Rowe—and he was followed by Pope and Johnson—read disuse.

96. Line 13: to eat no fish.—That is, to be a Protestant. Warburton remarks that to eat fish on account of religious scruples was in Queen Elizabeth's time the mark of a Papist and an enemy to the government. He quotes Marston, Dutch Courtezan, i. 2: "I trust I am none of the wicked that eat fish a Fridays;" and Fletcher, Woman-Hater, iv. 2: "He should not have eaten under my roof for twenty pounds; and surely I did not like him when he called for fish" (Dyce's Beaumont and Fletcher, vol. i. p. 74). Capell thinks the meaning is simply that Kent is a jolly fellow and no lover of such meagre diet as fish.

97. Line 48: Enter OSWALD.—Furness quotes Davies (Dramatic Miscellany, ii. 176): "He generally enters the stage in a careless, disengaged manner, humming a tune, as if on purpose to give umbrage to the king by his neglect of him."

98. Line 50: Call the CLOTPOLL back.—We find clotpoll in its original sense of head in Cymbeline, iv. 2. 184:

I have sent Cloten's clotpoll down the stream.

99. Line 75: mine own jealous CURIOSITY—"A punctilious jealousy, resulting from a scrupulous watchfulness of his own dignity" (Steevens). Compare note 5 above.

100. Line 80: the fool hath much pined away.—Clarke remarks that this speech "serves to excite a tender interest in the fool before he enters," and "to depict Cordelia's power of attaching and endearing those around her."

101. Line 92: Do you BANDY looks with me?—"A metaphor from tennis," as Steevens notes. Compare Romeo and Juliet, ii. 5. 14, where it is carried out in detail, and Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 29.

102. Line 104: Enter FOOL.—Mr. C. A. Brown (Shakespeare's Autobiographical Poems, 1838, p. 292) remarks: "'Now, our joy, though last, not least,' my dearest of all Fools, Lear's Fool! Ah, what a noble heart, a gentle and a loving one, lies beneath that parti-coloured jerkin! . . . Look at him! It may be your eyes see him not as mine do, but he appears to me of a light delicate frame, every feature expressive of sensibility even to pain, with eyes lustrously intelligent, a mouth blandly beautiful, and withal a hectic flush upon his cheek. Oh that I were a painter! Oh that I could describe him as I knew him in my boyhood, when the Fool made me shed tears, while Lear did but terrify me! . . . When the Fool enters, throwing his coxcomb at Kent, and instantly follows it up with allusions to the miserable rashness of Lear, we ought to understand him from that moment to the last. Throughout this scene his wit, however varied, still aims at the same point, and in spite of threats, and regardless how his words may be construed by Goneril's creatures, with the eagerness of a filial love he prompts the old king to 'resume the shape which he had cast off.' 'This is not altogether fool, my lord.' But, alas! it is too late; and when driven from the scene by Goneril, he turns upon her with an indignation that knows no fear of the 'halter for himself:

A fox when one has caught her,
And such a daughter,
Should sure to the slaughter,
If my cap would buy a halter

That such a character should be distorted by players, printers, and commentators! Observe every word he speaks; his meaning, one would imagine, could not be misinterpreted; and when at length, finding his covert reproaches can avail nothing, he changes his discourse to simple mirth, in order to distract the sorrows of his master. When Lear is in the storm, who is with him? None—not even Kent—"None but the Fool; who labours to outjest his heart-struck injuries." The tremendous agony of Lear's mind would be too painful, and even deficient in pathos, without this poor faithful servant at his side. It is he that touches our hearts with pity, while Lear fills the imagination to aching." Furness, after quoting this and Charles Cowden-Clarke's comments on the Fool, in which he describes him as "a youth, not a grown man," says: "After these long and good notes by my betters I wish merely to record humbly but firmly my conviction that the Fool, one of Shakespeare's most wonderful characters, is not a boy, but a man—one of the shrewdest, tenderest of men, whom long life had made shrewd, and whom afflictions had made tender; his wisdom is too deep for any boy, and could be found only in a man, removed by not more than a score of years from the king's own age; he had been Lear's companion from the days of Lear's early manhood." Grant White and Rolfe also believe the Fool to be a man rather than a boy.

103. Line 109: take my COXCOMB.—Minshew (Guide, 1617, s.v. cockes-combe) says: "Englishmen use to call valine and proud braggars and men of meane discretion Coxcombes. Because naturall Idiots and Fooles have, and still doe accustometh themselves to weare in their Cappes, cock's feathers, or a hat with a necke and head of a cocke on the top and a bell thereon, &c., and thinke themselves finely fitted and proudly attired therewith, so we compare a presumptuous bragging fellow, and wanting all true Iudgement and discretion, to such an Idiote foole, and call him also Coxecombe."

104. Line 110: Why, fool?—The Qq. read thus, giving the speech to Kent. F. 1 and F. 2 read Why my Boy? and assign it to Lear. White says: "Lear had taken no one's part that's out of favour, but Kent had."

105. Line 117: How now, NUNCLE!—"A familiar contraction of mine uncle . . . the customary appellation of the licensed fool to his superiors" (Nares). Compare Ned (mine Ed), Nell (mine Ellen), and similar nicknames. Yedward (L. Henry IV. i. 2. 149) is of course for my Edward.

106. Line 123: Take heed, sirrah,—the whip.—Whipping was often the punishment of fools when they happened to offend their masters. See As You Like It, i. 2. 91: "you'll be whipp'd for taxation [satire] one of these days." Compare also line 197 of this scene: "An you lie, sirrah, we'll have you whipp'd;" and the Fool's reply.

107. Line 125: Lady, the brach.—Compare I. Henry IV. iii. 1. 240, 241: "I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Irish." Lady seems to have been a common name (or epithet, perhaps) of female hounds.

108. Line 135: Learn more than thou TROWEST.—Warburton and others explain trowest as "believe, think, or conceive;" but Capell is right in making it here equivalent to know. In line 234 of this scene the Qq. have trow instead of the know of the Ff. Rolfe compares As You Like It, iii. 2. 189: Trow you who hath done this?" and Taming of the Shrew, i. 2. 164, 165:

Trow you

Whither I am going?

109. Line 136: Set less than thou throwest.—Stake less than thou throwest for; or, perhaps, as Schmidt makes it, "than thou hast won by thy last throw."

110. Lines 154-169: That lord that counsell'd thee . . . they'll be snatching.—All this is omitted in the Ff.—"perhaps for political reasons, as the lines seemed to censure the monopolies" (Johnson). [As a rule it is not very wise to attempt to read political and contemporary allusions into the text of Shakespeare; Warburton's rhapsody on Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1. 150-154, is a lasting warning against such proceedings. I expect, however, that Johnson is right here in his suggestion. The monopolies had long been a burning question: their history was as follows; I give the admirable summary in Feilden's Short Constitutional History, pp. 186, 187: "Monopolies . . . arose from the prerogative of the crown to regulate all matters of trade. Privileges, and exclusive rights of trade, were granted to merchants as early as the reign of William I. in return for money. The system was much abused under Elizabeth, who granted her favourites monopolies for dealing exclusively in different articles. . . . In 1571 a question was asked in Parliament about the abuse, but the proposer was summoned before the council, and the subject dropped until 1597, when an address on the subject was presented to the Queen, who promised to recall the illegal monopolies. The abuse, however, continued; and in 1601, a bill against them was introduced by Lawrence Hyde, and so strongly supported that the Queen had to yield. Monopolies however, continued, and were freely sold by James I.; in 1621, Sir Giles Mompesson was impeached for abusing his monopoly of gold and silver thread by manufacturing it of a baser metal. In 1624, monopolies were abolished by Parliament." Note that the first Folio appeared in what must have been the most critical year in the long struggle, viz 1623. Many people, I imagine, who heard the lines which the Folio omits could have thought of this standing grievance; and to not a few "lords and great men" would have suggested this same Sir Giles Mompesson above alluded to. Critics are agreed that he was the prototype of Massinger's Sir Giles Overreach in A New Way to Pay Old Debts; and in The Bondman, ii. 3, there is a pretty clear reference to him (see Cunningham's Massinger, p. 172). This famous monopolist long continued to be regarded as the type of evil and avarice in high places; compare two curious references in the works of Thomas Randolph: Aristippus, p. 16, in Hazlitt's ed.; and Hey for Honesty, p. 456.—A. W. V.]

111. Line 157: Do thou for him stand.—The defective measure has been eked out by various emendations: Or do (Hammer), And do (White), Do thou there (Cambridge editors), &c.

112. Line 168: and LADIES too.—The reading of Q 1, for which Q 2 has and lodes too, which Collier adopted and defended in his 1st and 2nd eds. Dyce in his 1st ed. followed Collier, and then ridiculed him for the reading.

113. Line 179: If I speak like myself in this, let him be whipp'd that first finds it so.—Eccles (in his ed. of 1792) paraphrases the passage thus: "If I speak on this occasion like myself—that is, like a fool, foolishly—let not me be whipped, but him who first finds it to be as I have said—that is, the king himself, who was likely to be soonest sensible of the truth and justness of the sarcasm, and who, he insinuates, deserved whipping for the silly part he had acted."

114. Line 181: Fools had ne'er less grace in a year.—"There never was a time when fools were less in favour; and the reason is that they were never so little wanted, for wise men now supply their place" (Johnson). For grace the Qq. have wit, which is preferred by Wright and Moberly.

115. Line 182: For wise men are grown foppish.—For the rhyme with apish, compare that of Tom and am in ii. 3. 20, 21. See also Ellis, English Pronunciation, iii. 963, where similar rhymes are cited and commented upon.

116. Lines 191-194: Then they for sudden joy did weep, &c.—Steevens compares Heywood, Rape of Lucrece, 1608:

When Tanquin first in court began,
And was approved king,
Some men for sudden joy gan weep,
But I for sorrow sing.

—Heywood's Select Plays, Mermaid ed. p. 346.

117. Line 206: Enter GONERIL.—Coleridge (Shakspeare Lectures, Bohn's ed. 1884, p. 338) remarks: "The monster Goneril prepares what is necessary, while the character of Albany renders a still more maddening grievance possible—namely, Regan and Cornwall in perfect sympathy of monstrosity. Not a sentiment, not an image, which can give pleasure on its own account is admitted. Whenever these creatures are introduced, and they are brought forward as little as possible, pure horror reigns throughout. In this scene, and in all the early speeches of Lear, the one general sentiment of filial ingratitude prevails as the mainspring of the feelings;—in this early stage the outward object causing the pressure on the mind, which is not yet sufficiently familiarized with the anguish for the imagination to work upon it."

118. Line 207: what makes that frownlet on?—What causes that frown like a frownlet on your brow? A frownlet was a band of cloth worn at night on the forehead to keep it smooth (Malone). Steevens quotes The Four P's, where the Pardoner has asked why women are so long dressing in the morning, and the pedler replies, with a play on the word let=hindrance:

Forsooth, women have many lettes,
And they be masked in many nettes:
As frontettes, fyllettes, partiettes, and bracelettes;
And then theyr bonettes, and theyr poynettes.
By these lettes and nettes, the lette is suche,
That spede is small, when haste is muche,

—Dodsley, vol. i. p. 350, Hazlitt's ed.

and Zepheria, 1594 (canzon 27):

But now my sunne it fits thou take thy set,
And vayne thy face with frownes as with a frontlet.

—Arber's English Garner, vol. v p. 79.

Malone adds from Lilly's Euphuus (ed. Arber, p. 285):
"she was solitarily walking, with hir frowning cloth, as sick lately of the solens" (that is, sullens); and Clarke cites Chapman, Hero and Leander:

E'en like the forehead cloth that in the night,
Or when they sorrow, ladies us'd to wear.

—Bullen's Marlowe, i. p. 102.

[See, too, I Henry IV. note 67, and add the following example from Lilly's Mydas, i. 2: "The purtenances (i.e. of a lady's head)! it is impossible to reckon them up, much lesse to tell the nature of them. Hoods, frontlets, tises, caules, &c."—Fairholt's Lilly, vol. ii. p. 13.—A. W. V.]

119 Line 211: now thou art an O without a figure.—Shakespeare uses the O either for zero or for anything round. Thus we find it applied to small-pox marks (Love's Labour's Lost, v. 2. 45), to the stars (Mid. Night's Dream, iii. 2. 188), to the Globe Theatre (Henry V. prol. 13), and to the earth (Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2. 81). The present is the only reference to its arithmetical use.

120. Line 219: SHEALED peasood.—Shealed is the old spelling of shelled, which is substituted by Capell, Grant White, and some other editors.

121. Line 221: But other of your insolent retinue.—Retinue is probably to be accented on the second syllable, though we could give it the usual accent by a slightly different scansion. It is the only instance of the word in verse in Shakespeare. Milton makes it retinue in the only two instances in which he uses it (Paradise Lost, v. 355, and Paradise Regained, ii. 419). Tennyson gives it the same accent; as in Guinevere:

Of his and her retinue moving they;

Aylmer's Field:

The dark retinue reverencing death;

and The Princess, iii 179:

Went forth in long retinue following up.

122. Lines 228-233: which if you should, the fault, &c.—Moberly remarks: "The rest of the sentence labours under a plethora of relatives. The meaning, however, is simple: "If you instigate your men to riot I will check it, even though it offends you; as that offence, which would otherwise be a shame, would be proved by the necessity to be a discreet proceeding."

123. Line 236: That it's had it head bit off by it young.—For it's the Qq. have it. Most editors change the possessive it to its, but this is to take an unwarrantable liberty with Shakespeare's English. There are sixteen examples of this it in F. 1, and there is another in Q. 1 and Q. 2 of Lear in iv. 2. 32:

That nature which contains it origin.

In the only instance in which its is now found in the Authorized Version of the Bible (Leviticus xxv 5) the edition of 1611 has "it owne accord." In six of the examples in F 1 (as Rolfe notes) the form occurs in this combination of it own.

124. Line 237: So, out went the candle, and we were left darkling.—Knight remarks that Shakespeare found the almost identical image applied to the story of Lear as told by Spenser, Faerie Queene, ii 10. 30:

But true it is that, when the oyle is spent,
The light goes out, and weeke [wick] is throwne away:
So when he had resign'd his regiment,
His daughter gan despise his drouping day,
And wearne wax of his continual stay.

—Globe ed. p. 134.

Perhaps, as Farmer suggested, the Fool's remark is a snatch of some well-known ballad. For darkling, see Midsummer Night's Dream, note 140.

125. Line 245: Whoop, JUG! I love thee.—Probably a quotation from some old song. As to jug; Skeat says, "Jug and Judge were usual as pet female names, equivalent to Jenny or Joan. . . . But they can hardly represent Joanna; I suppose they stand for Judith, once a common name." Whatever its derivation, the meaning of jug is quite clear; it signifies a mistress; and sometimes, less offensively, a friend. Compare the following instances from Dodsley's Old Plays:—

King Cambyases, by Thomas Preston:

dost thou think I am a sixpenny jug!

—Hazlitt's Dodsley, iv. p. 183.

A Merry Knack to Know a Knave (1594):

"There^r comes a soldier counterfeit and with him was his jug;"

—Ibid. vol. vi. p. 511.

Grim the Collier of Croydon:

the collier chooseth well;

For beauty jug doth bear away the bell.

—Ibid. vol. viii p. 409.

and William Rowley's A Woman Never Vexed, i. 1:

Bring him away, jug.

—Ibid. vol. xii. p. 115.

In the two last quotations the word obviously bears its more complimentary sense.—A. W. V.

126. Line 248: his NOTION WEAKENS.—The Qq. have notion, weaknes. In the only other instances of notion in Shakespeare (Coriolanus, v. 6. 107; and Macbeth, iii. 1. 88) it means mind, as here.

127. Line 249: Ha! waking? 't is not so.—The Qq. read "Sleeping or waking; ha! sure 'tis not so;" and they print the whole speech as prose.

128. Lines 252-255: I would learn that . . . an obedient father.—These two speeches are not in the Ff.

129. Line 261: you should be wise.—The reading of Q. 2. The other early editions omit you; and Steevens would strike out you should.

130. Line 283: so debosh'd.—This old spelling of debauched is the one regularly used in the Ff. in the four instances in which Shakespeare employs the word. Here the Qq. have deboyst.

131. Lines 265, 266:

EPICURISM and LUST

Make it more like a TAVERN or a BROTHEL.

"An instance of what Corson calls a respective construction. The first word refers to the third, and the second to the fourth" (Furness).

132. Line 270: A LITTLE to disquantity your train.—Pope reads of fifty, &c., on the ground that Lear shortly afterwards specifies this as the number to be cut off, and yet Goneril had not stated it; but, as Furness suggests, this was probably a simple oversight on Shakespeare's part.

133. Line 283: Than the SEA-MONSTER!—The comparison is probably a general one; but there has been much dispute whether the hippopotamus or the whale is meant. One critic has suggested that the reference may be to the sea-monster mentioned in The Merchant of Venice, iii. 2. 57.

134. Line 284: Detested KITE!—Kite was a conventional term of abuse; cf. Henry V. ii. 1. 80, 81:

Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,
Doll Tearsheet

135. Line 290: like an ENGINE—Alluding to the rack. Wright notes that Chaucer has engined for racked in the Nonne Prestes Tale, 15066.

136. Line 296: Of what hath mov'd you.—Not found in the Qq.

137. Line 305: a THWART DISNATUR'D torment.—The word is not used elsewhere as an adjective by Shakespeare; but Milton has it twice as such. See Paradise Lost, viii. 132; and x. 1075. Disnatur'd is used by Daniel in Hymen's Triumph (ii. 4 p. 291, ed. 1623): "I am not so disnatur'd a man." [Compare also Field's A Woman is A Weathercock, ii. 1:

This sour thwart beginning may portend good.

—Nero and other Plays in Mermaid ed. p. 370.

—A. W. V.]

138. Line 307: With CADENT tears.—So the Folio. The Quartos have accident or accident.

139. Line 308: her mother's pains and benefits.—Her maternal pains and loving attentions to her child.

140. Lines 310, 311:

*How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!*

Malone cites Psalm cxl. 3: "They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent: adders' poison is under their lips." Moberly observes: "We should have to go to the book of Deuteronomy to find a parallel for the concentrated force of this curse. Can it be Lear who so sternly and simply stabs to the very inward heart of woman's blessedness, leaving his wicked daughter blasted and scathed for ever by his withering words?"

141. Lines 326, 327:

Ha! is it come to this?

Let it be so:—I have another daughter.

The Ff. omit is it come to this? and the Qq. omit Let it be so, reading also yet have I left a daughter.

142. Line 332: thou shalt, I warrant thee.—Omitted in the Ff.

143. Lines 343, 344:

If my cap would buy a HALTER:

So the fool follows AFTER.

Ellis (p. 983) says that these rhymes with daughter are remarkable. Daughter and after (apparently pronounced arter) are also rhymed in Taming of the Shrew, i. 1. 244, 245, and Winter's Tale, iv. 1. 27, 28. In the former instance, as here, the rhyme may be meant to be ridiculous.

144. Lines 356, 357:

HOW NOW, OSWALD!

WHAT, have you writ that letter?

The Qq. have:

Gon. What Oswald, ho.

Oswald. Heere madam.

Gon. What, &c.

145. Line 360: my PARTICULAR fear.—Capell refers this, and rightly in all probability, to "the business threatened by Lear." Delius makes it mean "the particulars of my fear." Schmidt defines particular as "personal, individual," comparing v. 1. 30 of this play.

146. Line 362: As may COMPACT it more.—"Unite one circumstance with another so as to make a consistent account" (Johnson). More may be a dissyllable here.

147. Line 364: This milky gentleness and course of yours.—"This milky gentleness of your course" (Schmidt); or, quite as naturally, this milky gentleness and this consequent behaviour of yours.

148. Line 369: Striving to better, oft we mar what's well.—Malone quotes Sonnet ciii. 9, 10:

Were it not sinful then, striving to mend,

To mar the subject that before was well!

ACT I. SCENE 5.

149. Line 1: Go you before to GLOSTER.—Capell refers the name to the city of Gloucester, as there in line 5 suggests. Tyrwhitt remarks: "Shakespeare chose to make Gloucester the residence of the Duke of Cornwall and Regan, in order to give a probability to their setting out late from thence on a visit to the Earl of Gloster, whose castle our poet conceived to be in the neighbourhood of that city."

150. Line 8: If a man's BRAINS were in's heels, were't not, &c.—Pope changed brains to brain on account of the singular pronoun. Rolfe remarks: "Shakespeare makes brains plural, except in All's Well, iii. 2. 16: 'the brains of my Cupid's knocked out,' where the intervening singular may perhaps account for the irregularity. As brain and brains were used indiscriminately (except, as Schmidt notes, in such phrases as 'to beat out the brains'), it is not strange that the pronoun referring to the words should be used somewhat loosely, at least in vulgar parlance."

151. Line 11: thy wit shall ne'er go slipshod.—"For you show you have no wit in undertaking your present journey" (Singer).

152. Line 25: I did her wrong.—John Weiss (Wit, Humor, and Shakespeare, p. 281) remarks: "The beautiful soul of Cordelia, that is little talked of by herself, and is but stingly set forth by circumstance, engrosses our feeling in scenes from whose threshold her filial piety is banished. We know what Lear is so pathetically remembering; the sisters tell us in their cruellest moments; it mingles with the midnight storm a sigh of the daughterhood that was repulsed. In the pining of the Fool we detect it. Through every wail or gust of this awful symphony of madness, ingratitude, and irony, we feel a woman's breath."

153. Line 38: the seven stars.—The Pleiades. "Furness thinks that the reference may be to the seven stars of the Great Bear; but that group was commonly known as 'Charles' Wain.' Cf. I Henry IV. ii. 1. 2: 'Charles' wain is over the new chimney.' The Pleiades have been familiar as household words from the earliest times, and 'the seven stars' has always been the popular English name for them" (Rolfe).

154. Line 43: To tak't again perforce!—"He is meditating on his resumption of royalty" (Johnson). Steevens says (but wrongly, I think): "Rather he is meditating on his daughter's having in so violent a manner deprived him of those privileges which before she had agreed to grant him."

155. Line 50: O, let me not be mad!—Dr. Bucknill remarks (p. 133): "This self-consciousness of gathering madness is common in various forms of the disease. . . A most remarkable instance of this was presented in the case of a patient, whose passionate, but generous, temper became morbidly exaggerated after a blow upon the head. His constantly expressed fear was that of impending madness; and when the calamity he so much dreaded had actually arrived, and he raved incessantly and incoherently, one frequently heard the very words of Lear proceeding from his lips: 'Oh, let me not be mad!'"

156. Lines 55, 56:

*She that's a maid now, and laughs at my departure,
Shall not be a maid long, unless things be cut shorter.*

These gross lines have been justly suspected of being an interpolation of some actor who "spoke more than was set down for him." As more than one critic has noted, they are palpably dragged in; and it is not Shakespeare's way to introduce anything of the sort unless it is naturally linked to the context.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

157.—Line 9. For ear-kissing the Quartos have ear-bussing. Lines 11–13, omitted in two Quartos. Line 20, the line is made nonsense of in Qq., which read, Which must aske brevifness and future helps. Line 47, revenging appears in the form revengive in the Quartos; in the next line the Folio has all the thunder. Line 78, for spurs the Folios have spirits. Line 80, I never got him, omitted in the Folios. Line 91, How dost, my lord? so the First Folio; the others have how does my lord? Line 129, the Quartos give the singular businessse, which might quite well scan as a trisyllable.

158. Line 28: Upon his party.—On his side. Delius (quoted by Furness) says: "In order to confuse his brother and urge him to flight, Edmund asks him first whether he has not spoken against Cornwall, and then, reversing the question, whether he has not said something on the side of Cornwall against Albany."

159. Lines 36, 37:

I've seen drunkards

Do more than this in sport.

Steevens quotes Marston, Dutch Courtesan (iv. 1): "Nay, looke you; for my owne part, if I have not as religiously vovd my hart to you,—been drunk to your healthe, swalowd flap-dragons, eate glasses, drunke urine, stabd arms, and don all the offices of protested gallantrie for your sake" (Halliwell's ed. ii. p. 163). Halliwell cites Cooke, Greene's Tu Quoque: "I will fight with him that dares say you are not fair: stab him that will not pledge your health, and with a dagger pierce a vein, to drink a full health to you"

160. Line 44: Fled this way, sir.—"A wrong way should be pointed to" (Capell). Many editors put a period after sir, but all the early editors have the comma.

161. Line 52: in fell MOTION.—"An attack in fencing, opposed to guard or parrying" (Schmidt). Compare Hamlet, iv. 7. 101–103 (see also 158):

the scrumers of their nation,

He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them.

Furness quotes Vincentio Saviolo, His practice, 1595 (see As You Like It, note 180): "hold your dagger firm, marking (as it were) with one eye the motion of your aduersarie" (sig. , p. 1, line 4).

162. Line 54: LANC'D mine arm.—The Qq have lancht or lancht, and the Ff. lanch'd. Lance and lanch are often used indiscriminately. Wright quotes Hollyband (French Dict. 1593): "Poindre, to prick, to stick, to lanch."

163. Line 55: But WHEN he saw my best alarum'd spirits.—The Ff. have And when, &c. Staunton conjectures But wher (whether), which Furness adopts; but Rolfe suggests that there may be a change of construction in Or whether (see Abbott's Grammar, §415), or an ellipsis: "Or whether (it was that he was) gasted," &c.

164. Line 57: Or whether GASTED by the noise I made.—For gasted, see Othello, note 241.

165. Line 61: My worthy ARCH and patron.—Steevens quotes Heywood, "If you Know not Me," &c. (p. 48, ed. Shak. Soc.): "Poole, that arch, for truth and honesty." Wright refers to the present use of the word by Odd-fellows and Masons.

166. Line 67: And found him FIGHT to do it.—"Fixed, settled." Compare Troilus and Cressida, v. 10. 23, 24:

You vile abominable tents,

Thus proudly fight upon our Phrygian plains.

Straight-fight (=erect) occurs in Cymbeline, v. 5. 164. Wright, Moberly, and others say that fight is the participle of pitch. It is clearly a participle, but probably from the verb fight (related to pitch), of which Nares cites an example from Warner, Albions England: 'his tent did Asser fight.' The same form was used for the past tense; as in a poem of the time of Elizabeth (we quote it from memory):

He who earth's foundations fight,
Fight at first, and still sustains.

Cf. also Spenser, Faerie Queene, i. 2. 42:

Then brought she me into this desert waste,
And by my wretched lovers side me fight" (Rolfé).

167 Line 70: would the REPOSAL.—The Qq. have could the reposeure. Reposal is analogous to disposal, as reposeure to exposure. Wright says here. "The words virtue, or worth are in loose construction with the rest of the sentence; 'the reposeure of any trust, (or the belief in any) virtue or worth, in thee.'"

168. Line 78: very PREGNANT and potential spurs.—"Ready." Wright says that it is used in this sense 'without any reference to its literal meaning;' and Furness appears to think that this is not a natural figurative use of the word. He considers that Nares came nearer the truth in saying that the ruling sense of the word is that of 'being full or productive of something. We think that 'ready,' or about to appear (in action, as truth, &c., according to the connection) likewise expresses the metaphorical sense of the word; and this will explain some instances of it in Shakespeare which, as Furness admits, do not come clearly under Nares's definition. See, for example, Winter's Tale, v. 2. 34. . . . Certain other instances, we admit, are better explained by the other interpretation; while some, like the present, may, in our opinion, be explained equally well by either" (Rolfé).

169. Line 79: STRONG and fasten'd villain!—The reading of the Qq., and to be preferred to the strange of the Ff. For the bad sense of the word Wright compares Richard II. v. 3. 59:

O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!

and Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 45: "strong thief." Rolfé remarks that here the word seems in perfect keeping with the fasten'd (confirmed, hardened) which follows.

170. Lines 83, 84:

his picture
I will send far and near, &c.

Lord Campbell remarks: "One would suppose that photography, by which this mode of catching criminals is now practised, had been invented in the time of Lear" Furness adds that photography has merely been called to our aid in continuing a practice common in the time of Shakespeare; and he cites the old play of Nobody and Somebody, 1606 (privately reprinted by Alexander Smith, Glasgow, 1877):

Let him be straight imprinted to the life:
His picture shall be set on euery stall,
And proclamation made, that he that takes him,
Shall haue a hundred pounds of Somebody.

171. Line 87: To make thee CAPABLE.—Lord Campbell says: "In forensic discussions respecting legitimacy, the question is put, whether the individual whose status is to be determined is 'capable,' i.e. capable of inheriting; but it is only a lawyer who would express the idea of legitimizing a natural son by simply saying,

I'll work the means
To make him capable."

172. Line 99: he was of that CONSORT.—Omitted in the Qq. For consort in the sense of company, compare Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. 1. 64: "wilt thou be of our consort!" With this meaning the word is accented on the last syllable; when it means a company of musicians (as in the same play, iii. 2. 84, Folio), on the first.

173. Line 102: th' expence and waste of his.—The reading of F. 1. Q. 1 has the wast and spoylle of his; Q. 2, these—and waste of this his. Furness suggests that the dash indicates the haste and carelessness with which the Quarto was printed. It was inserted either by the stenographer because he misheard the word and afterwards failed to supply it, or by the compositor because he could not make out the copy.

174. Line 121: THREADING dark-ey'd night.—The Qq. have threatning, and Theobald wished to read treading; but compare Coriolanus, iii. 1. 124: "They would not thread the gates." Wright refers, for the figure, to King John, v. 4. 11.

175. Line 126: from our home.—Away from our home. Compare Macbeth, iii. 4. 35, 36:

to feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

176 Line 1: Good DAWNING to thee.—The Qq. have even (even), and Pope and Theobald evening. The other references to time in the scene indicate that it was before daybreak, with the moon still shining, as Malone rightly explains. The use of dawning may suggest that it is very early, when the dawn is just appearing.

177 Line 9. in LIPSBURY pinfold.—No other reference to Lipsbury has been discovered, and the word has been changed to Ledbury, Finsbury, &c. Nares suggests that it is a coined name, possibly referring to the "teeth, as being the pinfold within the lips." Wright favours this interpretation, adding that "similar names of places which may or may not have any local existence occur in proverbial phrases, such for instance as 'Needham's Shore,' 'Weeping Cross.'" For pinfold, compare Two Gentlemen of Verona, i. 1. 114: "You mistake; I mean the pound,—a pinfold." Rolfé cites Milton, Comus, 7:

Confin'd and pester'd in this pinfold here.

178. Line 16: three-suited.—Delius thinks this is equivalent to foppish, and cites iii. 4. 141 below: "who hath three suits to his back." Steevens, who regards it as in keeping with beggary, quotes Ben Jonson, Silent Woman, iv. 2: "thou wert a pitiful poor fellow . . . and hadst nothing but three suits of apparel." (Routledge's ed. p. 227). Wright remarks: "If the terms of agreement between master and servant in Shakespeare's time were known, they would probably throw light upon the phrase. It is probable that three suits of clothes a year were part of a servant's allowance. In The Silent Woman, iii. 1, Mrs. Otter, scolding her husband whom she treats as a dependant, says, Who gives you your maintenance, I pray you? Who allows you your horse-meat and man's-meat, your three suits of apparel a year? your four pair of stockings, one silk, three worsted?" (Routledge's ed. p. 217).

Hundred-pound was also a "term of reproach," as Steevens notes, comparing Middleton's Phoenix, iv. 3: "How's this? am I used like a hundred-pound gentleman?"

179 Line 17: worsted-stocking—In Shakespeare's day the better class of people wore silk stockings, and regarded worsted ones as cheap and poor. Steevens quotes Tailor, The Hog Hath Lost His Pearl, i. 1: "Good parts, without habiliments of gallantry, are no more set by in these times than a good leg in a woollen stockings;" and The Captain, iii. 3: "serving-men . . . with woollen stockings." Malone adds from Middleton, Phoenix, iv. 2: "Metreza Auriola keeps her love with half the cost that I am at; her friend can go afoot, like a good husband, walk in worsted stockings, and inquire for the sixpenny ordinary." [I may note that I have observed two passages which rather make the other way. Stubbes, describing the extravagant costume affected by the contemporary gallant, says: "Then haue they nether-stocks to these gay hosen, not of cloth (though neuer so fine) for that is thought to base, but of Jamesey worsted, silk, thred, and such like" (Anatomy of Abuses, New Shakespeare Society Reprint, p. 67); so again, page 56. Compare also the following:

These worsted stockes of bravest die,
And silken garters fringed with gold.

—Stephen Gosson, Pleasant Quippes for Vpstart
Newfangled Gentlewomen, Hazitt, 1866, p. 258

Fashion, presumably, had changed.—A. W. V.]

180. Line 18: action-taking.—"A fellow who, if you beat him, would bring an action for the assault, instead of resenting it like a man of courage" (Mason).

181. Line 20: one-trunk-inheriting.—"With all his worldly belongings in a single trunk" (Wright). Inheriting may be equivalent to possessing (as in iv. 6. 128), but Steevens and others give it the ordinary meaning here. Johnson took trunk to mean trunk-hose.

182. Line 35: sop o' the moonshine.—This probably alludes to the dish called eggs in moonshine, for which Nares quotes a receipt from an ancient cook-book. [It is also, I think, just possible that the reference is to the custom of soaking toast or sweet-cakes in wine; see Troilus and Cressida, note 53. For an allusion to these delicacies, cf. Mother Bomble, i. 3: "And you, pretty minx, that must be fed with love upon sops, I'll take an order to cram you with sorrowes" (Fairholt's Lilly, vol. ii. p. 86).—A. W. V.]

183. Line 35: draw, you CULLIONLY barber-monger.—For a note on cullion see Henry V. note 153. The word is not uncommon; cf. Edward II. i. 4. 408:

he jets it in the Court,

With base outlandish cullions at his heels.

—Bullen's Marlowe, ii. p. 148.

So again, in The Jests of George Peele: "Hath the knave no more wit than at this time to go, knowing I have no horse here, and would he base cullion go afoot" (Dyce's Greene and Peele, p. 610); and in The Guardian, ii. 3:

Long live Severino,

And perish all such cullions as repine

At his new monarchy;

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 469.

and The Black Book: "the true counterfeits of a dying cullion" (Bullen's Middleton, viii. p. 33).—A. W. V.

184. Line 38: Vanity the puppet's part.—Alluding to the old moralities, in which Vanity, Iniquity, &c., figured as characters. Compare Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, i. 1:

Satan. What Vice?

What kind wouldst thou have it off?

Fig. Why, any; Fraud,

Or Covetousness, or Lady Vanity,

Or old Iniquity.

—Routledge's ed. p. 344.

185. Line 40: I'll so CARBONADO your shanks.—Compare Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 268: "to eat adders' heads and toads carbonadoed." For the noun, see I. Henry IV. v. 3. 61, and Coriolanus, iv. 5. 199.

186. Line 44: you NEAT slave.—"Mere slave, very slave" (Johnson). Staunton believes there is a play on neat as applied to cattle, and compares Winter's Tale, i. 2. 123; but, as Wright says, this "would have no special point as addressed to Oswald." Rolfe remarks: "It is perhaps an objection to Johnson's explanation that Shakespeare nowhere else has neat=pure, unmixed. On the other hand, he seems to use it contemptuously=spruce, finical, in I. Henry IV. i. 3. 33: 'Came there a certain lord, neat, and trimly dress'd,' &c."

187. Line 47: What's the matter?—The Ff. add Part; but this is probably a stage-direction accidentally transferred to the text, as Dyce considers it.

188. Line 48: With you, GOODMAN boy.—Goodman was regularly used as a term of contempt; cf. Twelfth Night, iv. 2. 141:

Adieu, goodman devil, a passage most needlessly emended in various ways. So again, Romeo and Juliet, i. 5. 79: "What! goodman boy!" —A. W. V.]

189. Line 60: a tailor made thee.—Compare Cymbeline, iv. 2. 51-53:

No, nor thy tailor, rascal,

Who is thy grandfather; he made those clothes,

Which, as it seems, make thee.

190. Line 65: TWO HOURS o' the trade.—The reading of the Qq. The Ff. have two yeares, which Schmidt reckons a brief apprenticeship for a sculptor or painter. The editors, with the exception of Rowe, Capell, and Schmidt, follow the Qq.

191. Line 69: Thou whoreson ZED! thou unnecessary letter!—Farmer quotes Mulcaster: "Z is much harder among us, and seldom seen:—S is become its lieutenant-general. It is lightlike expressed in English, saving in foren enfranchisements." Baret, in his Alvearie, 1580, omits the letter.

192. Line 70. I will tread this UNBOLTED villain into mortar.—Toilet says: "Unbolted mortar is mortar made of unsifted lime, and to break the lumps it is necessary to tread it by men in wooden shoes." We find bolted in the sense of "refined" in Henry V. ii. 2. 137, and Coriolanus, iii. 1. 322.

193. Line 80: the holy cords.—Warburton remarks: "By those holy cords Shakespeare means the natural union between parents and children. The metaphor is taken from the cords of the sanctuary."

194. Line 81: too INTRINSE 'unloose.—Theobald substitutes intrinsicate, which Shakespeare uses in Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2. 307, 308:

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once untie.

Malone notes that the word was new at this time, and quotes the preface to Marston's Scourge of Villanie, 1598 (vol. iii. p. 245, ed. Halliwell): "new-minted epithets (as reall, intrinsecate, Delphicke)." Intrinsc is probably the poet's own contraction of intrinsecate.

195. Line 88: BEING oil to FIRE.—The Qq. have Bring oil to stir. Rowe, Schmidt, Furness, and Rolfe retain the Being, but all others adopt Bring.

196. Line 84: RENEGE, affirm, and turn their HALCYON beaks.—Reneg (spelled Reneag in the Qq.) is from the Late Latin renego, whence also the Spanish renegado. It is used again in Antony and Cleopatra, i. 1. 8: "reneges all temper." Nares quotes Du Bartas, The Battail of Yury (p. 351, ed. 1633):

All Europe nigh (all sorts of rights reneg'd)
Against the Truth and Thee, un-holy Leagu'd.

F. 1 misprints Reuenge here.

For the allusion to the halcyon, or kingfisher, Steevens quotes Thomas Lupton's Notable Things, B. x.: "A lytle byrde called the Kings Fysher, being hanged vp in the ayre by the neck, his nebbe or byll wyll be alwayes dyrect or strayght against ye winde;" and Marlowe, Jew of Malta, i. 1:

But now how stands the wind?
Into what corner peers my halcyon's bill?

—Bullen's Marlowe, vol. ii. p. 12.

Sir Thomas Browne discusses the superstition in his Vulgar Errors, iii. 10, remarking: "the eldest custom of hanging up these birds was founded upon a tradition that they would renew their feathers every year as though they were alive." According to Charlotte Smith's Natural History of Birds (quoted by Dyce), the belief in a connection between the halcyon and the wind still lingered among the common people of England in 1807; and Dyer, Folklore of Shakespeare, p. 123, says that "one may still see this bird hung up in cottages, a remnant, no doubt, of this old superstition."

197. Line 87: your EPILEPTIC visage.—Your face "distorted by grinning" (Dyce).

198. Line 88: SMILE you my speeches, as I were a fool?—That is, do you smile at them? All the early editions have Smile or Smoyle except F. 4, which the modern editors follow without exception.

199. Line 90: I'd DRIVE YE cackling home to CAMELOT.—The Qq. have send you and Camulet. "Camelot, famed in the Arthurian legends, was Cadbury in Somersetshire, according to Selden; and near it, Hanmer says, 'there are many large moors, upon which great numbers of geese are bred.' Staunton supposes that the reference was to the custom among Arthur's knights of sending their conquered foes to Camelot to do homage to the king. Dyce thinks that there may be a double allusion, to the geese of Somersetshire and to the vanquished knights" (Rolfe).

200. Line 95: What is his fault?—The reading of the Ff., that of the Qq. being What's his offence?

201. Lines 103, 104:

and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature.

"Forces his outside, or his appearance, to something totally different from his natural disposition" (Johnson). Staunton takes his to be = its; in which case the meaning is: "distorts the style of straightforward speaking quite from its nature, which is sincerity; whereas he makes it a cloak for craft" (Clarke).

202. Line 109: silly-ducking observants—The hyphen in silly-ducking is in the Ff. For the contemptuous use of ducking (bowing) compare Richard III. i. 3. 49, and Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 18. Schmidt defines observants as "obsequious attendants."

203. Line 110: That stretch their duties nicely.—That is, perform them with the most fastidious nicety or precision. For nicely, compare v. 3. 144 of this play.

204. Lines 119, 120: though I should win your displeasure to entreat me to't.—"Though I should win you, displeased as you now are, to like me so well as to entreat me to be a knave" (Johnson).

205. Line 125: When he, COMPACT, &c.—The Qq. have conjunct (conjunct). There is little choice between the readings, which mean the same. We find conjunct in v. 1. 12, and compact (in this sense of "in concert with") in Measure for Measure, v. 1. 242: "Compdct with her that's gone."

206. Line 141: There shall he sit till noon.—"Very artfully is this speech thrown in. Not only does it serve to paint the vindictive disposition of Regan, it also serves to regulate dramatic time by making the subsequent scene where Lear arrives before Gloucester's castle and finds his faithful messenger in the stocks appear sufficiently advanced in the morning to allow of that same scene closing with the actual approach of 'night,' without disturbing the sense of probability. Shakespeare makes a whole day pass before our eyes during a single scene and dialogue, yet all seems consistent and natural in the course of progression" (Clarke).

207. Lines 148-152: His fault is much, . . . Are punish'd with.—All this is wanting in the Ff. For the words that follow, the King must take it ill, they have The King his Master needs must take it ill.

208. Line 157: For following her affairs.—Put in his legs.—Omitted in the Ff.

209. Line 167: APPROVE the common SAW.—Prove the truth of the common saying; namely, "Out of God's blessing into the warm sun." Capell (notes, vol. iii. p. 40) quotes Heywood's Dialogue on Proverbs (book ii. chap. 5):

In your rennying from him to me, ye runne
Out of gods blessing into the warme sunne.

Malone cites Howell's English Proverbs, 1660: "He goes out of God's blessing to the warm sun, viz. from good to worse." Various explanations of the proverb have been given, but probably it was first applied to persons turned out of doors.

210. Lines 172, 173:

Nothing almost sees miracles
But misery.

"The wretched are almost the only persons who can be said to see miracles." Delius says: "That Cordelia should have thought of him, or that her letter should have reached him, seems to him such a miracle as only those in misery experience."

211. Lines 175-177:

*and shall find time
From this enormous state, seeking to give Losses their remedies.*

"And who (that is, Cordelia) will find opportunity in this abnormal state of affairs to set things right again. The style is disjointed, partly because he is soliloquizing, partly because he can hardly keep his eyes open for weariness. Here he gives way to his drowsiness, bids his eyes take advantage of their heaviness not to see how poor a resting-place he has, and, with a good-night prayer for better fortune, falls asleep. Enormous (which has the same etymology as abnormal, except that norma is compounded with e instead of ab) is rightly explained by Johnson as 'unwonted, out of rule, out of the ordinary course of things'" (Rolfe).

Jennens was the first to suggest that Kent reads fragments of Cordelia's letter (and shall find time . . . their remedies), and he has been followed by Steevens and others; but, as Malone notes, Kent cannot read the letter, but wishes for the rising of the sun that he may read it. Mason connects and shall find with I know; and Mr. J. Crosby (as quoted by Rolfe) paraphrases that part of the passage thus: "From this anomalous state of mind, I shall gain time to communicate and co-operate with Cordelia in her endeavour to restore the kingdom to its former condition; to give losses their remedies, that is, to reinstate Lear on the throne, Cordelia in his favour, and myself in his confidence, and in my own rights and titles."

For o'er-watch'd (worn out with watching), compare Julius Caesar, iv. 3. 241:

Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'er-watch'd.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

212. Line 8: in contempt of man.—"Wishing to degrade a man" (Moberly).

213. Line 10: elf all my hair in knots.—Compare Romeo and Juliet, i. 4. 90:

And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs;

whereby there hangs many a tale of popular superstition.

214. Line 14: Of BEDLAM BEGGARS.—Steevens quotes from Dekker's Belman of London, of which three editions appeared in 1608, the same year in which Lear was first printed, the following description of "an Abraham man." "He swears he hath been in Bedlam, and will talke frantickely of purpose: you see pinnes stuck in sundry places of his naked flesh, especially in his armes, which paine he gladly puts himselfe to, only to make you believe he is out of his wits. He calls himselfe by the name of Poore Tom, and comming near any body cries out, Poore Tom is a-cold. Of these Abraham-men, some be exceeding merry, and doe nothing but sing songs fashioned out of their own braines; some will dance, others will doe nothing but either laugh or weepe: others are dogged, and so sullen both in loke and speech, that spying but a small company in a house, they boldly and bluntly enter, compelling the servants through feare to give them what they demand." [Hunter, again, has an interesting extract from Aubrey's Natural History of Wiltshire: "Till the breaking out of the Civil Wars, Tom o' Bedlams did travel about the country. They had been once distracted men that had been put into Bedlam, where recovering to some soberness they were licentiated to go begging. They had on their left arms an armilla of tin, about four inches long; they could not get it off. They wore about their necks a great horn of an ox in a string or hawdrick, which when they came to a house for alms they did wind; and they did put the drink given them into this horn, whereto they did put a stopple. Since the wars I do not remember to have seen any of them" (Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. p. 271). Later on (iii. 6. 79), we have a reference to the horn which Edgar carried: "Poor Tom, thy horn is dry," the meaning obviously being, that no one has put any liquor into it. For a diverting collection of old scraps of information on the subject of these Tom o' Bedlams, the judicious reader should turn to Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature, vol. ii. pp. 311-317, Chandos ed. There is also a good note in Dyce's Beaumont and Fletcher, vol. ix. p. 22; and another in Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. iii. pp. 170, 171, appropos of the fact that a character in Gammer Gurton's Needle is called Diccon, "the Bedlam."—A. W. V.]

215. Line 15: STRIKE in their numb'd and mortified bare arms, &c.—Walker (Crit. Exam. ii. 36) suggests stick, which Furness adopts; but strike in is simply strike into, or drive into.

216. Line 20: Poor TURLYGOD!—Warburton would read Turlypin, the name given to a fraternity of gypsies or beggars. According to Douce, the name was corrupted into Turlygood, though Nares doubts whether the two names are connected.

217. Line 21: Edgar I NOTHING am.—That is, I am in no wise Edgar (having become a Bedlam beggar).

ACT II. SCENE 4.

218.—Line 1, for home the Quartos reads hence. Line 7, in the Quartos we have crewell or crewill. Line 9, in the Quartos by the heelles. Line 79, some editors follow the fourth Folio in reading That, sir, which; but sir occurs elsewhere in Shakespeare as an ordinary noun; e.g. Othello, ii. 1. 176. Line 97, the Quartos give: what fiery quality. Line 191, in the Quartos the speech is assigned to Goneril; for stock'd they read struck or struck. Line 226, boil: spelt, says Aldis Wright, byle or bile in the early editions, and in the Authorized Version. Line 274, the line is redundant; of the various suggestions Pope's seems to me the best, viz that patience which I need. Line 304, for ruffie, Qq. have russel.

219. Line 7: he wears CRUEL garters.—Collier suggested that we should read crewell, in order to make the pun more obvious. Halliwell remarks: "This word was obvious to the punster, and is unmercifully used by the older dramatists. A pun similar to that in the text is in one of L'Estrange's anecdotes: 'A greate zelote for the Cause would not allow the Parliament's army to be beaten in a certain fight, but confess he did believe they might be worsted. To which insy-wolsey expression, a merry cavalere reply'd, Take heede of that, for worsted is a cruell peece of stuffe."

220. Line 11: wooden nether-stocks.—For nether-stocks (short stockings), compare I. Henry IV. ii. 4. 131: "I'll sew nether stocks."

221. Lines 19, 20:

Lear. No, no, they would not.

Kent Yes, they have.

These two speeches are wanting in the Ff.

222. Line 35: summon'd up their MEINY.—The word is common in Chaucer and other early writers; also in Spenser. Compare Faerie Queene, iii. 9. 11:

That this faire many were compeld at last
To fly for succour to a little shed, and iii. 12. 23: "That all his many it affraide did make," &c. Wright quotes Cotgrave, Fr. Dict.: "Mesnie: f. A. meynie, familie, household, household companie, or servants."

223. Lines 54, 55: as many dolours . . . as thou canst TELL in a year.—"Count, or recount; according to the sense in which dolours is understood" (Wright).

224. Line 56: O, how this MOTHER swells up toward my heart!—Mother is synonymous with the following Hysterica passio, or hysteria. Kitson quotes Harsnet, Declaration of Popish Impostures (p. 25). "Ma: Maynie had a spice of the Hysterica passio, as it seems from his youth, hee himselfe termes it the Moother (as you may see in his confession)." Master Richard Mainy, who was persuaded by the priests that he was possessed of the devil, deposes as follows, p. 263: "The disease I spake of, was a spice of the Mother, where-with I had beene troubled (as is before mentioned) before my going into Fraunce: whether I doe rightly terme it the Mother or no, I know not."

225. Line 68: We'll set thee to school to an ANT, &c.—"If, says the Fool, you had been schooled by the ant, you would have known that the king's train, like that sagacious animal, prefer the summer of prosperity to the colder season of adversity, from which no profit can be derived (Malone).

226. Line 90: Mere FETCHES.—Fetches=pretexts, devices; cf. Hamlet, ii. 1. 38. For instances outside Shakespeare we may note the interlude of the Disobedient Child:

O, I have such fetches, such toys in this head,
Such crafty defices; —Hazlitt's Dodsley, ii. p. 309.

and Antonio and Mellida, ii. 1:

And I do fear a fetch;
—Bullen's Marston, i. p. 127.

and again, the anonymous play (printed 1658) of The Old Couple, v.:

Another fetch! this may be worth the hearing.

—Dodsley, xii. p. 79.

—A. W. V.

227. Line 108: commands her service.—The Ff. read com-mand's, tends, service, which Rowe adopted with the omission of the commas (1st ed.), afterwards restoring the first comma. Schmidt reads commands, 'tends service', which he defends at considerable length, but inconclusively.

228. Line 120: Till it cry sleep to death.—The meaning seems obvious enough—"till its clamour murders sleep," as Wright paraphrases it; but Steevens explains it "till it cries out, 'Let them awake no more.'" Johnson put sleep to death in italics, as if it were the cry of the drum; and Mason changed the phrase to death to sleep.

229. Line 123: as the COCKNEY did to the eels.—Here cockney may be equivalent to cook, as Tyrwhitt and others have explained it; or a cockney cook (or a London cook), as others make it. The only other instance of the word in Shakespeare is in Twelfth Night, iv. 1. 15. See note 230 of that play.

230. Line 124: she KNAPP'D 'em o' the coxcombs with a stick.—The Ff. have knapt, and the Qq. rapt, which some have preferred, assuming that knap means only to "snap or break asunder," as in the Merchant of Venice, iii. 1. 10 [a use which Mr Aldis Wright well illustrates by the Prayer-book Version of Psalm xli. 9: "he knappeth the spear in sunder." For knap=strike cf. the following couplet from the old Interlude, Thersites:

And plucketh off her hose,
She knappeth me in the nose

—Dodsley's Old Plays, Hazlitt's ed. i. p. 428.

In the same play we have the substantive knap=a blow: "whose knee caught a knap" (ibid. p. 422).—A. W. V.]

231. Line 134: SEPULCHRING an adultriss.—"Compare Lucrece, 805: 'May likewise be sepulchred in thy shade'; and Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. 2. 118: 'Or at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.' In both passages the accent is on the penult, as here. The noun has the modern accent in Shakespeare except in Richard II. i. 3. 196. Milton makes the same distinction. Compare the verb in the Epitaph on Shakes 15: 'And, so sepulchred, in such pomp dost lie'; and the noun in Samson Agonistes, 102: 'My self my sepulchre, a moving grave;' and Comus, 471: 'Oft seen in charnel vaults and sepulchres'" (Rolfe).

232. Lines 141, 142:

*You less know how to value her desert
Than she to scant her duty.*

We must interpret according to the sense, as classical commentators say, rather than the literal meaning of the words, and the general purport of what Regan replies is simple enough: "The fault lies with you, not with my sister; you are more likely to undervalue her services than she is to come short in paying them." For scant, see Othello, iv. 3. 92:

Or scant our former having in despite.

—A. W. V.

233. Line 148: O, sir, you are old, &c.—Coleridge remarks here: "Nothing is so heart-cutting as a cold, unexpected defence or palliation of a cruelty passionately complained of, or so expressive of thorough hard-heartedness. And feel the excessive horror of Regan's 'O, sir, you are old!'—and then her drawing from that universal object of reverence and indulgence the very reason for her frightful conclusion—"Say you have wrong'd her." All Lear's faults increase our pity for him. We refuse to know them otherwise than as means of his sufferings and aggravations of his daughters' ingratitude."

234. Line 155: mark how this becomes THE HOUSE.—No change is really called for, but Theobald reads the use, and Jennens me now. Collier's Corrector has the mouth, which is plausible and favoured by Furness, though he retains the old text.

235. Line 159: these are unsightly tricks.—This probably refer to Lear's kneeling, though Knight and others do not believe that he kneels. According to Davies (Dram. Miscell. ii. 190, quoted by Furness), "Garrick threw himself on both knees, with his hands clasped, and in a supplicating tone repeated this touching, though ironical, petition."

236. Line 165: her young bones.—Jourdain (Trans. Philological Soc. 1860-61, p. 141) explains this as referring to "infants just born, which fairies then had power over, but not afterwards;" but Mr J. Addis, jr (Notes and Queries, 1887, 3rd series, vol. xi. p. 251), suggests that it means "unborn infant;" and Wright, Furness, and Rolfe endorse this explanation, which is pretty clearly the correct one. Compare the old play of King Lear (printed by Furness in his Appendix):

Alas, not I: poore soule, she breeds yong bones,
And that is it makes her so tutchy sure

237. Line 166: You TAKING airs.—For taking (bewitching, malignant) compare iii. 4. 61 of this play; and see note on Hamlet, i. 1. 163.

238. Line 170: To FALL and biast her pride!—Malone takes fall to be used causatively, as it often is in Shakespeare; but Wright, Furness, and Rolfe believe it to be intransitive. This, as Wright says, is more in keeping with drawn and blast. Compare Tempest, ii. 2. 1-3:

All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By much-meal a disease!

and Measure for Measure, v. 1. 121-123:

Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us?

For blast her pride the Ff. have only the word blister.

239. Line 174: Thy TENDER-HEFTED nature.—The puzzling compound is explained in a general way by the tender; but the hefted has never been satisfactorily defined. The Qq. have tender hested, which is equally perplexing, though it has been taken to mean "governed by gentle dispositions." Stevens paraphrased tender-hefted by "whose bosom is agitated with tender passions." Heft is used as synonymous with haft, or handle; but it is not found in Shakespeare, and to attempt to connect it with this compound is arbitrary and absurd. Tender-hearted has been proposed as an emendation, but, with nature following, it is impossibly weak. The corruption, if it be corruption, is apparently hopeless.

240. Line 178: to scant my SIZES.—That is, my allowances. Wright remarks: "The words sizar and sizing are still well known in Cambridge; the former originally denoting a poor student, so called from the sizes or allowances made to him by the college to which he belonged."

[For instances of the verb compare The Returne from Pernassus, iv. 2: "one that sizeth the Deuil's butteries" (Arber's Reprint, p. 55); and again (at page 66), "I use to size my musike." Now to size bears chiefly one sense at Cambridge, viz. to order at one's own expense extra things which are not provided at the dinner in the College Hall. The Returne from Pernassus, by the way, was an essentially Cambridge play, and it, appropriately enough, furnishes two other instances of this curious and interesting word. In act iv. scene 2 we have:

Which that one ey'd subseiser of the skie,
Don Phœbus empties by calidity;

—Arber's ed. p. 55.

and again, there is the strange expression size que. "you are at Cambridge still with size que" (iv. 3), which Macray in his edition of the Parnassus trilogy explains (p. 139) to mean: "farthing allowances of food and drink."

Arber, I may observe, has got this last reference all wrong; he prints with sie[k]e kne[e], p. 59.

For another reference of Eachard, Contempt of the Clergy, 1670: "They took therefore, heretofore, a very good method to prevent sizars overheating their brains" (Arber's English Garner, vol. vii. p. 257). Eachard draws a dismal picture of the Sizar's life, which was "not a happy one." Size, according to Skeat, is short for assize, an allowance of provisions; assize itself coming from the O. F. assize = a tax, impost.—A. W. V.]

241. Line 219: to be slave and SUMPTER.—Probably Sumpter here = packhorse; cf. The Noble Gentleman, v. 1:

You should have had a sumpter.

—Beaumont and Fletcher, x p. 24.

It also signified a burden; as in The Woman's Prize, iii. 2:

What are we married for? to carry sumpters!

—Beaumont and Fletcher, vii. p. 160.

Professor Skeat, I should note, takes sumpter in the present passage to mean pack-horse-driver, which, he says, was the original sense of the word. Derivation: O. F. sommetier.—A. W. V.

242. Line 260: When others are more wicked.—Some editors join this to what follows, putting a period at the end of the preceding line. The early editions have no point there, and a comma after wicked. The pointing in the text is Theobald's, and is generally adopted.

243. Line 278: But, for true need.—Moberly remarks: "To imagine how Shakespeare would have ended this sentence, one must be a Shakespeare. The poor king stops short in his definition: it is too plain that his true need is patience."

244. Line 295: For his particular.—As to him personally, compare Coriolanus, iv. 7. 12-14:

Yet I wish, sir,—
I mean for your particular,—you had not Join'd in commission with him;

and Troilus and Cressida, ii. 2. 8-10:

Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I
As far as toucheth my particular,
Yet, dread Priam, &c.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

245—Line 4, the Quartos reads element, i.e. the sky. Lines 7-15, omitted in the Folios. Lines 22-29, wanting in the Quartos. Line 23, some editors read throne. Line 24, Johnson proposed speculators; Collier's MS. Corrector had spectators. Lines 30-42, omitted in the Folios. Line 32, Q. 2, has secret fee; Q. 3, secret sea; feet is quite satisfactory.

246 Line 6: Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main.—That is, above the mainland. Elsewhere Shakespeare uses main for the sea. Steevens quotes Bacon, "Considerations touching a War with Spain" (Spedding's ed. vii. 490): "In the year that followed, of 1539, we gave the Spaniards no rest, but turned challengers, and invaded the main of Spain," where the context shows that he is speaking of landing an army on the Spanish coast.

247. Line 12: wherein the CUB-DRAWN bear would couch.—We may remember As You Like It, iv. 3 115:

A honess, with sudders all drawn dry;

and line 127:

Food to the suck'd and hungry honess.

The dugs of the animal are sucked dry by her young, and she is left starving.—A. W. V.

248 Line 43: I will talk further with you.—This implies a courteous postponement or dismissal of a request; hence Kent's reply (Delius).

ACT III. SCENE 2.

249. Line 2: You cataracts and HURRICANOES.—For the meaning of hurricanes compare Troilus and Cressida, v. 2. 171, 172:

the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call

Nares quotes Drayton, Mooncalf, 168:

And downe the shower impetuously doth fall,
Like that which men the Hurricane call

Wright notes that in Raleigh's Guiana it is called hurlecan and hurlecano.

250. Lines 4, 5:

You sulphurous and thought-executing FIRES,
VAUNT-COURIERS of oak-cleaving THUNDERBOLTS.

Compare The Tempest, i. 2. 201, 202:

Jove's lightnings, the precursors
O' the dreadful thunder-claps.

For the rare word vaunt-courier Hunter refers us to Harsnet, edit. 1005, p. 12: "the harbinger, the host, the steward, the vaunt-courier, the sacrist, and the pander" to the priests (Illustrations of Shakespeare, vol. ii. p. 270). Cotgrave has. "Avant-coureur: m. A forerunner, Avant curror." To these instances I can add one from Bullen's Old Plays; it occurs in Sir Gyles Goosecappe, i. 4: "I have a vaunt-carrying desire shall make them digest it most healthfully" (vol. iii. p. 21). For the form vaunt where we should write van, cf. Troilus and Cressida, Prologue 27:

Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils.

So Marston writes in his Pygmalion:

Hath not my goddess, in the vauntguard place?—

—Bullen's Marston, iii p. 261.

and Spenser has vauncing=advancing:

vauncing forth from all the other band
Of knights, address his maiden headed shield.

—Faerie Queene, bk. iv. c. iv. st. xvii. 3, 4, Globe ed. p. 249

—A. W. V.

251 Line 7: STRIKE flat the thick rotundity of the world!—The Qq have smite. As Delius notes, rotundity suggests "the roundness of gestation," as the context indicates.

252. Line 8: all gernens SPILL at once—Spill is used in its strict sense; that is, destroy; see Skeat s. v. Compare the old morality of Every Man:

My conditon is .man's soul to kill,
If I save one, a thousand I do spill.

—Dodsley, Hazlitt's ed. vol. i p. xix.

So in Ralph Roister Doister, iii. 5:

Why did ye not promise that ye would not him spill!

—Arber's Reprint, p. 56.

—A. W. V.

253. Line 10: court holy-water—"Ray (p. 84), among his proverbial phrases, mentions court holy-water to mean fair words. The French have the same phrase: Eau benite de cour" (Steevens) Cotgrave, cited by Malone, has "Eau beniste de Cour Court holy water; complements, faire words, flattering speeches," &c. [The following is from Florio, 1598: "Faggiolata, Fagiolata, a flim-flam tale, as women tell when they shale peason, which hath neither head nor foote, nor rime nor reason; a flap with a foxe-taille: court holie water, a tittle-tattle, or such." As to the original French phrase, Littré says (s. v. bénit): "eau bénite de cour, de vaines protestations de service;" and again (s. v. eau): "Eau bénite de cour, expression proverbiale pour exprimer les vaines protestations d'amitié ou de protection. Donneur d'eau bénite, faiseur de promesses en l'air."—A. W. V.]

254. Lines 29, 30:

The head and he shall LOUSE;—

So BEGGARS MARRY many.

Thiselton Dyer treats this as a reference to the proverb: "A beggar marries a wife and lice;" a saying which partially appears in another form: "A beggar payeth a benefit with a louse" (Folk-lore of Shakespeare, p. 417).—A. W. V.

255. Lines 31-34:

The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make
Shall of a corn cry woe,
And turn his sleep to wake.

Furness paraphrases thus: "A man who prefers or cherishes a mean member in place of a vital one shall suffer enduring pain where others would suffer merely a twinge. Lear had preferred Regan and Goneril to Cordelia."

256. Line 35: for there was never yet fair woman, &c.—"This is the Fool's way of diverting attention after he has said something a little too pointed; the idea of a very pretty woman making faces in a looking-glass raises a smile" (Furness).

257. Line 50: this dreadful POTHER.—The Folios read pudder, for which Stevens supplied a parallel from Beaumont and Fletcher's Scornful Lady, ii 2: "Some fellows would have cryed now . . . and kept a pudder." It seems best to adopt the ordinary form pother, which one of the Quartos comes very near in reading poother. Some Quartos have thundring.—A. W. V.

258 Line 60: More SINN'D against than SINNING.—This is a curiously close parallel to Edipus' words in the Edipus Coloneus: "these deeds of mine are deeds of suffering more than of doing"—A. W. V.

259 Line 64: More harder than the stones.—The Qq. have More hard then is the stone (where then is equivalent to than), and are followed by some editors.

260 Lines 67-73: My wits begin to turn— . . . That's sorry yet for thee.—Dr Bucknill (p. 195) remarks: "The import of this must be weighed with iv 6 100-104, when Lear is incoherent and full of delusion. Insanity arising from mental and moral causes often continues in a certain state of imperfect development; . . . a state of exaggerated and perverted emotion, accompanied by violent and irregular conduct, but unconnected with intellectual aberration; until some physical shock is incurred,—bodily illness, or accident, or exposure to physical suffering; and then the imperfect type of mental disease is converted into perfect lunacy, characterized by more or less profound affection of the intellect, by delusion or incoherence. This is evidently the case in Lear, and although we have never seen the point referred to by any writer, and have again and again read the play without perceiving it, we cannot doubt from these passages, and especially from the second, in which the poor madman's imperfect memory refers to his suffering in the storm, that Shakespeare contemplated this exposure and physical suffering as the cause of the first crisis in the malady. Our wonder at his profound knowledge of mental disease increases, the more carefully we study his works; here and elsewhere he displays with prolific carelessness a knowledge of principles, half of which would make the reputation of a modern psychologist."

261. Lines 74-77: He that has and a little tiny wit, &c.—Compare Twelfth Night, v. 1. 398, fol. Furness suggests that this may be the same song, changed by the Fool to suit the occasion. The music of the song in Twelfth Night is given by Chappell, Popular Music, p. 225. The redundant and is common in ballads.

262. Lines 79-95: This is a brave night to cool a courtesan. —I'll speak a prophecy, &c.—All this is wanting in the Qq., and it is probably an interpolation of the actors, as Clarke and others have suggested. The prophecy is an imitation of one formerly ascribed to Chaucer, but none of his:

Whan prestis faylin in her sawes,
And turnn Goddis lawes
Ageyns ryt;
Than schall the lond of Albion
Turnin to confusion, &c.

Merlin is mentioned in I. Henry IV. iii. 1. 150: "the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies." [He was taken as the type of seers and prophets; so, to give a single instance, Greene writes in the Address prefixed to Perimedes the Blacke-smith, 1588. "Mad and scoffing poets, that haue propheticall spints as bred of Merlins race" (Dyce's Greene & Peel, p. 35) We need scarcely note that the Birth of Merlin was the subject of one of the pseudo-Shakespearean plays, for which see the convenient Tauchnitz edition.—A. W. V.]

ACT III. SCENE 3.

263 Line 5: PERPETUAL displeasure.—The Qq. have their displeasure, and some editors read their perpetual displeasure.

264. Line 12: my CLOSET.—See note 76.

265. Line 20: There is STRANGE THINGS toward.—The Qq. have There is some strange thing toward, which some editors adopt.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

266.—Lines 17, 18: In such . . . endure, wanting in the Quartos. Lines 26, 27, not in Qq. Line 29, for storm the Quartos have night. Line 49, the Qq. read, Hast thou given all to thy two daughters? Line 83, keep thy word justly, so Pope; Qq. have words justly, and Ff. words justice. Line 114, for come, unbutton here, the Folio reading, some Quartos give come on, and others Come on be true. Line 117, a wild field; both Ff. and Qq. have wild, and there can be no reason for changing to wide as do some editors. Line 141, who hath three suits; the Quartos give Who hath had.

267. Line 48: go to thy cold bed, and warm thee.—Compare The Taming of the Shrew, Induction 10, where the words are quoted, with the prefatory oath "by Jeronimy;" for an elaborate account of which see note 3 to that play.—A. W. V.

268. Line 54: laid knives under his pillow, and halters in his paw.—To tempt him to suicide. Malone cites Harsnet's Declaration: "The exam: further saith, that one Alexander an Apothecarie, hauing brought with him from London to Denham on a time a new halter, and two blades of knives, did leaue the same, vpon the gallerie floare in her Maisters house."

269. Line 56: Bless thy FIVE WITS!—"The wits," says Johnson, "seem to have been reckoned five, by analogy to the five senses, or the inlets of ideas;" and Dyce, Glossary to Shakespeare, p. 507, quotes from Malone: "From Stephen Hawes's poem called Grande Amoure, ch. xxiv. edition 1554, it appears that the five wits were 'common wit, imagination, fantasy, estimation, (i.e. judgment) and memory.' Wit in our author's time was the general term for the intellectual power." As a matter of fact the five wits are often equivalent to the five senses. This is clear from two passages which Hunter gives in his Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 271. He says: "Five wits were undoubtedly the five senses. Thus in Larke's Book of Wisdom, 'And this knowledge descendeth and cometh of the five corporal senses and wits of the persons, as the eyes, understanding, and hearing of the ears, smell of the nose, taste of the mouth,' and more plainly in King Henry the Eighth's Primer, 1546, 'My five wits have I fondly misused and spent, in hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting and also feeling, which thou hast given me to use unto thy honour and glory, and also to the edification and profit of my neighbours." For similar references of Twelfth Night, iv. 2. 92 (note 258 to that play); Much Ado, i. 1. 66 (note 15); and Sonnet cxli. 9.—A. W. V.

270. Line 75: Should have thus little mercy on their flesh.—Delius refers this to the sticking of pins into the mortified bare arms, Clarke to the exposure of poor Tom's body to the storm. In Edwin Booth's Prompt-Book (quoted by Furness) there is a stage-direction: "Draws a thorn, or wooden spike, from Edgar's arm, and tries to thrust it into his own," and after line 73: "Edgar seizes Lear's hand and takes away the thorn."

271. Line 77 Those PELICAN daughters—Wright quotes Batman vpon Bartholome (ed. 1582), fol. 180 b: "The Pellican loueth too much her children. For when the children bee haught, and begin to waxe hoare, they smite the father and the mother in the face, wherfore the mother smiteth them againe and slaeth them. And the thirde daye the mother smiteth her selfe in her side that the blood runneth out, and sheddeth that hot blood vpon the bodies of her children. And by vertue of the blood the birdes that were before dead, quicken againe." [Compare also Richard II. ii. 1. 126, and Hamlet, iv. 5. 146, where the first Folio has the most curious misprint—politician for pelican. I find the same reference in William Rowley's Woman Never Vexed:

I'll feed my father; though, like the pelican
I peck mine own breast for him.

—Dodsley's Old Plays, Hazlitt's ed. vol. xli. p. 174;

also twice in Middleton's Solomon Paraphrased:

You like to pelicans have fed your death. —Ch. xvi;

and chap. xix:

Why did you suck your pelican to death,
Which fed you too, too well with his own breath.

—Middleton's Works, Bullen's ed. vol. viii. p. 263, and p. 293.

—A. W. V.]

272. Line 78: Pillicock sat on Pillicock-hill.—Collier cites Ritson's Gammer Gurton's Garland:

Pillicock, Pillicock sat on a hill;
If he's not gone, he sits there still.

Pillicock was often used as a term of endearment. Dyce quotes Florio: "Pinchino, a prime-cocke, a pillicocke, a darlin, a beloued lad."

273. Line 83: swear not; COMMIT not.—Compare Othello, iv. 2. 72, 73:

What committed?
Committed!—O thou public commoner!

So Field's A Woman is a Weathercock, i. 2:

Why, should they not admit you, my lord, you Cannot commit with 'em my lord

—Nero and other plays (including Field's two Comedies) in Mermaid Series, p. 350.

—A. W. V.

274. Line 88: cur'd my hair.—Malone quotes Harsnet (p. 54): "Ma: Maynie the Actor, comes mute vpon the stage, with his hands by his side, and his haire curled vp. Loe heere (cries Weston the Interpreter) comes vp the spirit of pride." Curling the hair seems to have been the mark of a swaggerer, for in the same book (p. 139) we are told that the devil was said to appear "sometimes like a Ruffian, with curled haire." Wright cites Timon of Athens, iv. 3. 160: "make cur'd wate ruffians bald." See, too, Othello, note 34

275. Line 88: wore gloves in my cap.—"As the favour of a mistress" (Theobald) [Compare Richard II. v. 3. 17, 18:

And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour;

and Troilus and Cressida, note 299. Outside Shakespeare we may note, The Woman in the Moone, ii. 1:

And he that first presents me with his head,
Shall wear my glove in favour of the deed.

—Lilly's Works, Fairholt's ed. vol. ii. p. 167;

and Campaspe, iv. 3: "O Philip, wert thou alive to see this alteration, thy men turned to women, thy souldiers to lovers, gloves worn in velvet caps, in stead of plumes in graven helmets" (Lilly, vol. i. p. 135). So Dekker in his Satiromastix.

Thou shalt wear her glove in thy worshipful hat.

—A. W. V.]

276. Line 94: light of ear.—"Credulous of evil, ready to receive malicious reports" (Johnson).

277. Lines 94-96: hog in sloth, fox in stealth, wolf in greediness, dog in madness, lion in prey.—Wright says: "Mr. Skeat has pointed out to me that in the Ancrens Rawle, p. 198, the seven deadly sins are typified by seven wild animals; the lion being the type of pride, the serpent of envy, the unicorn of wrath, the bear of sloth, the fox of covetousness, the swine of greediness, and the scorpion of lust."

278. Line 102: HA, NO, NONNY.—The text is a combination of the Quarto and Folio readings; in the former the line runs: hay no on ny; in the latter, sayes sum mun, nonny.

For the burden hay, no nonny, compare Ophelia's song in Hamlet, iv. 5. 165, and see Much Ado, note 150; and As You Like It, note 174. Compare, too, the following from Deuteromelia (1609), by Thomas Ravenscroft:

For where shall now this wedding be?
For and hey-nonny-no in an old ivy-tree.
And where now shall we bake our bread?
For and hey-nonny-no in an old horse head.

—Bullen's Lyrics (1887), p. 118.

So, again, a song in the same editor's More Lyrics of the Elizabethan Age (1888), pp. 45, 46:

Hey nonny no!
Men are fools that wish to die!
Is't not fine to dance and sing
When the bells of death do ring?
Is't not fine to swim in wine,
And turn upon the toe
And sing hey nonny no,
When the winds blow and the seas flow?
Hey nonny no!

This song was probably written by an Elizabethan composer named Nathaniel Giles, once chorister of Magdalen College, Oxford.—A. W. V.

279. Line 103: Dolphin my boy, boy, sessa! let him trot by.—Stevens quotes, as heard from an old gentleman, the following:

Dolphin my boy, my boy,
Cease, let him trot by;
It seemeth not that such a foe
From me or you would fly.

Farmer cites Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, v 3: "he shall be Dauphin my boy." Sessa is Malone's emendation for the Sessey or Sesey of the Ff The Qq. have cease or caese. Johnson believes that sessa is the French cessez, equivalent to "be quiet, have done."

280 Line 113: Off, off, you lendings!—Moberly says: "The latent madness against which Lear has been struggling bursts into violence at sight of the strange and awful object which Edgar has made of himself, and he longs to reduce himself, like him, to a state of absolute and unmitigated nature."

281. Line 118: here comes a walking fire.—This refers to Gloster with his torch; but, as Furness remarks, it is somewhat premature to mark his entrance here (as the Qq. and the Cambridge editors do), for he is still in the distance.

282. Line 120: This is the foul fiend FLIBBERTIGIBBET—This, like the other names of the demons mentioned by Edgar (Modo, Mahu, &c.), is from Harsnet, who says (p 49): "Frateretto, Fleberdigibet, Hoberdidance, Tocobatto, were four deuils of the round, or Morrice, whom Sara in her fits, tuned together, in measure and sweet cadence" Cotgrave (French Dict.) gives it as one of the definitions of Coguette: "a fisking, or filperoux minx, a cocket or tatling housewife; a titifill, a fiébergebit."

283. Line 121: walks AT first cock.—The Qq. reads walks till the first cock. Walk is often equivalent to go away (Schmidt); as in Measure for Measure, iv. 5. 12; Othello, iv. 3 4; &c. See also iv. 7 83 of this play. [For the old superstition that spirits and supernatural beings had to retire at cockcrow, cf. Hamlet, i. 1. 149-161, and The Tempest, i. 2. 326-328. On the other hand, the sound of the curfew bell was the regular signal for them to begin their walks abroad; cf. Measure for Measure, iv. 2. 76-78:

Duke. The best and wholesom'st sprits of the night
Envelop you, good provost! Who call'd here of late?
Prov. None, since the curfew rung.

So The Tempest, v. 1. 38-40. In Romeo and Juliet, iv. 4. 4, curfew-bell appears to mean the matins-bell; see note 181 to that play.—A. W. V.]

284. Line 122: he gives the WEB and the PIN.—Compare the Winter's Tale, i. 2. 290, 291:

all eyes
Blind with the pin and web.

Florio (Ital. Dict.) has: "Cataralta . . . a dimnesse of sight occasioned by humores hardened in the eyes called a cataract or a pin and web;" and Dyer quotes from Markham's Cheap and Good Husbandry, bk. i. chap. 37: "But for the wart, pearle, pin or web, which are eulls grown in or upon the eye, to take them off, take the juyce of the herb betin and wash the eye therewith, it will weare the spots away" (Folklore of Shakespeare, p. 253). The disease is referred to by Marston in his Mountebank's Masque; see Bullen's ed. vol. iii. p. 423.—A. W. V.

285. Line 125: SAINT WITHOLD footed thrice the OLD.—The Ff. have Swithold, and the Qq. withold. The emendation is Theobald's, and is generally accepted by the editors. For the old or olde of the early editions, Theobald and most of his successors read wold, which is merely another form of the same word. Warburton quotes Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, iv. 6:

St. George, St. George, our Ladies Knight,
He walks by day, so does he by night,
And when he had her found,
He her beat, and her bound.
Unto him her troth he plight,
She would not stir from him that night.

This is also to be found, with slight changes, in Scot's Discoverie of Witchcraft, book iv. chap. xi.

286 Line 129: aroint thee!—Away with thee! For aroint, see Macbeth, note 20

287. Line 137: for SALLETS.—We have the same form in Hamlet, ii. 2. 462. Compare, too, Fletcher in the dedicatory lines to Sir Robert Townshend, prefixed to The Faithful Shepherdess:

Only for to please the pallet,
Leave great meat and choose a sallet.

—Beaumont and Fletcher, in Mermaid Series, ii. p. 320.

Cotgrave has: "Salade . . . a Sallet of hearbes."—A. W. V.

288 Lines 144, 145:

*But mice and rats, and such small deer,
Have been Tom's food for seven long year.*

Capell quotes the old romance of Sir Bevis of Hamptoun:

Rattes and myce and suche smal dere
Was his meate that seven yere.

Deer was sometimes used in the general sense of game. Malone quotes Barclay, Eclogues, 1570:

Everie sorte of dere
Shrunk under shadowes abating all their chere.

289. Line 146: Peace, SMULKIN!—See note 282 above. The Qq. have snulbug.

290. Line 148: The prince of darkness.—Reed quotes from Suckling's Goblins, ii. 1:

The prince of darkness is a gentleman,
Mahu, Mahu is his name;

suggesting that it may be part of the original ballad from which Edgar sings snatches. Aldis Wright, however, is probably right in regarding Suckling's catch as simply a quotation from Lear; for Suckling, we may note, knew his Shakespeare well. Thus in a single scene in this play, The Goblins, viz. scene 1, act iii. he refers to Shakespeare by name, gives a palpable variation on Falstaff's "men in buckram," and quotes Othello, iii. 3. 349, 350. See Hazlitt's edition, vol. ii. pp 30, 33, and 49.—A. W. V.

291. Line 167: His wits begin to unsettle.—Steevens quotes a note by Horace Walpole, in the postscript to his Mysterious Mother, where he observes that when "Belvidera talks of 'Lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber,' she is not mad, but light-headed. When madness has taken possession of a person, such character ceases to be fit for the stage, or, at least, should appear there but for a short time; it being the business of the theatre to exhibit passions, not distempers. The finest picture ever drawn, of a head discomposed by misfortune, is that of King Lear. His thoughts dwell on the ingratitude of his daughters, and every sentence that falls from his wildness excites reflection and pity. Had frenzy entirely seized him, our compassion would abate: we would conclude that he no longer felt unhappiness. Shakespeare wrote as a philosopher, Otway as a poet." [Belvidera is the heroine of Otway's Venice Preserved.—A. W. V.]

292. Line 176: I do beseech your grace.—"Here Gloster attempts to lead Lear towards the shelter he has provided in the farm-house adjoining the castle; but the king will not hear of quitting his 'philosopher.' Gloster then induces the Bedlam-fellow to go into the hovel, that he may be out of Lear's sight; but Lear proposes to follow him thither, saying 'Let's in all.' Kent endeavours to draw Lear away, but, finding him resolved to 'keep still with' his 'philosopher,' begs Gloster to humour the king, and 'let him take the fellow' with him. Gloster accedes, and bids Kent himself take the fellow with them in the direction they desire to go; and this is done. We point out these details, because, if it be not specially observed, the distinction between the 'hovel' and the 'farm-house' would hardly be understood. The mention of 'cushions' and a 'joint-stool' in scene 6, shows it to be some place of better accommodation than the 'hovel,' and probably some cottage or farm-house belonging to one of Gloster's tenants" (Clarke).

293. Line 187: Child Roland to the dark tower came—The ballad quoted has not been found, though other allusions to it have been pointed out, and fragments of it are given by Jamieson in his Illustrations of Northern Antiquities (p. 397), and by Child in English and Scottish Ballads (i. 245). It is scarcely necessary to say that "Child Roland to the Dark Tower Came" has supplied Browning with the title and subject of a poem.

ACT III. SCENE 5.

294. Line 8: a provoking merit.—"A merit he felt in himself which irritated him against a father that had none" (Mason); "a consciousness of his own worth which urged him on" (Wright).

295. Line 13: that this treason were not.—The Qq. have that his treason were (omitting not).

296. Line 21: COMFORTING the king—Comforting is almost a technical word. Aldis Wright quotes from Lord Campbell: "The indictment against an accessory after the fact for treason charges that the accessory comforted the principal traitor after the knowledge of the treason." Wright continues: "In this technical sense the word retains its old meaning of strengthening and supporting."—A. W. V.

ACT III. SCENE 6.

297. Line 7: FRATERETTO calls me.—See note 282 above.

298. Line 8: Pray, INNOCENT, and beware the foul fiend.—Steevens says: "He is here addressing the Fool. Compare All's Well, iv. 3. 213: 'a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay.'"

299. Lines 18-59: The foul fiend bites my back . . . hast thou let her scape?—All this is wanting in the FF.

300. Line 19: He's mad, &c.—This, according to Thiseldon Dyer, was a proverbial saying (Folklore of Shakespeare, p. 427); he also gives (p. 441) another maxim—"trust not a horse's heel," and Warburton proposed to substitute heels in the present passage. I cannot doubt, however, that health is the right reading; see Taming of the Shrew, note 54.—A. W. V.

301. Line 27: Come o'er the bourn, Bessy, to me.—Wright quotes Chappell, Popular Music of the Olden Time, p. 505, note: "The allusion is to an English ballad by William Birch, entitled 'A Song between the Quenes Majestie and Englande,' a copy of which is in the library of the Society of Antiquaries. England commences the dialogue, inviting Queen Elizabeth in the following words:

Come over the bourn, Bessy, come over the bourn, Bessy, Swete Bessy, come over to me.

The date of Birch's song is 1558, and it is printed in full in the Harleian Miscellany, x. 290. Halliwell gives the music of the song from a MS. of the 16th century in the British Museum."

302. Line 33: Croak not, black angel; I have no food for thee.—Malone quotes Harsnet (p. 195): "One time shee remembereth, that shee having the said croaking in her belly, they said it was the devil that was about the bed, that spake with the voice of a toad.

303. Line 43: Sleepest or wakest thou, jolly shepherd?—Steevens quotes The Interlude of the Four Elements: "Sleepyst thou, wakyst thou, Geoffrey Coke?" (Hazlitt's Dodsley, i. p. 49).

304. Line 45: thy MINIKIN mouth.—Aldis Wright quotes from Cotgrave: "Mignonnet: A prettie, or young minion; a minikin." Florio uses the word to translate Ital. mignone; Skeat compares Dutch minnekyn, a cupid. The French mignon is cognate with Middle High German minne=love. How, by the way, did minikin come to mean a violin? or is that minikin a different word? It occurs frequently; cf. the following instances: Glapthorne's The Lady Mother, ii. 1: "thou dost tickle minikin"=play the fiddle (Bullen's Old Plays, vol. ii. p. 131); Nabbes' Tottenham Court, ii. 4: "my guts will shrink all to minikins, which I will bequeath the poor fiddlers" (Bullen's ed. of Nabbes, i. p. 127). Compare, again, the same editor's Marston, vol. i. p. 51, and vol. ii. p. 401, minikin-tickler.—A. W. V.

305. Line 54: Cry you mercy, &c.—This was a proverbial saying, given by Ray in his Proverbs; see Thiseldon Dyer, Folklore, p. 423. Steevens quotes from Mother Bombe, iii. 4:

I crye you mercy, I took you for a joynt stoole.
—Fairholt's Lilly, ii. p. 122.

Shakespeare had previously used the joke in the Taming of the Shrew, ii. 1. 199.—A. W. V.

306. Line 72: brach or LYM.—The Qq. have him or Him, and the FF. Hym; corrected by Hanmer. The word meant a lime-hound, or one led in a lime or leash. Ritson quotes Harrington, Orlando Furioso, xli. 30:

His cosin had a Lyme hound argant bright,
His Lyme laid on his back, he couching down.

[See Hunter's Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 272, and cf. The Bashful Lover, i. 1:

I have seen him
Smell out her footing like a time-hound.

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 529.

—A. W. V.]

307. Line 79: thy HORN is dry.—See note 214.

308. Line 85: you will say they are PERSIAN.—The Qq. add attire. Moberly says: "A Persian embassy had been sent to England early in James I.'s reign, and a tombstone still remains in the churchyard of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate Street, erected to the memory of the secretary of this embassy, with the following inscription: 'If any Persian come here, let him read this and pray for his soul. The Lord receive his soul; for here lieth Maghmote (Mohammed) Shaughsware, who was born in the town Noroy in Persia.' The joke on outlandish dress arises probably from the presence of these Persians in London."

309. Line 89: Make no noise, make no noise, &c.—Buckmill (p. 207) remarks: "Lear is comparatively tranquil in conduct and language during the whole period of Edgar's mad companionship. It is only after the Fool has disappeared, and Edgar has left to be the guide of his blind father, that the king becomes absolutely wild and incoherent. The singular and undoubted fact is, that few things tranquillize the insane more than the companionship of the insane. It is a fact not easily explicable, but it is one of which, either by the intuition of genius, or by the information of experience, Shakespeare appears to be aware."

310. Line 92: And I'll go to bed at noon.—Omitted in the Qq. Clarke says: "This speech is greatly significant, though apparently so trivial. It seems but a playful rejoinder to his poor old royal master's witless words of exhaustion, but it is, in fact, a dismissal of himself from the scene of the tragedy and from his own short day of life. The dramatist indeed has added one slight passing touch of tender mention (Kent's saying, 'Come, help to bear thy master; thou must not stay behind') ere he withdraws him from the drama altogether; but he seems by this last speech to let us know that the gentle-hearted fellow who 'much pined away' at Cordelia's going into France, and who has since been subjected to still severer fret at his dear master's miseries, has sunk beneath the accumulated burden, and has gone to his eternal rest even in the very noon of his existence."

Grant White (Atlantic Monthly, July 1880) remarks: "About the middle of the play the Fool suddenly disappears, making in reply to Lear's remark, 'We'll go to supper in the morning,' the fitting rejoinder, 'And I'll go to bed at noon.' Why does he not return? Clearly for this reason: he remains with Lear during his insanity, to answer in antiphonic commentary the mad king's lofty ravings with his simple wit and homespun wisdom; but after that time, when Lear sinks from frenzy into forlorn imbecility, the Fool's utterances would have jarred upon our ears. The situation becomes too grandly pathetic to admit the presence of a jester, who, unless he is professional, is nothing. Even Shakespeare could not make sport with the great primal elements of woe. And so the poor Fool sought the little corner where he slept, turned his face to the wall, and went to bed in the noon of his life for the last time—functus officio."

311. Line 102: take up, take up.—Q. 1 has Take up the King, and Q. 2 Take up to keepe.

312. Lines 104-108: Oppress'd nature sleeps . . . Come, come, away.—Omitted in the Ff.

313. Lines 109-122: When we our betters see . . . Lurk, lurk.—"This speech is not in the Ff., and the Cambridge editors consider that 'internal evidence is conclusive against the supposition' that Shakespeare wrote it; but, as Delius remarks, it is difficult to comprehend how a spurious passage could get into the Quartos. The publisher would not be likely to attempt to amplify and improve the MS. of the play as then performed, especially when he was in such haste to bring it out. It must be confessed, however, that the style is not like that of the rest of the play; but this difference is to be noted in other of the poet's rhymed passages. The expression 'He childed as I father'd' is thoroughly Shakespearian" (Rolfé).

314. Lines 118-120: Mark the high noises; . . . and reconciles thee.—Johnson paraphrases the passage thus: "Attend to the great events that are approaching, and make thyself known when that false opinion now prevailing against thee shall, in consequence of just proof of thy integrity, revoke its erroneous sentence and recall thee to honour and reconciliation."

ACT III. SCENE 7.

315. Line 3: the VILLAIN Gloucester.—The Ff. have traitor, which is accepted by the majority of the editors.

316. Line 18: the lord's dependants.—Some editors have lords dependants (dependant lords), but the reference is evidently to Gloucester's dependants. There were knights dependent on the king, but no lords.

317. Line 29: Bind fast his CORKY arms.—Percy quotes Harsnet, p. 23: "It would (I feare me) pose all the cunning Exorcists, that are this day to be found, to teach an old corkie woman to writhe, tumble, curuet, & fetch her Morice gamboles, as Martha Brossier did."

318. Line 43: Be SIMPLE-ANSWER'D.—The Qq. have simple answerer, which Wright and Moberly adopt.

319. Line 60: would have BUOY'D up.—Q. 1 has bod and Q. 2 uid. Warburton suggested boild, as did Collier's Corrector. Buoy'd up must mean "lifted itself up," though Schmidt takes fires to be the object of the verb.

320. Line 61: And quench'd the STELL'D fires.—Stelled is usually explained to mean starry, as if it came from the Latin stellatus, and probably this is the right explanation. It may, however, be worth while to suggest that here, as in Lucrece 1444, and Sonnet xxiv. 1, stelled is the past participle of to stell=to figure, or paint. The stars are hung as pictures in the sky. For the rhetorical description we may compare Othello, ii. 1. 14, 15, and The Winter's Tale, iii. 3. 85-90.—A. W. V.

321. Line 63: that STERN time.—The Qq. have dearn (which occurs in Pericles, iii. Prol. 15), and Capell and Singer follow them.

322 Line 65: All cruels else subscrib'd—The Folios read subscribe. The passage is rather puzzling. Myself I think that cruels=cruelties, and that subscrib'd is equivalent to forgiven, overlooked, or some such kindred word. In i. 2. 24 subscribed=surrendered; in Troilus and Cressida, iv. 5. 105, the word means to yield. Now from this sense of yielding, surrendering, comes the idea of waiving or not pressing a point, which, to my mind, just suits the context here. The wolves are to be let in: their savageness and cruelty are to be overlooked. They might be kept out on the score of their "cruels;" but the charge is not to be pressed; the "cruels" are to be passed over. Various other explanations have been offered; e.g. Moberly says: "All harshness otherwise natural being forborne, or yielded from the necessity of the time;" and Schmidt, following the Folio and taking cruels=cruel creatures, paraphrases: "Everything which is at other times cruel shows feeling or regard; you alone have not done so"—A. W. V.

323 Line 77: What do you mean?—Furness suggests that this is spoken by Cornwall.

324 Line 78: My VILLAIN!—The word is here used in its original sense of serf.—Moberly says: "A villain could hold no property but by his master's sufferance, had no legal rights as against his lord, and was (perhaps) incapable of bearing witness against freemen, that one should raise his sword against his master would be unheard-of presumption, for which any punishment would be admissible. The lord's making war against his superior lord would entail no such consequences."

325 Lines 99-107: I'll never care . . . heaven help him!—All this wanting in the Ff

326. Line 101: The old course of death.—That is, the ordinary course, a natural death. Wordsworth (Shakespeare and the Bible, 2nd ed. p. 72) compares Numbers xvi. 20: "die the common death of all men"

327. Line 106: some FLAX and WHITES OF EGGS.—A common cure, as Gifford shows. At one time it was supposed that Ben Jonson had parodied this passage in his play, The Case is Altered, ii. 4: "Go, get a white of an egg and a little flax, and close the breach of the head." Ben Jonson's piece was written in 1599.—A. W. V.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

328. Line 2: To be worst.—Both Qq. and Ff. join these words to what precedes, and Tyrwhitt thought worst should be worse. Pope made the correction in the text.

329. Line 6-9: Welcome, then . . . who comes here?—The Qq. omit all this except who comes here?

330. Line 22: Our means secure us—A much-disputed passage; but Schmidt's explanation may be accepted: "The advantages we enjoy make us secure or careless." For the use of secure, compare Timon of Athens, ii. 2. 184, 185:

Canst thou the conscience lack,
To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart.

Wright explains thus: "Things we think meanly of, our mean or moderate condition, are our security." He says he knows no instance of the verb secure in the sense of "to render careless." Rolfe, quoting this, says: "We know of no instance of means=mean things, or 'moderate condition.'" Knight says: "The means, such as we possess, are our securities, and, further, our mere defects prove advantages." Various emendations have been proposed, but they are not worth recording.

331. Lines 61-66. five fiends . . . bless thee, master.—Omitted in the Ff

332. Line 71: That SLAVES your ordinance—"Who, instead of paying the deference and submission due to your ordinance, treats it as his slave, by making it subservient to his views of pleasure or interest" (Heath) For slaves the Qq. have stands, and Collier's Corrector suggests braves.

333 Lines 73, 74: So distribution, &c.—Compare Comus, 768-774:

If every just man that now pines with want
Had but a moderate and beseeching share
Of that which lowly-pamper'd Luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens't
In unsuperfluous even proportion,
And she no whit encumber'd with her store.

—A. W. V.

334. Lines 76, 77:

*There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully in the confined deep, &c.*

Moberly says: "It is remarkable that Gloucester goes to Dover, not, as Regan laughingly says, that he may now do his worst in treason, but simply that he may throw himself from the cliff in utter despair. The fact is, that this interpolated part of the plot is one of the many instances of Shakespeare's homage to Sir Philip Sidney; to pay which he does not hesitate to make a certain sacrifice of probability. In the Arcadia (p. 180) we have 'a prince of Paphlagonia, who, being ill-treated by his son, goes to the top of a high rock to cast himself down.' But how slight is the hint in the romance compared with the magnificent use which Shakespeare makes of it!" The cliff is generally assumed to be that which is now known as Shakespeare's Cliff, just outside Dover to the southwest, pierced by the tunnel of the South-Eastern Railway.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

335.—Line 12, the Quartos mostly read curre instead of terror; some, however, have terror. Aldis Wright suggests that the true reading is currish terror. Line 17, for arms the Folios have names. Line 28, the Quartos vary between: My foote usurpes my head; My foote usurpes my body; and A foole usurpes my head. Lines 31-50, omitted in Ff. Lines 53-59, not in the Folios. Line 58, the Quartos have sits and cries. Lines 62-68, wanting in the Folios. Line 79, the Folios and most of the Quartos have justices.

336. Line 22: Decline your head.—To receive the kiss. Delius thinks that it is to have a chain put about his neck.

337. Line 28: My fool usurps my body.—A contemptuous reference to her husband, and the reading of the Ff.

338, Line 29: I have been worth the whistle.—Steevens quotes Heywood's Proverbs: "A poore dogge that is not woorth the whystling"

339. Line 32: contemns IT origin.—Compare 1 4. 236, and see note. Heath paraphrases the passage thus: "That nature which is arrived to such a pitch of unnatural degeneracy as to contemn its origin cannot from thenceforth be restrained within any certain bounds whatever, but is prepared to break out into the most monstrous excesses every way, as occasion or temptation may offer."

340. Line 35: her MATERIAL sap.—Theobald reads maternal, and Schmidt says: "From Shakespeare's use of material elsewhere, in the sense of full of matter, and hence of importance, it is not easy to explain it here." Rolfe replies: "But here it is = 'full of matter,' in a sense in which Shakespeare often uses matter (= substance, materials)."

341. Line 36: to deadly use.—The use suited to a dead thing, that is, burning. Warburton sees an allusion to the use made of withered branches by witches in their charms

342. Line 54: Fools do those VILLAINS pity, &c.—There has been much dispute whether this refers to Gloucester or Lear, as some believe, or to Albany himself. Furness is apparently right in saying: "She cannot refer to Gloucester, because Albany is ignorant of what had been done to him, and she herself had left Gloucester's castle before the blinding was accomplished; and it is difficult to believe that she refers to Lear."

343. Line 57: thy state begins to threat.—Q. 1 reads "thy state begins therat," and Q. 2 "thy slaier begins threats." The emendation was made by Jennens.

344. Line 62: SELF-COVER'D thing.—The meaning of self-cover'd has been much discussed. I am inclined to agree with Rolfe, who says: "If this be what Shakespeare wrote, it seems to us that it must mean 'whose genuine self is covered or concealed.' The only question is whether she 'has hid the woman under the fiend,' as Johnson, Malone, Clarke, and Wright understand it, or the fiend under the woman, as Delius and Furness make it. Either can be made to suit the context; but we prefer the former. The meaning then is: Thou perverted creature, who hast lost thy proper self (either thy womanly self, or thy self as it has seemed to me, the ideal of my affection) and hast become a fiend, do not thus make a monster of thyself. Were it becoming in me to yield to the angry impulse, I could tear thee limb from limb; but fiend though thou art, thy woman's shape doth shield thee. Furness has well put the other interpretation, which differs from this only in part: 'Is it over-refinement to suppose that this revelation to Albany of his wife's fiendlike character transforms, in his eyes, even her person? She is changed, her true self has been covered; now that she stands revealed, her whole outward shape is be-monstered. No woman, least of all Goneril, could remain unmoved under such scathing words from her husband. Goneril's "feature" is quivering and her face distorted with passion. Then it is that Albany tells her not to let her evil self, hitherto covered and concealed, betray itself in all its hideousness in her outward shape.'"

Many emendations have been suggested, as false-cover'd, self-govern'd, self-colour'd, self-cover'd, &c.; but no one of them is really more plausible than the old text.

345. Line 68: Marry, your manhood NOW!—Aldis Wright reads mew=restrain, keep in. "Mew," he says, "followed by a dash is the reading of the corrected copies of the earliest Quarto. The others have now." Mew is certainly tempting

346 Lines 73-75:

*A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
OPPOS'D against the act, bending his sword
To his great master.*

Schmidt makes oppos'd the participle "used adjectively," but Rolfe seems to be right in taking it to be the past tense ("made opposition, opposed himself"). This is paralleled by Winter's Tale, v. 1. 44-46:

'T is your counsel
My lord should to the heavens be contrary,
Oppose against their wills,

347 Line 83: One way I like this well.—Mason says: "Goneril's plan was to poison her sister,—to marry Edmund,—to murder Albany,—and to get possession of the whole kingdom. As the death of Cornwall facilitated the last part of her scheme, she was pleased at it; but disliked it, as it put it in the power of her sister to marry Edmund."

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

348.—This entire scene is wanting in the Ff. Johnson believed it was omitted in order to shorten the play.

349 Line 20: SUNSHINE and RAIN at once.—Compare All's Well That Ends Well, v. 3. 33, 34:

For thou mayst see a sunshine and a hail
In me at once.

—A. W. V.

350. Lines 20, 21:

*her smiles and tears
Were like a better way.*

This has been the subject of much controversy. Taking it as it stands, a better way is apparently one better than either patience or sorrow could afford separately, each striving to express her best. Schmidt points thus: Were like, a better way, paraphrasing the words by "resembled sunshine and rain, but in a more beautiful manner." Warburton proposed a wetter May, Tollet a better May, Theobald a better day, &c.

351. Line 33: And, CLAMOUR MOISTEN'D, then away she started.—The Qq. have And clamour moisten'd her. The emendation is Walker's (Crit. Exam. i. 157). He makes clamour equivalent to wailing. The passage is doubtless corrupt, and no emendation that has been proposed is quite satisfactory. Capell reads And clamour moistened; that is, allayed with tears her grief ready to burst out into clamour. Moberly explains it "shed tears upon her cry of sorrow." Theobald reads And, clamour-motion'd, then. Johnson says: "The sense is good of the old reading, 'Clamour moisten'd her,' that is, her outcries were accompanied with tears."

352. Line 44: A sovereign shame so ELBOWS him.—Wright explains this, "stands at his elbow and reminds him of the past;" Moberly, "seems to buffet him." Furness calls this scene "perhaps the most corrupt throughout Shakespeare's plays," and this is probably one of the corrupt lines in it.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

353. Line 3: rank FUMITORY.—Hammer's correction of the femiter and Femtar of the old editions.—Compare Henry V. v 2 45:

The darnel, hemlock and rank fumitory.

354. Line 4: With BURDOCKS, hemlock, nettles, CUCKOO-FLOWERS.—For burdocks (Hammer's suggestion) the Qq. have hordocks, and the Ff. Hardokes or Hardocks. Farmer reads harlocks. The cuckoo-flowers are the cuckoo-buds of Love's Labour's Lost, v 2. 906 See note 225 of that play

355. Lines 11-15: There is means, madam . . . the eye of anguish.—Dr. Kellog (Shakespeare's Delineations of Insanity, p. 26) remarks: "The reply of the Physician is significant, and worthy of careful attention, as embracing a brief summary of almost the only true principles recognized by modern science, and now carried out by the most eminent physicians in the treatment of the insane. We find here no allusion to the scourgings, the charms, the invocation of saints, &c., employed by the most eminent physicians of the time of Shakespeare; neither have we any allusion to the rotary chairs, the vomitings, the purgings by hellebore, the showerings, the bleedings, scalp-shavings, and blisterings, which, even down to our own times, have been inflicted upon these unfortunates by 'science falsely so called,' and which stand recorded as imperishable monuments of medical folly; but in place of all this, Shakespeare, speaking through the mouth of the Physician, gives us the principle, simple, truthful, and universally applicable."

356. Line 26: My mourning and important tears.—For important, in the sense of importunate, compare Much Ado, ii. 1. 73-75: "if the prince be too important, tell him there is measure in every thing." The Folios read importun'd.

ACT IV. SCENE 5.

357. Line 4: spake not with your LORD.—The Qq. have Lady, which, as Malone suggests, may have been due to the ambiguous abbreviation L. in the MS.

358. Line 22: Madam, I had rather.—Johnson says: "I know not well why Shakespeare gives to Oswald, who is a mere factor of wickedness, so much fidelity. He now refuses the letter; and afterwards, when he is dying, thinks only how it may be safely delivered." Verplanck, the American editor (1847), as quoted by Rolfe, remarks: "Shakespeare has here incidentally painted, without the formality of a regular moral lesson, one of the very strange and very common self-contradictions of our enigmatical nature. Zealous, honourable, even self-sacrificing fidelity, —sometimes to a chief or leader, sometimes to a party, a faction, or a gang,—appears to be so little dependent on any principle of virtuous duty, that it is often found strongest amongst those who have thrown off the common restraints of morality. It would seem that when man's obligations to his God or his kind are rejected or forgotten, the most abandoned mind still craves something for the exercise of its natural social sympathies, and as it loses sight of nobler and truer duties becomes, like the Steward, more and more 'duteous to the vices' of its self-chosen masters."

359 Line 25: She gave strange CILLIADDES.—The Qq. have alrads, and the Ff. Eliads or Iliads. Compare Merry Wives, i. 3 64-66. "Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examin'd my parts with most judicious cëilliads." Wright quotes Cotgrave: "Oëillade: An amorous looke, affectionate winke, wanton aspect, lustfull iert, or passionate cast, of the eye; a Sheepes eye."

360. Line 29: take this NOTE.—"Not a letter, but a remark" (Johnson). Delius thinks a letter is meant, and also in line 33 below. Grey says it could not be a letter, because only Goneril's is found in his pockets when they are rifled after his death. See iv. 6. 267.

361. Line 40: What PARTY I do follow.—The Qq. have lady, which Pope adopts.

ACT IV. SCENE 6.

362 —Line 2, Qq. have climb it up Line 21, Ff. and Q. 1 read the singular pebble. Line 71, for enridged the Folios give enraged. Line 83, the Folios have crying instead of coining. Line 92, the Quartos have in the ayre. Lines 169-174, all from Plate sin to accuser's lips is missing in the Quartos. Line 196, surgeons, so the Folios; the Quartos vary between a churgion and a chirurgion. Line 201, omitted in Ff. Line 246, for ise Qq. have ile and Ff. ice. Line 247, ballow, a north county word, is the Folio reading; Qq. give bat. Line 273, Q. 1 reads indistinguisht, the other Quartos undistinguisht; the Folios have undistinguish'd and indistinguish'd. Line 289, for sever'd the Quartos have fenced.

363.—The materials of the scene are from Sidney's Arcadia, as Johnson pointed out. See Introduction, p. 88.

364 Line 15: Hangs one that gathers SAMPIRE.—The spelling of the early editions, commonly changed to samphire, which is less consistent with its derivation from the French "l'herbe de Saint-Pierre." Malone remarks that the reference is to "a trade or common occupation" of the time, sampire being much used as a pickle. It was often obtained from Dover Cliff. Compare Drayton, Polyolbion, xviii.

Rob Dover's neighbouring cleaves of samphire, to excite
His dull and sickly taste, and stir up appetite;

[and Gerarde's Herball, p. 428: "Rocke Sampier groweth on the rocky cliffs at Douer"—quoted by Mr. Aldis Wright. We may remember that samphire was long one of the articles cried in the London streets; cf. A Chaste Maid in Cheapside, i. 1: "What had us wives been good for? to make salads, or else cried up and down for samphire" (Bullen's Middleton, vol. v. p. 5)

Again, at the end of Heywood's Rape of Lucrece we have a rollicking song on The Cries of Rome, i.e. London, in which one stanza runs:

I ha' rocksamper, rocksamper!

Thus goes the cries in Rome's fair town;

First they go up street, and then they go down;

—Heywood, Select Plays in Mermaid ed. p. 425.

and Mr. Tuer in his smaller work on London Cries refers to a broadside in the British Museum, "undated and of foreign workmanship but attributable to the time of Charles II.," in which a list of London calls is given, the list including Camphires. The form camphire, by the way, is used by Fletcher in the Faithful Shepherdess, v 5:

Censers filled with frankincense and myrrh,
Together with cold camphire
—Beaumont and Fletcher, Mermoid ed. ii. 404

A W V]

365. Line 19: her COCK.—Cock=a cockboat, not found elsewhere in Shakespeare. Wedgwood says: "The Fin has kokka, the prow of a vessel, perhaps the part which cocks or sticks up, and hence the name may have passed to the entire vessel." Skeat, however, connects with concha=a shell, and Welsh cwch=a boat; cf. cox-swain=cock-swain. The word was evidently in common use. Parish in his Sussex Dialect gives an interesting list of sea-terms from the Brighton Costumal, 1580: "a book of certain customs relating to fishing, which received Royal confirmation at that date;" and amongst the terms is this word cock, on which he remarks: "Small boats, from two to six tons burden, used in the herring fishing. Their period of fishing was called cockfare."—A. W. V.

366. Line 53: Ten masts AT EACH make not the altitude.—Many emendations have been proposed; as at least, attacht, at length, at eke, astretch, at reach, &c. The editors generally retain the old reading, with the sense "fastened together."

367. Line 31: The SAFER sense.—Warburton proposed sober, and Johnson saner. Wright quotes Othello, ii. 3. 205

368. Line 86: There's your press-money.—Lear's insane thoughts run upon warlike matters.

369. Line 100: To say "ay" and "no" to every thing that I said!—Clarke says: "Lear first exclaims indignantly: 'To say 'ay' and 'no' to everything I said!' recollecting the facility with which his courtiers veered about in their answers to suit his varying moods, just as Osrio does to Hamlet; and then he goes on to say that this kind of 'ay' and 'no' too is no good divinity. In proof that 'ay' and 'no' was used by Shakespeare with some degree of latitude, as a phrase signifying alternate reply, and not merely in strictness 'yes and no,' compare As You Like It, iii. 2. 231-240, where, if the questions Rosalind asks be examined, it will be perceived that neither 'ay' nor 'no' will do as answers to any of them, except to 'Did he ask for me?'"

370. Line 140: Dost thou SQUINY at me?—Malone quotes Armin, Nest of Ninnies (p. 6, ed. Shakes. Soc.): "The World, queasie stomackt, . . . squinyes at this, and looks as one scorning." Wright says the word is still used in Suffolk; and Furness adds that it is also used in America. Rolfe says: "We have heard a New England mother say to a boy, 'Don't squiny up your eyes.'"

[Apparently the word survives in Saxon. Parish in his Sussex Dialect gives: "Squinney: To squint; to pry about. According to Skeat there is a Suffolk form, squink.—A. W. V.]

371 Lines 157, 158: and, HANDY-DANDY, which is the jus-

tee, which is the thief?—Handy-dandy is a children's game, in which, by a sort of sleight of hand, a thing is passed quickly from one hand to the other. Douce quotes an old MS., A free discourse, &c.: "They . . . play with your majestie as men play with little children at handye dandye, which hand will you have, when they are disposed to keep any thinge from them."

372. Line 178: O, matter and IMPERTINENCY mis'd!—Douce says that impertinency "was not used in the sense of rude or unmannerly till the middle of the 17th century, nor in that of saucy until a considerable time afterwards."

373. Line 187: To this great STAGE of fools—It is curious to note how fond Shakespeare was of this comparison of the world to a theatre; cf. the famous passage in As You Like It, ii. 7. 139-142, with the note thereon. We have the same idea in Sonnet xv 1-3:

When I consider everything that grows
Holds in perfection but a little moment,
That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows.

—A W V

374. Line 187: This' a good block—This is a good block. The reading was suggested by Singer, and is adopted by Dyce, Wright, Furness, and Rolfe. Block is that on which a hat is shaped, and hence means fashion. "The editors generally adopt Capell's explanation here: that when Lear says he will preach, he takes off his hat, on which his eye happens to fall a moment after, starting another train of ideas. But, as Collier remarks, Lear probably had no hat on his head, but only his fantastic crown of weeds. Furness says that in Edwin Booth's Prompt Book, there is the stage direction, 'Lear takes Curan's hat;' which is certainly better than to suppose that he took his own" (Rolfe).

375. Lines 188, 189:

*It were a delicate stratagem to shoe
A troop of horse with felt.*

Malone says: "This 'delicate stratagem' had actually been put in practice fifty years before Shakespeare was born, as we learn from Lord Herbert's Life of Henry the Eighth, p. 41: 'the ladye Margaret, . . . caused there a juste to be held in an extraordinary manner; the place being a fore-room raised high from the ground by many steps, and paved with black square stones like marble; while the horses, to prevent sliding, were shod with felt or flocks (the Latin words are feltro sive tomento): after which the ladies danced all night.'"

376. Line 197: I am cut to the brains.—Clarke says: "This, one of the most powerfully, yet briefly expressed, utterances of mingled bodily pain and consciousness of mental infirmity ever penned, is not the only subtle indication in this scene that Lear not merely feels himself to be insane, but also feels acute physical suffering. 'I am not agree-proof' tells how severely shaken his poor old frame has been by exposure throughout that tempestuous night; 'pull off my boots; harder, harder,' gives evidence of a sensation of pressure and impeded circulation in the feet, so closely connected with injury to the brain; and 'I am cut to the brains' conveys the impression of wounded writhing within the head, that touches us with deepest sympathy. Yet, at the same time, there are the gay irrationality and the incoherency that mark this stage of mania."

377. Line 225: made TAME to fortune's blows—The Qq. have made lame by; and Malone compares Sonnet xxxvii. 3: "made lame by fortune's dearest spite."

378. Line 240: CHILL not let go.—In Grose's Provincial Glossary, chell is said to be used for I shall in Somerset and Devon, and chann for I am in Somerset. In Whetstone's Promos and Cassandra we find cham, chy, chause, chul (Wright). [Chill, of course = I will; cf. the following couplet from a song in Bullen's Elizabethan Lyrics (1887), p. 132:

Yet since their eyes make heart so sore,
Hey ho! chil love no more

Peele uses chould=I would in Sir Clyomon and Sir Clamides; and chave=I have:

Chave but one daughter, but chould not vor vorty pence she were zo sped —Dyce's Greene and Peele, p. 516.

One of the dramatis personæ, indeed, in that dreariest of pieces is A Shepherd Corin, and these contracted, provincial forms occur quite frequently in his speeches; see, for instance, page 515, where cham, chave, chill are found in three consecutive lines. Again, in the pseudo-Shakespearean play, The London Prodigal, there is "a Devonshire clothier," Oliver, whose speeches are full of dialectal eccentricities, such curious forms as we have noted above being repeated over and over again in the scenes where he is introduced.—A. W. V.]

379. Line 249: Out, dunghill!—Compare King John, iv. 3. 87:

Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

380. Line 254: the LETTERS which thou find'st about me.—Meaning a single letter, as in i. 5. 1 of this play. "Malone says it is used like the Latin epistolæ, but he probably meant litteræ, as epistolæ is a quasi-singular only in post-classical writers" (Rolle).

381. Line 256: the ENGLISH party.—The Qq. have British. The change, no doubt, was due to the union of the English and Scotch crowns in James I., through which, in course of time, British partially ousted English.

382. Line 260: Sit you down, FATHER.—Often used in addressing an old man, without reference to relationship. See note 136 of Merchant of Venice.

383. Line 264: LEAVE, gentle WAX.—Compare Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 102: "By your leave, wax;" and Cymbeline, iii. 2. 35, "Good wax, thy leave."—A. W. V.]

384. Line 278: O INDISTINGUISH'D SPACE of woman's will!—"O, unmarked, boundless range of woman's will!" (White); indistinguish'd is for indistinguishable. Theobald agreed that the fickleness of a woman is the point emphasized; what, however, really excites the wonder of Edgar is "the enormous wickedness of the plot which Goneril's letter revealed" (Wright).

ACT IV. SCENE 7.

385.—Line 16, for jarring, the Quartos have hurryng. Line 20, after this line Ff. have the stage-direction Enter Lear in a chaire carried by servants. Line 21, Qq. give this speech to Doct. Q. 1 assigns the next speech to Gent.,

Q. 2 to Kent. Ff. unite the two speeches, giving them to Gent. Lines 24, 25, Very well. . . . Louder the music there! not in the Folios. Line 32, for oppos'd Qq. read expos'd. Lines 33–36, To stand. . . . thin hehn, not in the Folios. Line 36, for enemy's Qq. read unworous, whence Capell conjectured unwore's. Line 40, In short, &c., some editors would read in dirt. Line 59, Ff. omit No, sir. Line 61, not an hour more nor less, not in the Quartos. Lines 79, 80, and yet. . . . has lost, omitted in the Folios; Qq. have cured for kull'd in line 79. Lines 85–98, Holds it. . . . battle's fought, not in Ff.

386. Line 7: These weeds are MEMORIES.—Memory=memorial, as in As You Like It, ii. 3. 2, 4:

O you memory
Of old Sir Roland.

So perhaps Sonnet lxxvi. 6:

Of mouth'd graves will give thee memory

—A. W. V.

387. Line 17: this CHILD-CHANGED father.—"Changed to a child," as Steevens, Schmidt, and Abbott (Grammar, § 430) explain it; or, perhaps, "changed by the conduct of his children," as Malone and Halliwell interpret.

388. Lines 24, 25:

Cor.

Very well.

Doct. Please you draw near.—Louder the music there!

Dr. Bucknill says (p. 222): "This seems a bold experiment, and one not unfringed with danger. The idea that the insane mind is beneficially influenced by music is, indeed, an ancient and general one; but that the medicated sleep of insanity should be interrupted by it, and that the first object presented to the consciousness should be the very person most likely to excite profound emotion, appear to be expedients little calculated to promote that tranquillity of the mental functions which is, undoubtedly, the safest state to induce, after the excitement of mania. A suspicion of this may have crossed Shakespeare's mind, for he represents Lear in imminent danger of passing into a new form of delusion."

389. Line 35: poor PERDU!—Shakespeare was probably thinking of the expression enfant perdu, of which Littré gives the following account, sub voce enfant: "Enfants perdus, soldats qui marchent, pour quelque entreprise extraordinaire, à la tête d'un corps de troupes commandé pour les soutenir; ainsi nommés parce que leur service est particulièrement périlleux. Cette location provient peut-être de los infantes expression espagnole, d'où est né le mot infanterie." Littré quotes a good (and very early) instance of the use of the expression from La Syrgie de maistre Lanfranc de Millan. Lanfranc, we may note, was born "vers le milieu du xiii^e siècle." Perdu in the above sense found its way into English and occurs not unfrequently. So in The Loyal Subject, i. 1, we find:

Puts. How stand you with him?

Theod. A perdu, captain.

—Beaumont and Fletcher, Dyce's ed. vol. vi. p. 9.

Compare, again, The Little French Lawyer, ii. 3:

I am set here like a perdu

To watch.

In the Woman's Prize, i. 4—"I'll stand perdu upon 'em"—the sense is different, there perdu=in ambush; see Dyce's

Beaumont and Fletcher, vol vii. p 124. Cotgrave has: "Enfans perdus Perdus, or the foillorne hope, of a campe;" and two instances from later seventeenth-century literature may be given: Cartwright's play, The Ordinary (1651), ii. 1:

as for perdus
Some choice sous's fish . . .
Shows how they he'r the field,
—Hazlitt's Dodsley, vol. xii. p. 235.

and Suckling's Goblins, iii. 1: "Come, call in our perdus "

—Hazlitt's ed. vol. ii p 33.

—A. W. V.

390 Line 41: 'Tis WONDER that thy life, &c.—Wonder = wonderful. The former, says Skeat, "is short for wonderly, adj. = A. S. Wonderlie, wonderful, the ly being dropped because it seemed like an adverbial ending." Wonder as an adjective is quite common in Chaucer; cf. the following instances: Prioress End-Link, 1881, 1882:

Whan seyð was al this miracle, every man
As sobre was, that wonder was to se'

The Squieres Tale, 247, 248:

that swich a wonder thing
Of craft of ringes herde they neuer non.
—Prioress Tale, &c., Skeat's ed. in Clarendon Press
Series, pp. 17 and 111

For wonder as an adverb, cf. the old Interlude, The World and The Child:

Wonder wide shall wax my fame.
—Dodsley, Hazlitt's ed. vol. i. p. 250

—A. W. V.

391. Lines 60-75: I am a very foolish fond old man . . . they have not.—Dr. Ray (American Journal of Insanity, April, 1847) says: "A more faithful picture of the mind, at the moment when it is emerging from the darkness of disease into the clear atmosphere of health restored, was never executed than this of Lear's recovery. Generally, recovery from acute mania is gradual, one delusion after another giving way, until, after a series of struggles, which may occupy weeks or months, between the convictions of reason and the suggestions of disease, the patient comes out a sound, rational man. In a small proportion of cases, however, this change takes place very rapidly. Within the space of a few hours or a day he recognizes his true condition, abandons his delusions, and contemplates all his relations in an entirely different light."

ACT V. SCENE 1.

392.—Lines 11-13, That thought . . . call hers, not in Ff. Lines 18, 19, not in Ff. Lines 23-28, Where I . . . speak nobly, not in Ff. Line 30, for and particular broils Qq. have the strange reading dore (or doore, or door) particulars. Line 33, omitted in the Folios.

393. Lines 25-27: It toucheth us, as France invades our land . . . causes make oppose.—Wright explains the passage thus: "Albany is marching against the French as invaders of his country, not as the supporters of Lear. France is the subject of bolds as well as of invades, and not it, the business, as Steevens explains it."

394. Line 82: With the ANCIENT OF WAR.—"Such as are grown old in the practice of the military art" (Eccles). Walker and Schmidt conjecture "ancient men of war."

Moberly thinks that an officer is meant, "the adjutant general, as we should say "

395. Line 37: I know the riddle.—"I understand your game; you want to keep watch of me" (Rolfé).

396. Line 61: carry out my SIDE.—Aldis Wright shows that side had a technical sense at cards; he quotes The Unnatural Combat, ii. 1:

And if now,
At this downright game, I may but hold your cards,
I'll not pull down the side.

—Cunningham's Massinger, p. 41.

—A. W. V.

397. Lines 68, 69:

for my state
Stands on me to defend, not to debate.

For it concerns me to defend my state, not to waste time in deliberation

ACT V. SCENE 2.

398. Line 1: the shadow of this TREE.—The Qq have bush.

399. Line 11: Ripeness is all.—Steevens compares Hamlet, v. 2. 232-234: "If it be now, 'tis not to come; if it be not to come, it will be now; if it be not now, yet it will come: the readiness is all "

ACT V. SCENE 3.

400. Line 2, for first Qq. have best. Lines 38, 39, I cannot . . . I'll do't; not in the Folios. Line 47, and appointed guard, omitted in Ff. Lines 54-59, At this time . . . fitter place, not in Ff. Line 70, That were, &c., Qq. assign the speech to Goneril. Line 81, for thine, Qq. have good; they give the line to Edmund. Line 83, in thine attain, so the Quartos; the Folios have in thy arrest. Line 93, for prove Ff. read make, that is, the proof. Line 96, the Quartos have poyson. Line 102, A herald, ho, a herald! not in the Folios. Line 109, Sound, trumpet! not in Ff. Line 111, for within the lists Qq. have in the hoast. Line 135, Qq. read Conspicuate. Line 137, below thy foot, Qq. have beneath thy feet. Line 170, for vices Qq. read Vertues; in the next line they have scourge instead of plague. Lines 204-221, all this is wanting in the Folios.

401. Line 17: As if we were GOD'S SPIES.—"As if we were angels commissioned to survey and report the lives of men, and consequently endowed with the power of prying into the original motives of action and the mysteries of conduct" (Johnson)

402. Lines 20-25: Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia . . . we'll see 'em starv'd first.—Dr. Bucknill says (p. 230): "This is not mania, but neither is it sound mind. It is the emotional excitability often seen in extreme age, as it is depicted in the early scenes of the drama, and it is precisely true to the probabilities of the mind's history, that this should be the phase of infirmity displaying itself at this moment. Any other dramatist than Shakespeare would have represented the poor old king quite restored to the balance and control of his faculties. The complete efficiency of filial love would have been made to triumph over the laws of mental function. But Shakespeare has represented the exact degree of improvement which was probable under the circumstances, namely, restoration from the intellectual mania which resulted from the combined influence of physical and moral shock, with persistence of the emotional excitement and disturbance which is the incurable and unalterable result of passion exaggerated by long habitude and by the malign influence of extreme age."

403. Line 23: And fire us hence like foxes.—"An allusion to the practice of forcing foxes out of their holes by fire" (Heath). There is no reference to Samson's foxes, as Upton supposed. Steevens quotes Harrington's translation of Ariosto (book xxviii st. 17):

Ev'n as a Foxe, whom smoke and fire doth fright,
So as he dare not in the ground remaine,
Bolts out, and through both smoke and fires he flieth
Into the Taners mouth, and there he dieth.

404. Line 24: The GOOD-YEARS shall devour them—See Much Ado, note 67. Here, at any rate, the reference is to the disease known as the Morbus Gallicus; probably we have the same allusion in Troilus and Cressida, v. 1. 18.—A. W. V.

405. Line 76: the walls are thine.—It is a question whether this is to be taken literally (referring to Regan's castle) or figuratively ("I surrender at discretion"). Warburton explains it in the latter way, Wright in the former. Theobald conjectured they all are thine, and Lettson Yea, all is thine.

406. Line 79: The let-alone lies not in your good will.—"Whether he shall not or shall, depends not on your choice" (Johnson).

407. Line 110: "If any man of quality or degree," &c.—For the formalities of the combat, compare Richard II i. 3.

408. Line 129: Behold, it is the PRIVILEGE OF MINE HONOURS.—The reading of Pope. The Qq. have the privilege of my tongue, and the Ff. my privilege, The privilege of mine honours.

409. Line 142: In wisdom I should ask thy name.—Because he could decline the combat if his opponent was not of equal rank with himself.

410. Line 144: some SAY of breeding.—See note 74.

411. Lines 145, 146:

*What safe and nicely I might well delay
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn.*

The delay which by the law of knighthood and the punctilios of chivalry I might make, I scorn to make. Safe and nicely is probably one of the cases in which the adverbial ending does double duty—safely and nicely. Compare Julius Cæsar, ii. i. 224: "look fresh and merrily." Safe, however, is occasionally an adverb in Shakespeare.

412. Line 151: Save him, save him!—Theobald gave this speech to Goneril, and Walker approves the change Johnson says: "Albany desires that Edmund's life may be spared at present, only to obtain his confession, and to convict him openly by his own letter."

413. Line 159: Most monstrous! OH!—The Qq. omit oh! but, as Furness says, it is the groan that breaks from Albany at the revelation of his wife's abandoned effrontery, and is as needful to the character as it is to the rhythm

414. Line 160: Ask me not what I know—The Qq. give this speech to Goneril. Knight refers to line 157 as proving that the Ff. are right. After saying, "I perceive you know it," Albany would not ask Goneril if she knew the paper.

415. Line 174: The wheel is come full circle.—Compare ii. 2. 180:

Fortune, good night: smile once more; turn thy wheel.
Wright quotes Twelfth Night, v. 1. 385.

416. Line 185: That we the pain of death would hourly die.—The Qq. have That with the pain, &c. Jennens, following them, changed would to w'd.

417. Lines 205–207:

*but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity.*

Rolfe remarks: "Malone takes this in opposition to such as love not sorrow, as if it were 'but another, less sensitive, would make,' &c. But, as Wright remarks, Steevens is right in referring it to what Edgar has yet to tell as the climax of his story. He understands but in the usual adversative sense. It seems better to take it as qualifying another, as if he said 'one more such circumstance only, by amplifying what is already too much, would add to it and so exceed what seemed to be the limit of sorrow.'"

418. Line 216: the STRINGS OF LIFE.—That is, the heart-strings. Compare Richard III. iv. 4. 364, 365:

K. Rich. Harp not on that string, madam; that is past.
Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I till heart-strings break.

—A. W. V.

419. Line 231: The JUDGMENT of the heavens.—The Qq. have Justice. Tyrwhitt says here: "If Shakespeare had studied Aristotle all his life, he would not perhaps have been able to mark with more precision the distinct operations of terror and pity."

420. Lines 250, 251:

take my sword;

Give it the captain.

Q. 1 inserts the Captain after sword; and Jennens reads thus:

Take my sword,
The captain—give it the captain.

421. Line 264: Fall, and cease!—"Fall, heavens, and let all things cease!" (Capell) Delius makes fall and cease nouns in apposition with horror; and this is approved by Moberly and Schmidt. It may be the right interpretation.

422. Line 265: This feather stirs; she lives!—Compare II. Henry IV iv. 5. 31–34:

By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather which stirs not;
Did he suppose, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move.

423. Lines 272, 273:

*Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low,—an excellent thing in woman.*

Moberly's comment is a happy one: "This wonderfully quiet touch seems to complete the perfection of Cordelia's character; evidently the poet's best loved creation, his type of the ideal Englishwoman. Her voice was the outward signature of her graciously tempered nature. Burke's description of his wife is a master's variation on Shakespeare's theme: 'Her eyes have a mild light, but they awe you when she pleases; they command, like a good man out of office, not by authority, but by virtue. Her smiles are inexpressible. Her voice is a soft, low music, not formed to rule in public assemblies, but to charm those who can distinguish a company from a crowd. It has this advantage, you must be close to her to hear it.'
191

424. Lines 276, 277:

*I have seen the day, with my good biting falchion
I would have made them skip*

Compare Merry Wives of Windsor, ii 1 235-237: "I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats." See, too, Othello, v. 2 261-264, for a precisely similar touch.—A. W. V.

425 Line 281: One of them WE beheld.—So Qq. and Ff. Jennens changed we to you; some editors read ye.

426. Line 282: This is a dull sight.—Jennens and Collier's Corrector have light, which Grant White also adopts.

427. Line 284: He's a good fellow.—"Lear's mind is again off its balance" (Wright). Theobald, not seeing this, chang'd He's to 'T'was, and He'll in the next line to He'd.

428 Line 290: Nor no man else.—There seems to be no satisfactory explanation of this except Capell's "Welcome, alas! here's no welcome for me or any one." It is natural at first to connect the words with Kent's last speech; but it would be false, as the Fool had also followed Lear from the first.

429. Line 297: this great decay.—Referring, probably, to "the collective misfortunes which this scene reveals;" (Delius, followed by Furness and Rolfe). Capell and Steevens think it refers to Lear—"this piece of decayed royalty, this ruined majesty."

430. Line 304: O, see, see!—These words are occasioned by seeing Lear again embrace the body of Cordelia (Capell).

431. Line 305: And my poor FOOL is hang'd!—As Steevens was the first to point out, the fool is Cordelia, not the Fool who went to bed at noon. Poor fool is found elsewhere as a term of pity or endearment. See Two Gentlemen of Verona, iv. 4. 98; Twelfth Night, v. i. 377;

III Henry VI. ii 5. 36; Winter's Tale, ii. 1 118; As You Like It, ii. 1. 22; &c. The editors, with the exception of Knight and one or two others, agree in this interpretation here. Furness, at the end of three pages of notes on the subject, says: "Very reluctantly I have come to the conviction that this refers to Cordelia." Rolfe adds: "We sympathize fully with his regret that it cannot be referred to Lear's 'poor fool and knave' (iii 2. 72), but to our mind the context settles the question beyond a doubt. There is no room for a divided sorrow here; Lear's thoughts can never wander more from his dead daughter."

432. Line 309: Pray you, undo this button. Thank you, sir—The Quarterly Review for April, 1833 (p. 177), remarks: "Scarcely have the spectators of this august anguish had time to mark and express to each other their conviction of the extinction of his mind, when some physical alteration, made dreadfully visible, urges Albany to cry out, 'O, see, see!' The intense excitement which Lear had undergone, and which lent for a time a supposititious life to his enfeebled frame, gives place to the exhaustion of despair. But even here, where any other mind would have confined itself to the single passion of parental despair, Shakespeare contrives to indicate by a gesture the very train of internal physical changes which are causing death. The blood gathering about the heart can no longer be propelled by its enfeebled impulse. Lear, too weak to relieve the impediments of his dress, which he imagines cause the sense of suffocation, asks a bystander to 'undo this button.'"

433 Line 314: this TOUGH world.—It has been asserted that some copies of Q. 2 have rough (as Q. 3 has); but, as Furness has satisfied himself, the supposed r is a broken t. Pope and sundry others read rough. Dyce said in his Remarks (p. 232): "Read, by all means, as Pope did, rough; but when he came to edit the play he adhered to the old text."

434. Lines 323-326: The weight of this sad time . . . nor live so long.—The Ff. (with Rowe, Delius, Schmidt, and Furness) give this speech to Edgar, though Schmidt thinks that the last two lines may be Albany's. Jennens called these last two lines "silly and false." Dyce says that the last line is "certainly obscure." Moberly remarks: "Age and fullness of sorrows have been the same thing to the unhappy Lear; his life has been prolonged into times so dark in their misery and so fierce in their unparalleled ingratitude and reckless passion, that even if we live as long as he has (which will hardly be), our existence will never light on days as evil as those which he has seen."

WORDS PECULIAR TO KING LEAR.

WORDS OCCURRING ONLY IN KING LEAR.

NOTE.—The addition of sub, adj, verb, adv. in brackets immediately after a word indicates that the word is used as a substantive, adjective, verb, or adverb only in the passage or passages cited.

The compound words marked with an asterisk (*) are printed as two separate words in F. 1.

Act Sc Line	Act Sc Line	Act Sc Line	Act Sc Line
Able (verb).... iv. 6 172	Cataracts iii. 2 2	Dowerless..... { i. 1 259	Halloo (interj) ul. 4 79
*A-cold iii. 4 60,	Chatter ⁵ iv. 6 104	Dragon ¹³ i. 2 143	Handy-dandy.. iv. 6 157
85, 152	Che ⁶ iv. 6 246	Dread-bolted .. iv. 7 33	Head-lugged .. iv. 2 42
Action-taking.. ii. 2 18	Cheerless v. 3 290	Ear-kissing ... ii. 1 9	Heart-struck .. iii. 1 17
Adulterers i. 2 137	Child ⁷ iii. 4 187	*Easy-borrowed .. ii. 4 188	Hedge-sparrow 1 4 235
Affectionate... iv. 6 276	Child-changed. iv. 7 17	Elbows (verb) . iv. 3 44	Hell-black iii. 7 60
Ague-proof ... iv. 6 108	Childed..... iii. 6 117	*Eldest-born .. i. 1 55	Hell-hated v. 3 147
*A-height.... iv. 6 58	Chill ⁸ iv. 6 239,	Elf (verb) ii. 3 10	Hewgh iv. 6 93
Aidant iv. 4 17	248, 250	*Empty-hearted i. 1 155	High-engendered iii. 2 23
All-licensed.... i. 4 220	Chud ⁹ iv. 6 243	Enguard i. 4 349	High-grown... iv. 4 7
All-shaking ... iii. 2 6	Cock ¹⁰ iii. 2 3	Enormous..... ii. 2 176	High-judging .. ii. 4 231
Angler iii. 6 8	Cock ¹¹ iv. 6 19	Enrridged..... iv. 6 71	*Honest-hearted i. 4 20
Antipathy..... ii. 2 93	Cohorts i. 2 162	Epicurism i. 4 265	Honoured ¹⁸ ... v. 1 9
Arch ¹ ii. 1 61	Compeers (verb) v. 3 69	Epileptic ii. 2 87	Horseway..... iv. 1 58
*A-squint v. 3 72	Conductor.... iv. 7 88	Essay ¹⁴ i. 2 47	Hot-blooded ¹⁹ . ii. 4 215
Astronomical .. i. 2 105	Conjunct..... v. 1 12	*Ever-gentle .. iv. 6 221	Houseless..... iii. 4 20, 30
Auricular i. 2 99	Conspirant ... v. 3 135		Hovel (verb)... iv. 7 39
Avert..... i. 1 214	Corky..... iii. 7 29		iii. 2 61,
	Cow-dung iii. 4 137		Hovel (sub) ... { 71, 78
Ballow..... iv. 6 247	Cowish..... iv. 2 12		iii. 4 179
Barber-monger li. 2 36	Cruels (sub.)... iii. 7 65		*Hundred-pound ii. 2 17
Bare-gnawn ... v. 3 122	Cub-drawn i. 1 13		Hurtless iv. 6 170
Bastardizing... i. 2 144	*Cuckoo-flowers iv. 4 4
Beggar-man ... iv. 1 31	Cullionly ii. 2 36		Immediacy v. 3 65
Belly-pinched. iii. 1 13			Impertinency.. iv. 6 178
Bemadding iii. 1 38	*Dark-eyed.... ii. 1 121		Improper v. 3 221
Bemet v. 1 20	Death-practised iv. 6 284		*In-a-door..... i. 4 138
Be-monster.... iv. 2 63	Deer ¹² iii. 4 144		Indisposed ii. 4 112
Bench (vb. int.) iii. 6 40	Depositaries .. ii. 4 254		Indistinguished iv. 6 278
Besort (verb) .. i. 4 272	Depraved (adj.) ii. 4 139		Interested..... i. 1 87
Bethought (adj.) ii. 3 6	Derides i. 1 284		Intrinsc ii. 2 81
Bitch ² ii. 2 24	Derogate (adj.) i. 4 302		Jakes ii. 2 71
Black (adv.)... ii. 4 162	Desery (sub.).. iv. 6 217		Justification .. i. 2 46
Blanket (verb). ii. 3 10	Detector iii. 5 14
Bluntness..... ii. 2 102	Disbranch..... iv. 2 34		Lameness ²⁰ ... ii. 4 166
Boarish..... iii. 7 58	Discernings (sub) i. 4 248		Leak (sub)..... iii. 6 28
Bobtail..... iii. 6 73	Discommend .. ii. 2 116		Lecher (verb).. iv. 6 115
Bolds (verb)... v. 1 26	Dislocate iv. 2 65		*Let-alone v. 3 79
Bo-peep i. 4 193	Disnated i. 4 305		Lethargied i. 4 249
Bordered iv. 2 33	Disquantity... i. 4 270		Loathly (adv.) . ii. 1 51
Bosomed v. 1 13	Disquietly.... i. 2 124		*Long-engrafted i. 1 301
Bourn ³ iii. 6 27	Dissipation ... i. 2 162		Looped iii. 4 31
Brazen-faced .. ii. 2 30	Ditch-dog..... iii. 4 138		Loosen v. 1 19
Buoy (sub) iv. 6 19	Dizzy (adj.)... iv. 6 12		Louse (verb) .. iii. 2 29
Buoyed iii. 7 60	Do de { iii. 4 59		Lust-dieted.... iv. 1 70
Burdocks iv. 4 4	iii. 6 77		Lym iii. 6 72
Buzz (sub) i. 4 348	Dog-hearted... iv. 3 47		Machination .. { i. 2 123
	Dowered i. 1 207		v. 1 46
Cadent..... i. 4 807			Main ²¹ (sub)... iii. 1 6
Canker-bit..... v. 3 122
Carbuncle ⁴ ... ii. 4 227

1 = master.
2 = applied to a human being.
3 = a brook; used several times
= boundary, limit.
4 = a gangrenous ulcer.

5 = to make a noise with the teeth. 6 = I.
7 = a young knight.
8 = I will. 9 = I would.
10 = weathercock.
11 = cockboat.
12 = any animal; frequently used in its ordinary sense.

13 = the constellation; elsewhere used in its other sense.
14 Sonn. cx. 8.
15 = confirmed, hardened.
16 Occurs also in Henry V. v. 2. 45.
17 = spur (of the moment); used literally in Titus And. iv. 1. 103.

18 = virtuous; used elsewhere in other senses.
19 = rash; = amorous, Merry Wives, v. 5. 2.
20 Sonn. lxxxix. 8.
21 = the earth; used elsewhere in other senses.

WORDS PECULIAR TO KING LEAR.

	Act	Sc.	Line		Act	Sc.	Line		Act	Sc.	Line		Act	Sc.	Line
Maledictions . . .	i.	2	160	Perdu	iv.	7	35	Self-covered . .	iv.	2	62	Terrible ²³	i.	2	32
Malt	iii.	2	82	Perpendicularly	iv.	6	54	Self-reproving ¹⁷	v.	1	4	Theban	iii.	4	162
Marble-hearted .	i.	4	281	Perpetual (adv.)	i.	1	63	Self-subdued . .	ii.	2	129	Thought-executing	ii.	4	2
Material ¹	iv.	2	35	Persecutions . .	ii.	3	12	Serpent-like . . .	ii.	4	163	Three-suited . . .	ii.	2	16
Meiny	ii.	4	35	Pew	iii.	4	55	Sharp-toothed .	ii.	4	137	Thunder-bearer	ii.	4	230
Menaces (sub.)	i.	2	160	Pilferings . . .	ii.	2	151	Shealed	i.	4	219	Thwart (adj.) . .	i.	4	405
Midway (adj.) .	iv.	6	13	Pillock	iii.	4	78	She-foxes	iii.	6	24	Tithing (sub.) .	iii.	4	130
Munikin	iii.	6	45	*Plague-sore . .	ii.	4	227	Shrill-gorged . .	iv.	6	58	Toad-spotted . .	v.	3	13
Misconstruction	ii.	2	124	Player ²	i.	4	96	Side-piercing . .	iv.	6	85	Tranced	v.	3	218
Mist (verb) . . .	v.	3	262	Plighted ¹⁰ (sub.)	i.	1	103	*Simple-answered	ii.	7	43	Treachers	i.	2	136
Moistened ³ . .	iv.	3	33	Plighted ¹¹ . . .	i.	1	283	Simular ¹⁵ (sub.)	iii.	2	54	Trilled	iv.	2	12
Monopoly	i.	4	107	Ponder	iii.	4	23	Sizes ¹⁹	ii.	4	178	*Tumble-tail	iii.	6	73
Monthly (adj.) .	i.	1	134	Precipitating . .	iv.	6	50	Slaves (verb) . .	iv.	1	71	Turlygod	ii.	3	20
Moonshmes ³ . .	i.	2	5	Press-money . .	iv.	6	87	Slenderly	i.	1	297	Unaccommodated	iii.	4	112
Mopping (verb)	iv.	1	64	Propinquity . .	i.	1	116	Slphod	i.	5	12	Unboited	ii.	2	71
Mortar	ii.	2	71	Questrists . . .	iii.	7	17	Smile (verb tr)	ii.	2	88	Unfed	iii.	4	30
Mother ⁴	ii.	4	56	Raggedness . .	iii.	4	31	Smilets	iv.	3	21	Unfee'd	i.	4	142
Mun	iii.	4	103	Rain-water . . .	iii.	2	11	Soiled ²⁰	iv.	6	124	Unfitness	i.	4	356
*New-adopted .	i.	1	206	Rebel-like . . .	iv.	3	16	Sojourn (sub.) .	i.	1	48	Unmerciful . . .	iii.	7	38
Night-mare . . .	iii.	4	126	Reciprocal . . .	iv.	6	267	Sophisticated . .	iii.	4	111	Unnaturalness .	i.	2	157
Nine-fold	iii.	4	126	Remediate . . .	iv.	4	17	Sprigs	ii.	3	16	Unpossessing . .	ii.	1	69
Numbed ⁵	ii.	3	15	Reposal	ii.	1	70	Squams	iii.	4	122	Unprized	i.	1	262
Nursery ⁶	i.	1	126	Reproveable . .	iii.	5	9	Squiny	iv.	6	140	Unpublished . .	iv.	4	16
O7	i.	4	212	Restoration . .	iv.	7	26	Squire-like	ii.	4	217	Unquietly	iii.	1	2
Oak-cleaving . .	iii.	2	5	Reversb	i.	1	156	Star-blasting . .	iii.	4	61	Unremovable . .	ii.	4	94
Observants . . .	ii.	2	109	Riched	i.	1	65	Stelled ²¹	iii.	7	61	Unsignly	ii.	4	289
O'erskip	iv.	6	118	Rivalled	i.	1	194	Sterility	i.	4	300	Unspoke	i.	1	289
Offensive ⁸ . . .	iv.	2	11	Robed	iii.	6	38	Stocking ²² . . .	{	ii.	2	139	Untended	i.	4	322
Old (sub.) . . .	iii.	4	125	Roguish	iii.	7	104	Stalled ²¹	{	ii.	4	191	Unwhipped . . .	iii.	2	63
Oldness	i.	2	51	Rotundity . . .	iii.	2	7	Stock-punished	iii.	4	141	Upward (sub.) .	v.	3	136
One-trunk-inheriting	ii.	2	20	Roughness . . .	ii.	2	103	Stone-cutter . .	ii.	2	63	Vary (sub.) . . .	ii.	2	85
Operative	iv.	4	14	*Round-wombed	i.	1	14	Strangered . . .	i.	1	207	Vaunt-couriers	iii.	2	5
Opposeless . . .	iv.	6	38	Rubbed ¹²	ii.	2	161	Sub-contracted .	v.	3	86	Vermin	iii.	4	164
Out-frown	v.	3	6	Rumble	iii.	2	14	Subscription . .	iii.	2	18	Wagtail	ii.	2	73
Out-jest	iii.	1	16	Sa (exclam.) . .	iv.	6	207	Summoners . . .	iii.	2	59	Wall-newt	iii.	4	135
Outlawed	iii.	4	172	Sampire	iv.	6	15	Sumpter	ii.	4	219	Water-newt . . .	iii.	4	136
Out-paramoured	iii.	4	95	Sapient	iii.	6	24	Superflux	iii.	4	35	Water-pots . . .	iv.	6	200
Out-scorn	iii.	1	10	Saucily ¹³	{	i.	22	Superserviceable	ii.	2	19	Waved ²⁴	iv.	6	71
Out-wall	iii.	1	45	Savour (verb tr.)	iv.	2	39	Suspend	{	i.	87	Wawl	iv.	6	184
				Say ¹⁴ (sub.) . . .	v.	3	143	Suum	iii.	4	103	Waywardness . .	i.	1	302
Pantingly	iv.	3	23	Scattered ¹⁵ . .	iii.	1	41	Tardiness	i.	1	238	Weakens (verb int.)	i.	4	248
*Parel	iv.	1	51	Sectary ¹⁶	i.	2	164	Tender-hefted . .	ii.	4	174	Whelked	iv.	6	71
Paternal	i.	1	115					*Tender-minded	v.	3	31	Whirlpool	iii.	4	53
Pendulous . . .	iii.	4	69

1 = nourishing.
2 Lucrece, 1227.
3 = months; used several times
= moonlight
4 = hysteric passion.
5 Venus and Adonis, 893.
6 = tender care; four times
used in other senses.
7 = the arithmetical cipher.
8 = displeasing, disagreeable.

9 (in a game);=idler, Othello,
 ii. 1. 113; frequently used =an actor.
 10 =troth; frequently used= state, condition.
 11 =folded, secret.
 12 =hindered, crossed.
 13 Lucrece, 1348.
 14 =assay, proof.
 15 =divided, unsettled.
 16 =a disciple.

17 Printed as one word in F. 1.
18 = simulator; used as an adj.
in Cymbeline, v. 5. 200.
19 = allowances; frequently used elsewhere in other senses.
20 = high-fed.
21 = starry, fixed; Lucrece, 1444;
Sonn. xxiv. 1.
22 Putting in the stocks.

23 = affrighted; frequently used elsewhere in its ordinary sense.
24 = indented.
25 = full of holes.

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

ANTIOCHUS, King of Antioch.
 PERICLES, Prince of Tyre.
 HELICANUS, } two lords of Tyre.
 ESCANES, }
 SIMONIDES, king of Pentapolis.
 CLEON, governor of Tarsus.
 LYSIMACHUS, governor of Mytilene.
 CERIMON, a lord of Ephesus.
 THALIARD, a lord of Antioch.
 PHILEMON, servant to Cerimon.
 LEONINE, servant to Dionyza.
 Marshal.

A Pander.
 BOULT, his servant.
 Three Fishermen.
 Two Sailors.

 A Princess, daughter to Antiochus.
 DIONYZA, wife to Cleon.
 THAISA, daughter to Simonides.
 MARINA, daughter to Pericles and Thaisa.
 LYCORIDA, nurse to Marina.
 A Bawd.

Lords, Ladies, Virgins, Knights, Gentlemen, Squires, Citizens, Sailors, Pirates, Messengers, Servants, and other Attendants.

DIANA.
 GOWER, as Chorus.

SCENE—Dispersedly about the borders of the eastern Mediterranean.

HISTORIC PERIOD: Early part of the second century, B.C.

TIME OF ACTION, as given by Mr. Daniel.¹

A period of from 15 to 16 years, of which 14 days are represented on the stage: the chief intervals are accounted for in the choruses.

Day 1: Act I. Scene 1.—Interval.
 Day 2: Act I. Scenes 2 and 3.—Interval.
 Day 3: Act I. Scene 4.—Interval. 2d Chorus.
 Day 4: Act II. Scene 1.
 Day 5: Act II. Scenes 2 to 4.
 Day 6: Act II. Scene 5.—Interval. 3d Chorus.
 Day 7: Act III. Scene 1.
 Day 8: Act III. Scene 2.—Interval.
 Day 9: Act III. Scenes 3 and 4.—Interval, 14 years.
 4th Chorus.

Day 10: Act IV. Scene 1.—Interval.
 Day 11: Act IV. Scenes 2 and 3.—Interval. 5th
 Chorus (Act IV. Sc. 4).
 Day 12: Act IV. Scenes 5 and 6.—Interval. 6th
 Chorus.
 Day 13: Act V. Scene 1.—Interval. 7th Chorus
 (Act V. Sc. 2).
 Day 14: Act V. Scene 3.

¹ In the Qq. no "Acts and Scenes" are marked: but the Gower choruses distinctly divide the drama into seven acts. The division into five acts in F. 3 is quite arbitrary. Malone improved on it; but keeping to five acts he was compelled to cram the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th chorus-divisions into his acts iv. and v., and in so doing has marked the 5th and 7th choruses as scenes, which they are not: and of course, therefore, cannot be so reckoned when the number of days of the action represented on the stage is the object in view. Malone's division, however, has been followed by all subsequent editors, and, for convenience of reference to the standard editions, and in accordance with our plan, has necessarily been adopted here also.

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

INTRODUCTION.

LITERARY HISTORY.

Two quarto editions (Q. 1, Q. 2) of this play were published in the year 1609, both having the following title-page: "THE LATE, | And much admired Play, | Called | Pericles, Prince | of Tyre | With the true Relation of the whole Historie, | adventures, and fortunes of the said Prince: | As also, | The no lesse strange, and worthy accidents, | in the Birth and Life, of his Daughter | MARIANA. | As it hath been diuers and sundry times acted by | his Maiesties Seruants, at the Globe on | the Banck-side. | By William Shakespeare. | Imprinted at London for Henry Gosson, and are | to be sold at the signe of the Sunne in | Pater-noster row, &c."

It was formerly supposed that Q. 1 and Q. 2 belonged to one and the same edition, and that the numerous differences between the copies were due to corrections made during the printing; but careful examination shows that, as the Cambridge editors have pointed out, there were two separate editions, Q. 2 being printed from Q. 1. See, for instance, iii. 1. 4-6, where Q. 1 reads:

ô still

Thy deafning dreadfull thunders, gently quench
Thy nimble sulphurous flashes.

Q. 2 prints O, and sulphurous, and for gently it reads dayly. So, again, in iii. 3. 18, 19, the text in Q. 1 stands thus:

your Grace,

That fed my Countrie with your Corne; for which,
The peoples prayers still fall vpon you;

while Q. 2 substitutes dayly for still. Other varieties are given in the course of the notes, showing the superiority of the text of Q. 1.

A third edition (Q. 3), "Printed at London by S. S.," appeared in 1611, and in 1619 another (Q. 4), "Printed for T. P[avier]," of piratical renown; the signatures of this last show it to have been a continuation of the same volume which contained The Whole Contention between the two Houses, Lancaster and Yorke (see II. Henry VI., Introduction, p. 176) In this Quarto there are a number of conjectural emendations.

On August 4, 1626, Pavier's widow assigned to Edward Brewster and Robert Birde "Master Paviers right in Shakespeares plaies or any of them" (Stationers' Registers, Arber's Reprint, iv. 164, 165); the next edition, in 1630, was "Printed by I. N[orton] for R. B[irde] and are to be sould | at his shop in Cheapside, at the signe of the | Bible." This edition (Q. 5) is very incorrect.

Another edition (Q. 6) was printed in 1635 from Q. 4, "at London by Thomas Cotes." Bird had assigned "Persiles" and other Shakespearian plays to Richard Cotes on November 8, 1630.

In 1664, Pericles was reprinted in the third Folio; it is there paged separately from what precedes, and also from the six additional plays that follow it. Earlier editions of these six plays bear Shakespeare's name, or initials, on their title-pages, but they are almost universally regarded as spurious.

The exclusion of Pericles from the first Folio at once casts a doubt on its genuineness. Pope rejected it from his edition, and was followed by subsequent editors until Malone. It is, however, spoken of as Shakespeare's by two or three writers of the time. In 1646 S. Sheppard wrote, in The Times displayed in Six Sestiyads (quoted in Centurie of Prayse, 2nd ed. p. 261):

with Sophocles we may

Compare great Shakespeare; Aristophanes

Never like him his Fancy could display;

Witness the Prince of Tyre, his Pericles.

J. Tatham, in commendatory lines prefixed to Brome's Jovial Crew, 1652 (Centurie, ut supra,

p. 295), mentions that a faction of that time would say:

Shakespeare, the Plebeian Driller, was Founder'd in's Pericles, and must not pass.

And Dryden, in his Prologue to Davenant's
Circe, 1675, says:

Shakespeare's own Muse her Pericles first bore,
The Prince of Tyre was elder than the Moore:
'Tis miracle to see a first good play
All Hawthorns do not bloom on Christmas-day.

That Shakespeare had a share in the composition is now generally acknowledged. The text is by far the most corrupt of all his plays; it was put together, most likely, from shorthand notes made surreptitiously during a performance, and abounds in blunders and omissions. But in the latter part we can plainly discern Shakespeare's hand. Some critics, to account for the general weakness of construction in the play, have assumed, as Dryden did, that it was an early work; but Hallam rightly pointed out that the language is that of Shakespeare's later manner. The play should be divided, as by Sidney Walker and Mr. Fleay,¹ into three portions: the last three acts, excluding Gower's speeches and the prose scenes (iv. 2, 5, 6), are to be assigned to Shakespeare; the prose scenes in act iv., together with Gower's two speeches immediately preceding and following scenes 5 and 6, all in style and contents quite disconnected from the rest of the play, were probably written by William Rowley; while the remaining speeches of Gower in their stiffness and obscurity agree closely with the contents of acts i. and ii. Nearly all the rhyming lines in the play (outside of Gower's speeches) occur in these two acts, which Mr. Fleay and Mr. R. Boyle, following a suggestion of Delius, attribute to George Wilkins. This writer is connected with our play in another way; a tale, based upon its incidents, was published by him in 1608, with the title: "THE | Painfull Adventures | of Pericles Prince of | Tyre. | Being | The true History of the Play of Pericles, as it was | lately presented by the worthy and an- | cient Poet John Gower. | AT

¹ See New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1874, p. 200, &c.

LONDON | Printed by T. P. for Nat: Butter.² Wilkins was author of a play, The Miseries of Enforced Marriage, produced at the Globe, and published in 1607; and joint author, with John Day and William Rowley, of another play, The Travels of the Three English Brothers, published in the same year, but performed by the Queen's players at the Curtain. In both these plays we can see the same use of borrowed figures, harsh ellipses and inversions, and even false rhymes, as in the former part of Pericles. The Travels also introduces the artifice of a Chorus, whose speeches, occasionally interspersed with dumb-shows, connect the scenes together and explain the story, just like Gower's speeches in the present play. We conclude, as Mr. Fleay does, that Shakespeare left his work unfinished, and that it was put into the hands of others to complete for the stage. Rowley and Wilkins had just been collaborating with Day to fit up a rambling sort of play out of a book of adventure; they now in the same fashion added scenes and shows to what Shakespeare had written.

The date of the play is fixed as not later than 1608 by the appearance in that year of Wilkins's novel. On May 20th of the same year "The booke of Pericles prince of Tyre" was entered on the Stationers' Registers by Edward Blount, afterwards one of the publishers of the first Folio. We have seen that the play was ultimately published elsewhere, and in an unauthorized version. I cannot agree with Mr. Fleay (Introduction to Shakespearean Study, p. 28) that in The Puritan, which was acted in 1606, the scene of Thaisa's restoration (iii. 2) is "palpably imitated." Certainly the internal evidence would lead us to put the composition of Shakespeare's part of the play in or about 1608; after Antony and Cleopatra, Coriolanus, and Timon, and before Cymbeline and The Tempest. To account for the supposed allusion in The Puritan Mr. Fleay now assumes (Chronicle History, pp. 156, 243, 245) that Wilkins wrote a play of Pericles in 1606, in which Shakespeare's version of the Marina story was afterwards substituted—

² The references in the notes to this novel of Wilkins's are to the Reprint, edited by Professor Tycho Mommsen, Oldenburg, 1857.

INTRODUCTION.

probably without the consent of either Wilkins or Shakespeare. It is true, as Mr. Fleay observes, that Shakespeare's part of the play is not closely reproduced in Wilkins's novel; but I do not think this justifies his theory. Much of the novel is simply borrowed from Lawrence Twine's story (on which the play was partly founded), and its version even of Wilkins's own share of the play is not exact; but several fragments of Shakespeare's part are embedded in it.

The story of Apollonius, King of Tyre, on which the plot is founded, is supposed to have been written in Greek before the fifth century A.D.; the earliest extant version is a Latin one, probably made soon after that date. It is edited by A. Riese in Teubner's series (1871). During the middle ages the story was translated into several languages, and a version of it found its way into the Gesta Romanorum. It appears in English verse in the eighth book of the Confessio Amantis of John Gower, who professes to have taken it from that version of the story which, in the twelfth century, Godfrey of Viterbo inserted in his Pantheon or chronicle. A translation of the Latin story was made by Lawrence Twine, under the title (afterwards copied by Wilkins) of The Patterne of Paynfull Aduentures; this was entered on the Stationers' Registers in 1576 (Arber, ut supra, ii. 301), but the earliest known edition of it is supposed to have been published about 1595. It was reissued in 1607. The play of Pericles is mainly based on Gower, but Twine's story appears to have been occasionally used.

STAGE HISTORY.

That Pericles was seen on the stage of the Globe Theatre in 1608, when it was given by the King's company of players, is conceded by commentators who agree on few other points concerning the play. It was received with favour, evidences of its success being found in contemporary dramas. In "Pimlyco or Runne Red-Cap. Tis a mad world at Hogsdon," 1609, the anonymous author writes:

Amazde I stood, to see a Crowd
Of Civill Throats stretchd out so lowd;
(As at a New-play) all the Roomes
Did swarm with Gentiles mix'd with Groomes

So that I truly thought all These Came to see Shore or Pericles;

and in Robert Tailor's "The Hogge hath lost his Pearle" the last two lines of the prologue are:

And if it prove so happy as to please,
Weele say 't is fortunate like Pericles.

Ben Jonson's well-known allusion to some mouldy tale

Like Pericles,

bears direct if grudging testimony to its popularity. It seems, however, to have caused some opposition, unless the lines in Owen Feltham's answer to Ben Jonson in his Lusoria or Occasional Pieces, added to the eighth edition of his Resolves, 1661,

do displease
As deep as Pericles, must be taken as referring to Jonson's own petulant show of discontent.

Dryden, it is known, would assign an earlier date to Pericles, speaking of it as the first in date of the poet's works; but Dryden's evidence on such matters is of slight value.

Sir Gerrard Herbert, writing on the 24th of May (O.S.) 1619, relates that "the play of Pirrocles, Prince of Tyre" was played the previous week before the marquis Tremouille and other French Lords at Whitehall in the king's great chamber. (See Fresh Allusions to Shakspeare, ed. for New Shakspeare Society, pp. 83, 84).

A revival of Pericles is recorded in 1631, under which date the office-book of Sir Henry Herbert, the Master of the Revels, notes: "Received of Mr. Benfelde, in the name of the kings company, for a gratuity for ther liberty gaind unto them of playinge, upon the cessation of the plague, this 10 of June, 1631—3*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*—This was taken upon Pericles at the Globe."

Allusions to the value of Pericles are frequent in subsequent literature; but the play escaped the manglers of Restoration days only to encounter a neglect almost unprecedented in the case of any other work in which the hand of Shakespeare can be indubitably traced. It was one of the plays revived at the Cock Pit in Drury Lane by the company formed by Rhodes the bookseller, sometime, it is supposed, wardrobe-keeper to the company of comedians of King Charles the First in Blackfriars, and was probably played, in 1659, previous to the Restoration. Of Betterton, then but twenty-two years old, who played Pericles, Downes says he "was highly Applauded for his Acting in all these Plays, but especially, For the Loyal Subject; The Mad Lover; Pericles; The Bondman; Deflores in the Changling; his Voice being then as Audibly strong, full and Articulate, as in the Prime of his Acting" (Roscius Anglicanus, p. 18).

Women had then not made a regular appearance on the stage, and it is probable that Marina was played by Kynaston, of whom Downes records that he played many women's parts, and "being then very Young made a Compleat Female Stage Beauty, performing his Parts so well, especially Arthiope and Aglaura, being Parts, greatly moving Compassion and Pity; that it has since been Disputable among the Judicious, whether any Woman that succeeded him so Sensibly touch'd the Audience as he" (Ibid. p. 19). Plausible as is this view, it is, however, conjectural. Something stronger than mere conjecture justifies the assignment to Mosely and Floid of two of the characters taking part in the opening of act iv. sc. 5, Downes, after giving the list of six players who commonly acted women's parts, having a note to the effect that Mosely and Floid commonly acted parts of the description introduced in this scene (Roscius Anglicanus, pp. 18, 19). From this time forward until near two centuries later, when it was included in the famous series of revivals under the Phelps and Greenwood management at Sadler's Wells, Pericles was practically banished from the stage. In the index to the stupendous chronicle of Genest the name only appears with a reference to another play.

Doubts as to the part that Shakespeare had in its composition began at an early period. Johnston and Steevens omit it from their edition of Shakespeare. Malone gives it only in a supplement, and Dyce even includes it with The Two Noble Kinsmen in a concluding volume. It is futile, however, to suppose that doubts as to authorship had any more to do with its banishment from the stage than had squeamishness with regard to the scenes exhibited. Strange, indeed, would have been any dubiety as to the teaching of Pericles on the part of a public that tolerated Limberham and hailed the Relapse with rapture.

On 1st August, 1738, at Covent Garden, was given Marina, a three-act adaptation of Pericles, the responsibility for which falls upon George Lillo. More justification than could be pleaded by Dryden or D'Avenant for meddling with Shakespeare's work could be put forward by Lillo, whose treatment was the most trenchant that has often been adopted in a similar case. Cutting off the first three acts, he confines the action to the sorrows of Marina. His vindication of this course is furnished in the opening lines of a long prologue the homage to Shakespeare in which is at least as sincere as that of Dryden, Settle, or Tate.

Hard is the task, in this discerning age,
To find new subjects that will bear the stage;
And bold our bards, their low harsh strains to bring
Where Avon's swan has long been heard to sing;
Blest parent of our scene! whose matchless wit,
Tho' yearly reap'd, is our best harvest yet.
Well may that genius every heart command,
Who drew all Nature with her own strong hand;
As various, as harmonious, fair and great,
With the same vigour and immortal heat;
As thro' each element and form she shines:
We view heav'n's hand-maid in her Shakespeare's
lines.

Though some mean scenes, injurious to his fame,
Have long usurp'd the honour of his name;
To glean and clear from chaff his least remains,
Is just to him, and richly worth our pains.
We dare not charge the whole unequal play
Of Pericles on him; yet let us say,
As gold though mix'd with baser matter shines
So do his bright inimitable lines.

Throughout those rude wild scenes distinguish'd
stand

And shew he touch'd them with no sparing hand.

—Lillo's Works, ii. 61, ed. 1775.

Portions of this apology or explanation may be allowed to pass. Apart from the sufficiently apparent fact that most of the early scenes were by an inferior hand, it is difficult to interest the public in an action extending over a long space of time and embracing many sets of characters. Five more lines from the same preface show the treatment adopted:—

INTRODUCTION.

With humour mix'd in your fore-fathers way,
We've to a single tale reduc'd our play.
Charming Marina's wrongs begin the scene;
Pericles finding her with his lost queen,
Concludes the pleasing task.

Lillo's alterations are necessarily not confined to omissions. In order to render the whole consecutive and intelligible, he is compelled to make considerable additions to the text. Some of these are fairly in keeping with the later portion of Pericles. The extreme grossness of certain scenes is modified, but some silly matter is introduced. On the impropriety of calling a Greek character Mother Coupler Genest comments. He passes over, however, the corresponding absurdity of making a character outside the shrine of Diana swear by Old Nick. It may, of course, be granted that the poet who peopled the Athenian glades with Bottom the Weaver, Flute the Bellows-mender, and their associates, and showed us in Illyria characters such as Sir Andrew Aguecheek and Sir Toby Belch, would not have hesitated at the anachronisms of which Lillo is guilty, but different days had then been reached. The cast, then, of Marina is as follows:—

Pericles (King of Tyre)=Stephens.

Bolt (a pandar)=Pinkethman.

Lysimachus (governor of Ephesus)=Hallam.

Leonine (a young lord of Tharsus)=Stevens.

Escanes (chief attendant on Pericles)=Shelton.

Valdes (captain of a crew of pirates)=Bowman.

Marina (daughter to Pericles and Thaisa)=Mrs. Vincent.

Philoten (Queen of Tharsus)=Mrs. Hamilton.

Thaisa (Queen of Tyre)=Mrs. Marshall.

Mother Coupler (a bawd)=Mr. W. Hallam.

Gentlemen, two Priestesses, Ladies, Officers, Guards, Pirates, and Attendants.

Most of these characters explain themselves. Cleon and Helicanus are among those who are heard of, not seen, and Philoten answers in part to Dionyza, whose daughter she is. The mother is dead, and the daughter is jealous of the beauty of Marina, which deprives Philoten, now, by the death of her parents, Queen of Tarsus, of the admiration of the suitors who throng her court. By the promise of her hand she bribes Leonine, a young lord, to the murder of Marina, in the attempt at which he is, as in the original, foiled by the arrival of the pirates. After the departure of Pericles, who believes in the tale he is told, Philoten refuses to fulfil her promise to Leonine, whose death by poison she brings about. Before he expires, however, Leonine has strength to stab the queen and reveal her misdeeds to certain of the court. Gower the Poet, whose authorship of a version of the story caused his introduction into the earlier play, disappears from the later. Much of his narration is interpreted in action, as well as words, and the Dumb Show (act iv. sc. 3) is turned into dialogue. Considerable change is made in the third act, the conclusion being brought before the public in the Temple of Diana. Among adaptations of Shakespeare Marina is entitled to a fairly respectable place. It is, however, overpraised by Genest. No scene so strong as that in which Dionyza reveals to Creon her supposed murder of Marina (act iv. sc. 3) is retained, but the play is touching on perusal, and would probably prove fairly effective in representation. It was acted but three times. For this the lateness of the season and the weakness of the cast may perhaps be held responsible. Mrs. Marshall is not to be confounded with her distinguished predecessor, nor Mrs. Hamilton with her celebrated successor. Mrs. Vincent was an actress of no great merit. W. Hallam, who played Mother Coupler, was seldom seen on the English stage. He was a Whitechapel victualler, who was gazetted a bankrupt in 1745, and subsequently (1752) went to America, where he was, according to Dunlap, "the father of the American stage." This position is disputed by Mr. George O. Seilhamer, the most trustworthy historian of the American theatre, who prefers to call him "the first 'backer' of an American theatrical enterprise" (History of the American Theatre before the Revolution. Philadelphia, 1888, p. 19).

The only representation of Pericles, concerning which full information is supplied, is now reached. On the 14th of October, 1854, in the eleventh season of his management, Phelps produced Pericles. Of the many Shakespearian performances which he had given during his tenure of Sadler's Wells, this inspired most interest. It was mounted with what was then considered luxury, and obtained a conspicuous, and, as it has been called, a "crowning success." As the only existing cast of Pericles at any fully recognized London theatre, the entire list of performers is given, with the exception of the attendants and so forth, whose names serve no purpose but to swell the bill. As is unavoidable in a play, the action of which covers so wide a space, the characters are classified in acts and scenes:

PERICLES.

ACT I. The Palace of Antiochus.

Antiochus (King of Antioch)=Mr. T. C. Harris.
Thaliard=Mr. William Belford.
Pericles (Prince of Tyre)=Mr. Phelps.
The Daughter of Antiochus=Miss Parker.

Tyre—Interior of the Palace.

Helicanus and Escanes (two lords of Tyre)=Mr. Barrett and Mr. Parslo.
First Lord=Mr. Evans; Second Lord=Mr. Lacy;
Third Lord=Mr. Mason.

Tharsus.

Cleon (Governor of Tharsus)=Mr. Henry Marston.
Dionyza (Wife to Cleon)=Miss Atkinson.

ACT II. Pentapolis—The Sea-shore.

First Fisherman=Mr. Josephs; Second Fisherman=Mr. Lewis Ball; Third Fisherman=Mr. Charles.

Corridor in the Palace of Simonides.

Simonides (King of Pentapolis)=Mr. Lunt.
First Lord=Mr. Franks. First Knight=Mr. Thompson.
Thaisa (Daughter to Simonides)=Miss Cooper.

A Hall of State.

ACT III. A Ship at Sea.

First Sailor=Mr. Stanley; Second Sailor=Mr. Weston.
Lychorida=Mrs. Henry Marston.

Ephesus—A Room in Cerimon's House.

Cerimon=Mr. J. W. Ray. Philemon=Mr. C. Mortimer.
First Gentleman of Ephesus=Mr. Perfit.
Second Gentleman of Ephesus=Mr. White.

ACT IV. Tharsus—An open place near the Sea-shore.

Leonine=Mr. Meagreson.
First Pirate=Mr. Robson; Second Pirate=Mr. Willis; Third Pirate=Mr. Gibson.
Marina (Daughter to Pericles and Thaisa)=Miss Edith Heraud.

Mitylene.

Boult=Mr. Hoskin.
Lysimachus (Governor of Mitylene)=Mr. F. Robinson.
An old woman of Mitylene=Mr. Charles Fenton.

ACT V. On board Pericles' Ship, off Mitylene.

Diana (in a Vision)=Miss T. Bassano.
First Tyrian Sailor=Mr Morley; Second Tyrian Sailor=Mr. Smythson.

The Temple of Diana at Ephesus.

The representation was received with a "hurricane of applause." Professor Henry Morley has preserved in his Journal of a London Playgoer, 1866, the record of his impressions which first saw the light in the Examiner. Following Dryden, he speaks of the play as "that Eastern romance upon which Shakespeare first tried his power as a dramatist, and which he may have re-adapted to the stage even while yet a youth at Stratford." After giving a description of the story, in which he is on less debatable ground than he has previously occupied, he comes to the one important alteration which was made by Phelps, the entire omission of Gower. This, though "a loss to the play in an artistic sense," he is disposed to approve, regarding as an extremely hazardous experiment the "frequent introduction of a story-telling gentleman in a long coat and long curls;" and he condones the introduction by Phelps in certain scenes of passages of his own writing which the omission of Gower necessitated. The compression into one of the two scenes at Mitylene, in which Marina's innocence is exposed to the contaminating advances of the "old woman of Mitylene" as by a pardonable euphemism the Bawd is called, won his admiration, the result of the treatment being that "although the plot of the drama was not compromised by a false delicacy, there remained not a syllable at which true delicacy could have conceived offence. The calling of

INTRODUCTION.

Boult and his mistress was covered in the pure language of Marina with so hearty a contempt that the scene was really one in which the purest minds might be those which would take the most especial pleasure" (Journal of a London Playgoer, p. 96). No less favourable is the opinion of Douglas Jerrold, who says, "The greatest theatrical purist need not be afraid to visit that foul room at Mitylene, since it has been white-washed and purified by the pen of Mr. Phelps. As for the grace and grandeur with which the whole play has been made visible to the eye, we recommend all who love to see their poetical dreams realized to pay Sadler's Wells a visit, with the full certainty of deriving from it a pleasure pure and classical, such as their quickened imagination could possibly have formed no conception of" (Lloyd's Weekly London News, quoted in Robertson and Phelps' Life of Phelps, p. 143).

In the Times, John Oxenford, a sounder and subtler critic than either, or indeed than any English theatrical critic of the latter half of the century, is less eulogistic. On the marvels of the spectacle, on the admirable equipment of Diana, and on the "moving panorama of excellently painted coast scenery," by aid of which Pericles is, in the imagination of the spectator, conducted to Ephesus, he bestows warm praise. The play itself, however, he pronounces "a work utterly without developed character and utterly without dramatic unity," the latter a self-evident proposition. Faint "indications of characters afterwards brought into strong relief" may be found. "Dionysa may be considered a feeble germ of Lady Macbeth; Marina may suggest a thought of Imogen; the reappearance of Thaisa may recall to mind the reappearance of Hermione. . . . To call it (Pericles) an indifferent drama would be a mistake, as well as an injustice; it is, really, not a drama at all" (The Times, quoted in Robertson and Phelps' Life of Phelps, p. 145).

Characters such as Pericles presents offer in Oxenford's opinion few opportunities for acting, and the "personages in general," he holds, "do little else than walk on and walk off the stage without betraying or exciting an emotion." One touch of acting, however, on the part of Mr. Phelps as Pericles, he considers too admirable to be passed over. "This is the manner in which he portrays the feelings of the father while gradually recognizing his daughter, in the fifth act. Grief has rendered him almost incapable of hope, and, unwilling to believe the unaccustomed approach of joy, he looks at his child with fixed eye and haggard cheek, gasping with anxiety, till doubt at last gives way to certainty, and he falls weeping on the neck of Marina. This scene was the only opportunity for acting throughout the piece, and Mr. Phelps availed himself of it most felicitously" (Ibid.). Of Miss Edith Heraud, whose short theatrical career began on that occasion, he says that she sustained the part in an artless manner, . . . though it has lost much of its significance by the necessary omission of the bestialities in the fourth act.

Jerrold credits Miss Heraud with great simplicity and sweetness, and with grace and dignity that carried off the most dangerous scene in the play. Phelps, he says, acted with wonderful strength and feeling. Professor Morley's sentence coincides with that of Oxenford, and he selects for warmest approval the scene of the recognition of Marina. He also praises the Thaisa of Miss Cooper. One at least of the other actors concerned, Henry Marston, was a capable elocutionist of the Kemble school, and more than one of them won recognition in the presentation of tragedy. The reception of Pericles was regarded as a success of curiosity. No subsequent management has cared to risk a second experiment, and the stage history of Pericles ends, as it practically begins, with the solitary and eminently creditable venture of Phelps.—J. K.

CRITICAL REMARKS.

Only a part of the play of Pericles is the work of Shakespeare's hand; and that part consists of fragments of a play which, we may strongly suspect, was never completed by its author. Pericles served, as The Two Gentlemen of Verona had done previously, as material from which to draw characters and incidents for service in later plays. Instances of this will be found in the notes. The development of the characters in this play is only partially shown; and no help to the understanding of them is to be gained from the additions which were made to Shakespeare's works by others.

PERICLES.

What strikes us in Pericles' disposition is his inability to bear up against misfortune. Lycorida's news that his wife is dead overcomes him completely; when she calls on him to be manly, take comfort, and have patience, he is unable to respond. He is a fatalist, with a conviction that fortune has a grudge against him. When he rouses himself to bless his child, it is almost with a foreboding of ill; and he cuts short Dionyza's proffered sympathy with the words (iii. 3. 9-12):

We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end
Must be as 't is.

He attempts, however, to propitiate Diana in favour of his child by the vow to go unshorn. But he fears to see his child again, and she is left in charge of strangers, far from her father's kingdom, while he, the old story says, departed into the uttermost parts of Egypt. It is not clear whether this long absence was merely in fulfilment of the vow; but it seems almost as if Pericles avoided the sight of his daughter for fear of the sad memories which the remembrance of her birth would bring back. If he sought in solitude and travel to attain forgetfulness, he failed miserably.

Marina, on the other hand, learns in her isolation the power of endurance which her father lacks. Her only intimate friend has been the nurse Lycorida; she cannot have had any deep friendship with Dionyza's daughter. Calmness is her chief characteristic, while in her appeals to Leonine she shows not only youthful innocence, but readiness of wit. She had grieved for the loss of her nurse; but after escaping Dionyza's treachery, her spirits rise, and she is able to overcome difficulties and dangers to which a more craven spirit might have succumbed. The old story tells how the governor of Mitylene saw the beautiful maiden offered for sale in the public market, and sought to buy her, but was outbid by the Pander. In some such circumstances, perhaps, Marina had been "gazed on like a comet;" but Shakespeare has left us no description of how she and Lysimachus met. We only hear of her repute for "her sweet harmony, and other chosen attractions," which had so wrought upon Lysimachus that he vainly sought to know whether his hopes that she might be of noble birth were indeed well founded. The two main personages of the play are brought together before us in the fifth act; and Pericles at last finds that in power of endurance of grief he has been surpassed by a girl. The scene is "an anticipation of that in which Cymbeline recovers his sons and daughter, but the scene in Pericles is filled with a rarer, keener passion of joy."

Dionyza is described for us by Cleon (iv. 3. 46-48):

Thou 'rt like the harpy,
Which, to betray, dost, with thine angel's face,
Seize with thine eagle's talons.

Calculating treachery is veiled by her behind a beautiful mask in the same way as by the wife of Cymbeline. Her husband is a cipher, whom she rules as absolutely as she does the servant Leonine.

The physician Cerimon has been described as the kind of man that Bacon would have desired for a friend. He is the first of the learned men of Shakespeare with something sympathetic about him; and if there is any lesson in the play, it is from him that we must learn it. He has unselfishly devoted himself to the pursuit, not of learning alone, but of the good of mankind, two objects which are only perfectly attained when we have recognized their dependence one upon the other.

Per. See where she comes, apparell'd like the spring —(Act 1. 1. 12.)

PERICLES.

ACT I.

PROLOGUE.

Antioch. Before the palace. Heads are seen impaled above the gates.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. To sing a song that old¹ was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come;
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear and please your eyes.
It hath been sung at festivals,
On ember-eves and holy-ales;
And lords and ladies in their lives
Have read it for restoratives:²
The purchase³ is to make men glorious;
*Et bonum quo antiquius, eo melius.*⁴ 10
If you, born in these latter times,
When wit's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
And that⁵ to hear an old man sing
May to your wishes pleasure bring,

I life would wish, and that I might
Waste it for you, like taper-light.

[This Antioch,⁶ then ; Antiochus the Great
Built up this city for his chiefest seat ;
The fairest in all Syria, —
I tell you what mine authors say: 20
This king unto him took a fere,⁷
Who died and left a female heir,
So buxom, blithe, and full of face,
As heaven had lent her all his grace ;
With whom the father liking took,
And her to incest did provoke: —
Bad child ; worse father ! to entice his own
To evil should⁸ be done by none :
But custom⁹ what they did begin 30
Was with long use account¹⁰ no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,¹¹
To seek her as a bed-fellow,

¹ Old, of old, long ago.

² Restoratives, recreation (literally, strengthening medicines). ³ Purchase, gain, advantage.

⁴ "And the older a good thing is, the better it is."

⁵ And that, and if it be that.

⁶ This Antioch, i.e. this (that you see) is Antioch.

⁷ Fere, mate, wife.

⁸ Should, i.e. such as should.

⁹ Custom, i.e. by custom or habit.

¹⁰ Account, reckoned.

¹¹ Frame, i.e. shape (or direct) their course.

In marriage-pleasures play-fellow: 34
 Which to prevent he made a law,—
 To keep her still, and men in awe,—
 That whoso ask'd her for his wife,
 His riddle told not,¹ lost his life:
 So for her many a wight did die,
 As yon grim looks do testify. 40
[Pointing to the impaled heads.]
 What now ensues, to the judgment of your eye
 I give, my cause who best can justify.] [Exit.]

SCENE I. The same. A room in the palace.

Enter ANTIOCHUS, PERICLES, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large receiv'd²

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus; and, with a soul Emboldened with the glory of her praise, Think death no hazard in this enterprise.

Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride,

[For the embracements even of Jove himself;
 At whose conception, till Lucina reign'd,
 Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,
 The senate-house of planets all did sit, 10
 To knit in her their best perfections.³]

Music. Enter the PRINCESS, attended.

[Per [Aside] See where she comes, apparell'd like the spring,
 Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
 Of every virtue gives⁴ renown to men!
 Her face the book of praises, where is read
 Nothing but curious⁵ pleasures, as⁶ from thence Sorrow were ever ras'd, and testy wrath
 Could never be her mild companion.⁷
 You gods that made me man, and sway in love,
 That have inflam'd desire⁸ in my breast 20
 To taste the fruit of yon celestial tree,
 Or die in the adventure, be my helps,
 As I am son and servant to your will,
 To compass such a boundless happiness!]

¹ Told not, not having been expounded.

² You have at large receiv'd, you have been fully made acquainted with.

³ Perfections, pronounced as a quadrisyllable.

⁴ Gives, i.e. that gives.

⁵ Curious, exquisite.

⁶ As, as if.

⁷ Her mild companion, i.e. the companion of her mildness.

⁸ Desire, pronounced as a trisyllable.

Ant. Prince Pericles,— 25

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
 With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
 For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:⁹
 Her face, like heaven, enticeth thee to view
 Her countless glory, which desert must gain;
 And which, without desert, because thine eye
 Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
 Yon sometimes¹⁰ famous princes, like thyself,
 Drawn by report, adventurous by desire,
 Tell thee, with speechless tongues and semblance pale,

That, without covering, save yon field of stars,
 Here they stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;
 And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist
 For going on¹¹ death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hath taught 41

My frail mortality to know itself,
 And by those fearful objects to prepare
 This body, like to them, to what I must;¹²
 For death remember'd should be like a mirror,
 Who¹³ tells us life's but breath, to trust it error.

I'll make my will, then; and, as sick men do,
 Who know the world, see heaven, but, feeling woe,

Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did;
 So I bequeath a happy peace to you 50
 And all good men, as every prince should do;
 My riches to the earth, from whence they came;—

[To the Princess] But my unspotted fire of love to you.

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
 I wait the sharpest blow.

Ant. Scorning advice: [giving Pericles a paper] read the conclusion, then:

Which read¹⁴ and not expounded, 't is decreed,
 As these before thee, thou thyself shalt bleed.

Princess. Of all say'd yet,¹⁵ mayst thou prove prosperous!

Of all say'd yet, I wish thee happiness! 60

⁹ Hard, strongly, greatly.

¹⁰ Sometimes, formerly.

¹¹ For going on, lest you should fall into.

¹² To what I must, the state to which I must come.

¹³ Who, i.e. death who.

¹⁴ Which read, i.e. which having been read.

¹⁵ All say'd yet, all who have hitherto made the trial.

Per. Like a bold champion, I assume the lists, 61
Nor ask advice of any other thought
But faithfulness and courage.

[Reads the riddle.]

"I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh which did me breed.
I sought a husband, in which labour
I found that kindness in a father:
He's father, son, and husband mild;
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two, 70
As you will live, resolve it you." 1

Sharp physic is the last:² but, O you powers
That give heaven countless eyes to view men's acts,

Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read
it?—

[To the Princess] Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still,

Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill:
But, I must tell you, now my thoughts revolt;
For he's no man on whom perfections wait
That, knowing sin within, will touch the gate.

[You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods, to hearken; 83

But being play'd upon before your time,
Hell only danceth at so harsh a chime.

Good sooth,³ I care not for you.]

Ant. Prince Pericles, touch not, upon thy life,

For that's an article within our law,
As dangerous as the rest. Your time's expir'd:
Either expound now, or receive your sentence.

Per. Great king, 91
Few love to hear the sins they love to act;
'T would braid⁴ yourself too near for me to tell
it.

Who has a book of all that monarchs do,
He's more secure to keep it shut than shown:
For vice repeated⁵ 's like the wandering wind,
Blows⁶ dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,

The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear
To stop the air would hurt them.⁷ The blind
mole casts 100

Copp'd hills towards heaven, to tell the earth is throng'd⁸

By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth die for 't.

Kings are earth's gods; in vice their law's their will;

And if Jove stray, who dares say Jove doth ill?
It is enough you know; and it is fit,

What being more known grows worse, to smother it.

All love the womb that their first being bred,
Then give my tongue like leave to love my head.

Ant. [Aside] Heaven, that I had thy head!
he has found the meaning:

But I will gloze⁹ with him.—Young Prince of Tyre, 110

Though by the tenour of our strict edict,
Your exposition misinterpreting,¹⁰

We might proceed to cancel of your days;

Yet hope, succeeding from so fair a tree

As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise:

Forty days longer we do respite you;

If by which time our secret be undone,¹¹

This mercy shows we'll joy in such a son:

And until then your entertain shall be 119

As doth befit our honour and your worth.

[Exeunt all except Pericles.]

Per. How courtesy would seem to cover sin,
When what is done is like an hypocrite,

The which is good in nothing but in sight!¹²

[If it be true that I interpret false,

Then were it certain you were not so bad

As with foul incest to abuse your soul;

Where now you're both a father and a son

By your uncomely clasplings with your child,—

Which pleasure fits an husband, not a father;

And she an eater of her mother's flesh 130

By the defiling of her parent's bed;

And both like serpents are, who though they feed

⁷ To stop the air would hurt them, how to stop (for the future) the gust that would hurt them.

⁸ To tell the earth is throng'd, to tell how the earth is burdened. ⁹ Gloze, use deceit.

¹⁰ Misinterpreting, i.e. being an incorrect interpretation.

¹¹ Our secret be undone, i.e. our problem be solved (by you).

¹² Sight, i.e. outward appearance.

¹ Resolve it you, do you solve the problem.

² The last, i.e. the final condition.

³ Good sooth, in truth.

⁴ Braid, reproach.

⁵ Repeated, recounted, talked about.

⁶ Blows, that blows.

On sweetest flowers,¹ yet they poison breed.]
 Antioch, farewell! for wisdom sees, those men
 Blush² not in actions blacker than the night,
 Will shun no course to keep them from the light.

[One sin, I know, another doth provoke;
 Murder 's as near to lust as flame to smoke:
 Poison and treason are the hands of sin, 139

Ay, and the targets,³ to put off the shame:
 Then, lest my life be cropp'd to keep you clear,
 By flight I'll shun the danger which I fear.]
 [Exit.

Re-enter ANTIOCHUS.

Ant. He hath found the meaning, for which we mean to have his head.

Ant. [To Thaliard] As thou wilt live, fly after; and,
 like an arrow
 Shot from a well-experienc'd archer, hits

The mark his eye doth level at, so thou:
 Never return
 Unless thou say "Prince Pericles is dead."—(Act i. 1. 163-167)

[He must not live to trumpet forth my infamy,
 Nor tell the world Antiochus doth sin
 In such a loathed manner;
 And therefore instantly this prince must die;
 For by his fall my honour must keep high.—]
 Who attends us there?

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. Doth your highness call? 150

Ant. Thaliard,

You are of our chamber, and our mind partakes⁴ 152

Her private actions to your secrecy:
 And for your faithfulness we will advance you.
 Thaliard, behold, here's poison, and here's gold;
 We hate the prince of Tyre, and thou must kill him:

It fits thee not to ask the reason why,
 Because we bid it. Say, is it done?

Thal. My lord, 't is done.

Ant. Enough. 160

¹ Flowers, pronounced as a dissyllable.

² Blush, who blush.

³ Targets, shields.

⁴ Partakes, imparts.

Enter a Messenger.

Let your breath cool yourself, telling your haste.

Mess. My lord, Prince Pericles is fled. [Exit.

Ant. [To Thaliard] As thou wilt live, fly after; and, like an arrow

Shot from a well-experienc'd archer, hits

The mark his eye doth level¹ at, so thou:

[Never return

Unless thou say "Prince Pericles is dead."

Thal. My lord,

If I can get him within my pistol's length,²

I'll make him sure enough: so, farewell to your highness.

Ant. Thaliard,] adieu! [Exit Thaliard.] Till

Pericles be dead 170

My heart can lend no succour to my head. [Exit.

SCENE II. Tyre. A room in the palace.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. [To those without] Let none disturb us.

Why should this change of thoughts,

The sad companion, dull-ey'd melancholy,

Be my so-us'd a guest³ as not an hour,

In the day's glorious walk, or peaceful night,—

The tomb where grief should sleep,—can breed me quiet?

Here pleasures court mine eyes, and mine eyes shun them,

And danger, which I fear'd, 's at Antioch,

Whose arm seems far too short to hit me here:

Yet neither pleasure's art can joy my spirits,

Nor yet the other's distance comfort me. 10

Then it is thus: the passions of the mind,

That have their first conception by mis-dread,⁴

Have after-nourishment and life by care;

And what was first but fear what might be done,

Grows elder now, and cares⁵ it be not done.

And so with me:—the great Antiochus—

'Gainst whom I am too little to contend,

Since he's so great can⁶ make his will his act—

Will think me speaking, though I swear to silence;

¹ Level, aim.

² Length, i.e. range, reach.

³ My so-us'd a guest, so constant a companion of mine.

⁴ Mis-dread, mistrust, apprehension.

⁵ Cares, takes heed, makes provision.

⁶ So great can, so great that he can.

Nor boots it me⁷ to say I honour him, 20

If he suspect I may dishonour him:

And what may make him blush in being known,

He'll stop the course by which it might be known;

With hostile forces he'll o'erspread the land,

And with th' ostent of war⁸ will look so huge,

Amazement⁹ shall drive courage from the state;

Our men be vanquish'd ere they do resist,

And subjects punish'd that ne'er thought offence:

[Which care of them, not pity of myself,—

Who am no more but as the tops of trees, 30

Which fence the roots they grow by, and defend them,—

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,

And punish that before that he would punish.]

Enter HELICANUS and other Lords.

First Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast!

Sec. Lord. And keep your mind, till you 'return to us,

Peaceful and comfortable!

Hel. Peace, peace, and give experience tongue.

They do abuse the king that flatter him:

For flattery is the bellows blows¹⁰ up sin;

The thing the which is flatter'd, but a spark,

To which that blast gives heat and stronger glowing; 41

Whereas reproof, obedient, and in order,

Fits kings, as they are men, for they may err.

When Signior Sooth¹¹ here does proclaim a peace,

He flatters you, makes war upon your life.

Prince, pardon me, or strike me, if you please;

I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else; but let your cares o'erlook

What shipping and what lading's¹² in our haven,

And then return to us. [Exeunt Lords.]

Helicanus, thou 50

Hast moved us: what seest thou in our looks?

⁷ Boots it me, is it any use to me.

⁸ Th' ostent of war, i.e. the mere display of his armament.

⁹ Amazement, consternation.

¹⁰ Blows, that blows.

¹¹ Sooth, flattery.

¹² Lading, cargoes.

Hel. An angry brow, dread lord. 52

Per. If there be such a dart in princes' frowns,

How durst thy tongue move anger¹ to our face?

Hel. How dares the plants look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment?

Per. Thou know'st I've power

To take thy life from thee.

Hel. [Kneeling] I've ground the axe myself; Do you but strike the blow.

Per. Rise, prithee, rise.

Sit down: thou art no flatterer: 60

I thank thee for 't; and heaven forbid

That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!

Fit counsellor and servant for a prince,

Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant,

What wouldst thou have me do?

Hel. To bear with patience

Such griefs as you yourself do lay upon yourself.

[Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus,

That minister'st a potion unto me

That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.

Attend me,² then: I went to Antioch, 70

Where, as thou know'st, against the face of death,

I sought the purchase³ of a glorious beauty,

From whence an issue I might propagate

Are⁴ arms to princes, and bring joys to subjects.

Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder;

The rest—hark in thine ear—as black as incest:

Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father

Seem'd not to strike, but smooth:⁵ but thou know'st this,

'Tis time to fear when tyrants seem to kiss.

Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled, 80

Under the covering of a careful night,

Who seem'd my good protector; and, being here,

Bethought me what was past, what might succeed. 83

I knew him tyrannous; and tyrants' fears

Decrease not, but grow faster than their years:

And should he doubt⁶ it,—as no doubt he doth,—

That I should open to the listening air

How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,

To keep his bed of blackness unlaid ope,⁷—

To lop that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,

And make pretence of wrong that I have done him; 91

When all, for mine, if I may call offence,

Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence:

Which love to all,—of which thyself art one,

Who now reprov'dst me for it,—

Hel. Alas, sir!

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

Musings into my mind, with thousand doubts

How I might stop this tempest, ere it came;

And finding little comfort to relieve them,

I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you've given me leave to speak,] 101

Freely will I speak. Antiochus you fear,

And justly too, I think, you fear the tyrant,

Who either by public war or private treason

Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,

Till that his rage and anger be forgot,

Or till the Destinies do cut his thread of life.

Your rule direct to⁸ any; if to me, 109

Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;

But should he wrong my liberties in my absence?

Hel. We'll mingle our bloods together in the earth,

From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee, then, and to Tarsus

Intend⁹ my travel,—where I'll hear from thee;

And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.

The care I had and have of subjects' good

On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it. 119

¹ Move anger, i.e. cause anger to come.

² Attend me, listen to me.

³ Purchase, acquisition.

⁴ Are, such as are.

⁵ Smooth, flatter.

⁶ Doubt, fear, suspect.

⁷ Unlaid ope, undeclared.

⁸ Direct to, devolve on.

⁹ Intend, direct.

I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath:
 Who shuns not to break one will sure crack
 both: 121
 But in our orbs¹ we'll live so round and safe,
 That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,² Thou show'dst a subject's shine,³ I a true prince. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Tyre. An ante-chamber in the palace.

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this the court.
 Here must I kill King Pericles; and if I do it not, I am sure to be hang'd at home: 'tis dangerous.—Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow and had good discretion, that, being

Hel. [Kneeling] I've ground the axe myself;
 Do you but strike the blow.—(Act 1. 2. 58, 59.)

bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets: now do I see he had some reason for 't; for if a king bid a man be a villain, he's bound by the indenture⁴ of his oath to be one.—Hush! here comes the lords of Tyre. [Goes aside.]

Enter HELICANUS, ESCANES, and other Lords.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow peers of Tyre, 11

¹ Orbs, spheres.

² Time of both this truth shall ne'er convince, time shall never overthrow this truth about both of us.

³ Shine, lustre.

⁴ Indenture, covenant.

Further to question me of your king's departure: 12

His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
 Doth speak sufficiently he's gone to travel.

Thal. [Aside] How! the king gone!

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
 Why, as it were unlicens'd of your loves,
 He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
 Being at Antioch,—

Thal. [Aside] What from Antioch?

Hel. Royal Antiochus—on what cause I know not— 20

Took some displeasure at him,—at least he judg'd so;

And doubting¹ lest that he had err'd or sinn'd,
To show his sorrow, he'd correct himself;
So puts himself unto the shipman's toil, 24
With whom each minute threatens life or death.

Thal. [Aside] Well, I perceive
I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, this the king's ears must please,—

He scap'd the land, to perish at the seas.

I'll present myself. [Comes forward.]—Peace to the lords of Tyre! 30

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come
With message unto princely Pericles;
But, since my landing, I have understood
Your lord has betook himself to unknown travels;

My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire² it,
Commended to our master, not to us 38

Yet, ere you shall depart, this we desire,—
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV Tarsus. An open place.

Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and Attendants.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here,
And, by relating tales of others' griefs,
See if 't will teach us to forget our own?

Dio. That were to blow at fire in hope to quench it;
For who digs hills because they do aspire
Throws down one mountain to cast up a higher.
O my distressed lord, ev'n such our griefs are;
Here they're but felt, and seen with mischief's eyes,
But like to groves, being topp'd,³ they higher rise.

Cle. O Dionyza, 10
Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants it,
Or can conceal his hunger till he famish?
Grief makes our tongues and sorrows to sound deep

Our woes into the air; our eyes to weep,
Till tongues fetch breath that may proclaim them louder;

That, if heav'n⁴ slumber while their creatures want,

They may awake their helps to comfort them.
I'll, then, discourse⁵ our woes, felt several years,

And, wanting breath to speak, help me with tears.

Dio. I'll do my best, sir. 20

Cle. This Tarsus, o'er which I have the government,
A city on whom Plenty held full hand,
For Riches strew'd herself even in the streets;
Whose towers bore heads so high they kiss'd the clouds,

And strangers ne'er beheld but wonder'd at;⁶
Whose men and dames so jettied⁷ and adorn'd,
Like one another's glass to trim them by;⁸
Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the sight,
And not so much to feed on as delight;⁹ 29
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great,
The name of help¹⁰ grew odious to repeat.—

Dio. O, 'tis too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do! By this our change,
Those mouths who but of late, earth, sea, and air,

Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance,

As houses are defil'd for want of use,
They are now starv'd for want of exercise:
Those palates, who, not yet two summers younger, 39

Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread, and beg for it:
[Those mothers who, to nouse up¹¹ their babes,
Thought nought too curious,¹² are ready now
To eat those little darlings whom they lov'd.]
So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and wife
Draw lots who first shall die to lengthen life:

⁴ Heav'n, i. e. the gods.

⁵ Discourse, relate

⁶ And strangers ne'er beheld but wonder'd at, i. e. and which strangers ne'er beheld but with wonder.

⁷ Jettied, strutted.

⁸ Glass to trim them by, pattern after which to dress themselves.

⁹ As delight, as to delight.

¹⁰ Help, i. e. charity.

¹¹ Nouse up, cherish, rear.

¹² Curious, delicate.

¹ Doubting, fearing.

² Desire, i. e. ask; pronounced as a trisyllable.

³ Topp'd, lopped.

Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeping;
Here many sink, yet those which see them fall

Have scarce strength left to give them burial.
Is not this true? 50

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness
it.

Cle. O, let those cities that of Plenty's cup
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, hear these tears!

The misery of Tarsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.

Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st in
haste,

For comfort is too far for us t' expect.

Lord. We have descried, upon our neighbouring shore, 60

A portly sail¹ of ships make hitherward.

Cle. I thought as much.

One sorrow never comes but brings an heir,
That may succeed as his inheritor;
And so in ours: some neighbouring nation,²
Taking advantage of our misery,
Hath stuff'd these hollow vessels with their
power, 70

To beat us down, the which are down already;
And make a conquest of unhappy me,
Where as³ no glory's got to overcome.

Lord. That's the least fear; for, by the semblance⁴

Of their white flags display'd, they bring us
peace,

And come to us as favourers,⁵ not as foes.

Cle. Thou speak'st like him's untutor'd to repeat:⁶

Who makes the fairest show means most deceit.

But bring they what they will and what they can,

What need we fear?

The ground's the lowest,⁷ and we're half-way
there.

Go tell their general we attend him here,
To know for what he comes, and whence he comes, 80

And what he craves.

Lord. I go, my lord.

[Exit.]

Cle. Welcome is peace, if he on peace consist;⁸
If wars, we are unable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants; some people of Tarsus follow.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships and number of our men
Be, like a beacon fir'd, t' amaze⁹ your eyes.

We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets:

Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears, 90
But to relieve them of their heavy load;

And these our ships, you happily¹⁰ may think
Are like the Trojan horse was¹¹ stuff'd within
With bloody veins, expecting overthrow,
Are stor'd with corn to make your needy bread,
And give them life whom hunger starv'd half
dead.

All. [Kneeling] The gods of Greece protect
you!

And we'll pray for you.

Per. Rise, I pray you, rise:
We do not look for reverence, but for love,
And harbourage for ourselves, our ships, and
men. 100

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify,
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils!

Till when,—the which I hope shall ne'er be
seen,—

Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept; feast here
awhile,

Until our stars that frown lend us a smile.

[Exeunt.]

¹ A portly sail, imposing fleet.

² Nation, pronounced as a trisyllable.

³ Where as, where.

⁴ Semblance, pronounced as a trisyllable.

⁵ Favourers, succourers, relievers.

⁶ Him's untutor'd to repeat, him that has not been taught the lesson.

⁷ The ground's the lowest, i.e. the grave is the worst depth (of misfortune).

⁸ If he on peace consist, if he be set on (or disposed for) peace.

⁹ Amaze, perturb.

¹⁰ You happily, which you perchance.

¹¹ Was, which was.

ACT II.

The same.Enter GOWER.

Gow. [Here have you seen a mighty king
His child, I-wis,¹ to incest bring;
A better prince, and bénign lord,
That will prove awful² both in deed and word;
Be quiet, then, as men should be,
Till he hath pass'd necessity.³
I'll show you those in troubles reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.
The good in conversation⁴—
To whom I give my benison— 10
Is still at Tarsus, where each man
Thinks all is writ he speken can;
And, to remember what he does,
Build his statue to make him glorious:
But tidings to the contrary
Are brought your eyes; what need speak I?]

DUMB-SHOW.

Enter, from one side, PERICLES, talking with CLEON; their Trains with them. Enter, from the other side, a Gentleman, with a letter to PERICLES; who shows the letter to CLEON; then gives the Messenger a reward, and knights him. Exit severally PERI-CLES and CLEON, with their Trains.

Good Helicane, that stay'd at home,
Not to eat honey like a drone
From others' labours;—for though he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive, 20
And to fulfil his prince' desire,—
Sends word of all that haps in Tyre:
How Thaliard came full bent with sin
And hid intent to murder him;
And that in Tarsus was not best
Longer for him to make his rest.
He, doing so,⁵ put forth to seas,
Where when men bin,⁶ there's seldom ease;
For now the wind begins to blow;
Thunder above, and deeps below, 30

¹ I-wis, in truth.² Awful, law-abiding, conscientious.³ Necessity, misfortune, distress.⁴ Conversation, conduct; pronounced as five syllables.⁵ Doing so, i.e. acting accordingly (?). ⁶ Bin, are.

Make such unquiet, that the ship 31
Should⁷ house him safe is wreck'd and split;
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is tost:
All perishen of man, of pelf,
Ne aught escapen but himself;
Till fortune, tir'd with doing bad,
Threw him ashore, to give him glad:
And here he comes. What shall be next,
Pardon old Gower,—this longs⁸ the text.
[Exit.]

SCENE I. Pentapolis. The sea-shore.

PERICLES, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, you angry stars of
heaven!
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly
man
Is but a substance that must yield to you;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me
breath⁹
Nothing to think on but ensuing death.
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers
To have bereft a prince of all his fortunes;
And having thrown him from your watery grave, 10
Here to have death in peace is all he'll crave.

Enter three Fishermen.First Fish. What, ho, Pilch!Sec. Fish. Ha, come and bring away the nets!First Fish. What, Patch-breech, I say!Third Fish. What say you, master?First Fish. Look how thou stirr'st now! come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wanion.¹⁰*Third Fish.* Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us even now. 20*First Fish.* Alas, poor souls, it grieved my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to⁷ Should, which should.⁸ This longs, this (that follows) belongs to.⁹ Breath, i.e. life.¹⁰ With a wanion, i.e. "bad luck to you!"

us to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves. 24

Third Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much when I saw the porpus, how he bounc'd and tumbled? they say they're half-fish, half-flesh: a plague on them, they ne'er come but I look to be wash'd. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea. 30

First Fish. Why, as men do a-land,¹—the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale; a' plays and tumbles, driving the poor

Sec. Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea, to cast thee in our way!—(Act II. 1. 61, 62.)

fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful: such whales have I heard on o' the land, who never leave gaping till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells, and all.

Per. [Aside] A pretty moral. 39

Third Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry

Sec. Fish. Why, man?

Third Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good King Simonides were of my mind,—

Per. [Aside] Simonides! 49

Third Fish. He would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. [Aside] How from the finny subjects of the sea

These fishers tell th' infirmities of men;
And from their watery empire recollect²
All that may men approve, or men detect!—
Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

Sec. Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that?
If it be a day fits you,³ search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it.

Per. May see the sea hath cast upon your coast— 60

¹ A-land, by land.

² Recollect, i. e. select.

³ Fits you, distracts you, makes you mad.

Sec. Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea, to cast¹ thee in our way! 62

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind,

In that vast tennis-court have made the ball
For them to play upon, entreats you pity him;
He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

First Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg?
Here's them in our country of Greece gets more with begging than we can do with working

Sec. Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes, then?

Per. I never practis'd it. 71

Sec. Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve, sure; for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for't.

Per. What I have been I have forgot to know;
But what I am, want teaches me to think on:
A man throng'd up² with cold: my veins are chill, 77

And have no more of life than may suffice
To give my tongue that heat to ask your help;
Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead,
For that I am a man, pray see me buried.

First Fish. Die, quoth-a? Now gods forbid!
I have a gown here; come, put it on; keep thee warm. Now, afore me,³ a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more'er puddings and flap-jacks;⁴ and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

Sec. Fish. Hark you, my friend,—you said you could not beg. 90

Per. I did but crave.

Sec. Fish. But crave! Then I'll turn craver too, and so I shall scape whipping.

Per. Why, are all your beggars whipp'd, then?

Sec. Fish. O, not all, my friend, not all; for if all your beggars were whipp'd, I would wish no better office than to be beadle.—But, master, I'll go draw up the net.

[Exit with Third Fisherman.

Per. [Aside] How well this honest mirth becomes their labour!

First Fish. Hark you, sir,—do you know where ye are? 101

Per. Not well. 102

First Fish. Why, I'll tell you: this is called Pentapolis, and our king the good Simonides.

Per. The good Simonides, do you call him?

First Fish. Ay, sir; and he deserves so to be call'd for his peaceable reign and good government.

Per. He is a happy king, since he gains from his subjects the name of good by his government. How far is his court distant from this shore? 111

First Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's journey: and I'll tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world to just⁵ and tourney for her love.

Per. Were my fortunes equal to my desires,
I could wish to make one there.

First Fish. O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully deal for his wife's soul. 121

Re-enter Second and Third Fishermen, drawing up a net.

Sec. Fish. Help, master, help! here's a fish hangs in the net, like a poor man's right in the law; 't will hardly come out. Ha! bots on't,⁶ 'tis come at last, and 't is turn'd to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, let me see it.—

Thanks, fortune, yet, that, after all thy crosses,
Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself;
And though it was mine own, part of my heritage, 129

Which my dead father did bequeath to me,
With this strict charge, even as he left his life,
"Keep it, my Pericles; it hath been a shield
"Twixt me and death;"—and pointed to this brace;—

"For that it sav'd me, keep it; in like necessity—

The which the gods protect thee from!—'t may defend thee."

It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it;
Till the rough seas, that spare not any man,
Took it in rage, though calm'd have given't
again;

¹ Cast, cast up, vomit.

² Throng'd up, oppressed, numbed.

³ Afore me, "on my word!"

⁴ Flap-jacks, pancakes

⁵ Just, tilt.

⁶ Bots on't, a plague on it!

I thank thee for 't; my shipwreck now's no ill,
Since I have here my father's gift in 's will.

First Fish. What mean you, sir? 141

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this coat of worth,

For it was sometime target to a king;
I know it by this mark. He lov'd me dearly,
And for his sake I wish the having of it;
And that you'd guide me to your sovereign's court,

Where with it I may appear a gentleman;
And if that ever my low fortunes better,¹
I'll pay your bounties; till then rest your debtor.

First Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the lady?

Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne in arms.

First Fish. Why, d'ye take it, and the gods give thee good on 't!

Sec. Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend;
't was we that made up this garment through the rough seams of the waters: there are certain condolences, certain vails.² I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember from whence you had it.

Per. Believe 't, I will.

By your furtherance I am cloth'd in steel;
And, spite of all the rapture³ of the sea, 161
This jewel holds his building⁴ on my arm:—
Unto the value⁵ I will mount myself
Upon a courser, whose delightful steps
Shall make the gazer joy to see him tread.—
Only, my friends, I yet am unprovided
Of a pair of bases.

Sec. Fish. We'll sure provide thee: thou shalt have my best gown to make thee a pair:
and I'll bring thee to the court myself. 170

Per. Then honour be but a goal to my will,
This day I'll rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. The entrance to the lists; with the royal pavilion overlooking them.

A flourish. Enter SIMONIDES, THAISA, Lords, and Attendants.

Sim. Are the knights ready to begin the triumph?⁶

First Lord. They are, my liege;
And stay your coming to present themselves.

Sim. Return them,⁷ we are ready; and our
daughter,

In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,
Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat
For men to see, and seeing wonder at.

[Exit a Lord.]

Thai. It pleaseth you, my royal father, to express

My commendations great, whose merit's less.

Sim. It's fit it should be so; for princes are
A model, which heaven makes like to itself:
As jewels lose their glory if neglected, 12
So princes their renown if not respected.

'Tis now your honour, daughter, to explain
The labour of each knight in his device.

Thai. Which, to preserve mine honour, I'll perform.

Enter a Knight; he passes over, and his Squire presents his shield to the Princess.

Sim. Who is the first that doth prefer himself?

Thai. A knight of Sparta, my renowned
father;

And the device he bears upon his shield
Is a black Æthiop reaching at the sun; 20
The word,⁸ *Lux tua vita mihi.*⁹

Sim. He loves you well that holds his life of you.

[The Second Knight passes over.
Who is the second that presents himself?

Thai. A prince of Macedon, my royal father;
And the device he bears upon his shield
Is an arm'd knight that's conquer'd by a lady;
The motto thus, in Spanish, *Mas por dulzura que por fuerza.*¹⁰

[The Third Knight passes over.
Sim. And what's the third?

Thai. The third of Antioch;
And his device, a wreath of chivalry;
The word, *Me pompa provexit apex.*¹¹ 30

[The Fourth Knight passes over.
Sim. What is the fourth?

¹ Better, mend. ² Vails, perquisites.

³ Rapture, violence, seizure.

⁴ Holds his building, keeps its place.

⁵ Unto the value, i.e. to as high a value (as the jewel will fetch).

⁶ Triumph, tournament.

⁷ Return them, take them word.

⁸ Word, motto.

⁹ "Thy light is life to me."

¹⁰ "More by gentleness than by force."

¹¹ "The crown of the triumph drew me on."

Thai. A burning torch that's turned upside down; 32

The word, Quod me alit, me extinguit.¹

Sim. Which shows that beauty hath his² power and will,

Which can as well inflame as it can kill.

[The Fifth Knight passes over.]

Thai. The fifth, an hand environed with clouds,
Holding out gold that's by the touchstone
tried;

The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.³

[The Sixth Knight (Pericles) passes over.]

Sim. And what's
The sixth and last, the which the knight himself 40

With such a graceful courtesy deliver'd?

Thai. He seems to be a stranger; but his present⁴ is

A wither'd branch, that's only green at top;

The motto, In hac spe vivo.⁵

Sim. A pretty moral;
From the dejected state wherein he is,
He hopes by you his fortunes yet may
flourish.

First Lord. He had need mean better than his outward show

Can any way speak in his just commend;⁶

For, by his rusty outside, he appears 50
T' have practis'd more the whipstock than the lance.

Sec. Lord. He well may be a stranger, for
he comes

To an honour'd triumph strangely furnished.

Third Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust

Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan⁷

The outward habit by⁸ the inward man.

But stay, the knights are coming:

We will withdraw into the gallery. [Exeunt.
[Great shouts within, "The mean knight!"]

¹ "That which nourishes me, quenches me."

² His, its. ³ "So faith is to be tested."

⁴ His present, that which he presents.

⁵ "In this hope I live."

⁶ In his just commend, in just commendation of him.

⁷ Scan, study.

⁸ By, concerning.

SCENE III. The same. A hall of state; a banquet prepared.

SIMONIDES, THAISA, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants. Enter the Marshal, conducting Pericles and the other knights, armed.

Sim. Knights,

To say you're welcome were superfluous.
To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Were more than you expect, or more than's fit,
Since every worth in show commends itself.
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are princes and my guests.

Thai. [To Pericles] But you, my knight and guest;

To whom this wreath of victory I give, 10
And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'Tis more by fortune, lady, than my merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;
And here, I hope, is none that envies it.
In framing an artist, art hath thus decreed,
To make some good, but others to exceed;
And you're her labour'd scholar.⁹—Come, queen
o' the feast,

For, daughter, so you are, here take your place:—
Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We're honour'd much by good
Simonides. 20

Sim. Your presence glads our days: honour
we love;

For who hates honour hates the gods above.

Marshal. Sir, yonder is your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

First Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen

That neither in our hearts nor outward eyes
Envy the great nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sir, sit.—

[Aside] By Jove, I wonder, that is king of
thoughts,

These cates resist me,¹⁰ he not thought upon.¹¹

⁹ Her labour'd scholar, the scholar over whose training she took special pains.

¹⁰ These cates resist me, these delicacies are distasteful to me.

¹¹ He not thought upon, if he be not in my thoughts.

Thai. [Aside] By Juno, that is queen of marriage,¹ 30

All viands that I eat do seem unsavoury,
Wishing him my meat.—Sure he's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He's but a country gentleman;
Has done no more than other knights have done;
Has broken a staff or so; so let it pass.

Thai. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. Yon king's to me like to my father's picture,
Which tells me in that glory once he was;
Had princes sit, like stars, about his throne,
And he the sun, for them to reverence; 40
None that beheld him, but, like lesser lights,
Did veil² their crowns to his supremacy:
Where³ now his son's like glow-worm in the night,

The which hath fire in darkness, none in light:
Whereby I see that Time's the king of men,
For he's their parent, and he is their grave,
And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights?

First Knight. Who can be other in this royal presence?

Sim. Here, with a cup that's stor'd unto the brim,— 50

As you do love, fill to your mistress's⁴ lips,—
We drink this health to you.

Knights. We thank your grace.

Sim. Yet pause awhile:

Yon knight doth sit too melancholy,
As if the entertainment in our court
Had not a show might countervail⁵ his worth.
Note it not you, Thaisa?

Thai. What is't to me, my father?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter: princes, in this,
Should live like gods above, who freely give
To every one that comes to honour them: 60
And princes not doing so are like to gnats,
Which make a sound, but kill'd are wonder'd at.
Therefore, to make his entertain⁶ more sweet,
Here, say we drink this standing-bowl of wine
to him.

¹ Marriage, pronounced as a trisyllable.

² Vail, lower. ³ Where, while, whereas.

⁴ Mistress, mistresses.

⁵ A show might countervail, an aspect such as would equal.

⁶ Entertain, entertainment.

Thai. Alas, my father, it befits not me
Unto a stranger knight to be so bold:
He may my proffer take for an offence,
Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How! 70

Do as I bid you, or you'll move me else.

Thai. [Aside] Now, by the gods, he could not please me better.

Sim. And furthermore tell him, we desire to know of him,
Of whence he is, his name and parentage.

Thai. The king my father, sir, has drunk to you.

Per. I thank him.

Thai. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thai. And further he desires to know of you,
Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre,—my name,
Pericles; 81

My education been in arts and arms;
Who, looking for adventures in the world,—
Was by the rough seas reft of ships and men,
And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thai. He thanks your grace; names himself Pericles,

A gentleman of Tyre,
Who only by misfortune of the seas
Bereft of ships and men, cast on this shore.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I pity his misfortune, 90

And will awake him from his melancholy.—
Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles,
And waste the time, which looks for other revels.

Even in your armours, as you are address'd,⁷
Will very well become a soldier's dance.

[I will not have excuse, with saying this
Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads,
Since they love men in arms as well as beds.]

[Music. The Knights and Ladies dance; Pericles remains seated.

So, this was well ask'd, 't was so well perform'd.—

[To Pericles] Come, sir; 100
Here is a lady that wants breathing⁸ too:

⁷ As you are address'd, i.e. just as you are.

⁸ Breathing, i.e. exercising (with a dance).

And I have heard, you knights of Tyre 102
Are excellent in making ladies trip;
And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them they are,
my lord.

Sim. O, that's as much as you would be denied

Of your fair courtesy.]

[Dance renewed, Pericles and Thaisa leading.

Unclasp, unclasp:

Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well,
[To Pericles] But you the best.—Pages and lights, to conduct

These knights unto their several lodgings!—

[To Pericles] Yours, sir, 110

We have giv'n order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love;
And that's the mark I know you level¹ at:
Therefore each one betake him to his rest;
To-morrow all for speeding do their best.²

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Tyre. A room in the Governor's house.

Enter HELICANUS and ESCANES.

[Hel. No, Escanes; know this of me,— Antiochus from incest liv'd not free:
For which, the most high gods not minding longer

To withhold the vengeance that they had in store,

Due to this heinous capital offence,
Even in the height and pride of all his glory,
When he was seated in a chariot

Of an inestimable value, and his daughter with him,

A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up
Their bodies, even to loathing; for they so stunk, 10

That all those eyes ador'd³ them ere their fall
Scorn now their hand should give them burial.

Esca. 'T was very strange.

¹ Level, aim.

² All for speeding do their best, let all do their best to achieve success.

³ Those eyes ador'd, i.e. those eyes which adored, those whose eyes adored.

Hel. And yet but justice; for though
This king were great, his greatness was no
guard 14
To bar heaven's shaft, but sin had his reward.
Esca. 'T is very true.]

Enter several Lords.

[First Lord. See, not a man in private conference

Or council has respect with him but he.

Sec. Lord. It shall no longer grieve⁴ without reproof.

Third Lord. And curs'd be he that will not second it. 20

First Lord. Follow me, then.—Lord Heli-cane, a word.

Hel. With me? and welcome:—happy day, my lords.]

First Lord. Know that our griefs are risen to the top,

And now at length they overflow their banks.

Hel. Your griefs! for what? wrong not the prince you love.

First Lord. Wrong not yourself, then, noble
Helicane;

But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
Or know what ground's made happy by his breath.

If in the world he live, we'll seek him out;
If in his grave he rest, we'll find him there;
And be resolv'd⁵ he lives to govern us, 31
Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,
And leaves us to our free election.

Sec. Lord. Whose death's indeed the strongest in our censure:⁶

And, knowing this kingdom, if without a head,—

Like goodly buildings left without a roof,—
Will soon to ruin fall, your noble self,
That best know how to rule and how to reign,
We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

All. Live, noble Helicane! 40

Hel. For honour's cause, forbear your suffrages:

If that you love Prince Pericles, forbear.

Take I⁷ your wish, I leap into the seas,

⁴ Grieve, be grievous (to us).

⁵ Resolv'd, assured, satisfied.

⁶ Strongest in our censure, most certain in our judgment.

⁷ Take I, if I should take.

Where's hourly trouble for a minute's ease.
 A twelvemonth longer, let me entreat you
 To forbear¹ the absence of your king;
 If in which time expir'd, he not return,
 I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.
 But if I cannot win you to this love, 49
 Go search like nobles, like noble subjects,
 And in your search spend your adventurous
 worth;

Whom if you find, and win unto return,
 You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.

First Lord. To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield;

And since Lord Helicane enjoineth us,
 We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and we'll clasp hands:

When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Pentapolis. A room in the palace.

SIMONIDES, reading a letter. Enter to him three Knights.

First Knight. Good morrow to the good
 Simonides.

Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let
 you know,

That for this twelvemonth she'll not undertake
 A married life.

Her reason to herself is only known,
 Which yet from her by no means can I get.

Sec. Knight. May we not get access to her,
 my lord?

Sim. Faith, by no means: she hath so strictly tied her

To her chamber, that it is impossible.

One twelve moons² more she'll wear Diana's livery; 10

This by the eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,
 And on her virgin honour will not break it.

Third Knight. Loth to bid farewell, we take our leaves. [Exeunt Knights.]

Sim. So,

They're well dispatch'd; now to my daughter's
 letter:

She tells me here, she'll wed the stranger
 knight,

Or never more to view nor day nor light.
 'Tis well, mistress; your choice agrees with
 mine;

I like that well:—nay, how absolute she's in't,
 Not minding whether I dislike or no! 20

Well, I do commend her choice;

Per. Even in his throat—unless it be the king—
 That calls me traitor, I return the lie.—(Act II. 5. 56, 57.)

And will no longer have it be delay'd.—
 Soft! here he comes: I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

Per. All fortune to the good Simonides!

Sim. To you as much, sir! I'm beholding to you

For your sweet music this last night: I do
 Protest my ears were never better fed
 With such delightful pleasing harmony.

Per. It is your grace's pleasure to commend;
 Not my desert.

Sim. Sir, you are music's master.

¹ Forbear, i.e. endure (?)

² Twelve moons, twelvemonth.

Per. The worst of all her scholars, my good lord. 31

Sim. Let me ask you one thing :
What do you think of my daughter, sir?

Per. A most virtuous princess.

Sim. And she is fair too, is she not?

Per. As a fair day in summer,—wondrous fair.

Sim. Sir, my daughter thinks very well of you;

Ay, so well, that you must be her master,
And she will be your scholar : therefore look to it.

Per. I am unworthy for her schoolmaster.

Sim. She thinks not so; peruse this writing else.¹ 41

Per. [Aside] What's here?

A letter, that she loves the knight of Tyre!
'Tis the king's subtilty to have my life.—
O, seek not to entrap me, gracious lord,
A stranger and distressed gentleman,
That never aim'd so high to love your daughter,
But bent all offices to honour her.

Sim. Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter,
And thou art a villain!

Per. By the gods, I have not:
Never did thought of mine levy² offence; 51
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain³ her love or your displeasure.

Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor!

Sim. Ay, traitor.

Per. Even in his throat—unless it be the king—

That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. [Aside] Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd⁴ of a base descent. 60
I came unto your court for honour's cause,

And not to be a rebel to your state; 62
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove he's honour's enemy.

Sim. No?

Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter THAISA.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve⁵ your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you. 70

Thai. Why, sir, say if you had,
Who takes offence at that would make⁶ me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so peremptory?—

[Aside] I am glad on't with all my heart.—
I'll tame you; I'll bring you in subjection.

Will you, not having my consent,
Bestow your love and your affections
Upon a stranger?—[aside] who, for aught I know,

May be—nor can I think the contrary—
As great in blood as I myself.— 80

Therefore hear you, mistress; either frame
Your will to mine,—and you, sir, hear you,
Either be rul'd by me, or I will make you—
Man and wife:—

Nay, come, your hands and lips must seal it too;

And being join'd, I'll thus your hopes destroy;—

And for a further grief,—God give you joy!—
What, are you both pleas'd?

Thai. Yes,—if you love me, sir.

Per. Even as my life my blood that fosters it.

[Sim. What, are you both agreed? 90]

Both. Yes, if't please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, that I will see you wed;

And then with what haste you can get you to bed.] [Exeunt.]

¹ Elee, i.e. to the contrary.

² Levy, i.e. imagine, contemplate.

³ A deed might gain, a deed which might gain.

⁴ Relish'd, gave indication.

⁵ Resolve, acquaint.

⁶ That would make, i.e. that which would make.

ACT III.

The same.Enter GOWER.

Gow. [Now sleep yslaked hath¹ the rout;
 No din but snores the house about,
 Made louder by the o'er-fed breast²
 Of this most pompous marriage-feast.
 The cat, with eyne of burning coal,
 Now crouches fore the mouse's hole;
 And crickets sing at th' oven's mouth,
 Aye the blither for their drouth.
 Hymen hath brought the bride to bed,
 Where, by the loss of maidenhead, 10
 A babe is moulded.—Be attent,
 And time, that is so briefly spent,
 With your fine fancies quaintly eche:³
 What's dumb in show I'll plain with speech.]

DUMB-SHOW.

Enter, from one side, PERICLES and SIMONIDES with Attendants; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a letter: he shows it to SIMONIDES; the Lords kneel to PERICLES. Then enter THAISA with child, and LYCORIDA. SIMONIDES shows his daughter the letter; she rejoices: she and PERICLES take leave of her father, and depart with LYCORIDA and their Attendants. Then exeunt SIMONIDES and the rest.

By many a dern⁴ and painful perch
 Of Pericles the careful search,
 By the four opposing coigns
 Which the world together joins,
 Is made with all due diligence
 That horse and sail and high expense 20
 Can stead the quest.⁵ At last from Tyre—
 Fame answering the most strange inquire⁶—
 To the court of King Simonides
 Are letters brought, the tenour these:⁷—
 Antiochus and his daughter dead;
 The men of Tyrus on the head

¹ Yslaked hath, hath quieted (literally, "hath abated").² Breast, chest.³ Quaintly eche, cleverly lengthen out.⁴ Dern, dreary.⁵ Stead the quest, aid the search.⁶ Most strange inquire, most particular inquiry.⁷ The tenour these, the contents being as follows.

Of Helicanus would set on
 The crown of Tyre, but he will none:
 The mutiny he there hastes t' appease;
 Says to 'em, if King Pericles 30
 Come not home in twice six moons,
 He, obedient to their dooms,
 Will take the crown. The sum of this,
 Brought hither to Pentapolis,
 Yraved the regions round,
 And every one with claps can sound,⁸
 "Our heir-apparent is a king!
 Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?"
 Brief, he must hence depart to Tyre: 39
 His queen with child makes her desire—
 Which who shall cross?—along to go:—
 Omit we all their dole and woe:—
 Lycorida, her nurse, she takes,
 And so to sea. Their vessel shakes
 On Neptune's billow; half the flood
 Hath their keel cut: but fortune's mood
 Varies again; the grizzled⁹ north
 Disgorges such a tempest forth,
 That, as a duck for life that dives,
 So up and down the poor ship drives: 50
 The lady shrieks, and, well-a-near!¹⁰
 Does fall in travail with her fear:
 And what ensues in this fell storm
 Shall for itself itself perform.
 I nill¹¹ relate, action¹² may Conveniently the rest convey;
 Which might not what by me is told.
 In your imagination hold
 This stage the ship, upon whose deck
 The sea-tost Pericles appears to speak. 60
 [Exit.]

SCENE I. At sea.PERICLES discovered, on shipboard.

Per. Thou god of this great vast, rebuke
 these surges,
 Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou,
 that hast

⁸ Can sound, began to cry out.⁹ Grizzled, grim.¹⁰ Well-a-near, alas!¹¹ Nill, will not.¹² Action, pronounced as a trisyllable.

Upon the winds command, bind them in brass,
 Having recall'd them from the deep! O, still Thy deaf'ning, dreadful thunders; gently quench
 Thy nimble, sulphurous flashes!—O, how,
 Lycorida,
 How does my queen?—Thou stormest venom-
 ously;
 Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's
 whistle
 Is as a whisper in the ears of death,
 Unheard.—Lycorida!—Lucina, O 10
 Divinest patroness, and midwife gentle
 To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
 Aboard our dancing boat; makeswift the pangs
 Of my queen's travail.

Enter LYCORIDA with an Infant.

Now, Lycorida!

Lyc. Here is a thing too young for such a
 place,

Who, if it had conceit,¹ would die, as I
 Am like to do: take in your arms this piece
 Of your dead queen.

Per. How, how, Lycorida!

Lyc. Patience, good sir; do not assist the storm.

Here's all that is left living of your queen,—
 A little daughter: for the sake of it, 21
 Be manly, and take comfort.

Per. O you gods!

Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
 And snatch them straight away? We here
 below

Recall not what we give, and therein may Vie honour with you.²

Lyc. Patience,³ good sir,
 Even for this charge.

Per. Now, mild may be thy life!
 For a more blustering birth had never babe:
 Quiet and gentle thy conditions!⁴
 For thou'rt the rudeliest welcome to this world That e'er was prince's child. Happy what follows! 31

Thou hast as chiding a nativity
 As fire, air, water, earth, and heaven can make,

To herald thee from the womb: even at the
 first 34
 Thy loss is more than can thy portage quit,
 With all thou canst find here.—Now, the good gods
 Throw their best eyes upon't!

Enter two Sailors.

First Sail. What courage, sir? God save you!

Per. Courage enough: I do not fear the flaw;⁵
 'T hath done to me the worst. Yet, for the love
 Of this poor infant, this fresh-new seafarer,
 I would it would be quiet. 42

First Sail. Slack the bolins there!—Thou wilt not, wilt thou? Blow, and split thyself.

Sec. Sail. But sea-room,⁶ and the brine and cloudy billow kiss the moon, I care not.

First Sail. Sir, your queen must overboard:
 the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be clear'd of the dead.

Per. That's your superstition. 50

First Sail. Pardon us, sir; with us at sea it hath been still observed; and we are strong in custom. Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard straight.

Per. As you think meet.—Most wretched
 queen!

Lyc. Here she lies, sir.

Per. A terrible childbed hast thou had, my dear;

No light, no fire: th' unfriendly elements
 Forgot thee utterly; nor have I time 59
 To give thee hallow'd to thy grave, but straight
 Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in the ooze;
 Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
 And aye-remaining lamps, the belching whale
 And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse,

Lying with simple shells.—O Lycorida,
 Bid Nestor bring me spices, ink and paper,
 My casket and my jewels; and bid Nicander
 Bring me the satin coffer: lay the babe
 Upon the pillow: hie thee, whiles I say 69
 A priestly farewell to her: suddenly, woman.

[Exit Lycorida.]

Sec. Sail. Sir, we have a chest beneath the hatches, caul'd and bitum'd ready.

¹ Conceit, understanding.

² Vie honour with you, contend with you in honour.

³ Patience, pronounced as a trisyllable.

⁴ Conditions, disposition (pronounced as a quadrisyllable).

⁵ Flaw, blast.

⁶ But sea-room, only let there be sea-room.

Per. I thank thee.—Mariner, say what coast is this?

Sec. Sail. We are near Tarsus.

Per. Thither, gentle mariner, Alter thy course for Tyre. When canst thou reach it?

Sec. Sail. By break of day, if the wind cease.

Per. O, make for Tarsus!—

There will I visit Cleon, for the babe
Cannot hold out to Tyrus: there I'll leave it
At careful nursing.—Go thy ways, good mariner:

I'll bring the body presently. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Ephesus. A room in Cerimon's house.

CERIMON, a Servant, and some poor people.

Cer. Philemon, ho!

Enter PHILEMON.

Phil. Doth my lord call?

Cer. Get fire and meat for these poor men:
'T has been a turbulent and stormy night.

Serv. I've been in many; but such a night as this,

Till now, I ne'er endur'd.

Cer. Your master will be dead ere you return;
There's nothing can be minister'd to nature
That can recover him.—[To Philemon] Give this to th' apothecary,
And tell me how it works.

[Exeunt all except Cerimon.]

Enter two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Good morrow. 10

Sec. Gent. Good morrow to your lordship.

Cer. Gentlemen,

Why do you stir so early?

First Gent. Sir,

Our lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
Shook as the earth did quake;
The very principals¹ did seem to rend,
And all to-topple: pure surprise and fear
Made me to quit the house.

Sec. Gent. That is the cause we trouble you so early;

'T is not our husbandry.

Cer. O, you say well. 20

¹ Principals, corner-posts.

First Gent. But I much marvel that your lordship, having 21

Rich tire about you, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden slumber of repose.

'T is most strange,

Nature should be so conversant with pain,
Being thereto not compell'd.

Cer.

I held it ever,
Virtue and cunning² were endowments greater
Than nobleness and riches: careless heirs
May the two latter darken and expend;

But immortality attends the former, 30

Making a man a god. 'T is known, I ever

Have studied physic, through which secret art,
By turning o'er authorities, I have—

Together with my practice—made familiar

To me and to my aid the blest infusions

That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones;

And I can speak of the disturbances

That nature works, and of her cures; which doth give me

A more content in course of true delight

Than to be thirsty after tottering honour,

Or tie my treasure up in silken bags, 41

To please the fool and death.

Sec. Gent. Your honour has through Ephesus pour'd forth.

Your charity, and hundreds call themselves

Your creatures, who by you have been restor'd:

And not your knowledge, your personal pain,
but even

Your purse, still open, hath built Lord Cerimon 47

Such strong renown as time shall never raze.

Enter two or three Servants with a chest.

First Serv. So; lift there.

Cer. What is that?

First Serv. Sir, even now

Did the sea toss upon our shore this chest:

'T is of some wreck.

Cer. Set 't down, let's look upon 't.

Sec. Gent. 'T is like a coffin, sir.

Cer. Whate'er it be,

'T is wondrous heavy. Wrench it open straight:

If the sea's stomach be o'ercharged with gold,

'T is a good constraint of fortune it belches upon us.

² Cunning, i.e. skill.

Sec. Gent. 'Tis so, my lord.

Cer. How close 't is caul'd and bitum'd!—
Did the sea cast it up?

First Serv. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Wrench it open;
Soft!—it smells most sweetly in my sense. 60

Sec. Gent. A delicate odour.

Cer. As ever hit my nostril.—So, up with it.—
O you most potent gods! what's here? a corse!

First Gent. Most strange!

Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state; balm'd and entreasur'd

With full bags of spices! A passport too!—
Apollo, perfect me in the characters!

[Reads from a scroll.]

"Here I give to understand,—
If e'er this coffin drive a-land,—
I, King Pericles, have lost 70
This queen, worth all our mundane cost.
Who finds her, give her burying;
She was the daughter of a king:
Besides this treasure for a fee,
The gods requite his charity!"

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
That even cracks for woe!—This chanc'd tonight.

Sec. Gent. Most likely, sir.

Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;
For look how fresh she looks!—They were too rough 79

That threw her in the sea.—Make a fire within:
Fetch hither all my boxes in my closet.—

[Exit a Servant.]

Death may usurp on nature many hours,
And yet the fire of life kindle again
The o'erpress'd spirits. I've read of an Egypttian

That had nine hours lien dead,
Who was by good appliances recover'd.

Re-enter a Servant, with boxes, napkins, and fire.

Well said,¹ well said; the fire and cloths.—
The rough and woful music that we have,
Cause it to sound, beseech you.
The vial once more:—how thou stirr'st, thou
block!— 90

The music there!—I pray you, give her air.—
Gentlemen,

This queen will live: nature awakes; a warmth
Breathes out of her: she hath not been entranc'd 94

Above five hours: see how she gins to blow
Into life's flower again!

First Gent. The heavens,
Through you, increase our wonder, and set up
Your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,
Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
Which Pericles hath lost, begin to part 100
Their fringes of bright gold; the diamonds
Of a most praised water do appear,
To make the world twice rich.—O, live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair
creature,

Rare as you seem to be! [She moves.]

Thai. O dear Diana,
Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?

Sec. Gent. Is not this strange?

First Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, my gentle neighbours!
Lend me your hands; to the next chamber bear her.—

Get linen:—now this matter must be look'd to,
For her relapse is mortal.² Come, come; 110
And Æsculapius guide us!

[Exeunt, carrying out Thaisa.]

SCENE III. Tarsus. A room in the Governor's house.

Enter PERICLES, CLEON, DIONYZA, and LY-CORIDA with MARINA in her arms.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;

My twelve months are expir'd, and Tyrus stands
In a litigious³ peace. You, and your lady, Take from my heart all thankfulness!⁴ The gods

Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your strokes of fortune,
Though they have hurt you mortally, yet glance

Full woundingly on us.

Dion. O your sweet queen!

² Mortal, fatal.

³ Litigious, precarious.

⁴ Take from my heart all thankfulness, receive my most hearty thanks.

¹ Well said, i.e. well done.

PEKIOLE S.

Act III. Scene II. lines 115-116.

Thai.

O dear Diana,

Where am I? Wheres my lord? What world is this?

That the strict Fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,

T' have bless'd mine eyes with her!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end 11
Must be as 't is. My gentle babe Marina,—

Whom, for¹ she was born at sea, I've nam'd
so,—here

I charge your charity withal, leaving her
The infant of your care; beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord, but think

Thai. But since King Pericles, my wedded lord,
I ne'er shall see again,

A vestal livery will I take me to,
And never more have joy.—(Act iii 4. 8-11.)

Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,—

For which the people's prayers still fall upon
you,— 19

Must in your child be thought on. If neglecton
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!²

Per. I believe you;
Your honour and your goodness teach me to 't,

Without your vows.—Till she be married,
madam,

By bright Diana, whom we honour, all 28
Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show ill in 't. So I take my leave.
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,
Which shall not be more dear to my respect³
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my thanks and prayers.

Cle. We'll bring your grace e'en to the edge
o' the shore,

¹ For, because.

² To the end of generation, i.e. throughout my posterity.

³ To my respect, in my affection.

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptune and
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will embrace
Your offer. Come, dearest madam.—O, no tears,
Lycorida, no tears: 39
Look to your little mistress, on whose grace
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my lord.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Ephesus. A room in Cerimon's house.

CERIMON and THAISA discovered.

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some certain jewels,
Lay with you in your coffer: which are at your command.
Know you the character?¹

Thai.

It is my lord's.
That I was shipp'd at sea, I well remember,
Ev'n on my eaning time;² but whether there deliver'd

By the holy gods, I cannot rightly say.
But since King Pericles, my wedded lord,
I ne'er shall see again,

A vestal livery will I take me to, 10
And never more have joy.

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as ye
speak,

Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may abide till your date expire.
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks, that's all;
Yet my good will is great, though the gift small. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

PROLOGUE.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Imagine Pericles arriv'd at Tyre,
Welcom'd and settled to his own desire.
His woful queen we leave at Ephesus,
Unto Diana there a votaress.
Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast-growing³ scene must find
At Tarsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters; who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,
Which makes her both the heart and place
Of general wonder. But, alack, 11
That monster envy, oft the wrack
Of earned praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife;
And in this kind:⁴ Cleon doth own
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
[Ev'n ripe for marriage-rite; this maid
Hight⁵ Philoten: and it is said]
For certain in our story, she

Would ever with Marina be: 20
Be't when she weav'd the sleided⁶ silk
With fingers long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp needle⁷ wound
The cambric, which she made more sound
By hurting it; or when to the mute
She sung, and made the night-bird mute,
That still records with moan;⁸ or when
She would with rich and constant pen
Vail to her mistress Dian; still
This Philoten contends in skill 30
With absolute Marina: so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Vie feathers white.⁹ Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so darks
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter
Might stand peerless by this slaughter. 40
The sooner her vile thoughts to stead,¹⁰

¹ Character, handwriting.

² Eaning time, time for childbirth.

³ Fast-growing, growing up (to Marina's maturity) as quick as thought.

⁴ In this kind, i.e. as follows.

⁵ Hight, is called.

⁶ Sleided, untwisted, floss.

⁷ Needle, pronounced "neele."

⁸ Records with moan, warbles dolefully.

⁹ Vie feathers white, compete about white feathers.

¹⁰ Stead, aid.

Lycorida, our nurse, is dead : 42
 And cursed Dionyza hath
 The pregnant instrument of wrath
 Prest¹ for this blow. Th' unborn event
 I do commend to your content :²
 Only I carry winged time
 Post on the lame feet of my rhyme ;
 Which never could I so convey, 49
 Unless your thoughts went on my way.—
 Dionyza does appear,
 With Leonine, a murderer. [Exit.

SCENE I. Tarsus. An open place near the sea-shore.

Enter DIONYZA and LEONINE.

Dion. Thy oath remember ; thou hast sworn to do 't :
 'Tis but a blow, which never shall be known.
 Thou canst not do a thing i' the world so soon,
 To yield thee so much profit. Let not conscience,
 Which is but cold, inflaming love in thy bosom,
 Inflamm too nicely ;³ nor let pity, which Ev'n women have cast off, melt thee, but be
 A soldier to thy purpose.

Leon. I'll do 't ; but yet she is a goodly creature.

Dion. The fitter, then, the gods should have her.—Here 10
 She comes weeping for her only mistress' death.—
 Thou art resolv'd ?

Leon. I am resolv'd.

Enter MARINA, with a basket of flowers.

Mar. No, I will rob Tellus of her weed,⁴
 To strew thy green with flowers ; the yellows, blues,
 The purple violets, and marigolds,
 Shall, as a carpet, hang upon thy grave,
 While summer-days do last.—Ay me ! poor maid,
 Born in a tempest, while my mother died,
 This world to me is like a lasting storm, 20
 Whirring me from my friends.

¹ Prest, ready.

² To your content, i.e. to your pleasure (in viewing it).

³ Nicely, over scrupulously.

⁴ Weed, dress.

Dion. How now, Marina ! why do you kee alone ? 2
 How chance my daughter is not with you ?
 Do not consume your blood with sorrowing :
 You have a nurse of me. Lord, how you favour
 Is chang'd with this unprofitable woe !
 [Come, go you on the beach ; give me you flowers.

Ere the sea mar it, walk with Leonine ;
 The air's quick⁵ there, and it pierces
 And sharpens the stomach. [Marina hesitates]
 —Come, Leonine,

Take her by the arm, walk with her.

Mar. No, I pray you
 I'll not bereave you of your servant.

Dion. Come, come
 I love the king your father, and yourself,
 With more than foreign heart. We every day
 Expect him here : when he shall come, and find

Our paragon to all reports thus blasted,
 He will repent the breadth of his gre voyage ;

Blame both my lord and me, that we have taken

No care to your best courses.⁶ Go, I pray you Walk, and be cheerful once again ; reserve⁷
 That excellent complexion, which did steal
 The eyes of young and old. Care not for me
 I can go home alone.

Mar. Well, I will go ;
 But yet I've no desire to it.

Dion. Come, come,
 I know 't is good for you.—
 Walk half an hour, Leonine, at the least :
 Remember what I've said.

Leon. I warrant you, madam.

Dion. I'll leave you, my sweet lady, for while :

Pray, walk softly, do not heat your blood :
 What ! I must have a care of you.

Mar. My thanks, sweet madam.
 [Exit Dionyza]

Is this wind westerly that blows ?

Leon. South-west.

Mar. When I was born, the wind was nor

⁵ Quick, fresh.

⁶ Your best courses, i.e. the habits best for you.

⁷ Reserve, be careful of.

Leon. Was't so?
Mar. My father, as nurse said, did never fear, 53
 But cried "Good seamen!" to the sailors, galling
 His kingly hands, haling ropes;
 And, clasping to the mast, endur'd a sea

That almost burst the deck.
Leon. When was this?
Mar. When I was born:
 Never was waves nor wind more violent;
 And from the ladder-tackle washes off 61
 A canvas-climber. "Ha!" says one, "wilt out?"

Mar.

Why will you kill me?—(Act iv. 1 71.)

And with a dropping industry they skip 63
 From stem to stern: the boatswain whistles,
 and

The master calls, and trebles their confusion.

Leon. [Drawing his sword] Come, say your prayers.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,

I grant it: pray; but be not tedious, for 69
 The gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
 To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.

Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?

230

Now, as¹ I can remember, by my troth,
 I never did her hurt in all my life:
 I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn
 To any living creature:
 Believe me, la, I never kill'd a mouse,
 Nor hurt a fly: I trod upon a worm 79
 Against my will, but I wept for it. How
 Have I offended her, wherein my death
 Might yield her any profit, or my life
 Imply her any danger?

Leon. My commission
 Is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do't for all the world, I hope.

¹ As, according as, if.

You are well-favour'd, and your looks fore-show

You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,
When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:

Good sooth, it show'd well in you: do so
now: 89

Your lady seeks my life; come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,
And will dispatch.

Enter Pirates, whilst MARINA is struggling.

First Pirate. Hold, villain!

[Leonine runs away.

Sec. Pirate. A prize! a prize!

Third Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part.
Come, let's have her aboard suddenly.

[Exeunt Pirates with Marina.

Re-enter LEONINE.

Leon. These roguing¹ thieves serve the great pirate Valdes;
And they have seiz'd Marina. Let her go:
There's no hope she'll return. I'll swear
she's dead,

And thrown into the sea.—[But I'll see further: 100

Perhaps they will but please themselves upon
her,

Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd must by me be slain.]
[Exit.

[SCENE II. Mytilene. A room in a brothel.

Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Boul't,— Boul't. Sir?

Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mytilene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this morn'g by being too wenchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures. We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and they with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore let's have fresh ones, whate'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be us'd in every trade, we shall never prosper. 13

Bawd. Thou say'st true: 't is not our bringing up of poor bastards,—as, I think, I have brought up some eleven,—

Boul't. Ay, to eleven; and brought them down again.—But shall I search the market?

Bawd. What else, man? The stuff we have, a strong wind will blow it to pieces, they are so pitifully sodden.² 21

Pand. Thou say'st true; they're too unwholesome, o' conscience. The poor Transylvanian is dead, that lay with the little baggage.

Boul't. Ay, she quickly poop'd him; she made him roast-meat for worms.—But I'll go search the market. [Exit.

Pand. Three or four thousand chequins were as pretty a proportion³ to live quietly, and so give over. 30

Bawd. Why to give over, I pray you? is it a shame to get when we are old?

Pand. O, our credit comes not in like the commodity, nor the commodity wages not with the danger: therefore, if in our youths we could pick up some pretty estate, 't were not amiss to keep our door hatch'd. Besides, the sore terms we stand upon with the gods will be strong with us for giving over.

Bawd. Come, other sorts offend as well as
we. 40

Pand. As well as we! ay, and better too;
we offend worse. Neither is our profession any trade; it's no calling.—But here comes Boul't.

Re-enter BOULT, with the Pirates and MARINA.

Boul't. [To Marina] Come your ways,—My masters, you say she's a virgin?

First Pirate. O, sir, we doubt it not.

Boul't. Master, I have gone through⁴ for this piece you see: if you like her, so; if not, I have lost my earnest.

Bawd. Boul't, has she any qualities? 50

Boul't. She has a good face, speaks well, and has excellent good clothes: there's no

¹ Sodden, i.e. overdone.

² As pretty a proportion, i.e. as good a competency (as need be).

⁴ Gone through, i.e. made a bargain.

¹ Roguing, vagabond.

{ farther necessity of qualities can make her be refus'd. 53

Bawd. What's her price, Boul't?

Boul't. I cannot be bated¹ one doit² of a thousand pieces.

Pand. Well, follow me, my masters, you shall have your money presently.—Wife, take her in; instruct her what she has to do, that she may not be raw in her entertainment. 60

[Exeunt Pander and Pirates.]

Bawd. Boul't, take you the marks of her,—the colour of her hair, complexion, height, age, with warrant of her virginity; and cry, "He that will give most shall have her first." Such a maidenhead were no cheap thing, if men were as they have been. Get this done as I command you.

Boul't. Performance shall follow. [Exit.]

Mar. Alack that Leonine was so slack, so slow! He should have struck, not spoke; or that these pirates—

Not enough barbarous—had not o'erboard thrown me 70

For to seek my mother!

Bawd. Why lament you, pretty one?

Mar. That I am pretty.

Bawd. Come, the gods have done their part in you.

Mar. I accuse them not.

Bawd. You are light³ into my hands, where you are like to live.

Mar. The more my fault 79
To scape his hands where I was like to die.

Bawd. Ay, and you shall live in pleasure.

Mar. No.

Bawd. Yes, indeed shall you, and taste gentlemen of all fashions: you shall fare well; you shall have the difference of all complexions.

What! do you stop your ears?

Mar. Are you a woman?

Bawd. What would you have me be, an I be not a woman? 89

Mar. An honest woman, or not a woman.

Bawd. Marry, whip thee, gosling: I think I shall have something to do with you. Come, you're a young foolish sapling, and must be bowed as I would have you.

Mar. The gods defend me! 95

Bawd. If it please the gods to defend you by men, then men must comfort you, men must feed you, men must stir you up.—Boul't's return'd.

Re-enter BOULT.

Now, sir, hast thou cried her through the market?

Boul't. I have cried her almost to the number of her hairs; I have drawn her picture with my voice. 102

Bawd. And I prithee tell me, how dost thou find the inclination of the people, especially of the younger sort?

Boul't. Faith, they listened to me as they would have hearkened to their father's testament. There was a Spaniard's mouth so watered, that he went to bed to her very description.

Bawd. We shall have him here to-morrow with his best ruff on. 111

Boul't. To-night, to-night. But, mistress, do you know the French knight that cowers i' the hams?

Bawd. Who, Monsieur Veroles?

Boul't. Ay, he: he offered to cut a caper at the proclamation; but he made a groan at it, and swore he would see her to-morrow.

Bawd. Well, well; as for him, he brought his disease hither: here he does but repair it. I know he will come in our shadow, to scatter his crowns in the sun. 122

Boul't. Well, if we had of every nation a traveller, we should lodge them with this sign.

Bawd. [To Marina] Pray you, come hither awhile. You have fortunes coming upon you. Mark me: you must seem to do that fearfully which you commit willingly, despise profit where you have most gain. To weep that you live as you do makes pity in your lovers: seldom but that pity begets you a good opinion, and that opinion a mere⁴ profit. 132

Mar. I understand you not.

Boul't. O, take her home, mistress, take her home: these blushes of hers must be quenched with some present practice.

Bawd. Thou say'st true, i' faith, so they

¹ I cannot be bated, i.e. they will not bate me (or remit).

² Doit, the smallest coin, worth about half a farthing.

³ Light, lighted, fallen.

⁴ Mere, pure.

must; for your bride goes to that with shame which is her way to go with warrant.

Boult. Faith, some do, and some do not.
But, mistress, if I have bargain'd for the joint,— 141

Bawd. Thou mayst cut a morsel off the spit.

Boult. I may so.

Bawd. Who should deny it?—Come, young one, I like the manner of your garments
well.

Boult. Ay, by my faith, they shall not be chang'd yet.

Bawd. Boult, spend thou that in the town:
report what a sojourner we have; you'll lose nothing by custom. When nature fram'd this piece, she meant thee a good turn; therefore say what a paragon she is, and thou hast the harvest out of thine own report. 153

Boult. I warrant you, mistress, thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels as my giving out her beauty stir up the lewdly-inclined.
I'll bring home some to-night.

Bawd. Come your ways; follow me.

Mar. If fires be hot, knives sharp, or waters deep,

Untied I still my virgin-knot will keep. 160
Diana, aid my purpose!

Bawd. What have we to do with Diana?
Pray you, will you go with us? [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Tarsus. A room in the Governor's house.

Enter CLEON and DIONYZA, in mourning garments.

Dion. Why, are you foolish? Can it be undone?

Cle. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter
The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think
You'll turn a child again.

Cle. Were I chief lord of all this spacious
world,

I'd give it to undo the deed.—O lady,
Much less in blood than virtue, yet a princess
To equal any single crown o' th' earth

I' the justice of compare!—O villain Leonine!
Whom thou hast poison'd too: 10

If thou hadst drunk to him, 't had been a kindness

Becoming well thy fact:¹ what canst thou say
When noble Pericles shall demand his child?

Dion. That she is dead. Nurses are not the Fates, 14

To foster it, nor ever to preserve.

She died at night; I'll say so. Who can cross
it?

Unless you play the pious innocent,

Cle. O Dionyza, such a piece of slaughter
The sun and moon ne'er look'd upon!

Dion. I think
You'll turn a child again.—(Act iv 3. 2-4.)

And for an honest attribute² cry out 18
"She died by foul play."

Cle. O, go to. Well, well,
Of all the faults beneath the heaven, the gods
Do like this worst.

Dion. Be one of those that think
The petty wrens of Tarsus will fly hence,
And open this to Pericles. I do shame
To think of what a noble strain you are,
And of how coward a spirit.

Cle. To such proceeding
Who ever but his approbation added,
Though not his prime consent, he did not flow
From honourable sources.

¹ Fact, deed.

² For an honest attribute, i.e. to be accounted honest.

Dion. Be't so, then:
Yet none does know, but you, how she came
dead,
Nor none can know Leonine being gone. 30
She did distain¹ my child, and stood between
Her and her fortunes: none would look on her,
But cast their gazes on Marina's face;
Whilst ours was blurted at, and held a maw-kin,
Not worth the time of day. It pierc'd me thorough;²
And though you call my course unnatural,
You not your child well loving, yet I find
It greets me as an enterprise of kindness
Perform'd to your sole daughter.

Cle. Heavens forgive it!

Dion. And as for Pericles, what should he say? 40
We wept after her hearse, and yet we mourn:
Her monument's almost finish'd, and her epitaphs

In glittering golden characters express
A general praise to her, and care in us
At whose expense 't is done.

Cle. Thou'rt like the harpy,
Which, to betray, dost, with thine angel's face,
Seize with thine eagle's talons.

Dion. You are like one that superstitiously Doth swear to the gods that winter kills the flies: 50
But yet I know you'll do as I advise.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A public place before the monument of Marina.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Thus time we waste, and longest leagues make short;
Sail seas in cockles, have an wish but for't;
Making³—to take your imagination—
From bourn to bourn, region to region.
By you being pardon'd, we commit no crime
To use one language in each several clime
Where our scenes seem to live. I do beseech
you
To learn of me, who stand i' the gaps to teach
you,

¹ Distain, i.e. eclipse, sully (by contrast).

² Thorough, through. ³ Making, i.e. voyaging.

The stages of our story. Pericles
Is now again thwarting⁴ the wayward seas,
Attended on by many a lord and knight, 11
To see his daughter, all his life's delight:
Old Helicanus goes along.⁵ Behind
Is left to govern it,⁶ you bear in mind,
Old Escanes, whom Helicanus late
Advanc'd in time to great and high estate.
Well-sailing ships and bounteous winds have brought
This king to Tarsus—think his pilot thought;
So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow
on— 19
To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.
Like motes and shadows see them move awhile;
Your ears unto your eyes I'll reconcile.

DUMB-SHOW.

*Enter, from one side, PERICLES with his Train; from the other, CLEON and DIONYZA,
in mourning garments. CLEON shows
PERICLES the tomb of Marina; whereat PERICLES makes lamentation, puts on sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs. Then exeunt CLEON, DIONYZA, and the rest.*

See how belief may suffer by foul show!
This borrow'd passion⁷ stands for true old woe;
And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,
With sighs shot through and biggest tears
o'ershower'd,

Leaves Tarsus, and again embarks. He swears
Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs:
He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears
A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears, 30
And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit⁸
The epitaph is for Marina writ
By wicked Dionyza.

[Reads the inscription on Marina's monument.

"The fairest, sweet'st, and best lies here,
Who wither'd in her spring of year.
She was of Tyrus the king's daughter,
On whom foul death hath made this slaughter;
Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,
Thetis, being proud, swallow'd some part o' th'
earth:

⁴ Thwarting, crossing.

⁵ Goes along, goes with him.

⁶ Govern it, act as governor.

⁷ Borrow'd passion, counterfeit grief.

⁸ Wit, know, take note of.

Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd, 40
Hath Thetis' birth-child on the heavens bestow'd:
Wherefore she does—and swears she'll never stint—
Make raging battery upon shores of flint."

No visor doth become black villany
So well as soft and tender flattery.
[Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,
And bear his courses to be ordered
By Lady Fortune; while our scene must play
His daughter's woe and heavy well-a-day
In her unholy service. Patience, then, 50
And think you now are all in Mytilen.]

[Exit.

[SCENE V. Mytilene. A street before the brothel.

Enter, from the brothel, two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Did you ever hear the like?

Sec. Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.

First Gent. But to have divinity preach'd there! did you ever dream of such a thing?

Sec. Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdy-houses:—shall's go hear the vestals sing?

First Gent. I'll do any thing now that is virtuous; but I am out of the road of rutting for ever. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI. The same. A room in the brothel.

Enter PANDER, BAWD, and BOULT.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Fie, fie upon her! she's able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation.
We must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fit-ment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master reasons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should cheapen¹ a kiss of her. 10

Boult. Faith, I must ravish her, or she'll disfurnish us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swearers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

¹ Cheapen, bargain for.

Bawd. Faith, there's no way to be rid on't, but by the way to the pox.—Here comes the Lord Lysimachus disguised.

Boult. We should have both lord and lown, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers. 21

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now! How² a dozen of virginities?

Bawd. Now, the gods to-bless your honour!

Boult. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 'tis the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs.
How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal, and defy the surgeon?

Bawd. We have here one, sir, if she would — but there never came her like in Mytilene.

Lys. If she'd do the deed of darkness, thou wouldst say. 33

Bawd. Your honour knows what 'tis to say well enough.

Lys. Well, call forth, call forth.

[Exit Boult.

Bawd. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, prithee? 40

Bawd. O, sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.³

Bawd. Here comes that which grows to the stalk,—never pluck'd yet, I can assure you.

Re-enter BOULT with MARINA.

Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there's for you:—leave us.

Bawd. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do. 52

Bawd. [To Marina] First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man.

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

² How, how go, what price.

³ To be chaste, i.e. of being chaste.

Bawd. Next, he's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not. 61

Bawd. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously, I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Ha? you done?

Bawd. My lord, she's not pac'd¹ yet: you must take some pains to work her to your manage.²—Come, we will leave his honour and her together.—Go thy ways. 71

[Exeunt Bawd, Pander, and Boul.]

Lys. Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. Why, I cannot name't but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. E'er since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to't so young? Were you a gamester at five or at seven? 81

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into't? I hear say you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am? 90

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, your herb-woman; she that sets seeds and roots of shame and iniquity. O, you have heard something of my power, and so stand aloof for more serious wooing. But I protest to thee, pretty one, my authority shall not see thee, or else look friendly upon thee. Come, bring me to some private place: come, come.

Mar. If you were born to honour, show it now;

If put upon you, make the judgment good That thought you worthy of it. 101

Lys. How's this? how's this?—Some more;—be sage.

Mar. For me,

That am a maid, though most ungentle fortune Have plac'd me in this sty, where, since I came,

Diseases have been sold dearer than physic,—O, that the gods

Would set me free from this unhallow'd place, Though they did change me to the meanest bird

That flies i' the purer air!

Lys. I did not think

Thou couldst have spoke so well; ne'er dream'd thou couldst. 110

Had I brought hither a corrupted mind, Thy speech had alter'd it. Hold, here's gold for thee:

Perséver in that clear³ way thou goest, And the gods strengthen thee!

Mar. The good gods preserve you!

Lys. For me, be you thoughten⁴

That I came with no ill intent; for to me The very doors and windows savour vilely. Fare thee well. Thou'rt a piece of virtue, and I doubt not but thy training hath been noble.—Hold, here's more gold for thee.— 120

A curse upon him, die he like a thief, That robs thee of thy goodness! If thou dost Hear from me, it shall be for thy good.

Re-enter BOULT.

Boul. I beseech your honour, one piece for me.

Lys. Avaunt, thou damned doorkeeper! Your house, but for this virgin that doth prop it, Would sink, and overwhelm you. Away! 134

[Exit.]

Boul. How's this? We must take another course with you. If your peevish chastity, which is not worth a breakfast in the cheapest country under the cope, shall undo a whole household, let me be gelded like a spaniel. Come your ways. 134

Mar. Whither would you have me?

¹ Pac'd, broken in, taught her paces (like a horse).

² To your manage, i.e. to be managed or governed by you.

³ Clear, virtuous (pronounced as a dissyllable).

⁴ Be you thoughten, i.e. be assured.

Boult. I must have your maidenhead taken off, or the common hangman shall execute it. Come your ways. We'll have no more gentlemen driven away. Come your ways, I say.

Re-enter BAWD.

Bawd. How now! what's the matter? 140

Boult. Worse and worse, mistress; she has here spoken holy words to the Lord Lysimachus.

Bawd. O abominable!

Boult. She makes our profession as it were to stink afore the face of the gods.

Bawd. Marry, hang her up for ever!

Boult. The nobleman would have dealt with her like a nobleman, and she sent him away as cold as a snowball; saying his prayers too. 149

Bawd. Boult, take her away; use her at thy pleasure: crack the glass of her virginity, and make the rest malleable.

Boult. An if she were a thornier piece of ground than she is, she shall be ploughed.

Mar. Hark, hark, you gods!

Bawd. She conjures: away with her! Would she had never come within my doors!—Marry, hang you!—She's born to undo us.—Will you not go the way of women-kind? Marry, come up, my dish of chastity with rosemary and bays! [Exit.

Boult. Come, mistress: come your ways with me. 162

Mar. Whither wilt thou have me?

Boult. To take from you the jewel you hold so dear.

Mar. Prithee, tell me one thing first.

Boult. Come now, your one thing.

Mar. What canst thou wish thine enemy to be?

Boult. Why, I could wish him to be my master, or rather my mistress. 170

Mar. Neither of these are so bad as thou art, Since they do better thee in their command. Thou hold'st a place, for which the pained'st fiend

Of hell would not in reputation change:

Thou art the damned doorkeeper to every

Coystril¹ that comes inquiring for his Tib; To the cholerick fisting of every rogue Thy ear is liable; thy food is such 178 As hath been belch'd on by infected lungs.

Boult. What would you have me do? go to the wars, would you? where a man may serve seven years for the loss of a leg, and have not money enough in the end to buy him a wooden one?

Mar. Do any thing but this thou doest. Empty

Old receptacles, or common shores,² of filth; Serve by indenture to the common hangman:

Any of these ways are yet better than this; For what thou professest, a baboon, could he speak, 189

Would own a name too dear.—O, that the gods Would safely deliver me from this place!— Here, here's gold for thee.

If that thy master would gain by me, Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance,

With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast;

And I will undertake all these to teach.

I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again, 200

And prostitute me to the basest groom That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But amongst honest women.

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there's no going but by their consent: therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough. Come, I'll do for thee what I can; come your ways. [Exeunt.]

¹ Coystril, blackguard.

² Shores, sewers.

ACT V.

[PROLOGUE.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Marina thus the brothel scapes, and chances
 Into an honest house, our story says.
 She sings like one immortal, and she dances
 As goddess-like to her admired lays;
 Deep clerks she dumbs; and with her needle¹
 composes
 Nature's own shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry,
 That even her art sisters the natural roses;
 Her inkle,² silk, twin with the rubied cherry:
 That pupils lacks she none of noble race, ⁹
 Who pour their bounty on her; and her gain
 She gives the cursed bawd. Here we her place;
 And to her father turn our thoughts again,
 Where we left him, on the sea. We there him
 lost:
 Whence, driven before the winds, he is arriv'd
 Herewherehisdaughterdwells; and onthiscoast
 Suppose him now at anchor. The city striv'd God Neptune's annual feast to keep: from whence
 Lysimachus our Tyrian ship espies,
 His³ banners sable, trimm'd with rich expense;
 And to him in his barge with fervour hies. ²⁰
 In your supposing once more put your sight
 Of heavy⁴ Pericles; think this his bark:
 Where what is done in action, more, if might,
 Shall be discover'd;⁵ please you, sit, and hark.

[Exit.]

SCENE I. On board Pericles' ship, off Mytilene.
A pavilion on deck, closed. The barge of Lysimachus is lying alongside the ship.

Two Sailors, one belonging to Pericles' ship, the other to Mytilene; enter to them HELICANUS.

Tyr. Sail. [To the Sailor of Mytilene] Where is Lord Helicanus? he can resolve⁶ you.

¹ Needle, pronounced "neele."² Inkle, thread or wool.³ His, i.e. the ship's.⁴ Heavy, sorrowful.⁵ In action . . . discover'd, shall be shown in the play, as more should be were it possible. ⁶ Resolve, inform.

O, here he is.—

Sir, there's a barge put off from Mytilene,
 And in it is Lysimachus the governor,
 Who craves to come aboard. What is your will?

Hel. That he have his. [Exit Mytilenian
Sailor.] Call up some gentlemen.

Tyr. Sail. Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter two or three Gentlemen.

First Gent. Doth your lordship call?

Hel. Gentlemen, there's some of worth would come aboard:

I pray ye, greet them fairly. 10

Enter, from the barge, LYSIMACHUS and Lords.

Tyr. Sail. Sir,
 This is the man that can, in aught you would,
 Resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! the gods preserve
 you!

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,
 And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.

Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,

Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
 I made to it, to know of whence you are. 19

Hel. First, what is your place?

Lys. I am the governor
 Of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir,
 Our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;
 A man who for this three months hath not spoken

To any one, nor taken sustenance
 But to prorogue his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground
 Is his distemp'ature?

Hel. 'T would be
 Too tedious to repeat; but the main grief
 Springs from the loss
 Of a beloved daughter and a wife. 30

Lys. May we not see him?

Hel. You may;
 But bootless is your sight: he will not speak
 To any.

Lys. Yet let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him [The curtain is drawn, and Pericles discovered]. This was a goodly person,

Till the disaster that, one mortal night,
Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir king, all hail! the gods preserve you!

Hail, royal sir! 40

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

First Lord. Sir,

We have a maid in Mytilen, I durst wager,
Would win some words of him.

Lys. 'Tis well bethought.
She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other chosen attractions, would allure,
And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,

Which now are midway stopp'd:
She is all happy as the fairest of all;
And her fellow maid is now upon 50
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side.

[Whispers First Lord; who descends to the barge of Lysimachus.]

Hel. Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit

That bears recovery's name. But, since your kindness

We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you
That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O, sir, a courtesy
Which if we should deny, the most just gods
For every graff¹ would send a caterpillar, 60
And so afflict our province.—Yet once more Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir; I will recount it to you:—
But, see, I am prevented.

Re-enter, from the barge, First Lord, with MARINA and a young Lady.

Lys. O, here is
The lady that I sent for.—Welcome, fair one!—
Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. She's a gallant lady.

Lys. She's such a one, that, were I well
assur'd

Came of a gentle kind and noble stock,
I'd wish no better choice, and think me rarely
wed.— 69

Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:
If that thy prosperous artificial feat²
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use

My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided

That none but I and my companion maid
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let's leave her;
And the gods make her prosperous! 80

[They retire. Marina sings.]

Lys. Mark'd he your music?

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, lend ear.

Per. Hum, ha! [Touching Pericles.]
Mar. I am a maid, [Thrusts her away.]

My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on like a comet: she speaks,

My lord, that, may be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortun'd did malign³ my state,
My derivation was from ancestors 91

Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world and awkward casualties⁴
Bound me in servitude.—[Aside] I will desist;
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, "Go not till he
speak."

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parent-age—

To equal mine!—was it not thus? what say
you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage, 100

You would not do me violence.

² Prosperous artificial feat, felicitous and skilful doing.

³ Did malign, dealt malignantly with.

⁴ Awkward casualties, adverse chances.

Per. I do think so.—Pray you, turn your eyes upon me. 102
You are like something that—What country-woman?

Here of these shores?

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with woe,
And shall deliver weeping. My dearest wife
Was like this maid, and such a one
My daughter might have been: my queen's square brows;
Her stature to an inch; as wand-like straight;
As silver-voic'd; her eyes as jewel-like, 111
And cas'd as richly; in pace¹ another Juno:

Per. What countrywoman?
Here of these shores?—(Act v. 1 103, 104.)

Who starves the ears she feeds, and makes them hungry,
The more she gives them speech.—Where do you live?

Mar. Where I am but a stranger: from the deck
You may discern the place.

Per. Where were you bred?
And how achiev'd you these endowments, which
You make more rich to owe?²

Mar. If I should tell
My history, it would seem like lies

Disdain'd in the reporting.³

Per. Prithee, speak:
Falseness cannot come from thee; for thou look'st 121
Modest as Justice, and thou seem'st a palace
For the crown'd Truth to dwell in: I'll believe thee,
And make my senses credit thy relation
To points that seem impossible; for thou look'st
Like one I lov'd indeed. What were thy friends?

¹ Pace, gait. ² To owe, i.e. by your possession of them.

³ Disdain'd in the reporting, deemed unworthy of belief even while they are told.

Didst thou not say, when I did push thee back,—
Which was when I perceiv'd thee,—that thou cam'st
From good descending?

Mar. So indeed I did.

Per. Report thy parentage. I think thou said'st 180
Thou hadst been toss'd from wrong to injury,
And that thou thought'st thy griefs might equal
mine,
If both were open'd.

Mar. Some such thing
I said, and said no more but what my thoughts
Did warrant me was likely.

Per. Tell thy story;
If thine consider'd prove the thousandth part
Of my endurance,¹ thou'rt a man, and I
Have suffer'd like a girl: yet thou dost look Like Patience gazing on kings' graves, and smiling

Extremity out of act. What were thy friends?
How lost thou them? Thy name, my most kind virgin? 141

Recount, I do beseech thee: come, sit by me.

Mar. My name is Marina.

Per. O, I am mock'd,
And thou by some incensed god sent hither
To make the world to laugh at me.

Mar. Patience, good sir,
Or here I'll cease.

Per. Nay, I'll be patient.²
Thou little know'st how thou dost startle me,
To call thyself Marina.

Mar. The name 149
Was given me by one that had some power,—
My father, and a king.

Per. How! a king's daughter?
And call'd Marina?

Mar. You said you would believe me;
But, not to be a troubler of your peace,
I will end here.

Per. But are you flesh and blood?
Have you a working pulse? and are no fairy?
Motion!—Well; speak on. Where were you born?

And wherefore call'd Marina?

Mar. Call'd Marina
For³ I was born at sea.

Per.

At sea! what mother?

Mar. My mother was the daughter of a king;
Who died the very minute I was born, 160
As my good nurse Lycorida hath oft Deliver'd⁴ weeping.

Per. O, stop there a little!—
[Aside] This is the rarest dream that e'er dull
sleep

Did mock sad fools withal: this cannot be:
My daughter's buried.—Well:—where were you bred?

I'll hear you more, to the bottom of your story,
And never interrupt you.

Mar. You'll scarce believe me;
'T were best I did give o'er.

Per. I will believe you by the syllable
Of what you shall deliver. Yet, give me leave:—
How came you in these parts? where were you bred? 171

Mar. The king my father did in Tarsus leave me;

Till cruel Cleon, with his wicked wife,
Did seek to murder me: and having woo'd
A villain to attempt it, who having drawn⁵ to
do't,

A crew of pirates came and rescu'd me;
Brought me to Mytilene. But, good sir, Whither will you have me? Why do you weep? It may be,

You think me an impostor: no, good faith;
I am the daughter to King Pericles, 180
If good King Pericles be.

Per. Ho, Helicanus!

Hel. Calls my lord?

Per. Thou art a grave and noble counsellor,
Most wise in general: tell me, if thou canst,
What this maid is, or what is like to be,
That thus hath made me weep?

Hel. I know not; but Here is the regent, sir, of Mytilene
Speaks nobly of her.

Iys. She would never tell
Her parentage; being demanded that, 190
She would sit still and weep.

Per. O Helicanus, strike me, honour'd sir;
Give me a gash, put me to present pain;
Lest this great sea of joys rushing upon me
O'erbear the shores of my mortality,

¹ My endurance, what I have undergone.

² Patient, pronounced as a trisyllable. ³ For, because.

⁴ Deliver'd, related.

⁵ Drawn, drawn his sword.

And drown me with their sweetness.—O, come hither,

Thou that begett'st him that did thee beget;
Thou that was born at sea, buried at Tarsus,
And found at sea again!—O Helicanus, 199
Down on thy knees, thank th' holy gods as loud
As thunder threatens us: this is Marina.—
What was thy mother's name? tell me but that,
For truth can never be confirm'd enough,
Though doubts did ever sleep.

Mar. First, sir, I pray,
What is your title?

Per. I am Pericles of Tyre: but tell me now
My drown'd queen's name, as in the rest you
said

Thou hast been godlike perfect,
The heir of kingdoms, and another like
To Pericles thy father 210

Mar. Is it no more to be your daughter than
To say my mother's name was Thaisa?
Thaisa was my mother, who did end
The minute I began.

Per. Now, blessing on thee! Rise; thou art
my child.—

Give me fresh garments.—Mine own, Helicanus;

She is not dead at Tarsus, as she should have been,¹

By savage Cleon: she shall tell thee all;
When thou shalt kneel, and justify in know-ledge²

She is thy very princess.—Who is this? 220

Hel. Sir, 't is the governor of Mytilene,
Who, hearing of your melancholy state,
Did come to see you.

Per. I embrace you.—
Give me my robes.—I am wild in my beholding.—

O heavens bless my girl!—But, hark, what
music?—

Tell Helicanus, my Marina, tell him
O'er, point by point, for yet he seems to doubt,
How sure you are my daughter.—But, what
music?

Hel. My lord, I hear none.

Per. None! 230
The music of the spheres!—List, my Marina.

Lys. It is not good to cross him; give him
way. 232

Per. Rar'st sounds! Do ye not hear?

Lys. My lord, I hear. [Music.

Per. Most heavenly music!

It nips me into listening, and thick slumber
Hangs upon mine eyes: let me rest. [Sleeps.

Lys. A pillow for his head:—

So, leave him all.—Well, my companion friends,
If this but answer to my just belief,
I'll well remember you. 240

[All except Pericles go aside.

DIANA descends. •

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus: hie thee thither,

And do upon mine altar sacrifice.

There, when my maiden priests are met together,

Before the people all,
Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:
To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's, call,
And give them repetition to the life.

Or perform my bidding, or thou liv'st in woe;
Do it, and happy;³ by my silver bow!

Awake, and tell thy dream. 250

[Ascends and exit.

Per. [Awaking] Celestial Dian, goddess argentine,⁴

I will obey thee.—Helicanus! •

Re-enter HELICANUS, LYSIMACHUS, MARINA, &c.

Hel. Sir,

Per. My purpose was for Tarsus, there to strike

Th' inhospitable Cleon; but I am
For other service first: toward Ephesus
Turn our blown sails; efts⁵oons I'll tell thee
why.—

[To Lysimachus] Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,

And give you gold for such provision⁶

As our intents will need?⁷

Lys. Sir, 260

¹ Should have been, i.e. was said to have been.

² Justify in knowledge, confirm upon fuller information.

³ Happy, i.e. thou wilt live happy.

⁴ Argentine, i.e. of the silver moon.

⁵ Efts⁵oons, presently.

⁶ Provision, pronounced as a quadrisyllable.

⁷ Our intents will need, our purpose will require (to carry away).

With all my heart; and, when you come ashore,
I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail, 262
Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems
You have been noble towards her.

Lys. Sir, lend me your arm.

Per. Come, my Marina. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Ephesus. The Temple of Diana.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;
More a little, and then dumb.
This, my last boon, give me,—
For such kindness must relieve me,—

Thais. Voice and favour!—
You are, you are—O royal Pericles!—(Act v. 3 13, 14.)

That you aptly will suppose
What pageantry, what feats, what shows,
What minstrelsy, and pretty din,
The regent made in Mytilin,
To greet the king. So he thrived,
That he is promis'd to be wived 10
To fair Marina; but in no wise
Till he¹ had done his sacrifice,
As Dian bade: whereto being bound,
The interim, pray you, all confound.²
In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd,
And wishes fall out as they're will'd.
At Ephesus, the temple see,

Our king, and all his company.
That he can hither come so soon,
Is by your fancies' thankful doom.³ [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same; Thaisa, as high priestess, standing near the altar; a number of Virgins on each side; Cerimon and other Ephesians attending.

Enter PERICLES, LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and Attendants.

Per. Hail, Dian! to perform thy just command,

¹ He, i.e. Pericles. ² Confound, consume, regard as past.

³ Thankful doom, kindly judgment.

I here confess myself the king of Tyre;
 Who, frighted from my country, did
 Wed at Pentapolis the fair Thaisa.
 At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth
 A maid-child call'd Marina; who, O goddess,
 Wears yet thy silver livery. She at Tarsus
 Was nurs'd with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
 He sought to murder: but her better stars
 Brought her to Mytilene; 'gainst whose shore
 Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard
 us, 11
 Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she
 Made known herself my daughter.
Thai. Voice and favour!—
 You are, you are—O royal Pericles!—

[Faints.]

Per. What means the nun? she dies! help,
 gentlemen!
Cer. Noble sir,
 If you have told Diana's altar true,
 This is your wife.
Per. Reverend appearer,¹ no;
 I threw her o'erboard with these very arms.
Cer. Upon this coast, I warrant you.
Per. 'Tis most certain.
Cer. Look to the lady;—O, she's but o'erjoy'd.— 21
 Early in blustering morn this lady was Thrown upon this shore. I op'd the coffin, Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and plac'd her
 Here in Diana's temple.

Per. May we see them?
Cer. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house,
 Whither I invite you.—Look,
 Thaisa is recover'd.

Thai. O, let me look!
 If he be none of mine, my sanctity
 Will to my sense bend no licentious ear, 30
 But curb it, spite of seeing.—O, my lord,
 Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
 Like him you are: did you not name a tempest,
 A birth, and death?

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!
Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed dead
 And drown'd.

Per. Immortal Dian!

Thai. Now I know you better.—
 When we with tears parted² Pentapolis,
 The king my father gave you such a ring.

[Shows a ring.]

Per. [Showing his ring] This, this: no more,
 you gods! your present kindness 40
 Makes my past miseries sport: you shall do
 well,

That on the touching of her lips I may
 Melt, and no more be seen.—O, come, be buried
 A second time within these arms.

Mar. [Kneeling] My heart
 Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.

Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;

Thy burden at the sea, and call'd Marina
 For³ she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd, and mine own!

Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!

Thai. I know you not.

Per. You've heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre, 50

I left behind an ancient substitute:
 Can you remember what I call'd the man?
 I've nam'd him oft.

Thai. 'Twas Helicanus then.

Per. Still confirmation:
 Embrace him, dear Thaisa; this is he.
 Now do I long to hear how you were found;
 How possibly preserv'd; and who to thank,
 Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this is the
 man,

Through whom the gods have shown their power, that can 60

From first to last resolve⁴ you.

Per. Reverend sir,
 The gods can have no mortal officer
 More like a god than you. Will you deliver⁵
 How this dead queen re-lives?

Cer. I will, my lord.
 Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
 Where shall be shown you all was found with
 her;

How she came plac'd here in the temple;
 No needful thing omitted.

¹ Reverend appearer, i.e. you who appear reverend or worthy of respect.

² Parted, left.

⁴ Resolve, satisfy.

³ For, because.

⁵ Deliver, relate.

Per. Pure Dian, bless¹ thee for thy vision! I
Will offer night-oblations² to thee.— 70

Thaisa,

This prince, the fair betrothed of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis.—And now

This ornament,
Makes me look dismal, will I clip to form,
And what this fourteen years no razor touch'd,
To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good credit, sir,
My father's dead.

Per. • Heavens make a star of him!
Yet there, my queen, 79
We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days: •

Our son and daughter shall in Tyrus reign.—
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay
To hear the rest untold: sir, lead's the way.

[Exeunt.]

¹ Bless, i. e. I glorify.

² Oblations, pronounced as a quadrisyllable.

[EPILOGUE.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. In Antiochus and his daughter you have heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:
In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen,
Although assail'd with fortune fierce and keen,
Virtue preserv'd from fell destruction's blast,
Led on by heaven, and crown'd with joy at last:
In Helicanus may you well descry 91
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears
The worth that learned charity aye wears:
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when fame
Had spread their cursed deed, and honour'd
name
Of Pericles, to rage the city turn,
That him and his they in his palace burn;
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them,—although not done, but meant.
So, on your patience evermore attending, 100
New joy wait on you! Here our play has ending. [Exit.]

NOTES TO PERICLES.

ACT I. PROLOGUE.

1.—The choruses in this play are distinguished from those of Shakespeare by the dumb-shows which accompany them. Another difference is that most of them, as is the case with this prologue, require a scene; whereas Shakespeare's do not. We are to understand that the presenter of the play is a phantom,—the poet Gower's spirit, which has returned to earth from the ashes of the tomb, and is glad for a while to resume a mortal life, provided what follows may bring pleasure. Accordingly, in Gower's last speech before the close of the play (v. 2 1-4) the hearers are reminded that he will presently be dumb; when he makes a request of them, it is as his last boon before leaving the world. But this idea of a re-embodied spirit is not anywhere dwelt on, nor turned to any use in the development of the story. Our Presenter in this play is as much without individuality as his fellows elsewhere, who are either nameless, as the Chorus in Romeo and Juliet or Henry V., or are only abstractions, like Time in the Winter's Tale, and Rumour at the opening of II. Henry IV.

2. Lines 1, 2:

*To sing a song that old was SUNG,
From ashes ancient Gower is COME.*

The false rhyme in this couplet is remarkable, and seems beyond hope of amendment. Steevens proposed sprung instead of come, but the idea of the phoenix, which this would suggest, is out of place. The author of these choruses of Gower's has in several places treated words ending in m and n as rhyming together; as in home and drone, soon and doom, run and dumb. We may hence conclude that the rhyme of sung with come was satisfactory to the writer. In several places, indeed, he seems to have been satisfied with the mere assonance of vowels, as in labour and father (l. 1. 66, 67). These imperfect rhymes mostly occur in Gower's choruses, and some have thought them to be intentional, and meant, like the archaisms in the same choruses, to give an air of antiquity to the lines.

3. Line 6: On EMBER-EVES and HOLY-ALES.—The ember-eves are the eves preceding the ember-days, or days of fasting and humiliation. The Quartos and Folios give holidays, variously spelt, in place of holy-ales, which was suggested by Farmer in order to save the rhyme. The word ale was formerly used to denote a festival. See Two Gentlemen of Verona, note 56. Holy-ale doubtless means the same as Church-ale, or wake.

4. Line 9: The PURCHASE is to make men glorious.—Purchase was used formerly in a wider sense than that of acquisition by means of money. Compare i. 2. 72:

I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty.

And see I. Henry IV. iii. 3. 45, and note 107 on that play. The line means: The use and advantage of this story is to show what men can be and do; i.e. this is a romance of chivalry.

5. Line 11: THESE latter times—Q. 1. reads those

6. Lines 15, 16:

I LIFE would wish, and that I might
Waste it for you, like TAPER-LIGHT

Mr. Boyle, in his paper on Wilkins's share in Shakespeare's Pericles, quotes the same figure from the play of the Travels of Three English Brothers (1807), the joint work of Day, Wilkins, and Rowley:

Our lives are lighted tapers, that must out.
—Day's Works, p. 18 of play.

7. Lines 17–20:

This ANTIOCH, then; Antiochus the Great
Built up this city for his chiefest seat;
The fairest in all Syria,—
I tell you what mine authors say.

The common punctuation of lines 17, 18 is as follows:—

This Antioch, then, Antiochus the great
Built up, this city, for his chiefest seat;

the words this city being taken as pleonastic. But the arrangement given in the text makes the sentence much more direct. The statement is taken from Twine, Patterne of Painefull Adventures, ch. i., who says, "the most famous and mightie king Antiochus . . . builded the goodly citie of Antiochia in Syria, and called it after his own name, as the chiefest seat of all his dominions" (Hazlitt, Shakespeare's Library, pt. I. vol. iv. p. 253).

Antioch, in Syria, was founded B.C. 300 by Seleucus. It was the chief of the cities enlarged by Antiochus Soter (B.C. 280–201). Antiochus the Great (B.C. 223–187) is said to have added to it, and it was again enlarged and beautified by his son Antiochus Epiphanes. In reputation and wealth it was inferior only to Rome and Alexandria, until Constantinople arose to overshadow it. It is now Antakieh, in the province of Aleppo.

8. Line 21: This king unto him took a FERE.—So Malone, Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read peere or peer, which was very likely a misprint for pheree. It would, however, be possible to interpret peer as meaning a consort of rank suitable to his greatness. Fere is the Anglo-Saxon gefera, companion: it translates the word socium of the Latin vulgate in Genesis iii. 12: "That wif that thú mé forgeáfe to geferan." This is the usual meaning of fere, but it is occasionally found with the sense of "wife." See also Titus Andronicus, iv. i. 89, 90, and note 101 thereon.

9. Line 23: buxom, blithe, and full of face.—Compare

¹ All the references to Twine are to the reprint in this volume.

Milton, L'Allegro, 23, 24; and Troilus and Cressida, note 76. Shakespeare only uses the word buxom in Henry V iii. 6. 28, where it appears to mean lively or sprightly, which is probably the sense here. It originally denoted obedient, then courteous, complaisant, gentle. The expression full of face may be corrupt. Possibly, however, face is incorrectly taken to mean beauty; or else full may signify plump.

10. Lines 27, 28:

to entice his own

To evil should be done by none

The omission of the relative pronoun before should in line 28 is to be noted. Such omissions, as Mr. Boyle has observed, are very characteristic of Wilkins. See notes 32, 38, 52, &c.

11. Lines 29, 30:

But CUSTOM what they did begin

Was with long use ACCOUNT no sin.

Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 here read account'd, the other Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 accounted. Malone made the correction. Wilkins, in his Novel, chap. 1., says: "they long continued in these foule and uniuist imbracements, till at last, the custome of sinne made it accompted no sinne" (p. 14). Custom seems, as indicated in the foot-note, to be used adverbially. Perhaps we ought to read:

But custom what they did begin

Was with long use account, no sin.

Compare, inter alia, Wilkins, The Miseries of Inforst Marriage:

Who once doth cherish sin, begets his shame;
For vice being foster'd once comes impudence,
Which makes men count sin custom, not offence.

—Dodsley, ix. p. 125

12. Lines 39, 40:

So for her MANY A WIGHT did die,
As yon GRIM LOOKS do testify.

So F. 3, F. 4. Qq. have many of wight, which was perhaps intended to mean many of valour or of nobility or worth. Wight as an adjective commonly means quick, active, valiant; and there was a substantive wightness, which denoted agility or strength. But nothing is known of an abstract substantive wight having the sense of bravery or boldness.

The grim looks are those of the heads of slain suitors, which are supposed to be seen impaled on the gate or wall of the palace. Gower, in narrating this part of the story, says:

And thus there were many deed,
Here heedes standing on the gate;²

—Pauli's edn. iii. 287.

and Twine states that the heads of the suitors were "set up at the gate, to terrifie others that should come, who beholding there the present image of death, might advise them from assaying any such danger" (Hazlitt, p. 255).

ACT I. SCENE I.

13.—It may be well, at the beginning of the scene, to throw together slight varieties and obvious blunders in the old texts; weightier questions of reading being taken by themselves.

² The references to Gower are to the Confessio Amantis, edited by Pauli, 1857, vol. iii. The quotations are not, however, given literally from that edition, but are amended after comparison with some of the MSS. of the poem.

Line 73, Qq and F. 3, F. 4 read gives; the text is Malone's Line 127, Qq. read you for you're. Lines 151, 152, Q 1, Q. 2, Q 3 transfer Thaliard to follow chamber.

14. Line 6: Ant. Bring in our daughter.—Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read, "Ant. Musicke bring in our daughter." Malone saw that music must be a stage-direction which had crept into the text. It remained, however, for Dyce to point out that this "Music" was intended to accompany the entrance, five lines lower, of the Daughter of Antiochus; and he conceives that it was set down thus early in the prompter's book, that the musicians might be in readiness. See Midsummer Night's Dream, note 229. If the compiler of the text of this play had access to the theatre-copy it must have been by stealth.

15. Line 7: FOR THE embracements even of Jove himself.—The Qq and F. 3, F. 4 omit the, which was inserted by Malone. Some such reading as Meet for embracements would perhaps better suit the context.

16 Lines 8-11:

*At WHOSE conception, till LUCINA reign'd,
Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence,
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfections*

Whose refers, of course, to daughter in line 6. Lucina, the goddess who brings to light, was regarded as presiding over childbirth. Compare iii. 1. 10, infra, and Cymbeline, v. 4. 43. The meaning of these four lines is that at the princess's conception and until her birth, in order to make her presence welcome in every place, all the planets held session for the purpose of combining in her those good qualities over which they preside: and this endowment was the gift of Nature (by whom the planets are controlled). Steevens quotes Sidney, Arcadia, book ii: "For what fortune only soothsayers foretold of Musidorus, that all men might see prognosticated in Pyrocles; both Heavens and Earth giving tokens of the coming forth of an Heroicall vertue. The senate house of the planets was at no time so set, for the decreeing of perfectiō in a man, as at that time all folkes skilful therein did acknowledge" (edn. 1598, p. 123). Other instances might be added.

17. Lines 12-14:

*apparell'd like the spring,
Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the KING
OF EVERY VIRTUE gives renown to men!*

Steevens believed this passage to be corrupt; but it is no more than a repetition of the idea in graces her subjects "Outwardly," Pericles says, "she holds all graces in her control, and inwardly she rules or possesses all virtues that ennobel mankind." On the omission of the relative that virtue see note 10.

18. Lines 15-18:

*Her face the book of praises, where is read
Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence
Sorrow were ever ras'd, and testy wrath
Could never be her mild companion.*

Compare Sidney, Arcadia, book iii: "a demeanure, where in the booke of Beautie there was nothing to be read but Sorrow: for Kindnesse was blotted out, and Anger was neuer there" (edn. 1605, p. 244).

19. Lines 27-29:

*Before thee stands this fair HESPERIDES,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd,
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard.*

We may compare Milton, Comus, 393-396. The ancients believed that in gardens on a far-off island there grew a tree bearing golden apples, tended by singing maidens called the Hesperides, and guarded by the sleepless dragon Ladon. The name Hesperides occasionally means the islands where the gardens were believed to be. In Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 341, the word denotes the gardens, while in the present passage the tree is meant. Pericles has already spoken of the princess under the same figure in line 21.

Mr. Daniel proposes to read in line 29:*

For death, like dragons, here affrights thee hard.

The sense would certainly be improved by this reading.

20 Lines 32, 33:

*And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all THY whole heap must die.*

Thy is Malone's correction. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 have the. All thy whole heap is a clumsy periphrasis which may perhaps mean "you with all your greatness."

21. Lines 34-40.—See note 12. Wilkins's Novel says: "Antiochus then first beganne to persuade him from the enterprise, and to discourage him from his proceedings, by shewing him the frightfull heads of the former Princes, placed upon his Castle wall, and like to whome he must expect himselfe to be, if like them (as it was most like) hee failed in his attempt" (p. 16). The words Yon sometimes famous princes might be supposed to signify that impaled heads were actually seen by the audience. Compare i. Prolog. 40, supra. But yon field of stars (line 37) can hardly denote any visible representation of the sky. The scene passes within Antiochus's palace; and impaled heads and sky must alike be supposed outside the scene.

22. Line 40: FOR going on death's net, whom none resist.—For this pregnant use of for compare II. Henry VI. note 231. Malone altered for to from, with some plausibility.

23. Lines 47-49:

*as sick men do,
Who know the world, see heaven, but, feeling woe,
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did.*

No better explanation of this obscurely-expressed passage has been given than the following, by Malone: "I will act as sick men do; who, having had experience of the pleasures of the world, and only a visionary and distant prospect of heaven, have neglected the latter for the former; but at length feeling themselves decaying, grasp no longer at temporal pleasures, but prepare calmly for futurity."

24. Lines 55-58:

I wait the sharpest blow.

Ant. Scorning advice: [giving Pericles a paper] read the CONCLUSION, then:

*Which read and not expounded, 'tis decreed,
As these before thee, thou thyself shalt bleed.*

Conclusion means problem, in which sense Gower has it
Qq read (substantially) as follows:

I wayte the sharpest blow (Antiochus)
Scorning aduice; read the conclusion then:
Which read and not expounded, tis decreed
As these before thee, thou thy selfe shalt bleed

F. 3 has—

I waite the sharpest blow (Antiochus)
Scorning aduice Reade the conclusion then
Ant. Which read and not expounded, t is decreed
As these before thou thy selfe shalt bleed.

It is noteworthy that in F. 3 the abbreviated name "Ant.," prefixed to the third of these lines, ranges with the lines preceding as though the speech continued. It was probably inserted only by an afterthought. In F. 4 the line is inset, as is usual when a new speech begins. According to Wilkins's Novel: "Pericles . . . replied, That he was come now to meete Death willingly, if so were his misfortune, or t^o be made euer fortunate, by enioying so glorious a beauty as was inthrond in his princely daughter, and was there now placed before him. which the tyrant receiving with an angry brow, threw downe the Riddle, bidding him, since perswasions could not alter him, to reade and die" (p. 73).

This bears out the arrangement adopted in the text, which was first proposed by Malone.

25. Line 59: Of all say'd yet, mayst thou prove prosperous!—Say'd is an abbreviation of assayed (or assayed), and, as indicated in the foot-note, has the sense of tried or attempted. Shakespeare does not use this verb, though the substantive say, meaning taste or "smack," occurs in King Lear, v. 3. 143. The word may have been suggested by the words of Gower:

The remenant that weren wise
Escheweden to make assay.

—See Panll, iii, p. 287.

and, a little afterwards, speaking of Pericles, Gower says (p. 288):

He thoughte assaye how that it ferde

The verb say, in the sense of attempting or trying, is more than once used by Ben Jonson.

Mason proposed to read,

In all, save that, may'st thou prove prosperous!

He observes: "She cannot wish him more prosperous, with respect to the exposition of the riddle, than the other persons who had attempted it before; for as the necessary consequence of his expounding it would be the publication of her own shame, we cannot suppose that she should wish him to succeed in that." But these judicious considerations never presented themselves to the author of this part of the play. Pericles, as he depicted him, must subdue all hearts. Wilkins in his Novel gives the princess's sentiments thus: "All the time that the Prince was studying with what truth to unfold this dark Enigma, Desire flew in a robe of glowing blushes into her cheeks, and Loue inforced her to deliuer thus much from hir owne tongue, that he was sole soueraigne of all her wishes, and he the gentleman (of all her eyes had ever yet behelde) to whome shee wished a thriving happiness" (pp. 16, 17).

26. Lines 62, 63:

*Nor ask aduice of any other thought
But faithfulness and courage.*

This, as Steevens pointed out, is borrowed from Sidney, Arcadia, bk. iii: "Ismenus . . . sawe his maisters horse killed vnder him. Whereupon, asking aduise of no other thought but of faithfulness and courage, hee presently lighted from his owne horse" (p. 257, ed. 1613; the preceding editions read "asking no aduise of no thought").

27. Lines 64–69.—The riddle is thus given by Gower:

With felony I am upbore,
I ete, and have it not forbore,
My modres fleissch, whos husebonde,
My fader, for to seche I fonde,¹
Which is the some eek of my wif.

—See Panll's edn. vol. iii, p. 289.

In the old Latin Historia Apollonii Regis Tyri, it stands thus.—"Scelere vehor, matenam carnem vescor, quaero fratrem meum, meae matris filium, uxoris meae virum, nec inuenis." Twine translates, with some difference: "I am carried with mischief, I eate my mothers fleshe: I seeke my brother my mothers husband and I can not finde him." The belief that young vipers fed on their mother's flesh was once wide-spread. Professor Boyle has cited Wilkins, Miseries of Enforced Marriage:

He is more degenerate
Than greedy vipers that devour their mother.

—Dodsley, ix. 322.

The application is made clear in lines 130, 131. The doctrine that husband and wife are one flesh explains how the figure of the viper's brood is applied to an incestuous daughter.

28. Lines 71, 72:

*"As you will live, resolve it you,"
Sharp physic is the last.*

According to Gower, the king repeated the riddle to the prince, and then went on to say:

Heerof I am inquisitif,
And who that can my tale save,²
Al quyt he shall my doughter have;
Of his answere and if he faile,
He shal be deed withoute faile.

—See Panll, iii, p. 289.

The substance of this is contained in lines 70, 71. This final requirement of a correct solution as the price of his life Pericles calls sharp physic; i.e. a bitter potion. The same figure is used with more propriety in the next scene, lines 68, 69.

29. Lines 76, 77:

*Fair GLASS OF LIGHT, I lov'd you, and could still,
Were not this glorious casket stor'd with ill.*

The words glass of light perhaps mean mirror of brilliance or shining beauty. Schmidt interprets them, doubtfully, as "reflection, image of light." Mr. Tyler suggests that, having regard to the words glorious casket, the idea may be that of a resplendent and dazzling glass vase. Malone has here a stage-direction that Pericles takes hold of the hand of the princess.

30. Line 81: You're a fair viol, and your SENSE the strings.—Sense, here, apparently means passion or fleshly appetite, which should in mortals be controlled by reason. For this use of sense compare v. 3. 80, and Measure for Measure, ii. 2. 142, 169. Richardson quotes Sidney, Arcadia, bk. i.:

Palmes do reioyce to be ioyned by the match of a male to a female,
And shall sensiuë things be so senceless as to resist sense?

—Edm. 1613, p. 82.

31. Line 87: touch not, upon thy life.—Steevens observes that this prohibition comes from the jealousy of Antiochus, who cannot bear to see the object of his passion touched by another. He compares the impatient words in Antony and Cleopatra, iii. 13. 123–125.

32. Lines 96–100:

*For vice repeated 's like the wandering wind,
Blows dust in others' eyes, to spread itself;
And yet the end of all is bought thus dear,
The breath is gone, and the sore eyes see clear
To stop the air would hurt them.*

The ellipse of the relative between lines 96 and 97, and in line 100, will be readily perceived. See note 10.

The teller of vicious actions is likened to the breath or gust of wind which, as it flies about, blows dust in men's eyes. Those who feel themselves hurt at once recognize that they must prevent a repetition of the deed. This is what the lines seem to mean, but the similitude is loose and inapposite. To spread = in spreading; see note 244.

33. Lines 100–102:

The blind mole casts

*COPPD hills towards heaven, to tell the earth is THROW'D
By man's oppression; and the poor worm doth die for't.*
“He who complains of the wrongdoing of the great, though but insignificant and feeble, will incur condign punishment.” Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave translates copp'd by accresté, hupé, i. e. crested or conical. Throng'd means pressed, squeezed, or crushed; compare i. 1. 77: “A man throng'd up with cold;” where the meaning seems to be “shrunken,” the parts of the body being, as it were, pressed closely together. Wilkins there writes “overcharged” in the Novel. The English Chronicle, A.D. 1137, describing the paine forte et dure (in which a man was tortured by cramming him in a chest of sharp stones), uses the words “threngde the man therinne” (Earle, Two Saxon Chronicles, p. 262). Compare the Scotch use of the word thring Gavin Douglas, Æneid, book iii., uses it to translate the Latin urgeti:

The rumour is, down thringing vnder this mont
Encelades body with thundir lyis half bront.

—Bannatyne Club ed. vol. i. p. 164.

34. Line 113: We might proceed to CANCEL OF YOUR DAYS. Qq. read

We might proceed to counsell of your dayes.

F. 3, F. 4 have

We might proceed to cancel off your daies.

The text follows Malone, cancel being a substantive, with its usual sense of suppression; a sense, however, which seems to be confined nowadays to printing. The omission of the article after a verb of motion is frequently found. Compare Abbott, Shakespearian Grammar, §§. 89, 90. The reading of Ff. would make cancel a verb. If the reading of Qq. were retained, the line would mean “We proceed to deliberate concerning your life,” i. e. concerning its termination.

35. Lines 114, 115:

*hope, SUCCEEDING from so fair a TREE
As your fair self, doth tune us otherwise.*

I do not understand the significance of the word tree, and suspect some corruption. Succeeding means resulting; compare i. 4. 104, where succeed means follow upon

36. Line 120: Exeunt all except Pericles.—Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 read Manet Pericles solus, which the other copies repeat, with the addition of Exit before Manet. The exit is not very well managed.

37. Line 128: By your UNCOMELY claspings with your child—Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read untimely, but the Novel by Wilkins speaks of “his vncomely and abhorred actions with his owne child” (p. 18). This gives a better sense, and I have accordingly introduced the word into the text. Untimely would easily arise from a misprint, and can hardly be defended by the words of Pericles to the princess in line 84, supra.

38. Lines 134–136:

those men

*Blush not in actions blacker if than the night,
Will SHUN no course to keep them from the light.*

The text is Malone's. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read shew instead of shun. There is accordingly introduced the relative pronoun before blush (Compare note 10.) The lines recall the familiar passage in the Gospel of St. John, iii. 19, 20

39. Line 142: Re-enter Antiochus.—This direction was introduced by Malone. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 have Enter Antiochus, by which, doubtless, a new scene is indicated. The scene of what has preceded is a hall or reception-room in the palace of Antiochus; the colloquy with Thaliard would naturally be held in a private apartment. In Wilkins the interview takes place in the evening, “Antiochus being now private in his lodging” (p. 18). An interval of some part of a day is needed in order to give time for Pericles to have made his escape. Were it not that to disturb the usual numbering of the scenes would be inconvenient for purposes of reference, I should mark a new scene here.

40. Lines 143–149.—These lines are plainly corrupt. The first sentence cannot be scanned as verse at all. Wilkins says in the Novel: “Antiochus being now private in his lodging, and ruminating with himselfe, that Pericles had found out the secret of his euill, which hee in more secret had committed: and knowing that he had now power to rip him open to the world, and make his name so odious, that as now heaven did, so at the knowledge hereof all good men would contemne him . . . he hastily calleth for one Thalyart, who was steward of his householde, and in many things before had received the imbracement of his minde” (p. 18).

41. Lines 163–167:

*As thou wilt live, fly after; and, like an arrow
Shot from a well-experienc'd archer, hits
The mark his eye doth level at, so thou:
Never return
Unless thou say “Prince Pericles is dead.”*

Editors, generally, have followed the text of Malone—

As thou

Wilt live, fly after: and like an arrow, shot

From a well experienc'd archer, hits the mark
His eye doth level at, so thou ne'er return
Unless thou say "Prince Pericles is dead."

But this arrangement is imperfect both in rhythm and in sense. There is no connexion between the hitting of the mark and the never returning unless successful.

Qq. and F 3, F 4, which do not mark the exit of the messenger, print these lines as prose. All the old copies except Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3, read in line 165 so do thou. This would require level to be pronounced as a monosyllable. I suspect that in this and the next line some words have dropped out. We might read:

go thou,
Pursue, and smite him, see thou ne'er return.

Wilkins, in the Novel, says that when the messenger brought news of Pericles' flight, Antiochus "commanded his murdering minister Thalyart to dispatch his best performance" after him, sometime perswading him, at others threatening him, in Tyre to see him, in Tyre to kill him, or back to Antioch never to return" (pp. 18, 19).

ACT I. SCENE 2.

42.—Minor differences of text in this scene.—Line 11, all the copies but Q. 1 read that passions. Line 20, him was inserted by Rowe. Line 55, all the copies but Q. 1 read planets. Line 61, Q. 1 reads heave. Line 93, for sparcs all the copies but Q. 1 read feares (or fears). Line 100, all the copies but Q. 5 (so the Camb. edd. say) read grieve for them. Line 121, Qq. omit sure.

43. Enter Pericles.—This direction was given by Dyce. Qq. have the direction Enter Pericles with his lords, and F 3, F. 4 give the same, adding Helicanus after Pericles. This enumeration, at the beginning of a scene, of all the persons who are to appear in it, is not uncommon in the contemporary texts of old plays. Pericles' speech, however, is a soliloquy, as the first line is meant to show, and Q. 1, Q. 2 have, after line 33, the stage-direction, Enter all the Lords to Pericles. Q. 3 reads with for to; the other Quartos and F. 3, F. 4 omit the direction, but quite wrongly. None of the old texts mark any exit for the Lords: the direction at line 50 was inserted by Malone.

Wilkins, in his Novel, tells us that Pericles had been moping ever since his return from Antioch. The opening soliloquy is indicated, Helicanus breaking in upon it with a rebuke to Pericles. In words which have the flow of verse he tells him "he did not well so to abuse himself, to waste his body there with pining sorrow, upon whose safety depended the lives and prosperity of a whole kingdom; that it was ill in him to do it, and no lesse in his counsel to suffer him, without contradicting it." In the play, naturally, certain councillors themselves come in; but the text fails to justify their entrance: the two short speeches given them are pointless; and Pericles' direction on their exit, "then return to us," is out of place. The passage just quoted shows what is wanted after, or instead of, lines 44, 45. The Novel then continues: "although the Prince bent his brow against him, he [Helicanus] left not to go forward, but plainly tolde him, it was as fit for him being a Prince to heare of his owne error, as it was lawfull for his authority to command; that while he lived so shut up, so vnseene, so carelesse of his government, order might be disorder for all him, and what detriment soeuer his subjects should receiue by this his neglect, it were iniustice to be required at his hands: which chiding of this good olde Lord the gentle Prince courteously receiuing tooke him into his armes, thank him that he was no flatterer, and, commanding him to seat himself by him, he from poynt to poynt related to him all the occurrents past, and that his present sorrow was for the feare he had of Antiochus tyranny, his present studies were for the good of his subjects, his present care was for the continuing safety of his kingdome, of which himselfe was a member, which for slackness chide him: which uprightnes of this Prince calling teares into the olde mans eies, and compelling his knees to the earth, he humbly asked his pardon, confirming that what he had spoke, sprung from the power of his dutie, and grew not from the nature of disobedience. When Pericles, . . . lifting him up, desired of him that his counsell now would teach him how to auoide that danger which his feare gaue him cause to mistrust." Helicanus' advice was "That he should forthwith betake himself to travel, keeping his intent whither as priuate from his subjects as his journey was suddaine; that vpon his trust he should leaue the government: grounding which counsel vpon this principle, Absence abates that edge that Presence whets" (pp. 19, 20).

If the arrangement of the Novel be adopted we can see what it is to which lines 94, 95 refer. Lines 50-59 may disappear, though something partially resembling them is suggested after line 95. Lines 65, 66 will be extended, unless we look on them as forestalled by the previous rebuke of Helicanus. Lines 63-65 will come in after line 100, and there is thus something definite to call forth Helicanus' speech, lines 101-108.

The Story of Apollonius, on which the play is based, makes no mention of any deputy of Pericles; Helicanus (Hellenicus in the Latin Historia) is an old man from Tyre, whom Apollonius meets by the sea at Tarsus, and from whom he receives advice like that which, in act ii., Gower, lines 21-25, Helicanus sends by letter to Pericles.

44. Line 1: this CHANGE of thoughts.—Change, most probably, here signifies perturbation or disquietude. Or it may mean "this new course of my thoughts," viz. towards sadness. Many editors, following Steevens and Malone, read charge, i.e. burden. Perhaps the sentence should be regarded as unfinished, breaking off at the end of this line.

45. Line 3: BE MY so-us'd a guest.—So Dyce. Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read by me so vnde a guest. If this reading be retained the sentence lacks a principal verb.

46. Line 8: Whose ARM seems far too short to hit me here.—Arm is Dyce's correction for arm, the reading of all the old editions. On the whole the old reading gives a better sense. Mr. Kinnear compares Richard II. iv. 1. 11, and II. Henry VI. iv. 7. 87.

47. Line 25: And with TH' OSTENT of war will look so huge.—Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read the stint. The correction was made by Tyrwhitt.

48. Lines 29-32:

*Which care of them, not pity of myself,—
Who AM no more but as the tops of trees,*

Which FENCE the roots they grow by, and defend them,— Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish.

For am, the conjecture of Farmer, all the old copies read once. Other corrections have been proposed. With fence, meaning guard, compare III. Henry VI. ii. 6. 74:

Where's Captain Margaret, to fence you now?

49 Line 41: To which that BLAST gives HEAT and stronger glowing.—For blast, the reading of Mason and Collier, Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read spark, which has occurred in the previous line. Malone proposed breath, which Mr Kinnear defends, quoting Comedy of Errors, iii. 2. 28

When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife;

and King John, iv. 1. 110. Heat is found only in Q. 1. The other copies read heart

50 Line 44: When SIGNIOR SOOTH here does proclaim A peace.—A was inserted by Malone. I suspect corruption both here and in the next line. (See note 43.) Sooth with the sense of "flattery" occurs in Richard II. iii. 3. 130, in the phrase "words of sooth" Malone quotes, in illustration of Signior Sooth, Winter's Tale, i. 2. 196: "Sir Smile, his neighbour."

51. Lines 61, 62:

heaven forbid

That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid!

The most probable interpretation of the words is that of Holt White: "Heaven forbid that kings should suffer their ears to hear their failings palliated!" Dyce, however, reads chid for hid, and takes let to mean "hinder"

52. Lines 73, 74:

From whence an ISSUE I might propagate

ARE arms to princes, and bring joys to subjects.

There is a very harsh ellipsis here of which, or such as, before are (Compare note 10.) Shakespeare uses issue as a plural in Winter's Tale, iv. 2. 29.

53 Line 83: Bethought ME what was past.—Me was inserted by Rowe.

54. Lines 84, 85:

tyrants' FEARS

Decrease not, but grow faster than THEIR years.

So Steevens. Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read the, which, however, is less forcible. Fears is the reading of F. 4; Qq have fear; F. 3, fear.

55. Line 86: And should he DOUBT IT—For doubt it, Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 read doe't, the other Quartos and F. 3, F. 4 thinke. The text is Malone's, and is justified by the words "lop that doubt" in line 90.

56. Line 92: for mine, if I may call offence.—The meaning evidently is, "for my so-called offence."

57. Line 95: Who now REPROVEDST me FOR IT.—Q. 1, Q. 2 read:

Who now reprovd'st me, fort;

Q. 3 has for it. The text follows the other Quartos and F. 3, F. 4. Malone reads reprov'st, which most editors have adopted. But with the light thrown on this scene by the Novel (see note 48) the use of the past tense can readily be justified. Pericles means, "you who only a few moments ago rebuked me."

58. Line 123: But in our ORBS WE'LL live so round and safe.—For we'll Q. 1 reads will; the other Quartos and F. 3, F. 4 have we. Malone made the correction. The idea in this and the next lines is illustrated, as Rolfe points out, by I. Henry IV. v. 1. 17-19:

move in that obedient orb again

Where you did give a fair and natural light,

And be no more an exhal'd meter

In ancient astronomy the stars, the sun, the several planets, and the moon were supposed to be set in concentric revolving orbs or spheres. See All's Well that Ends Well, i. 1. 96-100, Antony and Cleopatra, note 273; and Midsummer Night's Dream, note 64. With the last part of the line compare Jonson, Epigram 98:

He that is round within himself, and straight,

Need seek no other strength, no other height.

—Works, p. 673.

Both in this passage and in the text there may be a recollection of Horace's description of the man that is sapiens, or possessed of wisdom:

totus teres, atque rotundus.

—Satires, ii. 7. 86

Malone thinks, perhaps rightly, that the reading of Q. 1 is the true one, a line having been lost just before this.

ACT I. SCENE 3.

59 —The whole of this scene is printed as prose in Qq. and F. 3, F. 4. The scene is the court (see line 1), and the fact of Pericles' departure is as yet known to few, or Thaliard would have learned it before reaching the court. There can be hardly any interval between this scene and the last. In Gower and Twine, Thaliard learns from the sorrowing citizens that their prince has suddenly departed, and does not present himself to the "lords of Tyre." The action, indeed, seems foolish, and likely to have aroused suspicion. It is a clumsy expedient for acquainting Heli-canus of Thaliard's mission. In the old story, Antiochus publicly puts a price on the prince's head, and it is this news of which Apollonius is apprised by Hellenicus

60. Lines 4-7. Well, I perceive he was a wise fellow and had good discretion, that, being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets.—Steevens remarks: "Who this wise fellow was may be known from the following passage in Barnaby Riche's Souldier's Wishe to Briton's Welfare, or Captain Skill and Captaine Pill, 1604, p. 27: 'I will therefore commend the poet Philpides, who being demanded by King Lisimachus, what favour he might doe unto him for that he loved him, made this answer to the King, that your majesty would never impart unto me any of your secrets.'"

61. Line 10: HUSH! here COMES the lords of Tyre.—Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read Huht, another form of hush which was occasionally used. Most editors read come, with F. 4, instead of comes; but the change is unnecessary.

62 Line 22: And doubting LEST THAT he had err'd or sinn'd.—Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 omit that, while Q. 4, F. 3, F. 4 omit lest.

63. Lines 23, 29:

*But since he's gone, THIS the king's EARS must please,—
He scap'd the land, to perish at the SEAS.*

Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read (substantially) as follows:

but since hee 's gone, the Kings seas must please: hee scap'te the Land to perish at the Sea. This is nonsense, and no attempt to make sense of it is likely to be quite satisfactory. Percy suggested for the first line:

But since he 's gone, the king it sure must please.

Sir P. Perring has proposed:

But since he s gone, the king this news must please.

Dyce and Grant White give:

But since he's gone, the king's ears it must please.

This, however, requires an unusual emphasis on it, which is avoided by the arrangement adopted in the text.

Seas for sea, in line 29, is the correction of Malone.

64. Line 35: Your lord HAS BETOOK himself to unknown travels.—Q 1 reads betake for betook, and Ff. have hath instead of has.

65. Line 36: My message.—Q 1, Q 2, Q 3 read now message

ACT I. SCENE 4.

66.—Steevens makes the scene "A Room in the Governor's house," and subsequent editors have followed him. In Twine's story, Apollonius, having met Strangulio (= Cleon) outside the city, comes with him into the market-place, and there offers his corn to the famishing citizens. Wilkins, in the Novel, puts the meeting of Pericles and Cleon in the market-place, where Pericles, after the speech contained in lines 85-96, proffers his corn to the multitude whom he causes to be summoned thither, and then, in words partly borrowed from Twine, asks their protection. If the scene be out of doors, there is room for the discourse to which Cleon refers in line 103. There is nothing hostile to this view in line 8, and line 1 seems inappropriate if spoken in Cleon's own house.

Tarsus, a wealthy city in the fertile plain of Cilicia, lay on both sides of the river Cydnus. Here Cleopatra first met Mark Antony. The origin and early civilization of the city appear to have been Semitic, though it was afterwards Hellenized, and became the centre of a philosophical school. The inhabitants had the reputation of being vain, effeminate, and luxurious, more like Phœnicians than Greeks.

67. Lines 7-9:

ev'n such our griefs are;

*Here they're but felt, AND SEEN with MISCHIEF'S EYES,
But like to groves, being TOPP'D, they higher rise.*

For mischief's eyes Steevens proposed mistful eyes; Walker, misery's eyes; and Singer, mistic eyes. Malone would read unseen for and seen: he interprets mischief's eyes to mean "the eyes of those who would feel a malignant pleasure in our misfortunes." This, however, hardly fits on to the next line. Mr. T. Tyler proposes not seen, making the words mean "not seen with the eyes of despair" (which would prompt to deeds of mischief). The meaning both of this line and the next is certainly obscure. Perhaps we ought to leave out the comma after felt. The meaning of the two lines will then be: "our griefs are at this moment neither felt nor seen, except with the eyes of mischief (i.e. by those who look for them with vexatious intent); but if we attempt to disguise them (by talking of the woes of others) they will grow more burdensome, as trees spring to a greater height after being pruned.

Cotgrave translates desbranchir by "to top, or lop the boughes; to cut or pluck off the branches of a tree." Under escouppeller he has "to top, or cut off the top of a tree. (v. m.)"

68. Lines 13-15:

GRIEF MAKES our tongues and sorrows TO sound deep

Our woes into the air; our eyes TO weep,

Till TONGUES fetch BREATH that may proclaim them louder.

For the introduction of the words grief makes I am responsible. It seems suggested by the previous sentence. Q. 1 has, instead of lines 13, 14:

Our tounge and sorrowes to sound deepe:

Our woes into the aire, our eyes to weepe.

The other Quartos and F. 3, F. 4 read do instead of to in the first line. This leaves to weep in the second line without any principal verb to depend on. Editors have followed Q 2 in line 13, and in line 14 have adopted Malone's conjecture do for to. Malone himself preferred too in both places. Our tongues and sorrows seems to mean "our sorrowing tongues," "the tongues of us who sorrow." Hudson has the following rearrangement:

Our tongues do sound our sorrows and deep woes

We might read:

Grief makes our tongues to sound our sorrows deep,

And woes into the air, &c

For tongues, in line 15, Steevens proposed to read lungs, and this ought perhaps to be adopted. Compare, however, Richard II. 1. 8. 173:

Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath.

69. Lines 16, 17:

That, if HEAV'N slumber while THEIR creatures want,

They may awake THEIR HELPS to comfort them.

Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read helpers instead of helps. The emendation is Malone's. Heaven is often used as a plural noun. Compare Richard II. note 50; Richard III. notes 661 and 508. Rolfe quotes Macbeth, ii. 1. 4, 5:

There's husbandry in heaven,

Their candles are all out

70. Line 23: For Riches streu'd herself even in THE streets.—Q 1, Q 2 repeat her before streets, omitting the. The correction was made in Q 3. Riches is properly a singular noun, and so Shakespeare generally uses it.

71. Lines 26, 27:

Whose men and dames so JETTED and ADORN'D,

Like ONE ANOTHER'S GLASS to trim them by.

With regard to jetted see Richard III. note 287. Steevens compares Twelfth Night, ii. 5. 35-37: "Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cook of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes!" And as to one another's glass Malone appropriately adduces Hamlet, iii. 1. 161:

The glass of fashion and the mould of form;

and II. Henry IV. ii. 3. 21, 22:

he was indeed the glass

Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.

Compare note 157 of the latter play; and see Webster, Duchess of Malfi, i. 1:

Let all sweet ladies break their flattering glasses,

And dress themselves in her.

—Works, Dyce's ed. p. 6x.

Apparently adorn'd here means were adorn'd, or adorn'd themselves. The construction is awkward. Wilkins says: "whose people were . . . rich in attire, envious in looks," and "the ornaments of whose attire Art it selfe with all inuention could not content" (pp. 21, 22).

72. Lines 39, 40:

*Those pallets, who, not yet two SUMMERS younger,
Must have inventions to delight the taste.*

Q. 1 reads, instead of line 39:

Those pallets who not yet two sauers younger.

Summers, the conjecture of Mason, is justified by the words of the Novel: "the ground of which forced lamentation was, to see the power of change, that this their City, who not two summers younger, did so excell in pompe, and bore a state, whom all hir neighbors enuid for her greatnes: . . . whose people were curious in their diet . . . the dignitie of whose pallets the whole riches of Nature could hardly satisfie . . . are now so altered, that . . . in steade of full furnished tables, hunger calles out now for so much bread, as may but satisfie life" (pp. 21, 22). Both Novel and play make Cleon's lament open with an incomplete sentence. The period of two summers, here named, does not agree with several years in line 18. Some corruption very likely exists in the previous speech.

73. Line 42: to NOUSLE up their babes.—There are a number of instances of the verb nouse being used with the sense of "nurture." Kingdon Oliphant, New English, i. 453, after observing that the word is formed from nose, like speckle from speck, says: "It seems to have been confounded with nursle (=train), and was used in this latter sense throughout this [16th] century." Compare Sidney, Arcadia, bk. ii: "olde men long nused in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation" (ed. 1590, lf. 127).

Marston, Antonio's Revenge (second part of Antonio and Mellida), 1602, Prologue, has:

from his birth being lugged in the armes
And nused twixt the breastes of happinesse.

Marston probably understood the word to mean cherish, fondle.

74. Line 54: HEAR these tears.—Dyce is probably right in thinking that hear means hear of. Collier gave heed these tears.

75. Line 58: which THOU bring'st in haste.—So Q. 4 and subsequent editions. Q. 1, Q. 2 read thee for thou; Q. 3 has ye.

76. Lines 65-67:

some neighbouring NATION

HATH stuff'd THESE hollow vessels with THEIR power.

Hath is Rowe's correction for that, the reading of Qq and F. 3, F. 4, as is also the, for which these was substituted by Malone. It will be noticed that nation takes a singular verb, but has the possessive pronoun of the plural form.

77. Lines 69, 70:

*And make a conquest of unhappy ME,
Where as no glory's got, to overcome.*

There is probably some corruption here. Me seems unsuitable. Wilkins says: "hee [Cleon] commanded the bringer[of the news] vpon their landing, to this purpose to salute their Generall, That Tharsus was subdued before their coming, and that it was small conquest to subdew where there was no abilitie to resist" (p. 22).

78. Lines 76-78:

*But bring they what they will and what they can,
What need wee FEAR?
THE GROUND'S the lowest.*

Q. 1, which Q. 2, Q. 3 follow, reads:

But bring they what they will, and what they can,
What need wee leane our grounds the lowest?

The necessary correction was made in Q. 4

79. Lines 90, 91:

*Nor come we to add sorrow to your TEARS,
But to relieve them of their heavy load.*

To mend the sense Walker altered tears to hearts.

80. Lines 92-94:

*And these our ships, you happily may think
Are like the Trojan horse was stuff'd within
With bloody veins, expecting overthrow.*

Compare line 67. The construction would appear to be, "And these our ships you, expecting overthrow, happily (haply) may think are like the Trojan horse (which)," &c. Bloody probably means cruel or murderous. The story of the capture of Troy, by means of armed men concealed in the interior of a great wooden horse, is told by Virgil, Æneid, ii. 13-197, 232-267.

81. Line 98:

And we'll pray for you

Per. RISE, I pray you, rise

Q. 1 reads "Arise I pray you, rise." The other Quartos and F. 3, F. 4 adopt this, but read arise at the end of the line as well. The text is Steevens's.

ACT II. PROLOGUE.

82. Lines 7, 8:

*I'll show you those in troubles reign,
Losing a mite, a mountain gain.*

Malone's interpretation is, "I will now exhibit to you persons, who, after suffering small and temporary evils, will at length be blessed with happiness" This is doubtless the sense, but it seems impossible to explain what is the grammatical construction of the sentence.

83. Lines 11, 12:

where each man

Thinks all is WRIT he SPEKEN can

Writ probably means scripture,—gospel, as we might say. Speken is Grant White's correction for spoken, the reading of Qq and F. 3, F. 4. Another example of the old infinitive in -en is killen in line 20.

84. Lines 17-22:

*Good Helicane, that stay'd at HOME,
Not to eat honey like a DRONE
From others' labours;—for though he strive
To killen bad, keep good alive,
And to fulfil his prince's desire,—
SENDS WORD of all that haps in Tyre.*

For the rhyming of drone with home see note 2. Wilkins has: "Good Helycanus as proud at home, as his Prince was prosperous abroad, let no occasion slip wherein hee might send word to Tharsus of what occurs to soever had happened in his absence" (Novel, p. 24). Sends word was suggested by Steevens. Qq. and F 3, F 4 read sav'd (or sau'd) one, which is nonsense. Possibly we should read in line 19: "for he doth strive." As it stands, the line is meaningless and ungrammatical.

85. Line 36: Ne aught escapen but himself.—Escapen, the correction of Percy, is adopted by most editors. It is awkward, however, to have this plural form of the verb, when aught is singular. Q 1 reads escapend, the other old copies escapen'd, and we might regard escapend as the present participle. The old participial ending -ende is common in Gower.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

86.—The district of Pentapolis in North Africa was, until the time of the Ptolemies, known by the name of Cyrenaica. In the Latin Historia Apolloni the place is called Pentapolitane Cyrenæorum terra. "The parts of Libya about Cyrene" are mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. Cyrene, the first of the five towns from which the district took its name, was the chief Hellenic colony in Africa. We see from line 68 that the writer of this scene treated the locality as in Greece.

87. Lines 6, 7:

*Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left ME breath
Nothing to think on but ensuing death.*

The meaning may be, "Has left me life, but yet with inevitable death awaiting me." The early editions have, however, "my breath;" and it is by no means certain that this reading is to be rejected. We should have to take breath as equivalent to life, soul, mind. See i. 1. 46.

88. Line 12: What, HO, PILCH!—Qq. and F 3, F 4 read What, to pelch? Pilch, for pelch, was suggested by Tyr-whitt. Compare line 52, where the old editions give fenny instead of finny. The word means a coarse leathern coat (see Romeo and Juliet, note 110). Ho, for to, is Malone's correction. He observes that the first fisherman appears to be the master, and the others servants.

89. Lines 18-24:

Third Fish. Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us even now.

First Fish. Alas, poor souls, 't grieved my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

The Rev. W. A. Harrison has suggested a comparison with The Tempest, i. 2 5-9:

O, I have suffer'd
With those that I saw suffer! a brave vessel,
Who had, no doubt, some noble creatures in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock Against my very heart! Poor souls, they perish'd!

Malone compares Winter's Tale, iii. 3. 91, foll.: "O, the most piteous cry of the poor souls! sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em; now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hogshead. And then for the land-service, to see how the bear tore out his shoulder-bone; how he cried to me for help" These parallelisms, and some other matters to be noticed, suggest to Mr. Tyler the influence of Shakespeare on this scene, though it would be too much to assert that it was written by him.

90. Lines 25-29: Nay, master, said not I as much when I saw the PORPUS, how he bound'd and tumbled? . . . they ne'er come but I look to be wash'd.—Malone observes, "The rising of porpuses, near a vessel at sea, has long been considered by the superstition of sailors as the forerunner of a storm." He quotes Webster, Duchess of Malfy (1623), iii. 3: "He lifts up's nose, like a foul porpoise before a storm" (Works, ed. Dyce, p. 81).

91. Lines 29-32.

Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

First Fish. Why, as men do a-land,—the great ones eat up the little ones.

Mr. Boyle has appropriately compared Day, Law-Tricks, 1607-8, i. 2:

But, Madam, doe you remember what a multitude of fishes we saw at sea? and I doe wonder how they can all live by one another.

Em. Why foole, as men do on the Land, the great ones eate up the little ones. —Works, p. 15 (of play);

and Wilkins, Miseries of Enforced Marriage:

O, the most wretched season of this time!
These men like fish do swim within the stream,
Yet they'd eat one another. —Dodsley, vol. ix. p. 539.

92. Lines 36-47: such whales have I heard on o' the land, who never leave gaping till they've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells, and all.

Per. [Aside] A pretty moral.

Third Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

Sec. Fish. Why, man?

Third Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too; and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again.

Here again there is a parallel in Day, Law-Tricks, ii.:

Em. Are you a lawyer?

Ful. I faith Madam, he hath sit on the skirts of law any time this thirtie yeares.

Ad. Then he should be a good Trencher-man by his profession.

Lu. Your reason, Adam?

Ad. I knew one of that facultie in one tterne eate vp a whole Towne, Church, Steeple, and all.

Ful. I wonder the Bels rang not all in his belly.

Ad. No, sir; he sold them to buy his wife a Taffety gowne, and himself a velvet Jacket. —Works, p. 26 (of play).

On the whole the passage in Pericles is an improvement on that in the Law-Tricks. Girding at lawyers may be observed in our present play just below, lines 122-126.

93. Line 52: the FINNY SUBJECTS of the sea.—Finny is Malone's reading, subjects Staunton's. Qq. and F 3, F 4 read "the fenny subiect of the sea." It would be possible to take subject as a collective noun with a plural signification, but Wilkins agrees with the text. His Novel says: "prince Pericles, wondering that from the finny subjects of the sea these poore countrey people learned the infirmities of men, more than mans obduracy and dulnes could learne one of another" (p. 27).

94. Line 55: All that may men approve, or men DETECT.—The meaning appears to be "all that may serve to commend men's good actions or make their bad ones apparent." Detect, with the sense of discovery, is found in III. Henry VI. ii. 2. 143, and in many other places.

95. Lines 56-59:
Peace be at your labour, HONEST fishermen.

Sec. Fish. Honest! good fellow, what's that? If it be a day FITS you, search out of the CALENDAR, and nobody look after it.

Knight suggested that the fisherman was "laughing at the rarity of being honest;" but no one seems to have noticed the remarkable parallel with Hamlet, ii. 2. 173-179:

Pol. Do you know me, my lord?

Ham. Excellent well; you are a fishmonger.

Pol. Not I, my lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my lord!

Ham. Ay, sir; to be honest, as this world goes, is to be one man picked out of ten thousand.

The verb fit occurs in Sonnet cxix. 7, 8:

How have mine eyes out of their spheres been fitted,
In the distraction of this madding fever!

It is made, of course, from the noun fit, and means "to give a fit or paroxysm." Pericles, the fisherman tells him, must be mad, to talk as if such a thing as honesty existed in the world. But, in accordance with the old idea of lunacy (i.e. moon-madness, madness depending on the changes of the moon), the madness of Pericles is regarded as periodical, and depending on a particular day. This day he is advised to search for and expel from the calendar, and no one is then to look for it to bring it back again. Mr. Tyler, by whom the foregoing is written, compares Job iii. 3-6. See also King John, note 131.

Mr. Kinnear, Cruces Shakespearianæ, p. 434, guided partly by the readings scratch it and will look, of Malone, proposes to read:

If it be a name fits you, scratch 't out of the calendar, and nobody 'll look after it.

Honest, he observes, is a term used in addressing inferiors, as by Leonato to Dogberry, "honest neighbour;" Bottom to Peaseblossom, "honest gentleman;" and Shallow to "honest Bardolph." Pericles appeared to the fishermen a naked beggar, and, probably, anything but honest. With "a name fits you" the same critic compares Much Ado, iii. 2. 114: "think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it." Calendar he interprets as register, catalogue, comparing Hamlet, v. 2. 114: "He is the card or calendar of gentry;" All's Well that Ends Well, i. 3, 4, 5: "nought be found in the calendar of my past endeavours"

96. Line 60: MAY see the sea hath cast upon your coast.—Having regard to the numerous imperfect and elliptical lines in this play, this place can scarcely be regarded as of special difficulty. The folios give "Y may see the sea hath cast me upon your coast." Malone at one time proposed to change the y into you and upon into on. This, however, spoils the rhythm. Me, for may, has been conjectured by an anonymous critic mentioned by the Cambridge editors, and is also proposed by Mr. Kinnear.

97. Lines 86, 87: flesh for HOLIDAYS, . . . and MOREOVER puddings and flap-jacks—Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read "Flesh for all day . . . and more; or Puddings and Flap-jacks." The corrections were made by Malone, the latter on the suggestion of Farmer.

98. Line 94: are all your beggars whipp'd.—Q 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 read are you Beggars whipt. Whipping was the regular punishment for vagrants in Shakespeare's time and long afterwards. Players were liable to be accounted vagrants (see Troilus, note 227), and Mr. Tyler here suggests a comparison with Hamlet, ii. 2. 552-555:

Pol. My lord, I will use them [the players] according to their desert.

Ham. God's bodykins, man, much better: use every man after his desert, and who should scape whipping?

99. Lines 114-116: to-morrow is her birth-day; and there are princes and knights come from all parts of the world to JUST and TOURNNEY for her love.—The princess's birth-day, with its tournament, is an invention of the writer of this part of the play. In the Historia Apollonii, and Twine, Paterne of Painefull Adventures, we are told that Prince Apollonius, on entering the city, heard one who invited all persons, citizens and strangers alike, to the gymnasium or "place of exercise." According to Gower, it was the appointed day for every one to "pleye . . . her comun game." Tourneying (obviously an anachronism) is mentioned by Gower and Twine afterwards; but only as part of the festivities at the marriage of the Prince and Princess. The incident of the armour (which occupies the rest of this scene) is also invented, to enable Pericles to take part in the tournament.

100. Lines 119-121: O, sir, things must be as they may; and what a man cannot get, he may lawfully DEAL for his wife's soul.—Here we have another place which has been regarded as excessively obscure. Knight says it is useless to attempt to explain it, and the editors of the Globe Shakespeare place an obelus before "his wife's soul," to indicate that there is a lacuna. Yet, by the simple emendation of deal into steal, a fairly consistent sense can be obtained. Pericles wishes to be present at the tournament, but he is in a position of extremity, and knows not how to procure what is necessary for the enterprise. The fisherman answers that, whatever may be the course of Fortune, there are extreme occasions on which a man may lawfully steal, as, for instance, for his wife's soul, that is, for her life, or her salvation. "A man may steal for his wife's soul" may indeed have been a current maxim. [This ingenious proposal of Mr. Tyler's is the best elucidation that has been given of the passage; but the question is so uncertain that I have refrained from altering the text.—P. Z. R.]

101. Lines 127, 128:

*Thanks, Fortune, yet, that, after all THY crosses,
Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself.*

Qq. and Ff. omit thy. Wilkins, in the Novel, says: "thanking Fortune, that after all her crosses, shee had yet given him somewhat to repayre his fortunes" (p. 29). The correction in the text was made by Delius.

102. Line 129: And THOUGH it was mine own, part of my heritage.—If though is correct, we have here a long subordinate clause; the principal verb of the sentence will be thank, in line 139. But we might better read:

I know it; 'twas mine own.

This would seem to be justified by the words of the Novel: "the Armour is by Pericles viewed, and knowne to be a defence which his father at his last will gaue him in charge to keepe" (p. 29).

The armour (line 125) seems to be a "corslet," including both back and breast pieces (see line 142) and also arm or shoulder guards, which are apparently indicated by the word brace of line 133. Yet it is hard to see how a defence for the arm could be a shield twixt the wearer and death. We may suspect that the right word should be bruiſe or dint, showing where the armour had warded off a deadly stroke.

103. Lines 134, 135:

"For that it ſa'd me, keep it; in like neceſſity—
The which the gods protect thee FROM!—THE defend thee."
Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read for the latter of these lines:

The which the Gods protect thee, Fame may defend thee
The text is Malone's. Staunton reads may't for 't may, but either reading is cacophonous. Possibly what was intended was:

The which the gods avert, the same may defend thee.

104. Line 137: the rough seas, that SPARE not any man.—So Malone. Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 give squares.

105. Line 151: I'll show the virtue I have BORNE in arms.—Wilkins has in the Novel: "telling them, that with it hee would shew the vertue hee had learned in Armes" (p. 29).

106. Line 152: Why, D'YE take it.—For d'ye Q. 1 has do'e; Q. 2, Q. 3 di'e. The others omit the word.

107. Line 158: you'll remember from whence you had IT.—So Malone. The old editions all have "had them."

108. Lines 161-163:

*spite of all the RAPTURE of the sea,
This jewel holds his BUILDING on my arm:—
Unto THE value I will mount myself.*

Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read rupture for rapture, the reading of Rowe. The emendation is justified by the words of the Novel: "a Jewel, whom all the raptures of the sea could not bereave from his arme" (p. 29). Building may mean the setting, or holds his building may be an artificial way of saying "keeps its place." For the, in line 163, the old copies have thy. The correction was made by Walker.

109. Line 167: a pair of BASES.—This denotes the skirts, gathered or puckered lengthwise, which were worn appended to the doublet, and reached from the waist to the knee. They were often worn over the armour. The term sometimes denotes the caparisons or housings of a horse.

Friends, in the previous line, is Dyce's emendation. The old copies read friend; but the fishermen are addressed collectively throughout this scene, and the Second Fisherman presently answers with We, not I.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

110.—According to the Historia Apollonii, the Prince comes to the notice of King Archistrates at the gymnasium (see note 99), where, after putting off his mean garments and bathing, he distinguished himself as an opponent to the King at the game of ball (Iusus pilæ, which Twine interprets as "tennis"). Gower, who does not specify the game, says:

in a large place
Right even afore the kinges face
The play was pleyd
And who most worthi was of dede
Receive he sholde a certain mede
And in the cite bere a pris.

—See Pauli's ed. p. 298.

"Apollinus," Gower adds, "fel among hem into game," and of course comes off victorious.

The manner of the entrance of the competitors in this scene may, perhaps, have been suggested by the Arcadia of Sir Philip Sidney (books i. and ii.), where similar pageants are described. The choice by amorous or ambitious gallants of fanciful emblems such as these was an Italian custom, which became very fashionable in England in Tudor times. The present anachronistic scene is only introduced for the sake of the parade; and there is no particular reason why Thaisa should have to announce the knights. Simonides could surely see for himself.

111. Lines 14, 15:

*'Tis now your honour, daughter, to EXPLAIN
The labour of each knight in his device.*

For explain Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 have entertain. Steevens suggested the necessary correction. Schmidt proposes interpret, as being more Shakespearian.

112. Line 27: MAS por dulzura que por fuerza.—Q. 1, followed substantially by the other copies, reads Pue Per dolcera kee per forza. The Novel has "Pue per dolcera qui per sforsa: more by lenitie than by force." But when the text tells us the words are Spanish, we can hardly print pire, which is Italian. The observation and correction are Malone's. The motto seems really to have been taken from a French source. Plus par douceur que par force is emblem 28 of Corrozet's Hecatomgraphie, Paris, 1540, according to Mr. H. Green, Shakespeare and the Emblem Writers (p. 164). There is only a far-off likeness between this and the proverb mas vale maña que fuerza, 'more avails cunning than force,' mentioned by J. Collins, Dictionary of Spanish Proverbs, 1823.

113. Lines 29, 30:

*And his device, a wreath of chivalry;
The word, Me pompe provexit apex.*

The practice of giving a chaplet of leaves to the victor in the Greek athletic contests was followed in the games of the Roman circus. Roman soldiers were rewarded with a crown of olive leaves for conspicuous bravery, and a wreath of laurel or bay was worn by a victorious commander in his triumphal procession or pompa. It is this last which the Latin motto seems to have in view. Paradin, Devises Heroiques (quoted by Mr. Green, ut supra, p. 168), gives this motto when writing of the laurel wreath, which he describes as the highest reward that the Romans could offer to generals, emperors, captains, and victorious knights. Often the wreaths were made of gold. In one shape or the other they were sometimes given as the reward of the victor in a tournament. La Croix has an engraving (No. 134 in Military and Religious Life of the Middle Ages) from an ivory of the 13th century, showing ladies at a tournament holding out wreaths to successful combatants.

114. Lines 32, 33:

*A burning torch that's turned upside down;
The word, QUOD me alit, me extinguit.*

Quod is Malone's reading. Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read Qui, as does the Novel, which interprets the words to mean "that which gives me life gives me death." Mr. Green quotes from Symeonii, Tetrastichi Morali (1561, 1574), the story of the Signor di San Valtiere, who bore this device, with the motto as in Wilkins, "to signify that, as the beauty of a lady whom he loved nourished all his thoughts, so she put him in peril of his life." Dyce defends Malone's reading of quod for qui by the citation of Daniel's translation of Paulus Jovius, Discourse of Impresses, 1585, where quod is the word used.

115. Lines 36-38:

*an hand environed with clouds,
Holding out gold that's by the TOUCHSTONE tried;
The motto thus, Sic spectanda fides.*

As regards the touchstone, see Richard III. note 467, and compare King John, iii. 1. 100, and Coriolanus, note 234. This device and motto appear in Paradin (ut supra) and in Whitney, A Choice of Emblemes, 1586.

116. Lines 50, 51:

by his rusty outside, he appears

T' have practis'd more the WHIPSTOCK than the lance.

Steevens observes (on Twelfth Night, ii. 3. 28) that a whipstock is the handle of a whip, round which a strap of leather is usually twisted, and is sometimes put for the whip itself.

The idea of the ill-clad knight may have been borrowed from the following passage in Sidney, Arcadia, book i.: "the next commor . . . was no lesse marked than all the rest before, because he had nothing worth the marking. For he had neither picture, nor devicce, his armor of as old a fashion (besides the rustie poorenesse,) that it might better seeme a monument of his grand-fathers courage: about his middle he had in steede of bases, a long cloake of silke, which as unhandsonely, as it needes must, became the wearer: so that all that lookt on, measured his length on the earth alreadie" (ed. 1598, p. 63).

117. Lines 56, 57:

*Opinion's but a fool, that makes us scan
The outward habit by the inward man.*

By, with the sense "concerning," occurs in Merchant of Venice, ii. 9. 26; see note 189 on that play. Compare Love's Labour's Lost, iv. 3. 150:

I would not have him know so much by me;
and 1 Corinthians iv. 4: "I know nothing by myself." The Novel says: "hee tolde them, that as Vertue was not to be approued by wordes, but by actions, so the outward habite was the least table of the inward minde" (p. 30).

ACT II. SCENE 3.

118. Line 3, Qq., F. 3 read I place. Line 26, Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 have shall for do. Line 111, Q. 1, Q. 2 omit to. Line 113, Q. 1, Q. 2 continue the speech to Pericles

119 Line 23:

Marshal. Sir, yonder is your place
Per. Some other is more fit.

It is plain from these words, and those of the First Knight, which follow, that Pericles is seated in a place of honour Compare Gower:

At ouper tounis, natheles,
The king amudes al the pres
Let clepe him up amonge hem alle
And bad his marshal of his halle
To setten him in such degre
That he upon him mighte se.

And he, which hadde his pris deserved,

Was maad beginne a middel bord,
That bothe king and queene him syhe.

—See Pauli's ed. p. 299.

The Novel only says: "all [the Knights] being seated by the Marshall at a table, placed directly ouer-against where the king and his daughter sat" (p. 31).

120. Lines 27-29:

Sim.

Sir, sir, sit.—

[Aside] *By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,
These cates resist me, he NOT thought upon.*

It is an awkward arrangement that Simonides should have only the three words "sit, sir, sit" to say to Pericles. The next two lines are obscurely expressed, but their meaning, no doubt, is that Simonides' liking for Pericles is so strong that it has taken away his appetite.

Wilkins says: "As it were by some diuine operation, both King and daughter at one instant were so stricken in loue with the noblenesse of his woorth, that they could not spare so much time to satisfie themselves with the delicacie of their viands, for talking of his prayes" (Novel, p. 31). The king's sentiments must be regarded as much the same as his daughter's. But, which Dyce suggests, instead of not in line 29, would make the sense clearer. Steevens and Dyce rightly object to the proposal, made by Malone and by Mason, to give these two lines to Pericles, whose thoughts as yet are only employed on his past misfortunes.

121. Line 43: Where now his SON'S like glow-worm in the night.—So Dyce. Q. 1, which the other Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 follow, reads:

Where now his sonne like a gloworme in the night.

122. Lines 62, 63:

*And princes not doing so are like to gnats,
Which make a sound, but KILL'D ARE wonder'd at.*

The wonder is because of the insignificance of the gnat which has made so much noise Steevens's explanation is that the worthless monarch and the idle gnat have only lived to make an empty bluster; and, when both alike are dead, we wonder how it happened that they made so much, or that we permitted them to make it. The parallel is a strained one. Mr. Daniel would read, "but still ne'er wonder'd at," for the latter part of line 63. Mr. Kinneare, in his Cruces Shaksperianæ, proposes, "but little are wonder'd at."

123. Line 64: to make his ENTERTAIN more sweet.—This is Walker's emendation, adopted by Dyce. Compare I

1. 119 Entr'ance, or enterance, is the reading of Qq. and F. 3, F. 4; the meaning being, then, "his coming among us.

124. Line 65: standing-bowl, or standing-cup, was a drinking vessel having a foot or pedestal. Compare the stage-direction in Henry VIII v. 5, where "great standing-bowls for the christening-gifts" are mentioned. In Elizabethan times they were not uncommon.

125. Lines 81, 82:

*A gentleman of Tyre,—my name, Pericles:
My education BEEN in arts and arms.*

So, in Troilus and Cressida, iv. 3. 80, the Grecian youths are described as "flowing o'er with arts and exercise." Malone, to avoid the elliptical mode of expression, gave being instead of been in line 82, but harsher ellipses occur in this and the preceding act. In the Novel the words are just as in the text, and the alteration would not better the sense.

126. Lines 87-89:

*A gentleman of Tyre,
Who ONLY by misfortune of the seas
Bereft of ships and men, cast on this shore.*

The confused construction is, no doubt, the result of mutilation. This explains the broken line. No satisfactory emendation has been proposed. Only, of course, means alone.

127. Lines 94-97:

*Even in your armours, as you are ADDRESS'D,
Will VERY well become a SOLDIER'S DANCE.
I will not have excuse, with saying This
LOUD MUSIC is too harsh for ladies' heads.*

In lines 94, 95 we have another incomplete sentence, whether due to the carelessness of author or of transcriber we cannot now say. The Qq. omit very, which was inserted by F. 3. Address'd, in Shakespeare, means prepared, ready. Here, however, it seems to mean accoutred or dressed, a sense in which ready is often used elsewhere. In line 96 Q. 1, Q. 2 have a comma after this; the other copies omit the stop, and read that. The text is Malone's; but the line is a bad one. Most likely the loud music is the noise made by the armour in dancing. Steevens quotes Twine, Patterne of Painefull Adventures, where "daunting in armour" is enumerated among the entertainments at the wedding of the prince and princess (p. 279). In A Briefe Treatise Concerning the Use and Abuse of Daunting: collected out of the works of the most excellent Devine Dootour Peter Martyr, by Maister Robert Massonius: and translated into English by I. K. (about 1580), we are told: "Besides these, there was another kinde exercised by younge men in martiall affayres. Forasmuch as they were commaunded to leappe and make much gesture and signes of mirth in theyr Harnes, to thend they might be readier and apter for battell, when the cause of y^e common welath so required. This manner of daunsinge was called Pyrrhicha, and because it was used in armour, armed, hereof mentiō is made in the ciuill lawes, (that is to say) in the digest of punishmentes; F. de penis: L. ad damnum" (sig. C. iii., verso). The versified Dialogue, from which Malone quotes (Var. Ed. vol. xxi. p. 85), would seem to be based on this Treatise.

Sidney, Arcadia, book ii., mentions "the matachine daunce in armour" (ed. 1598, p. 118), as danced by one of the characters of his story. In this the performers are said to have wielded sword and buckler, and another interpretation of the loud music of line 97 is hereby suggested. But all that is meant in the present passage is that the knights dance without removing their armour. In Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 the stage-direction, after lines 98 and 107, is simply They dance. Malone gave The Knights dance for the first, and The Knights and Ladies dance for the second direction, and this alteration has been generally followed. I have enlarged the directions in accordance with the view I have just expressed.

ACT II. SCENE 4.

128. Lines 7-10:

*When he was seated in a chariot
Of an inestimable value, and his daughter with him,
A fire from heaven came, and shrivell'd up
THEIR bodies, EVEN TO LOATHING.*

Qq and F. 3, F. 4 read those, instead of their, in line 10. The transcriber perhaps caught the word up from the next line. Steevens made the correction, which is confirmed in the Novel.

Steevens altered lines 7, 8 thus:

*When he was seated, and his daughter with him,
In a chariot of inestimable value.*

This mends the rhythm, but throws the sentence out of balance. There is probably some mutilation. In the Novel, thirty lines (printed as prose) are occupied with the account which in this speech is condensed into ten. The following passage explains even to loathing: "as thus they rode . . . Vengeance with a deadly arrow drawn from forth the quiver of his wrath, prepared by lightning, and shot on by thunder, hitte and stricke dead these proud incestuous creatures where they sate, leauing their faces blasted, and their bodies such a contemptfull object on the earth, that all . . . scorn'd now to touch them, loath'd now to look upon them" (p. 33). The death of Antiochus by lightning is mentioned in all the versions of the story. No historical personage of that name met with such a death.

129. Line 15: To bar heaven's shaft, BUT sin had his reward.—So Q. 1. Q. 2, which the other copies follow, has to barre heauens shaft.

By sinne had his reward.

130. Line 25: Your griefs! for what? wrong not THE PRINCE you love.—Your prince is the reading of Qq. and F. 3, F. 4. Steevens made the correction. As Dyce points out, the error arose by confusion between yr and ye.

131. Lines 31-34:

*And be resolv'd he lues to govern vs,
Or dead, GIVES cause to mourn his funeral,
And LEAVES us to our free election.*

Sec. Lord. Whose DEATH'S indeed the strongest in our censure.

Q. 1, followed by the other copies, reads as follows:

*And be resolu'd he lues to gouerne vs:
Or dead, giue's cause to mourn his funeral,
And leaue vs to our free election.*

z. Lord. Whose death in deed, the strongest in our sensure

The text is Malone's. The Cambridge editors, however, retain the reading of the old copies in lines 32, 33. Give's must, in this case, be taken as an abbreviation for give us, and the sentence must be regarded as a request. In old texts the omission and insertion of s is one of the commonest of typographical mistakes.

132. Lines 35, 37:

And, knowing thus kingdom, IF without a head,—

WILL soon TO RUIN FALL.

If is Malone's correction for is, the reading of the old copies. In line 37 these read soon fall to ruin. Steevens made the transposition, and inserted will.

133. Lines 37, 38:

your noble self,

That best KNOW how to rule.

Know is the reading of Q. 1, Q. 2. Q. 3 has knowes, which the other copies adopt. Malone read know'st, but this hardly agrees with your self.

134. Line 41: FOR honour's causa.—This is Dyce's correction. "Try honour's cause" is the reading of Qq. and F. 3, F. 4. Dyce compares ii. 5. 61.

135. Lines 49, 50, 52, 53:

*But if I cannot win you to this love,
Go search like nobles, like noble subjects,*

*Whom if you find, and win unto return,
You shall like diamonds sit about his crown.*

This passage lacks not only grammar and rhythm, but sense also. Something has, perhaps, fallen out to which love might refer. Wilkins, in the Novel, merely says: "nothing but this only prevailed with them, that since he only knew their Prince was gone to trauell, and that, that trauell was undertaken for their good, they would abstaine but for three months longer from bestowing that dignity which they call'd their loue, though it was his dislike vpon him" (p. 34). Line 50 may have originally read

Go search your noble prince, like noble subjects

There would thus be an antecedent to whom (line 52).

136. Line 56: We with our travels will endeavour IT.—It was added by Steevens. For the use, indefinitely, of it as the object of a verb, see Abbott, Shakespearian Grammar, § 228; and compare ii. 5. 23.

ACT II. SCENE 5.

137.—According to the old story, Apollonius, after supper at the palace, enchanted every one by his masterly playing on the harp. The princess became his pupil, and fell every day more deeply in love with him. Gower describes her as losing her appetite and keeping her chamber, until the king is in doubt of her life. To the three princes who come seeking her hand, the king—

*Seith she is seek, and of that speche
Tho was no time to beseeche.
But eche of hem do make a bilie
He bad, and write his owne wille,
His name, his fader, and his good:
And when she wiste how that it stood,
And hadde here billes oversein,
Thei sholden have answers ayein.*

The king sent the letters to his daughter, who wrote in answer:

*'The shame which is in a maide
With speche dar nought ben unloke,
But in writinge it may be spoke.
So write I to you, fader, thus:
But if I have Appolinus,
Of al this world what so betyde,
I wol non other man abide
And, certes, if I of him faile,
I wot right wel, withoute faile,
Ye shul for me be daughterles.*

Twine says that the king found means to put off the suitors, "for that present, saying that he would talk with them farther concerning that matter another time." According to Gower

*He yaf hem answer by and by;
But that was do so prively,
That non of othres counsel wiste.
They toke here leve, and wher hem liste
They wente forth upon here wey.*

—See Pauli's ed. p. 304, 305.

The very jejune scene with the suitors is omitted by Wilkins in the Novel, but he gives the succeeding portion of the present scene with great elaboration. The childishness of the king's feigned anger has been often noticed. Simonides cannot plead the excuse of Prospero:

*They are both in either's powers: but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light.*

—Tempest, i. 2. 450-452.

The character has been made ridiculous, for the sake of showing off Pericles and Thaisa in the parts of a hero falsely accused and a heroine ready to sacrifice her life for the man she loves. There is a similar scene by Wilkins in The Travels of Three English Brothers; Robert Sherly is ordered off to execution for aiming at the Sophy's crown by an unlawful contract with his niece; a head, supposed to be his, is brought in, whereupon the lady avows her affection and begs the body for burial. The Sophy answers:

*Take it, with our best love and furtherance.
And, having ioynd his body to the head,
His winding sheet be thy chaste marriage bed. [Enter Sherly —Day's Works, pp. 71-74 (of play).*

138. Line 6: Which YET from her by no means can I get.—Yet was first inserted in F. 3.

139. Lines 49, 50:

*Thou hast bewitch'd my daughter,
And thou art a villain!*

Brabantio accuses Othello similarly, but with more apparent justification. (See Othello, i. 2. 63.) Mr. Tyler compares the dissembling of Prospero, when he addresses Ferdinand: Tempest, i. 2. 453-456:

*thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on't.*

140. Line 62: not to be a rebel to YOUR state.—So Walker. Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read her instead of your; but the correction is confirmed by the words of the Novel, "affirming, that he came into his Court in search of honour, and not to be a rebell to his state" (p. 39).

141. Line 87: And for a further grief.—Qq. and F. 3. F. 4 omit a, which was inserted by Malone.

142. Line 89 Even as my life MY blood that fosters it.—Q 5, which the succeeding copies follow, has “or blood that fosters it.” But the figure of the love of the life for the blood is not very different from that in i. 2. 110:

Dry serves not tight more faithful than I'll be.

Compare The Maid in the Mill, iv. 2:

the young men were friends
As is the life and blood coagulate
And curded in one body.

—Beaumont and Fletcher's Works, ii. 599.

ACT III. PROLOGUE.

143 Lines 1, 2:

*Now sleep yslaked hath the rout;
No dun but snores THE HOUSE ABOUT.*

The reading is Malone's Qq and F 3, F. 4 read for line 2:

• No dun but snores about the house

144. Lines 5-8:

*The cat, with eyne of burning coal,
Now crouches FORE the mouse's hole;
And CRICKETS sing at th' oven's mouth,
AYE the blither for their drouth.*

Fore and crickets are Malone's emendations. The old copies have from and cricket, and, in the next line, are, for which aye was first substituted by Dyce. A resemblance to this speech of Gower's has been seen by some in A Midsummer Night's Dream, v. 1. 380, &c.

As regards the house cricket, we are told they “live in a kind of artificial torrid zone, are very thirsty souls, and are frequently found drowned in pans of water, milk, broth, and the like. Whatever is moist, even stockings or linen hung out to dry, is to them a bonne bouche” (Kirby and Spence, p. 140)

145. Lines 12, 13:

• *tine, that is so briefly spent,
With your fine fancies quaintly ECHÉ.*

We may set beside this, but for contrast rather than comparison, the words of the Chorus in Henry V. v. 1-6:

Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,
That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them: to admit th' excuse
Of time, of numbers and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life
Be here presented.

The form eché occurs in Merchant of Venice, iii. 2. 23, and in Henry V. iii. Prol. 35; modern editors, however, substitute eke in both passages. It is found in Chaucer

146. Lines 15-52.—Gower thus tells the story:

It fel a day thei riden oute,
The king and queene and al the route,
To pleien hem upon the stronde,
Whereas they seen toward the londe
A ship sailende of great aray.
Till it be come they abide.
They axen when the ship is come.
‘Fro Tyr,’ anon answerde some.
The cause why they comen for
Was for to seche and for to finde
Appolunus, which is of kinde
Her lege lord.

He was right glad, for they him tolde
That for vengeance, as god it wolde
Antiochus, as men may wite,
With thonder and lightning is forsmite
His doughter hath the same chaunce.

‘Forthy, our lege lord, we seye,
In name of al the londe and preye
That, left al othere thing to done,
It like you to come sone
And se your owne lege men,’

This tale, after the king it hadde,
Pentapolim al overspradde
Ther was no iole for to sechie,
For every man it hadde in speche,
And seiden alle of oon acord
‘A worthi king shal ben oure lord,
That thoughte us ferst an hevinesse
Is shape now to gret gladnesse
Thus goth the tidinge over al

Appolunus his leve took
To ship he goth, his wif with childe
• wolde noght departe him fro.

Lichordia for her office
Was take, which was a norrice,
To wende with this yonge wif,
To whom was shape a woful lif.
Withinne a time, as it betidde,
Whan they were in the see amidde,
Out of the north they syhe a cloude:
The storme aros, the wyndes loude
They blowen many a dredful blast.
The welken was al overcast.
This yonge lady wepte and cryde,
To whom no comfort myghte availle,
Of childe she began travaille.

—See Pauli's ed pp. 308-310.

147 Lines 15-19:

*By many a DERN and painful perch
Of Pericles the careful search,
By the four opposing COIGNS
Which the world together joins,
Is made with all due diligence*

Coigns was substituted by Rowe for the crignes of Qq, F 3, F. 4. It seems here to mean “quarters;” its literal sense is “corner” (French coin). Dearn, meaning dreary or solitary, is the reading of Qq in King Lear, iii. 7. 63. The sentence means “the careful search for Pericles is made over many a lonely and toilsome mile of country, through the four quarters of the world.”

148. Line 29: The mutiny he there hastes t' APPEASE.—Appease is Steevens's conjecture for oppress of the Qq., F. 3, F. 4. It is confirmed by the words of the Novel: “grane Helycanus had not without much labour, appeased the stubborn mutiny of the Tyrians” (p. 42)

149. Lines 31, 32:

*in twice six moons,
He, obedient to their dooms.*

The same imperfect rhyme occurs again, v. 2. (Gower) 19, 20 Dooms means judgments or suffrages.

150 Line 35: YRAVISHED the regions round.—Q. 1 reads Iranyshed, which the later editions made into irony shed.

Steevens made the correction. Y, which has the same force as the German ge-, was, in Old English, the prefix of the past participle. An example has just occurred in line 1. The only example in Shakespeare is the word yeliped, Love's Labour's Lost, i. 1. 242; v. 2. 602.

151 Lines 45-48:

*half the flood
Hath their keel cut: but fortune's mood
Varies again; the GRIZZLED north
Disgorges such a tempest forth.*

The meaning of the first clause is that the ship had completed half its voyage. Steevens first corrected fortune mov'd, the reading (substantially) of Qq, F. 3, F. 4, to fortune's mood. Gristled is the reading of Q. 1; the other copies have gristly.

152 Lines 51, 52:

*The lady shrieks, and, WELL-A-NEAR!
Does fall in travail with her fear*

Reed observed that well-a-near was equivalent to "well-a-day," and was a Yorkshire expression Dyce quotes Coles, Latin and English Dictionary: "Well a day, well a-neer, well a way. Eheu." The word is found in Look About You, 1600:

Now well-a-neere! that e'er I liv'd to see
Such patience and so much implety!

—Dodsley, vii p 397

where Hazlitt wrongly prints "well a year" Wilkins's Novel says: "She is strucke into such a hasty fright, that welladay she fallies in trauell" (p 44)

153. Lines 53, 54:

*And what ensues in this FELL storm
Shall for itself itself perform.*

So Q. 1. The other Qq and F. 3, F. 4 have self instead of fell. But ought we not to read "What next ensues?" And is prosaic. The next line is incapable of strict interpretation. Both are unnecessary, the sense being given in lines 55, 56.

154. Line 60: The SEA-tost Pericles.—Qq, F. 3, F. 4 read seas. The text is Rowe's.

ACT III. SCENE 1.

155.—This scene passes by night. Clarke has here well observed: "The diction throughout the present scene is veritably Shakespearian. It has that majesty of unrestrained force which distinguishes his finest descriptive passages, and that dignity of expression, combined with the most simple and natural pathos, which characterizes his passages of deepest passion. After the comparative stiffness traceable in the phraseology of the previous scenes, and after the cramped and antiquated chant-speeches of Gower, this opening of the third act always comes upon us with the effect of a grand strain of music—the music of the great master himself—with its rightly touched discords and its nobly exalted soul-sufficing harmonies." B. W. Procter (Barry Cornwall) also, after stating his belief that the first two acts were probably not Shakespeare's work, observes that in the present scene "the genius of the author seems suddenly to expand;" and that this opening speech has many touches "characteristic of our greatest poet, and worthy of him."

156 Line 1: THOU god of this great vast.—So Rowe Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read the for thou.

157. Lines 4-6:

*Having RECALL'd them from the deep! O, still Thy deaf'ning, dreadful thunders; GENTLY quench
Thy numble, sulphurous flashes!*

Recall'd is Dyce's correction, which, as he observes, is demanded both by the sense and the metre, in place of call'd, the reading of the old editions. Gently, in line 5, is given only by Q. 1; the other copies read daily.

158 Lines 7, 8:

*THOU STORMEST venomously;
Wilt thou SPT all thyself?*

Qq, F. 3, F. 4 read then storme venomously. The text is Dyce's. Thou had been previously proposed by Malone. Pericles, Rolfe observes, is on the deck, Lycorida in the cabin. He says, just afterwards, that the noise of the storm drowns even the boatswain's whistle; and his thought seems to be, "how can Lycorida hear me?" He then calls more loudly. Speat is the reading of Qq, spet of F. 3, in line 8. See Merchant of Venice, note 98. Steevens compares Merchant of Venice, ii. 7. 44, 45:

The watery kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven.

159 Lines 10, 11:

Lucina, O

Divinest patroness, and MIDWIFE gentle.

Q. 1, followed substantially by the other copies, reads:

Lucina, oh!

Divinest patronesse, and my wife gentle.

The correction is Steevens's. As to Lucina, see i. 1. 8, and Cymbeline, v. 4. 43.

160. Lines 13, 14:

the pangs

Of my queen's TRAVAIL.

So Dyce. Qq., F. 3, F. 4, read travails. Elsewhere Shakespeare uses the singular

161. Line 26: VIR honour with you—The old copies have "Vse honour with you," which may mean, "may place ourselves on a footing with you in respect to honourable conduct." M. Mason, who made the emendation, observes: "The meaning is evidently this: 'We poor mortals recal not what we give, and therefore in that respect we may contend with you in honour.'" He compares act iv. Prol. 31-34:

so
With the dove of Paphos might the crow
Viz feathers white;

and adds, "The trace of the letters in the words vie and use is nearly the same, especially if we suppose that the v was used instead of the u vowel:

nature wants stuff

To viz strange forms with fancy.

Antony and Cleopatra [v. 2. 97, 98]."

162. Line 35: THY LOSS is more than can thy PORTAGE quit.—Steevens interprets this, "Thou hast already lost more (by the death of thy mother) than thy safe arrival at the port of life can counterbalance, with all to boot that we can give thee." Malone takes a similar view of the sense of portage, which Dyce and Schmidt accept, though with some uncertainty. Portage properly means a toll or impost paid on reaching port. But we ought, I think, to interpret thy loss as the loss of which thou art the cause, the loss through thee, viz Thaisa's death

163 Lines 43, 44: Slack the BOLINS there!—Thou wilt NOT, wilt thou? Blow, and split thyself.—Bolin, or bow-line (literally, "side-line"), is a rope fastened near the perpendicular edge of the square sails, and used to keep the weather edge of the sail tight forward when the ship is close-hauled. They are slackened when the wind is very strong. The person addressed in the next sentence is not certain. From iv 1 62 it might seem that someone falls overboard, but whether these words refer to him I cannot say. If they do, we should read "Thou wilt out." Mr. Nicholson, I find, makes the same conjecture.

164 Lines 45, 46: But sea-room, and the brine and cloudy billow kiss the moon, I care not; i.e. Let there but be sea-room, and I care not how much the tempest may rage. Compare Tempest, i 1 8: "Blow, till thou burst thy wind, if room enough!"

165. Lines 47-49: Sir, your queen must overboard: the sea works high, the wind is loud, and will not lie till the ship be clear'd of the dead.—Steevens quotes from Fuller's Historie of the Holy Warre, book iv chap. 27: "The sea cannot digest the crudity of a dead corpse, being a due debt to be interred where it dieth; and a ship cannot abide to be made a bier of." Almost the same words as in Fuller's last clause are in the earliest version of the story of our play. The superstition still exists.

166. Lines 51-55: with us at sea it hath been still observed; and we are strong in CUSTOM. Therefore briefly yield her; for she must overboard straight.

Per. As you think meet—Most wretched queen!
Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3, Q. 4, Q. 6, F. 3, F. 4 read (substantially) as follows:

with vs at Sea it hath bin still obserued.
And we are strong in easterne, therefore briefly yeeld'er,
Per. As you thinke meet; for she must ouer board straight:
Most wretched Queene.

Q. 5 inserts this is a lye before with us. This is evidently some marginal annotation, which the printer mistook for a correction of the text. Malone made the transposition, which has since been universally adopted. Custom, for easterne, is the conjecture of Boswell. There can be little doubt that it is the right word.

167. Line 58: Here she lies, sir.—Lycorida most likely draws back a curtain, disclosing Thaisa within a sort of deck cabin, presumably in the after part of the ship. Compare Gower, p. 310:

Of childe she began trauaille
Wher she lay in a caban clos.
Hir woful lord fro hir aros.

Just in the same way Pericles is discovered to Lysimachus, v. 1. 36. See note 272.

168. Line 61: Must cast thee, scarcely coffin'd, in THE OOZE.—So Steevens. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 omit the, and read oaze (or oar) instead of ooze. The word occurs in The Tempest, iii. 3. 100: "my son i' the ooze is bedded."

169 Lines 62-64:

*Where, for a monument upon thy bones,
AND AYE-REMAINING LAMPS, the belching whale
And humming water must o'erwhelm thy corpse.*

And aye-remaining lamps is the conjecture of Steevens. He interprets: "Instead of a monument erected over thy bones, and perpetual lamps to burn near them, the spouting whale shall oppress thee with his weight, and the mass of waters shall roll with low heavy murmur over thy head." The Quartos and Folios have "The air-remaining lamps," variously spelt. This reading Mr. Tyler proposes to interpret as denoting the stars, the "gold candles fix'd in heaven's air" (Sonnet xxi) O'erwhelm thy corpse could then only refer to the humming water. Holt White cites Milton, Lucydads:

Where thou perhaps under the humming tide
Visitst the bottom of the monstrous world

Milton, he says, afterwards changed humming to whelming

170 Line 68: Bring me the satin coffer—The old copies have coffin. This is a mere blunder of the scribe or printer, who repeated the ending of the preceding word. The coffer may have contained the "cloth of state," in which Thaisa was to be shrouded. See the next scene, line 65.

171. Lines 75, 76:

*We are near Tarsus.
Per. Thither, gentle mariner,
Alter thy course for Tyre.*

Pericles means, "alter thy course which has hitherto been for Tyre," or else he means that the skipper is to divert his course, so as to take Tarsus on his way, and then continue towards Tyre. We may conjecture that the vessel, having been driven out of her course by the storm, had somehow got to the north-west of Cyprus, so as to be nearer Tarsus than Tyre. In such a position the courses for the two places would be quite different. The introduction to this act (lines 47, 48) implies that the storm began from the north, and so Marina says, iv. 1 52 Gower, p. 310, wrote:

Out of the north they syhe a cloude:
but probably neither author attended much to a geographical or nautical question.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

172.—Wilkins, in the Novel, puts the events of this scene on the next morning (i.e. the morning of the next day) after the preceding.

173. Line 20, as Malone: Qq., F. 3, F. 4 have hold for held. Line 37, I was added by Malone. Line 77, Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 have ever for even.

174 Lines 8, 9:

*Give this to th' apothecary,
And tell me how it works.*

"The recipe that Cerimon sends to the apothecary, we must suppose, is intended either for the poor men already mentioned, or for some of his other patients. The preceding words show that it cannot be designed for the master of the servant introduced here" (Malone).

175 Lines 21-23:

*But I much marvel that your lordship, having RICH TIRE ABOUT YOU, should at these early hours
Shake off the golden SLUMBER OF REPOSE.*

Steevens remarks: "The gentlemen rose early, because they were but in lodgings which stood exposed near the sea. They wonder, however, to find Lord Cerimon stirring, because he had rich tire about him; meaning perhaps a bed more richly and comfortably furnished, where he could have slept warm and secure in defiance of the tempest" Dyce is of the same opinion; see his Glossary. The passage is, no doubt, mutilated. In the next line the tautology slumber of repose must be a corruption.

176 Lines 23-31:

*careless heirs
May the two latter DARKEN and expend;
But immortality attends the former,
Making a man a god.*

Careless heirs may darken rank and wealth, staining their glory by misuse and excess. As to men being made divine by virtue and cunning, wisdom and art, compare Bacon, Novum Organum (129), "Again let a man only consider what a difference there is between the life of men in the most civilized province of Europe, and in the wildest and most barbarous districts of New India; he will feel it be great enough to justify the saying that 'man is a god to man,' not only in regard of aid and benefit, but also by a comparison of condition. And this difference comes not from soil, not from climate, not from race, but from the arts." N. Holmes, in his Authorship of Shakespeare (3rd ed. p. 55), recognized a Baconian colouring in this portraiture of Cerimon. This we may allow without in the least assenting to the absurd notion that Bacon composed either Pericles or any other work with which Shakespeare's name is usually associated. Dr. Furnivall (Intro. to Leopold Shakspeare, p. lxxxviii.) says: "Seeing with what contempt he (Shakespeare) treated the apothecaries in the Errors and Romeo and Juliet, and how little notice he took of the Doctor in Macbeth, we are struck with the very different character he gives to the noble, scientific, and generous Cerymon here. He is a man working for the good of all, the kind of man that Bacon would have desired for a friend." This note is Mr. Tyler's, to whom I am indebted for the subsequent illustrations of this scene from Bacon's writings.

177. Line 30: That dwell in vegetives, in metals, stones.
—Steevens compares Romeo and Juliet, ii. 3. 15, 16:

O, mickle is the powerful grace that lies
In herbs, plants, stones, and their true qualities.

178. Lines 41, 42:

*Or tie my TREASURE up in silken bags,
To please the fool and death.*

Instead of treasure the old editions have pleasure, but this need not vary greatly the sense. It seems impossible to explain this passage satisfactorily. Steevens seems to think that there is here an allusion to some pictorial representation, for he says: "I have seen, indeed, (though present means of reference to it are beyond my reach,) an old Flemish print in which Death is exhibited in the act of plundering a miser of his bags, and the Fool (discriminated by his bauble, &c.) is standing behind, and grinning at the process." This explanation would certainly be attractive, if we could find the print, and ascertain that it was widely known in Shakespeare's time. The mention of the fool and death reminds us of Measure for Measure (see note 111 on that play). But the resemblance is merely superficial. Mr. Tyler observes, on the present passage, that the fool, delighting in his treasure, is like an ass bowed down with golden ingots. Death is amused with the whole proceeding, as he takes away for ever the load of heavy riches.

179 Lines 46-48:

*but even
Your purse, still open, hath built Lord Cerimon
Such strong renown as time shall never RAZE.*

Even this generous liberality is quite Baconian. We read at the end of the New Atlantis: "And so he left me; having assigned a value of about two thousand ducats, for a bounty to me and my fellows. For they give great largesses where they come upon all occasions." Raze was added by Dyce, in the first three Quartos the line ends with never. Q. 4, Q. 5, Q. 6 and the Folios read never shall decay.

180 Line 55. 'Tis a good constraint of fortune it belches upon us—It is a good thing that fortune has compelled the sea to discharge the chest upon our shore. Malone aptly compares The Tempest, iii. 3. 53-56:

You are three men of an, whom Destiny,—
That hath to instrument this lower world
And what is in't,—the never-sufferted sea
Hath caus'd to belch up you.

181. Lines 60, 67:

*A passport TOO!—
Apollo, perfect me in the characters!*

The old copies have "A passport to Apollo." The text is Malone's. It seems likely that the passage is corrupt. With full bags of spices is a very unrhymical passage. In Wilkins's Novel Cerimon is described as "inuoking Apollo to his empericke" (i.e. experiment) when taking means to revive Thaisa. This hints that line 67 is out of place, and should, in some shape or other, follow line 88. The text, however, contains an invocation to Æsculapius at the end of the scene.

182 Lines 82-84:

*Death may usurp on nature many hours,
And yet the fire of life kindle again
The o'erpress'd spirits.*

Compare Bacon, New Atlantis: "Wherein we find many strange effects; as continuing life in them, though divers parts, which you account vital, be perished and taken forth; resuscitating of some that seemed dead in appearance; and the like." The queen presents signs of life in the accounts of Gower and Twine, which are not to be found in Shakespeare.

183. Lines 84-86:

*I 'VE READ of an Egyptian
That had nine hours lien dead,
Who was by good APPLIANCES recover'd.*

The old copies have I heard. In Wilkins's Novel, which makes Egyptian refer to those who recovered persons parently dead, Cerimon says: "I have read of some Egyptianians, who after four hours death (if a man may call so) have raised impoverished bodies, like to this, unto their former health" (p. 48). I have introduced the correction into the text. Appliances is Dyce's emendation of appliance, the reading of Qq., F. 3, F. 4.

84. Line 87: the fire and cloths.—In the previous accounts we read of oil and wool for the anointing; thus in Latin Historia Apollonii Regis Tyri, "Calefecit oleum, defecit lanam, fudit super pectus puellæ." Twine says: "Then tooke he certaine hote and comfortable fires, and warming them upon the coales, he dipped faire oil therein, and fomented all the bodie ouer there-with" (p. 287). Probably the idea is that of a medicated hot-water bath or fomentation. Bacon (De Augmentis Scientiarum, i. ch. iv) insisted on the importance of stating Nature by artificial baths.

85. Line 88: The rough and awful music that we have.—Such music as would be most likely to waken the dormant sense of hearing. Malone compares Winter's Tale, v. 3, where, when Paulina pretends to bring Hermione to life, she orders music to be played, to awake her from her trance. So also the Physician, when King Lear is out to wake from sleep after his frenzy (v. 7. 25): "Loudly the music there!"

186. Line 90: The VIAL once more.—The first three Quartos have viol, but the probability is that Cerimon requires a bottle or other vessel of strong perfume. This least suits what follows, how thou stirrest, thou block! which would scarcely agree with the idea of viol as a musical instrument.

187. Lines 93, 94:
*nature awakes; a WARMTH
Breathes out of her.*

I have "Nature awakes a warmth breath out of her." The other old copies have warme instead of warmth. The text is Malone's.

188. Lines 101–104:
*the diamonds
Of a most praised water DO appear,
To make the world twice rich.—O, live,
And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature.*

or do, Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 read doth. They omit O in line 103. Both alterations are Malone's. With lines 99–103 Steevens compares Sidney, Arcadia, book iii: "Her fire liddes then hiding her fairer eyes seemed vnto him reeste boxes of mother of pearle, rich in themselves but containing in them farre richer Jewels" (ed. 1598, p. 351, which, however, reads fairer liddes).

189. Lines 106: Where am I? Where's my lord? What world is this?—The same words are found in Gower:

Thei leide hire on a couche softe,
And, with a shete warmed ofte,
Hir colde brest bigan to hete,
Hir herte also to flinke and bete.
This maister hath hir every loint
With certein oil and balsme anoint,
And putte a licour in hir mouth
Which is to fewe clerkes couth;
So that she covereth atte laste,
And ferst hir yhen up she caste,

And, whan she more of strengthe caughte,
Her armes bothe forth she straughte,
Held up hir hond, and piously
She spak; and seide: 'Where am I?
'Where is my lord? what world is this?'

—See Paul's ed. p. 315.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

190.—F. 3, in which for the first time this play is divided into acts, makes act iii. begin with this scene.

191. Lines 5–7:
*Your STROKES of fortune,
THOUGH they HAVE HURT you mortally, yet glance
Full WOUNDINGLY on us.*

Q. 1, following substantially by the other Quartos, reads:

*Your shakes of fortune, though they haue you mortally
Yet glance full wondrously on vs.*

F. 3, F. 4 have hate instead of hant (or haunt). Hurt is Steevens's reading. The arrangement is due to Walker, but the insertion of have is Fleay's suggestion. Walker read although instead of though. I have substituted strokes, for which shakes is an easy misprint. Shafts, the conjecture of Steevens, differs more from the Quarto text, and is less suitable. Woundingly was proposed by Mr. Kinnear in his Cruces Shakspearianæ. He compares Antony and Cleopatra, v. 2. 103–105:

I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that smites
My very heart at root

192. Lines 27–30:
*Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour, all
UNSCISSAR'D shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show ILL in't.*

Unscissar'd is Steevens's correction. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read unsister'd. In the next line ill appears to have been proposed independently by Malone and by Dyce. The corrections are confirmed by the following from Wilkins's Novel: "vowing solemnly by othe to himselfe, his head should grow vnscisserd, his beard vntrimmed, himself in all vncomely, since he had lost his Queene, and till he had married his daughter at ripe years" (p. 51). The incident belongs to the oldest versions of the story.

193. Lines 36, 37:
*Then give you up to the MASK'D Neptune, and
The gentlest winds of heaven.*

Mask'd perhaps means fair-seeming. His strength and fury are disguised for the nonce. Malone compares Merchant of Venice, iii. 2. 97, 98:

the guiled shore
To a most dangerous sea.

But any suggestion of the sea's treacherous and deceitful nature is hardly in place in the present connection.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

194.—The early Qq. are in confusion here about Thaisa's name. Q. 1, Q. 2 head this scene with the words, "Enter Cerimon, and Tharsa." Her first speech (line 4) is assigned to Thar; and the other to Thin. The right form, however, appears in act v.

195. Line 6: Ev'n on my DAWNING time.—So F. 3, F. 4.

Qq wrongly read learning; Mason and Grant White suggested yeauing. But Shakspeare elsewhere uses the form in the text. See Merchant of Venice, i. 3. 80, 88. Compare note 90 on the same play.

196 Line 14: Where you may ABIDE TILL your DATE expire.—Date is here used of an appointed term of life. Compare, for example, Sonnet cxxiii. 5, 6:

Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old.

Dyce proposed "bide until," for the sake of the metre.

ACT IV. PROLOGUE.

197.—Unlike the subsequent speeches of Gower, the prologue to this act contains no indication of the scene upon which he appears.

198 Lines 3, 4:

*His woful queen we leave at Ephesus,
Unto Diana there a VOTARESS.*

So Malone. Q 1, Q 2, Q 3 read, for line 4,
Vnto Diana ther s a votarisse.

This is followed, substantially, by the other old copies. Shakspeare uses votress in Midsummer Night's Dream, ii. 1. 123, 163. Elsewhere votarist is the form which he prefers. Possibly we ought here to read Ephesus and votariss; thus obtaining a rhyme, which the text lacks.

199. Lines 7, 8:

by Cleon train'd

In MUSIC, letters.

So Malone. Qq., F. 3, F 4 read "musicks letters." See act v. Prologue, and l. 43-46.

200. Lines 10, 11:

*Which makes HER both the HEART and place
Of general wonder.*

Q. 1, followed substantially by the other Qq. and F. 3, F. 4, reads:

Which makes hie both the art and place
Of generall wonder.

We have adopted Stevens's emendation. The meaning, he thinks, is "such as rendered her the centre and dwelling of general wonder."

201. Lines 12-14:

*That monster envy
. Marina's life
SEEKS to take off.*

So Rowe. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read seek (and seeke).

202. Lines 15, 16:

*And in this kind, Cleon DOTH OWN
One daughter, and a wench full grown.*

Qq., F. 4, F. 4 read:

And in this kinde, our Cleon hath
One daughter and a full grown wench.

The emendation in line 15 is due to Mr. P. A. Daniel; line 16 is arranged as by Stevens.

203. Line 17: Ev'n RIPE for marriage-RITE.—Q. 1 reads "Even right for marriage fight." Ripe was substituted in Q. 2. Rite is the reading of Collier, Singer, and Dyce. Percy conjectured rites. Malone reads fight.

204. Line 21: Be't when SHE weav'd the SLEIDED silk.—Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read they for she, a correction which is due to Malone. Sleided silk (mentioned in A Lover's Complaint, line 48), is, says Percy, untwisted silk, prepared for use in the sley or slay, i.e. the reed of the weaver's loom. Compare Trolius and Cressida, note 287. Filoselle is suggested as a modern equivalent.

205. Lines 23, 24:

*Or when she would with sharp NEEDLE wound
The cambric.*

Abbott, Shakspearian Grammar, § 465, observes that needle is often pronounced as a monosyllable. It rhymes with feele, steale, and weele in Gammer Gurton (see i. 3 and 4, and v. 2 of that play), though in the middle of a line the dissyllabic form also occurs there. A similar elision is found in the word mell, used instead of meddle, All's Well That Ends Well, iv. 3. 257. Just as vile became vid, so neele was sometimes corrupted to neeld; compare King John, note 290.

206. Lines 26, 27:

*made the NIGHT-BIRD mute,
That still RECORDS with moan.*

Qq., F. 3, F. 4 misprint bed for bird. The night-bird is the nightingale, whose "doleful ditty" is a frequent theme. See Passionate Pilgrim, Sonnets to Sundry Notes of Music (xxi.), line 383; Lucrèce, 1123-1142; Romeo and Juliet, note 133. Record occurs, in the same connection, in Two Gentlemen of Verona, v. 4. 5, 6:

to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses and record my woes.

Compare Peele, Old Wives' Tale:

hear the nightingale record her notes;

—Works, p. 449.

where Dyce quotes Coles, Dictionary: "To record as birds: certatim modulari, alternis canere." The record, a kind of English flute, with a sound somewhat like the human voice, was used for teaching captive birds to record or pipe. Cotgrave (quoted by Dyce in his Glossary to Shakspeare) has "Regazouiller. To report, or to record, as birds one anothers warbling." The original idea seems to have been that of repetition or imitation. And so Fletcher, The Pilgrim, v. 4:

Hark, hark! oh sweet, sweet! how the birds record too!
. . . The birds sing louder, sweeter,
And every note they emulate one another

—Works, vol. i. p. 613.

207. Line 29: VAIL to her mistress Dian.—Stevens observes, "To vail is to bow, to do homage. The author seems to mean—"When she would compose supplicatory hymns to Diana, or verses expressive of her gratitude to Dionyza." Malone and Singer read vail.

208. Lines 31-33:

*With the DOVE of PAPHOS might the crow
VIE feathers white.*

The old copies have—

So

The dove of Paphos might with the crow
Vie feathers white.

This misplacement was rectified by Mason. As regards vie, compare note 161. Paphos was a shrine of Venus, who was attended by doves; see The Tempest, iv. 1 92-94.

209. Lines 47, 48:

*Only I CARRY WINGED time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme.*

With my slowly spoken words I make Time fly with preternatural swiftness. The old copies have carried for carry, which is Steevens's correction. As to the sense of these and the next lines, Malone aptly compares King Henry V. iii. Prologue, 1-3:

Thus with unmaqu'd wing our swift scene flies
In motion of no less celerity
Than that of thought.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

210. Lines 4-8:

*Let not conscience,
Which is but COLD, inflaming LOVE IN THY bosom,
Inflame too nicely; nor let pity, which Ev'n women have cast off, melt thee, but be
A soldier to thy purpose*

Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 print all of this scene but lines 23-30 as prose. In lines 4-6 we have adopted Knight's alteration. The reading of Q 1, which the other old copies follow, is:

let not conscience, which is but cold in flaming thy love bosome, enflame too nicely.

The repetition of inflame, in line 6, is highly suspicious, and probably the whole passage is corrupt. Why should conscience be called cold? Mr. Kinnear suggests (Cruces Shakespearianæ):

let not conscience,
Which is a coward, but inflaming love
I th' bosom, thine inflame too nicely, nor
Let pity, which even women have cast off,
Melt thee, but be a soldier to thy purpose

He quotes Richard III. i. 4 138-143: "[conscience] makes a man a coward . . . 't is a blushing shame-fac'd spirit that mutinies in a man's bosom;" and v. 3. 179: "coward conscience." Malone read inflame love in thy bosom, and proposed to omit inflame too nicely, which he thought might be a mere duplication.

211. Lines 10, 11:

Here

She comes weeping for HER ONLY MISTRESS' death.

Her only mistress is a strange appellation for the nurse Lycorida. Percy's conjecture, her old nurse's death, has been adopted by several editors.

212 Lines 14-18:

*No, I will rob TELLUS of her weed,
To strew thy GREEN with flowers; the yellows, blues,
The purple violets, and marigolds,
Shall, as a carpet, hang upon thy grave,
While summer-days do last.*

Tellus (i.e. the Earth, personified) occurs only in Hamlet, iii. 2. 166, along with Phœbus, Neptune, and Hymen, in the Player King's opening speech. The green is the grassy hillock above Lycorida's remains. If substitute grave, which, however, occurs in line 17, just afterwards. Malone has compared Cymbeline, iv. 2. 218-222. There is, in that scene, a marked insistence on the practice of strewing graves with flowers or leaves. The meaning of No, Marina's first word, remains unexplained. The rhythm is imperfect, since the line lacks a syllable at the beginning.

213. Line 22: How now, Marina! why do you KEEP alone?—So Q 1. The other copies have weep.

214. Lines 27-29.

*Come, GO YOU ON THE BEACH, give me your flowers
Ere the sea mar it, walk with Leonine;
The air's quick there.*

The words go you on the beach are a conjecture of Mr Fleay's. It is plain that something has been lost, to which it and there must refer. Q 1, F 3, F 4 arrange as follows:

Come give me your flowers, ere the sea inarre it,
Walke with Leonine, the ayle is quicke there.

The rhythm, with such an arrangement, is assuredly not Shakespeare's. Malone, taking a similar view Mr Fleay, had already proposed.

Walk on the shore with Leonine.

Halliwell substitutes "On the sea margent" for "ere the sea marre it."

215 Line 36: Our paragon to all reports thus blasted.—The loveliness thus blasted of one whom all reports had previously represented as a paragon of beauty.

216. Lines 40-42:

RESERVE

*That excellent complexion, which did STEAL
THE EYES of young and old.*

Malone observes that to reserve is here to guard, to preserve carefully. So in Shakespeare's 32nd sonnet, 7:

Reserve them for my love, not for their rhyme
This sense of the word is taken from the Latin. With the sentiment of stealing the eyes Malone compares the use of the phrase in Sonnet xx. 8

217. Line 52: When I was born, the wind was NORTH.—So the prologue to act iii. lines 47, 48. See note 171.

218. Line 63: My father, as nurse SAID, did never fear.—So Malone. Q 1, Q 2, Q 3 have ses, the other old copies sailh.

219. Lines 63, 64:

*And with a DROPPING industry they skip
From STEM TO STERN.*

Dropping is perhaps to be understood of constant falls in going the length of the ship. Collier, however, conjectured "dripping." The old copies, instead of from stem to stern, have from stern to stern, which Malone corrected.

220. Line 79: I trod upon a worm.—The three later Quartos and the Folios insert once after worm.

221. Lines 80-82:

How

*Have I offended HER, wherein my death
Might yield her any profit.*

Her was inserted by Fleay, whose arrangement of this speech is here adopted.

222. Line 97: the great pirate VALDES.—Who this individual was is not stated by the commentators. Malone thinks there is here a scornful reference to Don Pedro de Valdes, a Spanish admiral who was taken by Drake in the combat with the Armada in 1588.

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

223. Line 22: THEY'RE TOO unwholesome.—Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read "ther's two unwholesome." The text is Malone's.

224. Line 28: Three or four thousand chequins.—Chequin is the Italian zecchino, which Florio calls "a coin of gold current in Venice." It was in use in various parts of the Levant, and the Imperial Dictionary says was worth 9s. 4d. In the form sequin the word is familiar to readers of the Arabian Nights. The author of this scene may have meant to suggest Turkish manners by the use of the word. The Transylvanian, mentioned just before, belongs to a district on the border of the Turkish empire, and Mytilene was, and still is, in Asiatic Turkey.

225. Lines 33-35: our credit comes not in like the commodity, nor the commodity wages not with the danger.—That is, while we make profit by our trade we lose in reputation; and the profit is no equivalent for the danger, i.e. the terrors of the law.

226. Lines 36, 37: 'twere not amiss to keep our door HATCH'D.—It would seem from the context that the Pander means "it would be well to keep the door closed," i.e. to cease our traffic. For hatch as a substantive see King John, note 287. Halliwell (quoted by Skeat, Dictionary, sub voce) says that the verb hatch, in provincial English, means fasten; and Skeat compares the Anglo-Saxon haca, meaning a bolt, bar, or fastening.

227. Line 47: I have GONE THROUGH.—To go through is to strike a bargain. Compare II. Henry IV. i. 2. 43-47: "The whoreson smooth-pates [merchants] . . . if a man is through with them in honest taking up [purchasing on credit] then they must stand upon security." Boulton's next words show that he had contracted to buy Marina at an agreed price, and to clench the bargain had paid a deposit or earnest. Wilkins says, "hee forthwith demanded the price . . . and in the end went thorow, and bargained to haue her . . . and so presently hauing giuen earnest he takes Marina" (Novel, p. 60).

228. Lines 52, 53: there's no farther necessity of qualities can make her be refus'd.—The meaning is, no other quality is requisite, for want of which she would be rejected.

229. Line 80: To scape his hands where I was LIKE to die.—Like is omitted in Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3.

230. Lines 137-139.—This speech is given to Marina by Qq.

231. Lines 154, 155: thunder shall not so awake the beds of eels.—Whalley quotes Marston, Satires, book II. satire vii.:

They are nought but eels, that never will appeare,
Till that tempestuous winds, or thunder, teare
Their slimy beds. —Ed. 1764, p. 204.

232. Lines 156, 158: as my giving out her beauty STIR up the lewdly-inclined.—So Malone. Qq., F. 3, F. 4 read stirs.

233. Line 160: UNTIED I still my VIRGIN-KNOT will keep—Malone calls this a classical allusion, and compares The Tempest, iv. 1. 15: "If thou dost break her virgin-knot." Literally, the virgin-knot is the knot of the lower girdle which was anciently worn by maidens round the hips, and untied by the bridegroom on the marriage night.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

234.—Twine's account, Patterne of Painefull Aduentures, chap. xii., is as follows: "Stranguilio himselfe consented not to this treason, but so soone as hee heard of the foulemischance, beeing as it were a mopte, and mated with heauynesse and grieffe, he clad himselfe in mourning aray, and lamented that wofull case, saying, 'Alas in what a mischief am I wrapped? what might I doe or say herein?' . . . Then casting his eies vp towards heauen, 'O God,' said hee, 'thou knowest that I am innocent from the blood of silly Tharsia, which thou hast to require at Dionysides handes;' and therewithall he looked towards his wife, saying: 'Thou wicked woman, tell me, how hast thou made away Prince Apollonius' daughter? thou that liuest both to the slaunde of God, and a man!' Dionysides answered in manie wordes euermore excusing herselfe, and, moderating the wrath of Stranguilio, shee counterfeited a fained sorrowe by attiring her selfe and her daughter in mourning apparell" (Hazlitt, pp. 294, 295). The poisoning of Leonine (line 10) is a refinement upon the earlier story. It will be seen that all but the bare suggestion of the characters of Cleon and Dionysa is original.

235. Lines 11, 12:

If thou hadst drunk to him, 't had been a kindness Becoming well thy FACT.

That is, if you had poisoned yourself by drinking Leonine's health from the same cup, it would have been in keeping with this ingratitude of yours (towards Pericles). Qq., F. 3, F. 4 give face for fact, the reading of Dyce, who cites II. Henry VI. i. 3. 176, 177:

a fouler fact
Did never traitor in the land commit.

Macbeth, iii. 6. 10:

To kill their gracious father? damned fact!

236. Line 16: She died at night; I'll say so.—This is from Gower, who says that Dionisè—wepeth, she sorweth, she compleigneth,

And of seknesse, which she feigneth,
She seith that 'Thaise sodenly
By nighte is dede, as she and I
To-gider lien nigh my lord.' —See Pauli's ed. p. 326

237. Line 17: Unless you play the PIOUS innocent.—Pious is Collier's reading, after the conjecture of Mason. Q. 1, Q. 2, Q. 3 read impious; the other Qq. and F. 3, F. 4 omit the word. Wilkins's words are: "'For Pericles' quoth she, 'if such a pious innocent as your selfe do not renewale it vnto him, how should he come to the knowledge thereof, since that the whole City is satisfied, by the monument I caused to be erected, and by our dissembling outside, that she died naturally; and for the gods, let them that list be of the minde to think they can make stones speake . . . for my parte I haue my wish, I haue my safety, and feare no daunger till it fall upon me'" (p. 59).